In re TURNER'S ESTATE.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 24, 1919.)

1. PROHIBITION ⟸9—ANTICIPATED RULINGS ON OBJECTIONS TO PROCEEDINGS NOT GROUND FOR RELIEF.

On an application for a writ of prohibition to prevent confirmation of a sale of real estate, anticipated rulings on objections which should be presented at the hearing of the application for confirmation will not be considered.

2. PROHIBITION ⟸3(2) — REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, if the superior court hearing objections to confirmation of the sale of decedent's realty acts adversely to such objections, the remedy of the party objecting is by appeal, and not by application for prohibition to prevent confirmation of the sale.

In Bank.

In the matter of the estate of Mary E. Turner, deceased. Application for writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco to prevent confirmation of a sale of real estate. Application denied.

See, also, 172 Pac. 759; 177 Pac. 854.

H. S. Herrick, of Bakersfield, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The application for a writ of prohibition is denied upon the ground that such objections as petitioner has to urge to the confirmation of the sale referred to in the petition should be presented to the superior court at the time fixed by the clerk of said court for the hearing of the application for confirmation. We cannot properly anticipate the action of the superior court in regard to such objections. It may be further noted that, in the event of adverse action by the trial court, petitioner's remedy is by appeal. See section 1068, Code Civ. Proc.

RAGGIO v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 28, 1919.)

1. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60(1) — DISMISSAL FOR LACK OF PROSECUTION.

A court has power to dismiss a pending action on the ground that it has not been diligently prosecuted.

2. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60(1)—DISCRETION OF COURT ON DISMISSAL FOR LACK OF PROSECUTION.

Though the question of diligent prosecution of an action to avoid dismissal is largely committed to the discretion of the trial court, the discretion intended is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion, guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸962—ERRONEOUS ORDER OF DISMISSAL FOR LACK OF PROSECUTION.

Where it clearly appears to an appellate court on the particular facts that the trial court erred in dismissing a pending action for lack of diligence in its prosecution, it is the appellate court's duty to reverse the order.

4. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60(2) — DUTY OF PLAINTIFF TO MAKE DECISION ON HIS DEMURRER POSSIBLE.

Plaintiff's duty to use diligence to expedite his case to final determination requires him, even after submission of his demurrer to the court for decision, to take such steps as may reasonably be necessary to make it possible for a decision to be rendered, where to his knowledge something has intervened to render a decision impossible without action by the parties.

5. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60(2)—DISMISSAL FOR LACK OF DILIGENCE AN ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Dismissal of action for lack of diligence in prosecution, because nonresident attorneys for nonresident plaintiff, without being guilty of bad faith, did not bring on again for hearing defendant's demurrer after great delay in decision thereon, after argument, and notification from the clerk of court of the retirement of the judge before whom argument had been had, held erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by Luigi Raggio against the Southern Pacific Company and the Dozier Construction & Engineering Company. From an order dismissing the action for lack of diligence, and from the judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order of dismissal reversed.

O'Gara & De Martini, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hudson Grant and A. G. Bailey, both of Woodland, T. T. C. Gregory, of San Francisco, and Thos. A. Allen, of Albany, N. Y., for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Plaintiff appeals from an order dismissing his action on the ground that he had not used due diligence in its prosecution, and also from a judgment of dismissal based on such order.

The action was one to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained as the result of negligence of the defendants. It was instituted September 12, 1912. Demurrers were interposed by both defendants. These demurrers were argued and submitted for decisison to the superior court of Yolo county on December 9, 1912, Hon. N. A. Hawkins, then judge of said court, presiding. On the first Monday of January, 1915, the term of Judge Hawkins, as such judge, expired, without any decision on the demurrers having been given by the court and without any order vacating the submission having been made. Plaintiff's attorneys, who resided and had their offices in San Francisco, did not know of the judge's retirement until some time in May, 1916, when, in response to an inquiry by letter of the clerk of the court as to whether a decision had been rendered, they were informed that no ruling had been made, and that there had been a change in the judgeship, which would probably necessitate a resubmission of the demurrers. Accordingly, in December, 1916, no order of any kind having been made in the meantime, they requested the clerk to place the demurrers on the calendar for hearing on the next law and motion day. They were placed on the calendar for hearing on December 26, 1916, and notice was given to the adverse parties. At the request of the attorney for the Southern Pacific Company, consent to a continuance of the hearing on its demurrer to January 8, 1917, was given. On January 8, 1917, the attorneys for the plaintiff and the defendant Southern Pacific Company appeared in court, and said defendant made its motion for dismissal, the same being made without previous notice, plaintiff waiving such notice. Time was given for the filing of affidavits, and the matter was finally heard, argued, and submitted on January 29, 1917. A similar motion was made by, or at least in the name of, the other defendant, which was heard, argued, and submitted on February 5, 1917. On May 31, 1917, an order granting the motions was made and entered, and a formal judgment of dismissal was made and entered June 1, 1917.

No stress is laid in the briefs on the delay of a little over six months following the acquirement of knowledge by plaintiff's attorneys that a resubmission of the demurrers was necessary, owing to a change in the incumbent of the office of judge, as to much of which period the affidavits showed that the attorney having the matter specially in charge was sick and unable to attend to business. The real claim is, first, that plaintiff should have done something looking to the obtaining of a decision on the submitted demurrers during the two years and a little over of Judge Hawkins' incumbency and the further period during which they believed him to be still an incumbent; and, second, that in any event they should have learned earlier of his retirement from office and should thereupon have brought the demurrers on for reargument and resubmission. In this connection it should further be stated that on May 7, 1913, one of the attorneys for plaintiff wrote to the clerk of the court, asking whether the court had rendered its decision, and received a reply, stating that the demurrer was taken under advisement by the court and that no decision had been rendered; also that such attorney again wrote to the clerk on January 6, 1915, making similar inquiry, and received a reply from the clerk, dated January 8, 1915, four days after Judge Hawkins' retirement, stating that no ruling "has been made as yet," and containing no intimation that Judge Hawkins had retired from office; also that on May 23, 1916, one of said attorneys again wrote to the clerk in regard to the case, stating that "up to six months ago" they were informed that there had been no decision on the demurrer, and asking whether any decision had been rendered, to which the clerk replied that no ruling had been made, that there had been "a change in the judge of the superior court since the demurrers were submitted," and that he thought the demurrers would have to be resubmitted. It should also be stated that the plaintiff resided in San Mateo county, and his only knowledge in regard to the status of the case was that given him from time to time when he made inquiries of his attorneys, and expressed his anxiety for a speedy trial. The affidavits, except for the mere lapse of time during which the demurrers remained under submission, fail to disclose the slightest showing of any disposition on the part of the attorneys to unduly delay a hearing on the merits. To the contrary, they indicate that, in view of the fact that the matter had been submitted to the court for decision, the attorneys considered it inadvisable and improper to press the court for a decision, beyond bringing the matter to the attention of the clerk by the inquiries made.

[1-3] The power of a court to dismiss a pending action upon the ground that it has not been diligently prosecuted cannot, in view of our decisions, be denied. See Witter v. Phelps, 163 Cal. 655, 126 Pac. 593. And it has often been said that the question of diligent prosecution is one largely committed to the discretion of the lower court. But, as said in Ferris v. Wood, 144 Cal. 426, 428, 77 Pac. 1037, quoting from Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 423:

"The discretion intended, however, is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion, guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles. It is not a mental discretion, to be exercised ex gratia, but a legal discretion, to be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law, and in a manner to subserve and not to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice."

And where it clearly appears to an appellate court upon the facts of the particular case that the court below has come to an erroneous conclusion, it is its duty to reverse the order of dismissal.

[4, 5] As has frequently been said, the duty rests upon a plaintiff at every stage of the proceedings to use due diligence to expedite his case to a final determination. Under this rule it has been held that it is incumbent on a plaintiff to use due diligence in the matter of pressing to a hearing a demurrer filed by a defendant. Mowry v. Weisenborn, 137 Cal. 110, 69 Pac. 971; Kubli v. Hawkett, 89 Cal. 638, 27 Pac. 57; Gray v. Times-Mirror Co., 11 Cal. App. 155, 104 Pac. 481. This obligation undoubtedly requires the plaintiff, even after submission of the demurrer to the court for decision, to take such steps as may reasonably be necessary to make it possible for a decision to be rendered where, to his knowledge, something has intervened to render a decision impossible without action by the parties. Such was the situation in Gray v. Times-Mirror Co., supra, where subsequent to submission of the demurrer all of the records were destroyed in the general conflagration of April, 1906, and it was known to all parties that a restoration of the records was a prerequisite to a decision. The lack of diligence was in the matter of the restoration of the records essential to a decision on the demurrer. It has, however, never been held that where a plaintiff has with diligence pressed a demurrer to hearing before and submission to a court, he is charged with any duty to the defendant of attempting to hasten a decision by the court, in the absence of knowledge of some intervening event that renders it impossible for a decision to be rendered upon the pending submission as the matter stands, as, for instance, such an event as happened in the case of Gray v. Times-Mirror Co., supra, or, we may concede, such an event as happened in this case, viz., the retirement from office of the judge before whom the demurrer was argued, rendering it necessary to vacate the submission and bring the demurrer to another hearing.

[6] In this case, excluding from consideration for the moment the fact that the judge before whom the demurrers were argued retired from office January 4, 1915, there was nothing to indicate to the attorneys for plaintiff that a decision would not ultimately be rendered on the pending submission, other than the undue delay on the part of the court. This delay was, it must be confessed, very great, so great, in fact, as to suggest that the fact of submission might have been overlooked and forgotten by the judge. But as against this was the undisputed evidence of the inquiries by mail by the attorneys for plaintiff of the clerk of the court, the first within five months of the submission, which they might well assume would be brought to the attention of the judge, and the answers to which, prior to the answer of May, 1916, were of such a nature as to indicate to them that it was simply a matter of delay on the part of the judge. While they might have written directly to the judge inquiring why a decision was not rendered, or even have made a formal demand for a decision as a basis for a proceeding in mandate, we can well understand that considerations of delicacy and expediency may have reasonably influenced them to refrain from doing more than to make their polite inquiries of the clerk of the court, with the hope that some time a decision on the pending submission might be made in plaintiff's favor. In so far as any duty to the defendant of diligent prosecution is concerned, we do not think it should be held that a plaintiff is bound to press the court for a decision upon a pending submission, simply because there is undue delay on the part of the court in rendering a decision. His full duty in this respect is discharged when he diligently presses the matter to hearing and submission to the court. As we have noted, there is not the slightest indication of any bad faith in the matter on the part of the attorneys for the plaintiff or the plaintiff himself. While there is no evidence as to the cause of delay in the matter of the decision, it is probable that the learned judge of the trial court had completely overlooked and forgotten the matter of these demurrers, but plaintiff should not be held accountable for this.

As to the additional fact of the retirement of the judge on January 4, 1915, which, it may be conceded, rendered it necessary that the submission be vacated and another hearing had. Admittedly plaintiff's attorneys had no actual knowledge or intimation of this situation until, in response to their letter of inquiry of May 23, 1916, they received such information from the clerk of the court. It is suggested that in view of section 1875, Code of Civil Procedure, relative to "knowledge of the court," providing that "courts take judicial notice of the following facts: * * * 5. The accession to office * * * of the principal officers of government in the legislative, executive and judicial departments of the state and of the United States," they were bound to know of the change in the office of judge of Yolo county. Manifestly this provision has no application to such a situation as we have here. Section 1875, Code of Civil Procedure, simply specifies certain classes of facts which courts take judicial notice of, without the introduction of any evidence relative thereto, resorting for that purpose, if necessary, to "appropriate books or documents of reference." It is a rule of evidence for the government of courts in the determination of matters coming before them. In the case at bar its utmost effect on the motion to dismiss was to require the lower court to take judicial notice of the fact that on January 4, 1915, the judge before whom the demurrer was argued retired from office, and it did not require plaintiff's attorneys to know, or to resort "to appropriate books or documents of reference" to ascertain whether any change had occurred in the incumbency of the office.

Under the circumstances we can see no good foundation for a conclusion that, in so far as defendants are concerned, there was any duty resting on plaintiff's attorneys to make inquiry as to whether Judge Hawkins had retired from office. Especially is this true in view of the fact that the letter from the clerk of the court, written several days after the first Monday of January, 1915 (the date of retirement), contained no intimation of such retirement, and stated that no ruling "has been made as yet," which rather intimated the contrary. It is to be borne in mind that, under our Constitution, the six-year term of office of judges of the superior court always expires on the first Monday of January. If there had been anything to reasonably suggest to these attorneys, residing and having their office in another county, some considerable distance removed from Yolo county, that the judge had retired from office, it might reasonably be held that some obligation of inquiry ensued. However, there was nothing of this nature in this case, and, in so far as the particular question we are discussing is concerned, there was no obligation of inquiry whatever. There being no such obligation of inquiry, the fact that an examination of the list of judges in the California Reports would have shown the fact is immaterial. It may be suggested that it would have been a simple matter for the attorney of defendant railroad company, who resided and had his office in Yolo county, if he desired to hasten disposition of the demurrer, to have brought to the knowledge of plaintiff's attorneys the fact of change in the judgeship and the consequent necessity for another hearing.

On the whole case we are of the opinion that the learned judge of the trial court erred in granting the dismissal.

The judgment and order of dismissal are reversed.

BRAZIL et al. v. SILVA. (S. F. 8373.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸127(2) — COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION; FILING OF ORIGINAL COMPLAINT.

Where the original complaint endeavored to set up the same cause of action as the amended complaint, the critical date on the question of the statute of limitations is the date of filing of the original complaint.

2. JUDGMENT ⟸729—CONCLUSIVENESS; MATTERS NOT DECIDED BY ORDER ADMITTING WILL TO PROBATE.

In a proceeding to charge the defendant as sole distributee under a will with a constructive trust in favor of plaintiffs, where the facts presented by the complaint were presented by way of contest of the will and were held no ground for refusing the probate of the will on appeal to the Supreme Court, which further held that, if present plaintiffs were entitled to relief, it would have to be sought outside of the probate proceedings, plaintiffs are not concluded by the order admitting the will to probate.

3. TRUSTS ⟸97 — CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST; FRAUDULENT PRESERVATION OF WILL BY DISTRIBUTEE DIRECTED BY TESTATOR TO DESTROY IT.

Where the sole distributee under a will fraudulently pretended to testator that the will was in an envelope, which she burned when he requested her to destroy the will, equity will declare that she holds the property under a constructive trust for the other heirs, whether it involved a promise upon the part of such trustee or not, in view of the equitable maxim, carried into Civ. Code, 3517, that no one may profit by his own wrong, notwithstanding testator failed to revoke his will by following procedure prescribed by the statute.

4. TRUSTS ⟸110—NECESSITY OF SATISFACTORY PROOF.

In a proceeding to declare that a sole distributee under a will holds the property with constructive trust for the heirs, on the ground of fraudulently deceiving testator into thinking his will had been destroyed, as he requested of distributee, the fraud must be clearly and satisfactorily proven.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸19(3), 20—APPLICABLE STATUTE; RECOVERY OF REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Even though gravamen of the cause of action in an equitable suit is fraud, yet where it sought to recover realty and personalty, the period of limitations applicable is as to the personalty the period allowed for actions to recover personalty, and as to the realty the period allowed for actions to recover realty.

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸44(6), 45—ACCRUAL OF RIGHT OF ACTION; RECOVERY OF REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Right of action by heirs at law against sole distributee under a will, to recover real and personal property on ground of constructive trust in heirs' favor, in that defendant deceived testator by pretending to destroy the will, as desired by him, and preserving it and thereby acquiring legal title, did not accrue until distributee's possession vested by the decree of distribution; her possession up to that time having been in her capacity as administratrix, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1452.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by Antonio Da Rosa Brazil and others against Luiza Rosa Silva. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions to overrule demurrer and permit defendant to answer.

Everts & Ewing, of Fresno, for appellants.

James Gallagher, M. B. Harris, and E. M. Harris, all of Fresno, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. The plaintiffs and appellants in this action claim to be the heirs at law of one Frank V. Silva, deceased. The defendant is the sole distributee of Silva's estate under a decree of distribution made pursuant to his will, duly probated, whereby he gave all his property to the defendant. The estate was of very considerable value, and comprised both real and personal property. By the action the plaintiffs seek to charge the defendant with a constructive trust in their favor as to the property which she so received. The original complaint was amended, and to the amended complaint a demurrer was interposed, which was sustained by the lower court, and, the plaintiffs failing to amend again, judgment was entered against them. From this judgment they appeal. Two grounds are relied upon before us to support the demurrer: First, that the complaint does not state a cause of action; and, second, that any cause of action is shown on the face of the complaint to be barred by the statute of limitations. The facts as set forth in the complaint are:

[1] Frank V. Silva died in May, 1910. Four years before he had made a will leaving all his property to the defendant whom he described as his wife. The will was admitted to probate in April, 1912. Thereafter the plaintiffs commenced a contest to revoke its probate and the contest was decided against them. In April, 1915, a decree of distribution was made distributing the estate to the defendant. The present action was commenced November 20, 1915. The amended complaint was not filed until February, 1917, but inasmuch as the original complaint endeavored to set up the same cause of action as the amended complaint, the critical date on the question of the statute of limitations is the date of filing of the original complaint.

[2] The constructive trust with which it is sought to charge the defendant is based upon her alleged fraud. It is averred that the defendant was not in fact the wife of Silva and that the plaintiffs are his sole heirs at law; that Silva, when he made his will, delivered it to the defendant; that thereafter he demanded it back from her, for the purpose of destroying it, and thereby revoking it; that she thereupon in the presence of Silva and at his request destroyed by burning an envelope which she falsely stated to him to contain his will, but which in fact did not; that this false statement was made by the defendant for the purpose of preserving the will without the knowledge of Silva, so that she might take advantage of its terms in case of his death; and, finally, that Silva from that time on believed that the will had been destroyed and that he had no will, and died in that belief. In other words, to put it more briefly, the alleged fraud, by reason of which it is sought to charge the defendant with a constructive trust, consisted in her preventing by deceit the actual destruction animo revocandi of the will in which she is the sole beneficiary, with the result that it was preserved contrary to the intention and belief of the testator, and the defendant has now acquired the legal title to his property, which otherwise would have gone to the plaintiffs.

In support of their contention that the complaint does not state a cause of action, counsel for the defendant advance two propositions. The first is that the matter is determined by the order admitting the will to probate. The soundness of this position depends upon whether or not the issues presented by the present complaint are questions going to the final question before the probate court; that is, the question as to the instrument being the legal and valid will of the decedent unrevoked at the time of his death. If the issues presented by the complaint are not of this character, it is plain that they could not be passed on in the probate proceedings, and are not concluded by the result of those proceedings. But this point was determined in Re Estate of Silva, 169 Cal. 116, 145 Pac. 1015, on appeal from the very order of probate here relied on, and that decision must be taken as overruling anything to the contrary in Del Campo v. Camarillo, 154 Cal. 647, 98 Pac. 1049. It was held that the facts now presented by the complaint and then presented by way of contest were not a ground for refusing probate of the will, and could not be considered, and that if the present plaintiffs were entitled to any relief it would have to be sought outside of the probate proceedings. It follows that plaintiffs are not concluded by the order admitting the will to probate.

[3] The second point urged by defendant's counsel in support of their position that the complaint does not state a cause of action is that no relief against the result of such a fraud as that here alleged can be granted; that the wrong done is one for which there is no remedy. There is quite a little dicta to the effect that, where the revocation of a will is prevented by fraud, a trust may be imposed upon the beneficiary of the will in favor of the injured heir. Estate of Silva, supra; Blanchard v. Blanchard, 32 Vt. 62; Gains v. Gains, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 190, 12 Am. Dec. 375; Graham v. Burch, 53 Minn. 17, 55 N. W. 64.

But so far as we are aware the only decision directly upon the question is Kent v. Mahaffey, 10 Ohio St. 219, which is to the contrary. As the matter is there put quite strongly, we quote from it at some length:

"The statute was designed to prevent the frauds and perjuries arising out of mere parol revocations, and to sanction a recovery in this case would open the door for the very evils which the statute intended to exclude. If one who fraudulently prevents the revocation of a will may be treated as trustee for the heir at law, it would seem to follow, by a parity of reasoning, that where an heir at law, by force or fraud, prevents the execution of a will, he should also be held as a trustee for the beneficiary of the unexecuted will. No lawyer would, I think, hazard the opinion that the heir at law could, in such case, be declared a trustee; and why not, if the general principle adverted to is applicable to the defendants in this case? Both alike would be holding the legal title to estates, which, in equity and good conscience, they ought not to retain. If it is said that the heir is in by the statute of descent, so, too, it may be said that the devisee claims under a will made before the fraudulent interference. The reason is obvious why the heir could not be so regarded, and the same reason must also exculpate the devisee. The heir at law cannot be so treated, because the law, for wise purposes, has prohibited a will, except it be executed under certain formalities; and the statute has also prohibited the revocation of a will, except under certain formalities. To permit a recovery in either case would be to make a will, or, as the case may be to revoke one, in a manner which the statute forbids. Is it not obvious that to hold either liable would, in effect nullify the statute?"

Now it is to be noted that the opinion quoted does not controvert, as it could not well do, the general principle upon which relief is asked for in such cases as the present, namely, that where the defendant has by his own wrong obtained the legal title to property, a trust as to such property will be imposed upon him in favor of the party injured. This principle is a familiar one, and is based upon the maxim, which has been carried into our Code (section 3517, Civ. Code), that no one may profit by his own wrong. The instances of its application are as various nearly as the ways in which property can be wrongfully acquired. A most common illustration is the imposition of a trust upon a party holding under a deed fraudulently obtained from the grantor, where admittedly the deed is valid to the extent of conveying the legal title. Nor can there be any doubt that such a case as the present comes within this principle. If the facts alleged in the complaint are true, the defendant has by the grossest fraud acquired the legal title to property which, but for her fraud, would have gone to the plaintiffs. The opinion quoted does not deny this general principle, nor its application normally in the circumstances here presented. The reason advanced for not applying it in those circumstances is that by statute a will can be revoked only in certain prescribed ways, that no such revocation was in fact made, and that to impose a trust upon the defendant would be in effect to evade the statute, and make the equivalent of a revocation something which by statute is not a revocation. In other words, the position of the court in the opinion quoted is that in face of the statute equity is helpless to grant the relief which otherwise it would grant upon the facts being proven almost as a matter of course. If this position be not sound, no reason is advanced, and we do not see that any can be advanced, why the general principle mentioned should not be applied, and relief granted here as in other cases where the defendant has acquired the legal title to property by his own wrong.

But the position so taken is not sound. It is in fact directly contrary to the established rule of equity. It is a familiar function of equity, and one very characteristic of its peculiar province, to refuse to permit, and affirmatively to prevent, a statute being used as a means whereby to perpetuate a wrong. A common and very plain illustration is the specific enforcement of a partially performed oral contract which is within the statute of frauds. Equity does not stay its hand in such a case because, forsooth, the statute requires a contract in writing, and there is none, and whatever may have been the historical reason why courts of equity granted such relief originally, the reason now universally assigned is that not to grant it would be to enable the defendant to perpetrate a fraud by means of the statute.

Another illustration is that of reforming a contract and enforcing it as reformed, although it is within the statute of frauds. This, in its final analysis, is the enforcing of a contract, where the statute requires a written one, and no such written contract as that finally enforced exists.

Another illustration of the same thing is found in the origin of the doctrine, now incorporated in most recording acts, but originally not found there, that where two deeds to the same property are made by the same grantor, the second, although recorded first, will yet be inferior to the first, if the second grantee took with notice of the rights of the first. By the statute of 7 Anne, c. 20, 91, all unregistered conveyances were made void as against subsequent purchasers for value. No exception to the rule was made in case the second purchaser took with notice of the previous conveyance. Because of this it was held in Doe v. Alsopp, 5 B. & Al. 142, that the legal title passed to the second purchaser, although he had taken with notice. But in equity relief was given under such circumstances by imposing upon the legal title of the second grantee a trust in favor of the first, on the ground that the action of the second grantee in purchasing the property with notice of the rights of the first and recording his deed was, in effect, a fraud and an attempt to use the statute to perpetrate a wrong to his advantage. Neve v. Neve, 1 Ves. 64, Amb. 436. See, also, 1 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. §§ 430, 431. An illustration of the same principle in connection with a homestead statute is Fox v. Hubbard, 79 Mo. 390, and in connection with a statute of limitations is Vane v. Vane, L. R. 8 Ch. 383. See, also, In re McCallum [1901] 1 Ch. Div. 143.

In Kent v. Mahaffey it is said that, where the execution of a will has been prevented by force or fraud, "no lawyer would * * * hazard the opinion that the heir at law could * * * be declared a trustee." But Lord Thurlow, in Dixon v. Olmius, 1 Cox, 414, 29 Eng. Rep. 1227, and in Luttrell v. Olmius, stated by Lord Eldon with approbation in Mestaer v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 638, 32 Eng. Rep. 1236, did that very thing. He enforced in equity against the heir on whose behalf the republication of a will had been prevented by force and fraud, the rights which would have existed under the will if republished.

Finally, upon this point we see no real distinction whatever between the present case and those wherein a decedent has either been prevented from making a will by the promise of the heir that he will carry out the decedent's wishes, or has been prevented from revoking a will by a similar promise of the beneficiary. In such a case, if the heir or beneficiary as the case may be, does not carry out the promise, a trust will be imposed upon him in equity in favor of those who would have received the property, except for his promise. This is no longer questionable. And it makes no difference whether the promise be oral or in writing, or within the statute of frauds or not. Furthermore, the reason for granting the relief in such cases, the gravamen of the cause of action, is held to be, not the promise, but the fraud of the defendant, of which the promise is but a part. If the fraud be there, as it certainly is in the present case, according to the averments of the complaint, it would seem to be immaterial whether a promise be a part of it or not. In Curdy v. Berton, 79 Cal. 420, 21 Pac. 858, 5 L. R. A. 189, 12 Am. St. Rep. 157, a gift was made by will upon the oral promise of the beneficiary to distribute it in a certain manner. As reported, the argument of counsel was that "the trust, not having been evidenced by a writing, was void as a testamentary disposition. Civ. Code, § 1276." This court, however, held that it made no difference whether the promise was in writing or not, and then quoted at length from In re O'Hara, 95 N. Y. 403, 47 Am. Rep. 53, saying that it did so because of the lucid statement there of the principles applicable. A portion of this quotation is so pertinent here that we repeat it (the italics are ours):

"If, therefore, in her letter of instructions, the testatrix had named some certain and definite beneficiary, capable of taking the provision intended, the law would fasten upon the legatee a trust for such beneficiary, and enforce it, if needed, on the ground of fraud. Equity acts in such case, not because of a trust declared by the testator, but because of the fraud of the legatee. For him not to carry out the promise by which alone he procured the devise and bequest is to perpetrate a fraud upon the devisor, which equity will not endure. The authorities on this point are numerous. [Here follows a long list of cases.] The circumstances in these cases were varied and sometimes peculiar, but all of them either recognize or enforce the general doctrine. It has been twice applied in our own state. Brown v. Lynch, 1 Paige [N. Y.] 147; Williams v. Fitch, 18 N. Y. 546. In the last of these cases the making of a bequest to the plaintiff was prevented by an agreement of the father, who was next of kin, to hold in trust for the plaintiff, and the English cases were cited with approval and the trust enforced. All along the line of discussion it was steadily claimed that a plain and unambiguous devise in a will could not be modified or cut down by extrinsic matter lying in parol, or unattested papers, and that the statute of frauds and that of wills excluded the evidence; and all along the line it was steadily answered that the devise was untouched, that it was not at all modified, that the property passed under it, but the law dealt with the holder for his fraud, and out of the facts raised a trust, ex maleficio, instead of resting upon one as created by the testator."

We can but conclude that Kent v. Mahaffey proceeds upon a failure to recognize and appreciate a fundamental principle of equity jurisprudence, and one, as we have said, characteristic of the peculiar province of equity. We hardly need point out that equity does not in such a case as this grant relief simply because there has been an abortive attempt to comply with the statute. Equity will not, in effect, make a revocation where there was none under the statute merely because the decedent desired or actually attempted to make one. It grants relief only in case and because of a wrong done by the defendant of which he seeks to reap the fruit. In such a case equity will not permit him to have safe shelter under the formal requirements of the law, either statutory or other. It follows that the complaint in this case states a cause of action, and the demurrer cannot be sustained on that ground.

[4] In this connection, since the cause must go back for trial, it may not be amiss to call attention to the rule that, because of the very nature of these cases, the fraud or other wrong relied on must be proven clearly and satisfactorily. The relief asked for is so extraordinary, and the opportunity for false testimony so great, since the evidence in most cases must be largely parol, that it is only where it is fairly certain that the circumstances calling for the relief actually exist that the extending of it may be justified.

[5] As to the statute of limitations the question is concluded by Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820. It was there held that even as to a suit in equity, where the gravamen of the cause of action was fraud, the period of three years allowed by the Code for the commencement of an action based on fraud was not the only period permissible, where it was sought by the suit to recover the title to or possession of real property, and that in such a case the five-year period allowed for actions to recover real property also applied. The reason given in Murphy v. Crowley for this ruling was that, whatever might be the merits of the question, it was concluded by previous decisions in this state. The force of this reason is now doubly strong, and we can but follow the rule, although, viewed as a new question, its correctness is exceedingly doubtful, to say the least.

While Murphy v. Crowley involved realty alone, there is no reason why it should not apply where personalty is involved. In the present case both real and personal property are involved, with the result that, while the action could be brought within the period permitted for actions on the ground of fraud, it could also be brought as to the personalty involved within the period permitted for actions to recover personalty, and as to the realty involved within the period permitted for actions to recover realty.

[6] The present action was brought within both of these latter periods. While an action to impose a trust because of fraud could be maintained as soon as the wrongdoer consummated his fraud and obtained the legal title to the property involved, which in this case would be when the original order probating the will was made, unless the order was suspended by appeal, and then when affirmed on appeal, an action for possession of the property could not be maintained against the defendant as long as the property was in the possession of the personal representative of the decedent for purposes of administration. Where, as in this case, the defendant was the administratrix of the estate, her possession up to the time of distribution must be taken to have been in her capacity as administratrix. Section 1452, Code Civ. Proc. It was only upon her possession ceasing to be of this character that it could be attacked by the plaintiffs. This would be when distribution was had, and under Murphy v. Crowley, and the decisions which precede it, it must be held that the present action, even though based exclusively upon fraud, can be maintained as to personalty within the period after distribution allowed for actions for the recovery of personalty and as to realty within the period after distribution allowed for actions for the recovery of realty. As already stated, the complaint shows that the property involved was distributed in April, 1915. Within a few months thereafter the present action was commenced. It follows that upon the point of the statute of limitations as well the demurrer was not well taken.

Judgment reversed, with directions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer of the defendant and permit her to answer.

BETHLEHEM SHIPBUILDING CORPORATION, Limited, v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 9145.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸417(7)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; REVIEW OF FINDING OF COMMISSION.

The finding of the Industrial Accident Commission that a streptococcic infection in an injured toe was transferred to the face of the deceased employé by external means, and that the death was proximately caused by the original injury, being based on the testimony of medical experts grounded on medical science, cannot be overturned, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1826.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸374—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; INJURY AS PROXIMATE CAUSE OF DEATH.

The fact that a streptococcic infection reached the deceased servant's face from a discharging and infected wound in his toe, thus giving him erysipelas and septicemia, from which he died, did not, as a matter of law, break the chain of causation between the death and the original wound to the toe, so that the death was not proximately caused by the original injury.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸374—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; INJURY PROXIMATE CAUSE OF DEATH DESPITE SELF-TREATMENT.

If an employé whose toe had been wounded, and which was infected and discharging, conducted himself, in attempting to treat it, as would a reasonably prudent person in his situation, and thereby innocently enhanced the original injury, so that the infection was communicated to his face, and he developed erysipelas and septicemia, from which he died, the Industrial Commission could find that the original injury continued to the end, and accomplished the final result of death, and was its proximate cause.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸405(4)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; EVIDENCE JUSTIFYING A FINDING AS TO CAUSE OF INJURY.

In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, evidence held not to warrant the conclusion that the Industrial Accident Commission was bound to find that the transfer of streptococcic germs from the injured toe of an employé to his face, where they caused erysipelas and fatal septicemia, was due to his own negligence.

Shaw, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Mary Caffrey, an incompetent, and Elizabeth Caffrey, a minor, by Myra Daly, their guardian ad litem and trustee, opposed by the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, Limited, the employer. Compensation was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the employer applies for certiorari to review its order. Award affirmed.

Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., and F. R. Devlin, both of San Francisco, for respondent Daly.

LENNON, J. Certiorari directed to the Industrial Accident Commission. The return of the respondent commission reveals the following facts:

The proceeding was instituted by an application for benefits under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), presented by the guardian ad litem and trustee of the incompetent wife and minor child of John Caffrey, deceased, whose death was alleged to have been caused by an injury received in the course of his employment and arising out of the employment. It appears that on Friday, July 26, 1918, Caffrey sustained a contused wound on the great toe of his right foot while engaged in the service of the petitioner. He continued at his work on Saturday, and also on the following Monday. On Monday he had the toe dressed by Dr. Marvin at the emergency hospital of the Union Iron Works. On Tuesday, July 30th, the foot was so painful that after starting to work he returned home and undertook to treat the toe himself. He first complained of a swelling of the face on August 1st. On the following day, the symptoms of the face becoming alarming, Caffrey was removed to a hospital, where it was discovered that there was a streptococcic infection of the injured toe. The skin surrounding the toe was in an erysipelatous condition and there was a development of erysipelas on the face. The facial infection resulted in septicemia, from which Caffrey died on August 8, 1918.

The commission found that the germs which caused the facial infection were carried from the toe to the face by external means, and that Caffrey's death was proximately caused by the original injury. It is contended on behalf of petitioner that these findings are not justified by the evidence.

The medical testimony upon which the commission based its finding that the germs which caused the facial infection were carried from the toe to the face by external means was, in effect, that such a method of transfer was exceedingly common, the transmission of the germs being very readily accomplished, that there was no reason to suppose that the infection had come from another source than the toe, and that, while it was was within the realm of possibility for the infection to have come from another source, such hypothesis was so very much the least probable that it seemed useless to theorize as to such possibility in the face of facts indicating that the germs "certainly must have been carried" from the foot.

[1] It is contended on behalf of petitioner that this evidence shows that the opinion of the experts that the infection of the face was due to germs carried from the toe was pure "guesswork." The testimony shows, however, that the experts were not indulging in mere conjecture or speculation. They were giving what, on the facts before them, and in the light of medical science, appeared to be the most probable explanation of the event. The theory that germs were carried from the toe to the face was "guesswork" only in the sense that there was no direct evidence of the source of the facial infection. In the view of the experts, other admittedly possible causes were so far excluded by the conditions which were shown as to make the one which they advanced by far the more probable one. As stated in Santa v. Ind. Acc. Comn., 175 Cal. 235, 165 Pac. 689:

"This was a sufficient basis for the action of the commission. Absolute proof or mathematical demonstration is not required. Code Civ. Proc. § 1826. The commission is the final judge of the facts, and its findings cannot be overturned where they have the support of evidence upon which a reasonable man could come to the conclusion which was reached."

Petitioner, however, insists that, even if it be assumed that the facial infection was caused by germs carried from the toe by external means, the chain of causation was so broken that the original injury of the toe could not reasonably be said to have been the proximate cause of Caffrey's death. The rule of law which must guide us in the determination of the question thus presented is stated in Head Drilling Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comn., 177 Cal. 194, 170 Pac. 157. In that case it appeared that a workman sustained a fracture of the leg in the course of his employment. Three days after his discharge from the hospital, he sustained a second injury, causing a displacement of the bones by reason of accidentally striking the heel of the foot of the injured limb against a piece of furniture. The chief justice said:

"We are of the opinion that a subsequent incident or accident aggravating the original injury may be of such a nature, and occur under such circumstances, as to make such aggravation the proximate and natural result of the original injury. Whether the subsequent incident or accident is such, or should be regarded as an independent, intervening cause is a question of fact for the commission, to be decided in view of all the circumstances, and its conclusion must be sustained by the courts whenever there is any reasonable theory evidenced by the record on which the conclusion can be upheld. * * * Our conclusion is not at all opposed, in our opinion, to what is said in Pacific Coast Casualty Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 319, 153 Pac. 24. The question there was whether the commission is authorized by the act to award compensation to the employé 'for an additional injury sustained by him afterward, not in the course of his employment, by an accident or act which aggravates the first injury and prolongs the disability.' The answer was that it had no such authority if the subsequent injury 'is neither the natural nor the proximate result of the injury received in the course of the employment.' It was fully recognized in that case, we think, that the subsequent injury may be the proximate result of the injury received in the course of the employment, and compensable under the act, and the finding to that effect in this matter has sufficient support in the evidence."

In a concurring opinion in that case, Mr. Justice Shaw added that—

"The award for the further disability here under review can be sustained only upon the ground that the subsequent accident and resulting displacement of the fractured bone was not the result of a lack of ordinary care on the part of the injured employé. An injury so occurring subsequently may be regarded as a part of the proximate consequences of the original accident. The finding of the commission is in effect a finding that at the time of the second accident Scott was not guilty of a lack of the ordinary care which reasonably prudent persons in his condition exercise for their own safety from injury. I think it cannot be said, as matter of law, that such finding is without any evidence to support it."

The rule announced in Head Drilling Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comn., supra, is well established in all cases where it becomes necessary to determine whether or not there is evidence to justify a finding that a subsequent injury or disease is part of the proximate consequences of an injury for which the defendant is responsible. In Dickson v. Hollister, 123 Pa. 421, 16 Atl. 484, 10 Am. St. Rep. 533, erysipelas followed a flesh would received in the course of a fall occasioned by the defendant's negligence. At the time of the decision, the causes of erysipelas were not understood, but the mere fact that it frequently developed from personal injuries was held to warrant an instruction that the disease might be regarded by the jury as part of the injury itself. To the same effect is H. & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Leslie, 57 Tex. 83, 85. The reluctance of the courts to determine the question of proximate cause as a matter of law in cases similar to the instant case is illustrated by Baltimore City Passenger Railway Co. v. Kemp, 61 Md. 619, 48 Am. Rep. 134, wherein it was held that it was properly left to the jury to determine whether or not a supervening cancerous growth was caused by injuries sustained by plaintiff as a result of defendant's negligence. The evidence in this behalf was to the effect that the personal injury might have superinduced and contributed to the production and development of the cancer. The court quoted with approval from Beauchamp v. Saginaw Mining Co., 50 Mich, 163, 15 N. W. 65, 45 Am. Rep. 30, wherein it was held that it was for the jury to determine whether or not a blow on the head was a proximate cause of death from pneumonia, the evidence being to the effect that the personal injury had so reduced the vitality of the deceased as to render him more susceptible to disease and less able to resist it. See, also, Pyke v. Jamestown, 15 N. D. 157, 107 N. W. 359; Terre Haute, etc., Co. v. Buck, 96 Ind. 346, 49 Am. Rep. 168; Eicholz v. Niagara, etc., Co., 68 App. Div. 441, 73 N. Y. Supp. 842; Id., 174 N. Y. S. 519, 66 N. E. 1107; L. & N. R. Co. v. Jones, 83 Ala. 376, 3 South. 902.

[2, 3] It only remains to apply the above reasoning to the facts of the instant case. In the light of medical knowledge properly presented to the commission that such a transfer of a streptococcic infection from a discharging wound as that found to have taken place in Caffrey's case is not only possible, but highly probable, we are of the opinion that the fact that the germs reached the face by external means and not through the system cannot, as a matter of law, be said in itself to have broken the chain of causation. But petitioner contends that Caffrey's conduct was such as to require a finding of negligence on his part. Caffrey was, of course, under a duty to use reasonable care to restore himself to health. But if he conducted himself as would a reasonably prudent person in his situation and circumstances, and innocently enhanced the original injury, it was within the province of the commission to find that the original cause continued to the end and accomplished the final result, and was therefore the proximate cause. Dunham v. Clare, [1902] 2 K. B. 292; Hodgson v. Robins, 7 B. W. C. C. 232, 233; Bailey v. Ind. Comn., 286 Ill. 623, 122 N. E. 107; Hope v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 40 Hun (N. Y.) 438, 440; Batton v. Public Service Corp., 75 N. J. Law, 857, 69 Atl. 164, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 640, 127 Am. St. Rep. 855. Under all of the circumstances, we are not prepared to say that the commission was not justified in the instant case in finding that his original injury was the proximate cause of Caffrey's death.

It appears that when the toe first troubled him Caffrey had it dressed by Dr. Marvin at the emergency hospital at the shipbuilding plant. When called as a witness, the doctor did not recollect the case, but the hospital record as explained by him indicated that the toe was not in a very serious condition, that Caffrey was given no special warning, and that he was told to go to another hospital in a day or two when the dressing needed to be changed. The next day he started to work, but, on account of the pain in the foot, he returned home. He might have had free treatment at the hospital maintained by petitioner for its employés, but he chose instead to remain at home and treat the foot himself with witch hazel and iodine. In the light of subsequent events, this was an unfortunate decision. We are, however, unable to say as a matter of law that the commission was bound to find that, under all the circumstances appearing at the time, it was a decision so unreasonable and imprudent as to amount to a breach of his duty to use due care to restore himself to health. There is no further fact in the case upon which negligence can be predicated. It is not suggested that Caffrey failed to use due care in his own treatment of the foot. It was not until the third day of his absence from work that he first noted a swelling of the face, which he at that time attributed to a cold in the head. The toe, however, was improving, and he wrote to his foreman on that day that he was a little better, and that he would try to return to work as soon as possible. Serious symptoms first developed on the face on the following day and without further delay he was removed to a hospital for treatment.

[4] The facts of the case are not such as to warrant the conclusion that the commission was bound to find that the transfer of the germs from Caffery's toe to his face was due to his own negligence. It follows that we cannot disturb the finding that his death was the natural consequence of the original injury.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.; OLNEY, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. Caffrey, while at work for his employer, had an accident which abraded the skin of his toe. From that abrasion natural causes which he could not control brought on an infection in the toe. The infection and consequent diseased condition of the toe were the proximate results of the abrasion and of the accident. But the infection did not reach his face by the operation of natural causes. The commission so found. It reached the face by being subsequently carried there, either from some other source, or by some agency entirely disconnected with the infected condition of the toe, or by his own act in carelessly or accidentally touching his face with something which had been in contact with the infection in the toe. Any one of these causes would be an independent intervening cause and not a cause arising proximately from the injury.

It makes no difference, with respect to this question, whether the act of Caffrey which carried the infection to his face, if it was so carried, was negligent or merely accidental; in either event it was a cause independent of the original injury and intervening it and the deposit of the infection on the face. The opinion of the majority appears to assume that an act of the injured person cannot be an independent intervening cause unless it is a negligent act. This, of course, cannot be correct. The question whether or not it is negligent has no place in an inquiry whether or not it is an independent intervening cause.

The decision and the reasons therefor stated in Head Drilling Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comn., 177 Cal. 194, 170 Pac. 157, are not applicable to the present case. The facts were materially different. There the injured person, Scott, had a fracture of the leg. He was put in the care of a physician engaged by the insurance carrier of the employer. He had been discharged from the hospital, but was still acting under the supervision of the physician, and had been directed by him to begin to use the fractured leg. It was while he was obeying these instructions and in his usual habits of going about in his home, as the directions contemplated he should do, that his foot slipped on a rug. The leg, owing to the injury, was not yet capable of free motion. This caused an involuntary outward motion of that foot, which struck a table or chair near by, and brought about the additional injury for which the second award was made. There was therefore an unbroken chain of causation from the original injury to the second injury. The original injury was one of the direct causes of the second injury. Scott was following the advice of the physician to accelerate recovery, and because of his doing so he received the second injury. In such cases it is always conceded that the second injury is not produced by an independent, intervening cause. It may be an intervening cause, but is not an independent cause. In the case at bar the original injury had no connection whatever, natural or artificial, with the transmission of the infection from the toe to the face. It was not directly or indirectly the result of treatment or advice of the physicians in charge of the case, nor the necessary or natural result of the infection in the toe. For these reasons I am of the opinion that the employer was not liable for the additional award.

ENGELS COPPER MINING CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=375(1) — DEPUTY SHERIFF, EMPLOYED BY CORPORATION, EMPLOYÉ WITHIN COMPENSATION ACT.

A deputy sheriff, employed by a mining company to keep order about its premises, killed in quelling a disturbance, acted in the course of his employment, so that his widow was entitled to compensation from his employer, despite Workmen's Compensation Act, § 8(a), defining the term "employé," and including all elected and appointed paid public officers, but excluding any person holding an appointment as deputy sheriff, but receiving no compensation from the county or municipal corporation, with a proviso that the exclusion should deprive no person so deputized from recourse for injury in the course of employment against any private person employing him.

In Bank.

Proceeding for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Mrs. Eva A. Smith, widow of Franklin H. Smith, the employé, opposed by the Engels Copper Mining Company, the employer. Compensation was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the employer applies for certiorari to review its action. Award affirmed.

R. P. Wisecarver and Redman & Alexander, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LENNON, J. Certiorari to review the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in awarding death benefits to Eva A. Smith, widow of Franklin H. Smith, deceased. Smith was an employé in the service of petitioner and was also a deputy sheriff. He was killed on the evening of August 4, 1918, while attempting to quell a drunken disturbance in a shack owned by petitioner and situated adjacent to its premises. The single question presented is whether or not Smith was killed while "performing service growing out of and incidental to" his employment. The return to the writ discloses the following facts:

At the time of Smith's death, petitioner was operating a mine in Plumas county. Upon its land were situated the various shops, machines, and buildings appropriate to such an operation, together with bunkhouses for the use of such of the men as did not choose to rent private houses, which were also situated on the premises. The shack where the disturbance occurred was located just below the petitioner's machine shop. It was a frame and canvas structure, and, while it does not appear who owned the land upon which it stood, it appears that the petitioner owned the frame and that the occupants were under its control; one of them, an Indian named John Smith, being in its employ.

At the time of his death, the deceased, Franklin H. Smith, was employed by petitioner as a general utility man, to look out for its interests on and off the company's property. He acted as fire warden, but his duties in this connection consumed on the average of less than an hour a day. He was required to meet trains and look after arriving employès, to remove women of questionable character from the premises, to watch prostitutes who established camps outside the company's property, and, where they were making trouble, or were supposed to be selling liquor, to have them move on. He was, moreover, required to keep down disorder from drunkenness, to settle disturbances among the men, and to do the work of a regular police officer in keeping order. Smith was also a deputy sheriff. During the period of his employment by petitioner as watchman or special officer, he had been called upon several times by the sheriff to act in civil matters, but he had rendered no service as deputy sheriff in criminal matters under the sheriff's orders. His activities were confined to matters going on around the mine, and concerning these matters it was his duty to report to the superintendent of the mine, rather than to the sheriff.

On the evening in question, a Mexican had brought some whisky to John Smith's shack, and a drunken orgy ensued, in the course of which one of the occupants of the shack threatened gun play. One of the other occupants of the shack sent for the deceased. It does not appear exactly what information the deceased received, but one Greaves testified at the coroner's inquest that he saw the deceased, who said, "I have got to go down and see about a drunken Indian or buck." He then went down to the shack and was shot and killed.

These facts warrant a finding that in going to the shack to quell the disturbance the deceased was doing exactly what he was hired by petitioner to do. This conclusion is further fortified by the fact that the deceased had been expressly required to quell or prevent disturbances adjacent to the company's premises. The reason for these directions was explained by the company's superintendent as follows:

"If a man got killed, and there was a big row, and it was an employé of the copper company, there would be a loss to us, if a court trial came up."

[1] Petitioner does not deny that the deceased had acted to quell or prevent disturbances before under the direction of the superintendent of the company. It is insisted, however, that in so doing he was "of course" acting in an official capacity as deputy sheriff. This raises the only serious question presented by the petition. Where a private company or individual employs a watchman or special officer, and in making its selection deliberately chooses an officer of the law, in order to take advantage of his authority, as did petitioner in the instant case, and where such officer performs acts advantageous to and expressly or impliedly directed by the employer, which happen at the same time to be acts which it would be his official duty to perform, is such an employè acting in the course of employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act? Respondent relies upon section 8(a) of the statute (St. 1917, p. 835), which defines the term "employé" and includes "all elected and appointed paid public officers," but excludes "any person holding an appointment as deputy clerk, deputy sheriff, or deputy constable appointed for the convenience of the appointee, but receives no compensation from the county or municipal corporation, or the citizens thereof for the services of such duty." The section, however, provides:

"That such last exclusion shall not deprive any person so deputized from recourse against any private person employing him for injury occurring in the course of and arising out of such employment."

The question presented in the instant case involves the construction to be placed upon the words of the proviso above quoted. Petitioner contends that the "employment" referred to in the proviso has no relation to the performance of official acts, and that a deputized person can be an employé only when performing some act in no wise connected with his official duties. With this construction we cannot agree. It would not, we think, require an express statutory reservation to secure to a deputy sheriff the right to compensation for an injury received in the course of working at a mechanical art or trade. The clause in question should not be regarded as intended to effect this purpose, and thereby be interpreted as a purely superogatory enactment, if it may fairly be construed in such a manner as to give it a rational purpose. In our opinion the statute is to be construed in the light of the common practice of property owners to choose as watchman or special officers men who are deputized officers of the law and to secure the deputization of such watchman or special officers engaged by them as are not already deputies. It is obviously to this class of deputies that the excluding clause of the statute refers in sharp contrast to the provisions of the including clause. It is in the light of the meaning of the excluding clause that the proviso in question must be read. So read, its clear effect is to provide that, where a deputy performs acts which, while official in their nature, are advantageous to the employer and directed by him, not incidentally merely, but as part of the duties prescribed and contemplated in the contract of employment, then such deputy is acting in the course of his private employment within the meaning of the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Upon this view of the statute, petitioner cannot escape liability to compensate the widow for the death of Franklin H. Smith on the plea that in performing the duties incident to his employment he was also fulfilling a duty to the county.

The award is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 24, 1919. Rehearing Denied Nov. 21, 1919.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸5(1) — PRIVITY OF CONTRACT.

Where, as partial compensation to the contractor for improvements to be made by him on the owner's land, the owner was to permit a company to build and occupy a wharf upon the property, rent free, for five years, the company to have the right to sublet, but in the event of subletting one-half the rent from subletting to be paid to the owner, and the wharf was built and sublet, there was privity of contract between the owner and the company from the time the latter accepted the consideration moving to it under the contract.

2. USE AND OCCUPATION ⟸2 — HOLDING OVER; RIGHTS OF LANDLORD.

Though the landlord, after holding over of defendants, never changed the tenancy by sufferance into a tenancy at will upon like terms with the original tenancy, he may sue for use and occupation, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, and Civ. Code § 3334.

3. USE AND OCCUPATION ⟸8—PLEADING; ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT.

An owner, who brings a suit for use and occupation, need only allege his ownership of the land, occupancy of the land by defendant, the reasonable value of the use of the land for the period of occupancy, and that such sum is unpaid; allegation of permission being unnecessary.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1170(3)—HARMLESS ERROR; VARIANCE.

Even if owner's action against occupant of his land erroneously sounded in contract, but the proof was of use and occupation without contract, this, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, would not be ground for reversal of judgment for the owner; the substance of the contention and the measure of the amount of property, recoverable being essentially the same.

5. USE AND OCCUPATION ⟸8 — PLEADING; AVERMENT OF PERMISSION.

Complaint alleging that occupancy of premises was with acquiescence, permission, and sufferance of plaintiff, and plaintiff's assignors and predecessors in interest, would, if the word "permission" were eliminated, state a good cause of action under Civ. Code § 3334, which abolishes the rule that a trespasser may be sued only for "mesne profits."

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by the Richmond Wharf & Dock Company against Anson S. Blake, the San Pablo Quarry Company, the San Francisco Quarries Company, and others. There was a judgment against the named defendants, and they appeal. Affirmed.

See also (App.) 185 Pac. 186; 177 Pac. 508.

Sterling Carr, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Reed, Nusbaumer & Bingaman, Johnson & Shaw, and H. W. Pulcifer, all of Oakland, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff, as assignee of one A. S. Macdonald, sued for the value of the use of certain real property. There were five defendants, as indicated by the title of the cause. Judgment was recovered against Anson S. Blake, San Pablo Quarry Company, and San Francisco Quarries Company for $6,809.12 as the value of the use of said land. It was adjudged that plaintiff take nothing by the action from either of the other two defendants. The three defendants against whom the judgment was given have appealed, but the appeal which we are now considering is that of the quarry companies. The appeal of Anson S. Blake is separate from this and will be separately determined.

The land, occupation of which is involved in this action, is a portion of lot No. 16, in section No. 16, township 1 north, of range 5 west, Mt. Diablo base and meridian, being a tract of tideland in the bay of San Francisco. Compensation was also demanded for the use of a wharf and the approach thereto situated upon said land.

Appellants, by their answers, denied that plaintiff owned the land and improvements described in the complaint. They denied that they occupied the designated premises, except that the San Francisco Quarries Company, as tenant of the San Pablo Quarry Company, and by virtue of the right of said San Pablo Quarry Company, as littoral owner of the upland lying adjacent to the Bay of San Francisco, to build a wharf out to navigable water, did occupy the wharf and use the approach thereto. The appellants also denied that such use or occupation was with the acquiescence or permission or sufferance of the plaintiff or any of its predecessors in interest. The court found that San Pablo Quarry Company did not construct or occupy the wharf in the exercise of any asserted right as owner of the upland, but only by reason and under authority of a contract between A. S. Macdonald and Anson S. Blake, dated August 3, 1906. This finding is supported by the evidence.

It was found by the superior court that appellants occupied the premises during the term for which compensation is demanded with the acquiescence, permission, and sufferance of plaintiff and its predecessors in interest. Appellants insist that this finding is without sufficient support in the evidence—a contention which we shall proceed to examine.

[1] The contract between Macdonald and Blake authorized the latter to occupy the land for a period of five years from August 3, 1906. Blake promised to do certain work on the property, including the construction of a seawall and other important improvements. In compensation for such work Macdonald was to convey to Blake an undivided one-half interest in the land after it should have been filled and walled, and was to allow Blake to occupy, rent free, such part of the land as might be required for the prosecution of the work, during the five years of the life of the agreement. As further consideration Macdonald was to permit San Pablo Quarry Company to build and occupy a wharf upon the southerly portion of the property, rent free, during the life of the agreement. San Pablo Quarry Company, however, might sublet the wharf, with consent of all parties to the contract, but in the event of such subletting one-half of the rent was to be paid to Macdonald, the owner of the land. San Pablo Quarry Company did build the wharf and sublet it to San Francisco Quarries Company, becoming bound thereby to pay one-half of the rental to Macdonald. There was privity of contract between Macdonald and San Pablo Quarry Company from the time the latter accepted the consideration moving to it under the contract. That company and the sublessee were in possession of the property so demised when Blake's five-year contract expired August 2, 1911, and they continued to occupy the premises from August 3, 1911, until July 23, 1913.

[2] It is contended by appellants that because Macdonald, after the holding over of appellants, never by contract changed this tenancy by sufferance into a tenancy at will upon like terms with the original tenancy, the landowner cannot sue for use and occupation, but must sue for mesne profits. Even if we concede that this is the doctrine prevailing in other jurisdictions, we are bound by positive statutes in California to hold that such an action as this will lie. There are two Code sections which are applicable to the problem presented by this appeal. Section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as pertinent, is as follows:

"A tenant of real property, for a term less than life, is guilty of unlawful detainer:

"When he continues in possession, in person or by subtenant, of the property, or any part thereof, after the expiration of the term for which it is let to him, without the permission of his landlord, or the successor in estate of his landlord, if any there be. * * *"

Section 3334 of the Civil Code, in its material part, is as follows:

"The detriment caused by the wrongful occupation of real property * * * is deemed to be the value of the use of the property for the time of such occupation."

[3] The complaint alleged that the occupancy of the premises was with the "acquiescence, permission and sufferance of plaintiff and plaintiff's assignors and predecessors in interest." The court found this allegation to be true. In this the court erred, so far as the finding of "permission" is concerned, for, although it appears that Macdonald told Blake that he would not interfere with Blake or his business, and although it appears that Blake was president of the San Pablo Quarry Company, it was not shown that permission if any was expressed by Macdonald's remark, was communicated to that corporation. But the allegation of permission and the finding thereon were both unnecessary in a suit for the value of the use and occupation of the property. A landowner, who brings a suit for the use and occupation of his property, need only allege his ownership of the land, occupation of said land by defendant, the reasonable value of the use of the property for the period of occupation, and that such sum is unpaid. If demurrer for uncertainty were based upon the failure of the pleading to indicate whether the occupation was with or without the plaintiff's permission, such demurrer would be properly overruled, because the liability would be the same in either event. As this idea was well expressed by counsel for respondent in one of the briefs, "the gravamen of the action and the measure of recovery are precisely the same in tort as in contract."

[4] Conceding that plaintiff's action erroneously sounded in contract, but the proof was of use and occupation without contract, the substance of the contention and the measure of the amount of property recoverable were essentially the same, and it would be a manifest injustice to reverse the cause because of error in procedure. Section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution of California would be properly applicable to the judgment in this case.

[5] It will be noticed, however, that although the complaint alleged permission, it also alleged sufferance. If we should eliminate the word "permission," and should allow the associated words of the complaint to remain, we would have a well-stated cause of action under section 3334 of the Civil Code, which abolishes the rule that a trespasser may be sued only for "mesne profits." The complaint merely stated more than was necessary to allege, namely, that the occupancy was with permission. Permission or lack of it being immaterial, both the pleading and finding in that regard may be disregarded, and the judgment upheld upon the findings, sustained by the proof of the fact, term, and value of the occupation of the land.

In South Dakota a statute identical with section 3334 of the Civil Code of California has received judicial construction in cases very similar to the one at bar. The statute to which we refer is section 2313 of the Civil Code of South Dakota (formerly section 4601 of the Compiled Laws of that state). In Parkinson v. Shew, 12 S. D. 171, 80 N. W. 189, the lower court had sustained a demurrer to a counterclaim to recover "for the use and occupation of the premises, * * * which it is alleged plaintiff wrongfully and without authority entered upon, occupied, and retained for his own use and benefit." In reversing this ruling the Supreme Court used the following language:

"Plaintiff relies wholly upon the insufficiency of facts stated therein, and maintains that the relation of landlord and tenant is vitally essential to a recovery for the use and occupation of land. By the demurrer it is admitted that the appellants were the owners and entitled to the possession of the premises which respondent tortiously entered upon and wrongfully occupied during all the time mentioned in the complaint. In such a case the tort may be waived, and an action based upon implied assumpsit is usually maintainable to recover the value of the use of the property for the time of such occupation, together with the costs of recovering possession. Olson v. Huntamer, 6 S. D. 364, 61 N. W. 479. Although the averments of the counterclaim negative the implication of a contract to pay rent, proof of the facts therein stated would entitle appellants to recover under section 4601 of the Compiled Laws, and the order appealed from is reversed."

The case of Baldwin v. Bohl, 23 S. D. 395, 122 N. W. 247, is authority for the same interpretation of the statute.

Appellants contend that since Blake, under the contract of August 3, 1906, was vendee of the land in controversy, this suit was improper, because, as they assert, an action for use and occupation will not lie against a vendee pending the performance of the contract of sale. The answer to this contention is that the contract had expired and was no longer in force during the period for which compensation for use and occupation was sought and recovered.

No other matters discussed in the briefs require analysis or comment.

The judgment is affirmed.

RICHMOND WHARF & DOCK CO. v. BLAKE et al. (Civ. 2542.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 26, 1918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸5(1) — THIRD PARTY BECOMES TENANT ON ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFIT OF CONTRACT.

Where contractor was to do certain work on land of plaintiff's predecessor, in consideration in part that a named company be permitted to construct a wharf at one end of the land and to use and occupy same rent free during the life of the contract, with right to sublet, in which case the owner was to have one-half of the rent, the company became a party to the contract, and, when it went into possession, erected a wharf, and sublet to another, it became a tenant.

2. USE AND OCCUPATION ⟸5—LIABILITY.

Where, on expiration of a contract whereby contractor's consideration was, in part, that a named company be permitted to construct a wharf on premises where the work was to be done and use and occupy the wharf rent free during the life of the contractor's contract, the contractor surrendered the possession he had of the land individually, he cannot be charged with the occupation of the company, which held over by its tenant.

Action by the Richmond Wharf & Dock Company against Anson S. Blake and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals. Reversed.

Johnson & Shaw, of Oakland, for appellant Blake.

Sterling Carr, of San Francisco, for appellants San Pablo Quarry Co. and others.

Reed, Nusbaumer & Bingaman, of Oakland, for respondent Richmond Dock & Wharf Co.

H. W. Pulcifer, of Oakland, for Blake & Bilger Co.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal by defendant Blake from a judgment for the plaintiff in an action brought to recover from defendants the value of the use and occupation of a certain lot of tide land in San Francisco Bay, designated as a portion of tideland lot No. 16, and a certain wharf and approach to said wharf situated upon said land.

The several defendants answered separately. Appellant, Blake, by his answer denied that plaintiff or its predecessors was the owner of said lot of land, wharf, and approach to said wharf, and denied that he or any of said defendants ever used said wharf or approach to said wharf for any purpose whatsoever, except that defendant San Francisco Quarries Company, as tenant of said San Pablo Quarry Company, used and occupied said wharf and approach thereto, and denied that he ever conveyed any rock or materials over said wharf or said approach.

[1, 2] The appellant objects to all the findings of the trial court as being unwarranted under the evidence. The numerous arguments advanced by both appellant and respondent in support of their respective positions are almost all based upon divergent theories of the relationships of the parties involved in this action. It seems to us that, if the relationships of these parties can be properly determined, all other questions involved will be settled thereby; and for this it is necessary to examine the contract of August 3, 1906, between one A. S. Macdonald, plaintiff's assignor, and defendant Anson S. Blake, which is a part of the record, and which was the inception of the relationships of the parties. Under that contract, the appellant was to do certain work upon the land of Macdonald, such as building a seawall, filling, etc., and as compensation therefor Macdonald was to transfer to Blake, after the completion of the work, an undivided one-half interest in the land so improved. As another consideration, Blake was to have the right to use and occupy the land for the period of the contract, rent free, for the purpose of building wharfs and trestles necessary to the prosecution of his work; also, as an additional consideration, the San Pablo Quarry Company, one of the defendants herein, was to have the right to construct a wharf 200 feet long at the southerly end of of said land, and to use and occupy the same, rent free; also, said San Pablo Quarry Company was to have the right, with the consent of all parties, to sublet said wharf, if so constructed, provided, however, that, in the event of a subletting, one-half the rent received from the lessee was to be paid to Macdonald, the owner of the land.

As pointed out in appeal No. 2543[1] by the other defendants to this action, the San Pablo Quarry Company was not originally a party to this contract and there was no privity between it and Macdonald. However, it had the privilege of availing itself of the consideration reserved to it under the contract, which it saw fit to do. Thereupon, we think, it became a party to the contract, and that when it went into possession of the southerly portion of the land, and built its wharf thereon, and sublet to the defendant, San Francisco Quarries Company, it became the tenant of Macdonald and there was privity between the two. Its possession was independent of and entirely unconnected with the possession of the defendant Blake. The contract itself recognizes Blake and the Quarry Company as different parties and accords them different rights. By its terms Blake was to have the right to erect wharves and trestles of any length at any place on the land, and the Quarry Company was to have the right to erect one wharf at the southerly end of the land 200 feet in length. After the expiration of the contract, the San Pablo Quarry Company held over by its tenant, San Francisco Quarries Company. We think, however, that this was not a holding over of Blake individually. Blake surrendered the possession he had of the land individually, and abandoned his work on the wall, which he had started to build. We think he cannot be charged with the occupation of the other defendants.

An examination of the other points raised by appellant becomes unnecessary under this conclusion.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: BEASLY, Judge pro tem.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

SECURITY COMMERCIAL & SAVINGS BANK OF SAN DIEGO v. SEITZ et al. (Civ. 3037.)

1. MORTGAGES ⊂=78 — MORTGAGEE NOT CHARGEABLE WITH VENDOR'S FRAUD.

Where the original mortgagee was not interested in the land purchased and had no knowledge of the representations of the vendor, who was not mortgagee's agent, mortgagee was not chargeable with vendor's fraud in an action for mortgage foreclosure.

2. FRAUD ⊂=31—ELECTION OF REMEDY AS TO DAMAGES.

In seeking affirmative relief, cross-complainants in an action to foreclose a mortgage were required to elect which one of the two remedies they intended to seek, damages after rescission or damages after affirmance.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊂=100(11)—DISCOVERY OF FRAUD; NECESSITY OF DILIGENCE.

Whether a cross-complaint be treated as pleading a cause of action for rescission of a land sale, or one for fraud after affirmance, it was necessary to allege and prove, not only that the fraud was not discovered within the three-year period, but that it could not have been discovered within that time with the exercise of reasonable diligence.

4. MORTGAGES ⊂=86(1) — PRESUMPTION AGAINST FRAUD.

In a mortgagee's action to foreclose, defended on the ground of fraud of mortgagor's vendor, the mortgagee, not being connected with the alleged fraud, was justified in relying upon the presumption against fraud, and the long acquiescence of the parties claiming to be the victims of the fraud, unexplained by the acts which would overcome the presumption.

5. GUARANTY ⊂=16(4)—CONSIDERATION; FORBEARANCE.

Guaranty of note given in consideration of dismissal of a pending action against guarantor's son and another, in which action there was under attachment property of which the guarantor had previously become the title owner, was supported by full and adequate consideration.

6. GUARANTY ⊂=25(1)—GUARANTY IN WRITING IMPORTS CONSIDERATION.

Where the guaranty of a note was in writing, the writing itself imports a consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the Security Commercial & Savings Bank of San Diego against Wm. Seitz and others. Judgment for plaintiff against all three defendants, from which they severally and separately appeal. Affirmed.

Hendee & Rodabaugh and Henry C. Ryan, all of San Diego, for appellants.

Ray M. Harris, of San Diego, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of a promissory note for $10,000 executed by the defendants A. F. Mack and Wm. Seitz, Jr., and to enforce the payment of a written guaranty for the payment of said note subsequently executed by the defendant Wm. Seitz, Sr. The note was executed and delivered to the Blochman Banking Company, a copartnership consisting of L. A. Blochman and J. A. Heap. This bank was subsequently incorporated under the name of Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank, and thereafter the name was changed by a decree of court to Security Commercial & Savings Bank of San Diego, the plaintiff and respondent herein.

The circumstances surrounding the execution of the note and mortgage are as follows:

One Del Fungo, a real estate operator, induced the defendants Mack and Seitz, Jr., to purchase some 90 acres of land situated in San Diego county at the agreed price of $22,500. Payment therefor was made by these defendants by the execution and delivery of three promissory notes, dated November 15, 1912; one for $6,000, which was delivered directly to Del Fungo; one for $6,500, due in six months; and one for $10,000, due in two years. The two latter notes were executed in favor of and delivered to the Blochman Banking Company. The one for $6,500 was unsecured and has been paid, and the one for $10,000 was secured by a mortgage on the land purchased, and is the subject of this litigation. At the time of this transaction Del Fungo was indebted to the Blochman Banking Company in the sum of $14,520. When the notes above mentioned were executed, they were deposited in escrow with a trust company in San Diego, together with the evidences of indebtedness of Del Fungo to the bank, an additional cash advance from the bank to Del Fungo, and the deed of Del Fungo, the owner, conveying the property to Mack and Seitz, Jr., with instructions to the trust company to deliver the documents to the parties entitled thereto upon the deposit of the respective evidences of indebtedness. Through this transaction the indebtedness of Del Fungo to the bank was canceled. In lieu thereof the bank took the two notes, amounting to $16,500, and Mack and Seitz, Jr., took a deed transferring the title of the property to them.

The note for $6,500 was not paid when due, and the Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank, as assignee, commenced an action to enforce its collection against Mack and Seitz, Jr., on the 10th day of March, 1914. On the 27th day of March, 1914, Wm. Seitz, Sr., guaranteed in writing the payment of both notes. In consideration of this guaranty the action on the $6,500 note was dismissed and the bank agreed to extend for one year the time of payment of the $10,000 note, provided certain other conditions were complied with. On the day before this guaranty was made, the title to the land covered by the mortgage passed by regular transfer to the guarantor, Wm. Seitz, Sr. The trial court found that the guaranty was given in consideration of the dismissal of the action mentioned, and that Wm. Seitz, Sr., received adequate consideration therefor. Judgment went for plaintiff against all three defendants, from which they gave notice of their desire to severally and separately appeal.

No answer appears in the record, but by way of cross-complaint defendants set up fraud in the purchase of the land, asked damages against Blochman and Heap, who composed the copartnership known as the Blochman Banking Company, and demanded the cancellation of the note and mortgage as against the plaintiff, Security Commercial & Savings Bank of San Diego. The allegations of fraud are that Del Fungo took defendants Mack and Seitz, Jr., out to see the land sold and pointed out to them other and better land than that described in the deed and mortgage. It was also alleged that Del Fungo represented to said defendants that the land he was offering them for $22,500 was worth more than $50,000, whereas in fact the land actually conveyed was worth much less than $22,500, the purchase price paid by defendants. In order to state a case against the cross-defendants, Blochman and Heap, it was alleged that Del Fungo was their agent and employé, that the false representations were made in their behalf, and that they knew they were false.

Treating the alleged cross-complaint as an equitable defense to plaintiff's cause of action because of the allegations of fraud in the execution and delivery of the note and mortgage (and we assume this was what was done by the trial court, although the record is silent upon this point), it is evident that this defense rests entirely upon the proposition that Del Fungo was the agent of Blochman and Heap, that the false representations were made in their behalf, and that they knew them to be false. The trial court found against defendants on all these allegations, and this finding is amply supported by the evidence.

Appellants' position seems to be that, the note being nonnegotiable, the respondent is charged with knowledge of all of the legal defenses available to the mortgagors. In support of this they cite numerous authorities holding that one who is about to take the assignment of a mortgage is bound to inquire of the mortgagor if he has any legal defenses to the mortgage, and that if he fails to do this he takes the mortgage subject to all legal objections or infirmities which could have been set up against it in the hands of the original mortgagee, being charged with all facts which such an inquiry would have disclosed.

[1] The facts of this case, as found by the trial court, show clearly that the rule of these decisions is not applicable here. The original mortgagee was the Blochman Banking Company, a copartnership, and not Del Fungo, the party who is alleged to have committed the fraud. Against the bank appellants could raise no different defenses than they have raised against the assignee of the bank. If, as is found by the court, the original mortgagee was not interested in the land purchased and had no knowledge of the representations of Del Fungo, and he was not its agent in this transaction, it was not chargeable with the fraud of Del Fungo.

[2, 3] All that has been said herein regarding the defense of fraud has been said on the assumption that the alleged fraud was properly pleaded. But the cross-complainants in the same pleading and in the same cause of action set up the alleged fraudulent representations and the damages resulting therefrom, seeking a rescission or cancellation of the note and mortgage as against one cross-defendant and damages for the fraud as against the others. They alleged that they did not discover the fraud until more than three years after it was committed, but did not explain why an earlier discovery was not made.

In seeking affirmative relief cross-complainants were required to elect which one of two remedies they intended to seek—damages after rescission or damages after affirmance. They could not seek both. Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 512, 143 Pac. 729. Whether the pleading be treated as a cause of action for rescission or one for fraud after affirmance, it was necessary to allege and prove, not only that the fraud was not discovered within the three-year period, but that it could not have been discovered within that time by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Montgomery v. Peterson, 27 Cal. App. 671, 676, 151 Pac. 23; Truett v. Onderdonk, 120 Cal. 581, 589, 53 Pac. 26.

[4] The presumption is always against fraud. This presumption is as strong as that of innocence of crime. One who seeks relief against the effects of fraud must allege it and prove it by clear proof and satisfactory evidence. "They must clearly show that they did not discover the existence or commission of the alleged frauds until within a reasonable time before the action was begun, that they proceeded promptly upon such discovery, and that their failure to make the discovery sooner was not due to their own lack of diligence. All this must be shown, not merely by a bare statement of the conclusions as we have stated them, but by a detailed statement of the facts and circumstances which caused the ignorance, which prevented an earlier discovery, and which constitute the diligence in seeking a discovery." Del Campo v. Camarillo, 154 Cal. 647, 657, 98 Pac. 1049, 1054. Cross-complainants not only failed to allege why they did not sooner discover the fraud or that they exercised diligence in seeking a discovery, but they wholly failed to make any offer of proof upon either of these matters. The trial court was fully justified in denying them affirmative relief upon this plea. As a defense to the main action they are in no better position. The trial court having found that respondent's assignor was not connected with the alleged fraud, respondent was justified in relying upon the presumption against fraud and the long acquiescence of the parties who claim to be the victims of the fraud, unexplained by any acts which would overcome this presumption.

[5] In support of the appeal on behalf of the appellant Seitz, Sr., it is urged that there was no consideration for his guaranty of payment except that based on fraud; but the facts are, as the trial court properly found, that this guaranty was given in consideration of the dismissal of a certain action then pending in San Diego county in which Mack and Seitz, Jr., were defendants and this property was under attachment, Seitz, Sr., having previously become the title owner of the property. These facts clearly support the finding of the court that Seitz, Sr., received full and adequate consideration for the guaranty.

[6] Furthermore, the complaint alleges that the guaranty was in writing and sets it forth in hæc verba. The writing itself imports a consideration. The allegations of the complaint are not denied, and the want of consideration for the guaranty is not put in issue by the defendants.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

TURNER et al. v. BUSH et al. (Civ. 2006.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1010(1)—REVIEW; FINDING ON SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

If there is any substantial evidence from which a rational inference may be drawn that the elements of prescriptive right to waters exist in defendants as found by the trial court, the finding is binding on the appellate court.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊜152(8) — EVIDENCE; PRESCRIPTIVE TITLE TO WATERS OF STREAM.

In an action for permanent injunction to prevent defendants from using or interfering with plaintiff's use of a third of the waters of a creek, evidence held sufficient to sustain trial court's finding that defendants through their own use and that of their predecessors for at least five years had acquired title by prescription to all the waters of the creek.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊜137—TITLE BY PRESCRIPTION TO WATERS OF NATURAL STREAM.

Landowners who used all the waters of a natural stream continuously, openly, and under a claim of right for at least five years, paying taxes, acquired title by prescription.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence N. Raker, Judge.

Action by Raymond J. Turner and others against F. E. Bush and others. From judgment for defendants and an order denying new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Sharp & Henderson, of Alturas, and Dodge & Barry and N. J. Barry, all of Reno, Nev., for appellants.

D. B. Robnett, of Alturas, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to secure a permanent injunction to prevent the defendants from using or from interfering with the use by plaintiffs of one-third of the waters of a certain South Deep creek, which is a natural stream of water in Surprise valley, Modoc county. Plaintiffs based their claim upon an alleged prior appropriation by the patentee of their lands, one Jacob F. Bittner, and in a separate count set up the claim of title by prescription. Defendants answered separately and denied all the material allegations of the complaint except the ownership of the lands by plaintiffs, and they filed a cross-complaint in which they claimed all the waters of said creek, first by virtue of prior appropriations, second by adverse user for the prescriptive period of five years, and defendant Bush made a further claim to said waters of said stream as riparian proprietor. Judgment was for defendants, and the appeal is by plaintiffs from said judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial. There is really no controversy over the Bush claim to one-third of the water, the evidence all showing that he was and is entitled to it, and therefore, concededly, the judgment as to him must be affirmed. The only dispute is as to the two-thirds of the water claimed by defendant K. M. Lester, plaintiffs insisting that they are entitled to one-half of that two-thirds, it being admitted by them that said defendant owns and is entitled to the use of the other one-half, or one-third of the whole flow. There was no evidence of any appropriation of any of the water by said Jacob F. Bittner, so that it may be said there was a failure of proof as to this allegation of the complaint. It appeared, however, that for more than 30 years prior to March 15, 1912, all the lands involved herein and all the waters of said creek were owned and used by one Christopher T. Sharp. There is evidence that said Sharp used and appropriated said water equally for the irrigation of said three tracts, and hence the contention is made by appellants that one-third of said flow became appurtenant to the land now belonging to plaintiffs and passed with the deed to George Turner and Sallie C. Turner executed by said Sharp on said March 15, 1912, and thereafter to plaintiffs through the deed executed to them by said George Turner and Sallie C. Turner on the 1st day of May, 1915. This is the theory upon which plaintiffs relied in the court below. In that respect there was a departure from the scheme of the complaint; but no objection was made to the course pursued, and it cannot be urged now as a sufficient reason for the affirmance of the judgment. In opposition to this claim of plaintiffs, it was the contention of defendants, especially defendant Lester, that Sharp reserved the water right attached to the land conveyed to plaintiffs' predecessors in interest, and transferred the entire water right in and to the use of said stream to the defendants or their grantors. This claim was and is based upon the peculiar language of the deeds executed by Sharp to the respective parties on said March 15, 1912, and also certain parol evidence of the intention of the parties, which was allowed over the objection of appellants. It may be said that it is at least questionable whether the lower court's ruling as to the admissibility of this evidence was correct, and also whether there is sufficient competent evidence to support the finding of the court that—

"Said Jacob F. Bittner did not, nor did any other grantor of plaintiffs, ever divert from said stream into any ditch by means of any dam, or otherwise, or by means of any ditch, or otherwise, convey an amount of water equal to one-third of the greatest flow of the waters of said stream, or convey any amount of the waters of said stream to or upon the above-described lands of plaintiffs."

We think, though, that we may forego the consideration of these and some other questions discussed by counsel. We reach this conclusion by virtue of the fact that the court found that defendants have acquired a title by prescription to all the waters and that there is sufficient evidence, as we are required to view it, to support said finding. It will not be disputed that this finding in connection with the undisputed facts is sufficient upon which to base the judgment, and that, if supported, it renders immaterial other findings to which objection is made.

[1] In considering the sufficiency of the evidence to support said finding we are not unmindful of the rule as thus stated in Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 66 Pac. 10:

"The burden is upon the party who claims title by prescription to clearly prove by competent evidence all of the elements essential to such title. The user must have been adverse to the true owner and hostile to his title. It must have been actual, continued, open, and under a claim of right. It must have all the elements necessary to acquire title by adverse possession. * * * It must in some way be asserted in such manner that the owners may know of the claim."

But that rule is especially for the guidance of the trial court. The principle which controls us is that, if there is any substantial evidence in the record from which a rational inference may be drawn that said elements of prescriptive right exist, then this court as an appellate tribunal is bound by the finding of the trial court.

It is also to be remembered that the initiation of the "adverse possession" could not be earlier than March 15, 1912, nor could it continue beyond the month of June, 1917; that being the time when this controversy over the ownership of the water arose. But as seen this period covers more than five years.

[2] With these preliminary observations, we herewith set out the principal evidence upon which is based the claim of title by prescription.

One W. A. Mickle, who was the immediate predecessor in interest of defendant K. M. Lester as to a portion of her lands and who managed the lands which Mr. Bush then owned and afterward sold to Miss Lester, testified in part as follows:

"From March 15, 1912, I continued to own the land until about the first of April, I think it was 1917. I occupied the land from March 15, 1912, to April, 1917. During that time I was familiar with the Bittner pre-emption. In 1912 Stewart had it leased. George Turner, I think, was the owner of it. From 1912 until 1917 I used water on the land that was conveyed to me. I got the water from South Deep creek. I used it continuously, for the purpose of irrigating alfalfa, grain, garden, and orchard. The waters were necessary for the watering of crops on the land. I am familiar with the Sharp pre-emption. During the time that I had charge of the land, I had charge of the portion of the Sharp pre-emption that Mr. Bush had purchased and I used a portion of the water of South Deep creek on that land. My use was open. Whenever I wanted water I took it. I do not think any one was living on the Bittner land (land of plaintiffs) the first year. Mr. Stewart was living on the adjoining land and had it leased. During the year 1912 neither Stewart nor Turner used any water on the Bittner land from South Deep creek to my knowledge. The ditch that they used to take the water to the Bittner tract is not far from my house, and I had occasion to cross the ditch frequently, and I crossed the ditch occasionally and observed it, and they used water through that ditch that season. I cannot give the exact date, but it was early in the spring, shortly after I moved on the place. I think John Stewart turned the water into the ditch. Prior to the water being turned into the ditch, I had a conversation with Mr. George Turner, who was then owner of the Bittner land. He came to my place and asked me if I would go with him up to Mr. Stewart's place and tell him to turn the water from South Deep creek down through that place, as he wanted to take the water to what was known as the big Turner ranch. He had just sold that ranch to Mr. Alvord, and he wanted the water on it in order to make a good showing on that place. I told him that I was not using the water and that we would both go up there, and then we went to Mr. Stewart and told him to take the water and run it down there, which he did. I cannot tell exactly how long the water ran down there because I was busy. I had plowing to do and I could not use the water. It might have run down there a week or two weeks. When I got my plowing done, I took the water and irrigated my alfalfa and grain. I turned all of the water off of the Turner ranch and used it on the land I had leased from Mr. Bush and on the land I owned. * * * I used all the water from South Deep creek except the one-third that went to the Dodson lands (lands of defendant Bush) continuously on the lands described in the deed to me and the deed to Mr. Bush from 1912 to 1917, without interference or interruption by any one. * * * During the time I was farming the Sharp land I bought, and that which Bush bought, I used all the water in South Deep creek on those lands, except one-third that went to the Dodson place, and I used it continuously, openly, notoriously, and under claim of right. No one interfered with me, except through my permission, and I asked no one's permission to use it."

The foregoing would justify the trial court's finding under the doctrine of Gurnsey v. Antelope Creek, etc., Co., 6 Cal. App. 387, 92 Pac. 326; Silva v. Hawn, 10 Cal. App. 544, 102 Pac. 952; Hesperia, etc., v. Rogers, 83 Cal. 10, 23 Pac. 196, 17 Am. St. Rep. 209; and many other decisions.

It is true that in the cross-examination of the witness he qualified his testimony by stating that it did not apply to the year 1917, so that, if there were no other testimony of a similar nature extending over a sufficient period in 1917 to complete the five years, it might be said that the time was too short. But one A. K. Sweet testified, among other things, as follows:

"During the year 1917 I have been running the land formerly owned by Bush and now by Miss Lester, and I have used water from South Deep creek this year. Had two-thirds of it, as near as I could guess, and Hussa took over the other one-third for the Bush lands; that is, the Dodson land. Raymond Turner was using water from South Deep creek this year some time about the first of June. I think it was the first day of June it was turned on. I turned it all away."

W. A. Hussa testified that for three years he had been living on the Dodson land, and—

"During the times that I have been there Mickle took two-thirds of the water, and I took one-third. He took two-thirds of the water to his place and the Bush place, and I took the other one-third to the Dodson place."

[3] We may add that there is further evidence in the record that the use of said water by plaintiffs was permissive and that defendants used it as if it belonged to them, and, since there is no controversy as to the payment of the taxes, we are satisfied that there is legal justification for the conclusion that defendants and their predecessors in interest used all the water continuously, openly, and under a claim of right for at least five years, and therefore acquired a title by prescription.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

W. W. KIMBALL CO. v. READ. (Civ. 2919.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃641—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS; REPEAL OF STATUTORY LIMITATIONS ON RIGHT TO DO BUSINESS IN STATE.

Civ. Code, §§ 405, 406, 408, and 410, prescribing conditions under which foreign corporations might do business within state, are clearly inapplicable to an action where they were all repealed before it was instituted, and before assignment of the contract of sale under which plaintiff claims was made.

2. COMMERCE ⊂⊃46—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS; REGULATION OF RIGHT TO SUE AS BURDEN ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

If a foreign piano company was engaged exclusively in interstate commerce the statute providing that a foreign corporation which has failed to file a copy of its articles, designate agent, etc., cannot maintain or defend any action is inapplicable, because, in view of commerce clause of federal Constitution, the state cannot burden persons or corporations engaged wholly in interstate commerce.

3. COMMERCE ⊂⊃40(2)—SALES IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE; DELIVERY ON ORDERS SENT TO ANOTHER STATE.

Sales of pianos, followed by the delivery in California on orders sent from California to the seller company in Illinois, were transactions in interstate commerce, beyond the scope of the statute providing that a foreign corporation which has failed to file a copy of articles, designate agent, etc., cannot maintain or defend any action in California.

4. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃642(6)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS; TAKING ASSIGNMENT NOT DOING BUSINESS IN STATE.

The assignment to an Illinois piano company by a retail firm in San Francisco of an installment contract of sale, being outside the ordinary business of the Illinois piano company, held not to constitute doing business in California; the taking of a single assignment not being an intrastate transaction.

5. COMMERCE ⊂=46—RIGHT OF FOREIGN COMPANY TO COLLECT PRICE OF SALE IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

A foreign corporation has the right to sue in the courts of a state to collect the purchase price of merchandise sold in interstate commerce, irrespective of any state statute requiring the filing of a copy of articles of incorporation, etc., as a condition to the right to do business.

6. CORPORATIONS ⊂=673—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS; BURDEN TO SHOW BAR AGAINST DOING BUSINESS IN STATE.

The burden is on the party pleading against plaintiff foreign corporation the bar of the statute prohibiting its doing business in the state without complying with the statute requiring filing of copy of articles of incorporation, etc., to show that the case comes within the terms of the statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by the W. W. Kimball Company against Alice Read, sued as Mrs. A. Read. From judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Willard P. Smith, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Franklin P. Bull, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff is a foreign corporation organized under the laws of the state of Illinois and having its principal place of business in Chicago. For some time prior to the institution of this proceeding it had been selling pianos to a retail firm located in San Francisco. This local firm sold these and other pianos to its customers in this state upon conditional lease contracts providing for progressive payments. One such contract was made between this local firm and the respondent herein covering a piano not sold to the local firm by appellant, and this contract was assigned to appellant. Respondent defaulted in her payments on this contract, and appellant commenced this action in replevin. Respondent interposed the special defense that appellant was without capacity to sue because it "has not complied with the laws of the state of California, in regard to foreign corporations doing business in this state." This issue was tried on the theory that the rights of plaintiff to maintain the action depended upon a compliance with the provisions of sections 405, 406, 408, and 410 of the Civil Code. The trial court found that plaintiff had not complied with these sections of the Code, and accordingly dismissed the action.

[1] All of the briefs on this appeal are concerned with the interpretation and constitutionality of these sections of the Code. These sections are clearly inapplicable to this case, because they were all repealed before this action was instituted and before the assignment of the contract of sale was made. Stats. 1917, p. 381. Accordingly the findings of the trial court based upon the noncompliance with these repealed sections of the Code do not support the judgment of dismissal.

The existing statute, which was enacted before the assignment of the contract, provides that a foreign corporation which has failed to file a copy of its articles, designation of agent, etc., cannot maintain or defend "any action or proceeding concerning its property in this state or any intrastate business or transaction, in any court of this state."

This was the law of the state which respondent unknowingly alleged appellant had not complied with. Though the statute was thus put in issue, it was not called to the attention of the trial court, and has not been referred to on this appeal. Without the aid of argument by counsel, no attempt will be made in this opinion to interpret the existing statute or to determine its constitutionality. However, certain rulings were made during the trial on the question of the right of the state to close its courts to foreign corporations, and, as these questions will necessarily arise again at the retrial of the action, it may be of some assistance to the parties to make the following general observations on this proposition:

[2, 3] If appellant was engaged wholly in interstate commerce, and was not doing any intrastate business, the statute is inapplicable, because, in view of the commerce clause of the federal Constitution, the state cannot put any burden upon persons or corporations engaged wholly in interstate commerce. Manifestly the sales, followed by the delivery of the pianos in this state, upon orders sent from this state to the appellant in the state of Illinois, are transactions in interstate commerce and beyond the scope of the statute. Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 235 U. S. 197, 35 Sup. Ct. 57, 59 L. Ed. 193; International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 30 Sup. Ct. 481, 54 L. Ed. 678, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103; Buck Stove & Range Co. v. Vickers, 226 U. S. 205, 33 Sup. Ct. 41, 57 L. Ed. 189; American Amusement Co. v. East Lake Chutes Co., 174 Ala. 526, 56 South. 961.

[4] It appears without conflict from the evidence that such was the ordinary business of the appellant corporation. Therefore the assignment of respondent's sale contract to appellant was outside the ordinary business of appellant, and, as the trial court correctly ruled, did not constitute doing business in this state. General Conference Free Baptists v. Berkey, 156 Cal. 466, 470, 105 Pac. 411;

Ichenhauser Co. v. Landrum's Assignee, 153 Ky. 316, 155 S. W. 738, 740; A. Booth & Co. v. Weigand, 30 Utah, 135, 83 Pac. 734, 737, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 693. In other words, the taking of the single assignment was not an intrastate transaction, but was a transaction incidental to the interstate business of the corporation.

[5] The right of a foreign corporation to sue to collect the purchase price of merchandise sold in interstate commerce is succinctly stated by the United States Supreme Court in Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 235 U. S. 197, 204, 35 Sup. Ct. 57, 60 (59 L. Ed. 193):

"We think that when a corporation goes into a state other than that of its origin to collect, according to the usual or prevailing methods, the purchase price of merchandise which it has lawfully sold therein in interstate commerce, it is there for a legitimate purpose of such commerce, and that the state cannot, consistently with the limitation arising from the commerce clause, obstruct or hamper the attainment of that purpose."

Here the assignment of the sale contract was taken in part liquidation of the indebtedness owing from the local firm to appellant arising from interstate commercial transactions. As appellant could sue the assignor for the collection of the original debt, so it may sue the respondent in this action upon the assigned contract, unless it is shown to have been also engaged in intrastate business.

[6] The burden is on the party pleading the bar of the statute to show that the case comes within its terms. For the want of such showing the judgment must be reversed.

SIDLER v. CITY COUNCIL OF CITY OF BAKERSFIELD et al. (Civ. 3119.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸159(1)—OFFICERS; DUTY OF COUNCIL TO ORDER RECALL ELECTION.

On being presented with a duly certified recall petition, the duty of a city council, under the recall provisions of the charter, to order a recall election to be held, is mandatory; but only where a petition sufficient in form and substance is presented, and if any requisite and material statement is omitted therefrom, so that the petition is invalid, the council is justified in refusing to act.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸159(1)—OFFICERS; SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION FOR RECALL.

Under Charter of City of Bakersfield (St. 1915, p. 1552) §§ 86, 87, 88, 90, and 161, section 87 paralleling the provisions of Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, Act 2555, § 1, on the recall of officers, it is not necessary that the affidavit to be filed by an elector as a condition precedent to the issuance of recall petition papers set forth any grounds on which the removal is sought, and a petition containing no statement of the ground on which removal of an officer of the city was sought was sufficient in form and substance, so that the mandatory duty rested with the council to order and fix a day for the holding of a recall election.

Petition for writ of mandate by Adolph H. Sidler against the City Council of the City of Bakersfield and Jay A. Hinman and others, members of the Council. Peremptory writ ordered.

Irwin & McNamara, of Fresno, for petitioner.

Kaye & Siemon, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

JAMES, J. [1] Mandate to compel the respondent, city council of the city of Bakersfield, to order and fix a day for the holding of a recall election. A petition, duly certified by the clerk of the municipality to be sufficient and asking for the recall of a councilman, was submitted to the respondent council. Notice of the certification and submission of such petition was also given to the officer sought to be recalled by said clerk, as the city charter provided, and said official failed to take advantage of the option given him by the charter to resign. Nevertheless, the city council continued and still continues to refuse to order and fix a day for the holding of the recall election. The alternative writ was issued herein and, by way of return, demurrer and answer were filed. The answer raised no issue of fact, and the entire cause was submitted after argument by counsel. The sole point relied upon by respondents as justifying the refusal of the council to order the recall election is that the petition contained no statement of the ground upon which the removal of the officer was sought and hence was insufficient. Upon being presented with a duly certified recall petition, the duty of the city council under the provisions of the charter to order an election to be held is a mandatory one. This duty, however, is mandatory only where a petition sufficient in form and substance is presented. If any requisite and material statement was omitted therefrom so as to make it appear that the petition was invalid, the council would be justified in the action taken. Conn. v. City Council of the City of Richmond, 17 Cal. App. 705, 121 Pac. 714, 719. The charter of the city of Bakersfield (Stats. 1915, p. 1552) contains provisions authorizing the recall of municipal officers. Sections 87, 88, and 90 read as follows:

"Sec. 87. Any officer elected or appointed for a definite term may be recalled, after the expiration of three months from the commencement of his term, by the electors entitled to vote for his successor. When a petition for the recall of a councilman is presented signed by electors of the ward which he represents, equal in number to twenty-five per cent. or more, of the total vote cast for councilman in such ward, at the last general election, and certified by the clerk, and his resignation shall not have been received, as herein provided, the recall of such councilman shall be submitted to a vote of the electors of said ward. When the officer sought to be recalled is not a councilman, the recall of such officer shall be signed by electors of the city equal in number to twenty-five per cent., or more, of the number of votes cast at the last general election. The signatures to such petition need not be all appended to one paper.

"Sec. 88. Petition papers shall be procured only from the clerk, who shall keep a sufficient number of such blank petitions for distribution, as herein provided."

"Sec. 90. Each signer of a recall petition shall sign his name in ink or indelible pencil and shall place thereon after his name his place of residence by street and number. To each such petition paper shall be attached an affidavit of the circulator thereof, stating the number of signers to such part of the petition and that each signature appended to the paper was made in his presence and is the signature of the person whose name it purports to be."

By section 161 of the charter it is provided that—

"Whenever any municipal function or affair arises, for which no provision is made by this charter or ordinances, the law of the state applicable thereto shall govern."

Section 86 of the same law provides that—

The provisions of the state law "relating to the qualifications of voters, the manner of voting, the duties of election officers, the canvassing of returns, and all other particulars in respect to the management of elections, so far as they may be applicable and not inconsistent or in conflict with this charter shall govern all elections."

[2] Viewing these provisions of the charter, respondents insist: First, that the charter does not contain complete direction as to what shall be the contents of recall petitions; second, that the charter being deficient in the respect last noted, the general state law governing the recall of municipal officers becomes applicable by reason of the references made in the provisions of section 161, above quoted. We may assume at the outset for the purposes of this case that the general laws of the state are applicable and control in the municipal affairs of the city of Bakersfield wherever it has been omitted by the charter to cover the same matters. But it appears that the framers of the charter did make specific provision, not only for the manner of the recall of the municipal officers, but gave sufficient direction as to what the substance of the recall petition should be. Referring to the general law on the same subject (see Deering's Gen. Laws [1915 Ed.] Act No. 2555), we find that paragraph 87 of the charter in general parallels the provisions of section one of the general law, but omits therefrom the direction found in the general law that a recall petition "shall contain a statement of the grounds on which the removal or recall is sought, which statement is intended solely for the information of the electors." That this omission was intentional is borne out by the further requirement in section 89 of the charter relative to the filing of an affidavit by an elector—a condition precedent to the issuance of petition papers—which affidavit is required to state "the name and office of the officer sought to be removed." It is not required that this affidavit shall set forth any grounds upon which the removal is sought, and to us it appears to have been the clear intention of the framers of the charter that no such ground need be stated. For the reasons given, it is not made to appear that the petition, as certified to the council by the clerk, was insufficient in form or substance; hence the mandatory duty rested with respondents to "order and fix a day" for the holding of the recall election as the charter provides.

The demurrer of respondents to the petition is overruled. Peremptory writ of mandate is ordered to be issued as prayed for in the petition, petitioner to have his costs.

YOLO WATER & POWER CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LAKE COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2034.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 22, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 17, 1919.)

1. PROHIBITION ⟸5(1)—ACTS OF COURTS; SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT TO STATE CAUSE OF ACTION.

The question of the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action cannot be tested by defendant on an application for writ of prohibition, as its sufficiency as a pleading must be determined by the court in which it is filed.

2. PROHIBITION ⟸5(3)—INJUNCTION SUIT; AMOUNT OF DAMAGES INVOLVED AFFECTING DISCRETION.

The amount of damages that would accrue to an irrigation company, applying for writ of prohibition against the state, and to the landowners it is serving with water, should preliminary injunction be issued against it in the state's suit, is a proper matter for the consideration of the lower court in exercising its discretion in granting or refusing to grant a temporary injunction; but the size of the interest involved is not a factor in determining the power of the superior court to hear and decide the state's suit.

3. INJUNCTION ⊂=110—JURISDICTION; NOT AFFECTED BY SUFFICIENCY OF DEFENSE.

The existence of facts constituting a good defense on the merits to an application for writ of injunction does not oust the superior court of power to hear and decide the case.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂=56—ENCROACHMENT ON POWERS OF COURT; LAW DEPRIVING PARTY OF POWER TO SUE.

A law taking away from a party the power to institute a suit is not a law diminishing the powers conferred on the superior court by the Constitution, and cannot have such effect.

5. PROHIBITION ⊂=3(1)—EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY; BRINGING ACTION WITHOUT AUTHORITY.

If the district attorney or other officer or person brings an action that the law does not permit him to bring, the court in which it is brought has jurisdiction to dispose of it, and any one aggrieved has his proper remedy in the court in which it is pending by motion to dismiss, recognized as the proper procedure, instead of application of prohibition.

6. COURTS ⊂=52—JURISDICTION OF SUPERIOR COURT OF INJUNCTION SUIT AGAINST PUBLIC UTILITY NOT TRANSFERRED TO RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Under Const. art. 6, § 5, vesting the superior court with full equity powers, such court has jurisdiction of a suit brought in the name of the people by the district attorney of a county at the request of its board of supervisors against an irrigation company, to enjoin it from committing a public nuisance by diversion of water, despite Const. art. 12, § 23, creating the power of the railroad commission over public utilities, and despite Public Utility Act, § 75, particularly in view of section 74.

Application for writ of prohibition by the Yolo Water & Power Company against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Lake, and Hon. M. S. Sayre, Judge of such court, and Hon. E. T. Zook, now presiding therein. Writ denied.

C. E. McLaughlin and C. P. McLaughlin, both of Sacramento, Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, and R. B. McMillan, of Sacramento (Theo. A. Bell, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner.

H. B. Churchill, of Lakeport, and Robt. Duncan, of Ukiah, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The opinion filed in this matter on the 7th day of August, 1919, ruling upon the demurrer to the petition is vacated and set aside and the following opinion of the court in said matter is hereby substituted therefor:

The application is for a writ of prohibition to prevent said court and the judge thereof "from hearing, entertaining, passing upon, proceeding with, trying, and deciding" any and all matters and issues in a certain action pending in said court wherein the people of the state of California is plaintiff and the said Yolo Water & Power Company is defendant. The petition herein shows that said company constitutes a public utility, engaged in the sale, rental, and distribution of water for irrigation; that in pursuance of said purpose it is diverting and distributing the waters of Clear Lake flowing down Cache creek for the irrigation of certain farming neighborhoods in the counties of Yolo, Colusa, and Solano, amounting to more than 200,000 acres; that said lands are owned by several hundred different proprietors and are planted and devoted to various agricultural products; that artificial irrigation is needed for the proper growth and maturity of these different crops; that there is no other source from which sufficient water can be obtained to irrigate these lands; that for the purpose of conserving, storing, and distributing said waters said petitioner has constructed a large concrete dam across Cache creek, a natural outlet of said Clear Lake, at a point just where the waters of Clear Lake are discharged into said Cache creek, and has incurred other expenses, in the aggregate of over $2,000,000, for the improvement and development of its irrigation system, the acquisition of property, and other purposes connected with the scheme for which the company was incorporated and is being operated.

It further appears that on the 3d day of July, 1919, the district attorney of Lake county filed a complaint in the superior court of said county in the name of the people of the state of California against petitioner, in which it alleged that the defendant therein has committed and is about to commit a public nuisance in taking said waters from said Clear Lake, and the plaintiff prayed for the issuance of a preliminary and, also, for a final injunction "restraining and enjoining said defendants from building any dam across the arm or slough of Clear Lake at the point where the pumps of said defendant are now located, or any other point in said arm or slough, and from dredging or deepening or widening said slough or arm of said lake, or from lowering Grigsby riffle at the end of said arm or slough, and from drawing off the waters of said lake any faster than the same would naturally flow therefrom." Notice was given petitioner for the hearing of a motion for the issuance of said preliminary injunction on the 18th day or July, and it is alleged that said court and the judge thereof will proceed to hear, entertain, and determine said motion, and that, if said injunction be granted, the petitioner will be unable to carry on its business and will be unable to supply water for the irrigation of the lands within its system, resulting in the destruction of crops and entailing a loss thereby to the owners of over a million dollars.

It further appears that during the year 1918 the government of the United States, acting through its food commission, urged, advised, and requested many persons producing crops of rice to increase the acreage of land devoted to such production in order to supply the needs of the government of the United States and its allies in the war with Germany and other central powers; that in pursuance of said advice more than 10,000 acres of land subject to irrigation from petitioner's system were planted in rice with the understanding that said food commission would take all necessary steps to secure water for the irrigation of said lands, and to this end, at the instance of said food commission, the railroad commission of the state of California directed and permitted petitioner to install a pumping plant and system which would enable it to pump water from Clear Lake to its canals, ditches, aqueducts, and other utilities for the purpose of supplying sufficient water for the irrigation of said 10,000 acres of rice to such an extent that the level of said lake would be and was reduced to more than 1.9 feet below the low-water mark thereof; that as a result of this reduction it became necessary to refill said lake to the ordinary low-water mark before any water would, without pumping, be available for distribution and sale to said persons during the irrigation season of 1919. It further appears that this would have been supplied by the ordinary rainfall if the seasons had been normal, but that in consequence of the unusual lack of rain in the years 1917, 1918, and 1919, it was necessary for petitioner to use pumps to supply the water for the irrigation of said lands and thereby lower the surface of the lake about 12 inches below the low-water mark of said lake. It further appears that, at the time the owners of the land devoted to rice culture were preparing their lands for planting rice, it was believed that there would be sufficient water to supply petitioner's system during the year 1919 without the necessity of resorting to pumping from said lake, but after said persons had made preparation to plant they were advised and informed that there would not be sufficient water to irrigate the rice without pumping, and thereupon said persons consulted and conferred with the railroad commission and with petitioner, and said railroad commission issued a letter permitting and directing said petitioner to pump water from said Clear Lake during the year 1919 for irrigation of said land, should such pumping become necessary in order to irrigate and mature crops on the lands supplied with water from the system of petitioner, and they also conferred with the board of supervisors of Lake county, and the members thereof, and were informed and led to believe that there would be no objection to, nor interference with, pumping water necessary to mature and irrigate their crop during the year 1919.

The foregoing recital of the allegations of petition herein, though not complete, is deemed sufficient to point the application of the legal principles upon which the parties hereto rely. It may be stated that the questions for our determination arise from said petition and a general demurrer thereto.

An opinion was filed by this court and an order entered overruling the demurrer to the petition and directing that an alternative writ issue returnable before this court on the 15th day of September, 1919. In the meantime respondents filed a petition for a rehearing, which was denied. In the opinion filed denying the petition for a rehearing, we said:

"The order made in overruling the demurrer is obviously not a final judgment in the case, and respondents will have an opportunity, upon the return of the alternative writ, not only to traverse any and all allegations of the petition, but also to present whatever views they may desire upon the sufficiency of the petition itself. We assure respondents that the whole matter will be re-examined in the light of all the reasons and authorities that may be presented by counsel on both sides."

The case now stands submitted for final consideration and decision, and we avail ourselves of the opportunity to re-examine the entire controversy. Before proceeding to a discussion of the merits of the case, it is deemed proper to dispose of some matters that seem to be collateral to the real issues involved.

1. In the argument of counsel for petitioner much space is occupied in an analysis of the allegations of the complaint filed in the superior court of Lake county, the object apparently being to show that it does not contain sufficient facts as the basis for equitable relief.

[1] The question of the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action cannot be tested on an application for a writ of prohibition. Its sufficiency as a pleading is to be determined by the court in which it is filed.

[2] 2. The amount of damages that would accrue to petitioners and to the landowners it is serving with water, should a preliminary injunction be issued, is a proper matter for the consideration of the lower court in exercising its discretion in granting or refusing to grant the temporary injunction, and, doubtless, will be given its full and proper weight and force in reaching a decision; but the size of the interest involved is not a factor in determining the power of the superior court to hear and decide.

3. It is alleged in the petition that the railroad commission authorized the petitioner to do the very acts of which plaintiff is now complaining, and it is argued that a public nuisance cannot exist in acts that are warranted by law, and therefore petitioner should have the writ asked for.

If it be true in fact that the railroad commission authorized the acts complained of, and if it be the law that such authorization prevents the acts from becoming a nuisance, then petitioner has a good defense to be presented in the superior court.

As to whether the railroad commission could lawfully authorize the acts to be done, and whether such authorization would be a defense, we neither express nor intimate any opinion. All we decide is that these are matters for the consideration of the superior court, uninfluenced by any expression in this opinion.

[3] The existence of facts constituting a good defense on the merits to an application for a writ of injunction does not oust such court of the power to hear and decide the case. With these matters disposed of, we now address ourselves to the merits of the case.

I. The real gravamen of the petitioner's complaint is, not that the superior court of Lake county has not equity jurisdiction to hear and decide an injunction suit against a public utility, but that the dictrict attorney has no power conferred upon him by law to institute the action. This is apparent from the opening sentence of his written argument, wherein he says:

"Petitioner earnestly insists that section 751, Code of Civil Procedure, and section 4156 of the Political Code giving the district attorney of a county power to commence an action in the name of the state of California to abate a public nuisance, were repealed as far as public utilities are concerned by section 23, art. 12, of the Constitution as amended in 1911 and 1914 and the Public Utility Act of 1911 and 1915."

[4, 5] The power of the district attorney to commence an action, and the power of the court to dispose of it after it has been begun, are entirely distinct matters, and to mingle them in the discussion but leads to confusion of thought. A law taking away from a party the power to start a suit is not a law diminishing the powers conferred upon the court by the Constitution and cannot possibly have that effect. If the district attorney, or any one else, brings an action that the law does not permit him to bring, the court in which it is brought has jurisdiction still to dispose of it, and any one aggrieved has his proper remedy in the court in which it is pending by motion to dismiss. This has always been recognized as the proper procedure instead of applying for a writ of prohibition.

Thus, in People v. Stratton, 25 Cal. 242, the Attorney General of the state brought a suit to have declared void certain patents granted by the Governor of the state to the defendants. The defendants, believing that the Attorney General was not authorized to institute such action, made a motion to dismiss the same upon that ground. The motion was granted by the district court and an appeal taken therefrom to the Supreme Court. This seems throughout to be recognized as the proper practice in a case where it is claimed the law did not authorize the plaintiff to bring the action.

In Bishop v. Superior Court, 87 Cal. 233, 25 Pac. 437, the court said:

"Upon this proposition, the case of State v. Valliant [100 Mo. 59], 13 S. W. 398, seems to be much in point. We quote the statement as to what the case was, and as to what the court said on the subject, from petitioner's reply brief: 'A certain railroad company sought to condemn part of the track of another, by proceedings taken in the circuit court of St. Louis. The defendant company applied for a writ of prohibition, on the ground that the statutes and ordinances of St. Louis did not authorize the exercise of jurisdiction in eminent domain there invoked in favor of the company invoking it.' Upon the application for prohibition, the court held 'that the circuit court of St. Louis had jurisdiction of proceedings to appropriate property to public use, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, in a proper case, is unquestioned and unquestionable; but the substance of the petitioner's contention here, as well as the ground on which they, as defendants, resisted the proceedings in the circuit court, is that the statutes and ordinances do not authorize the exercise of such jurisdiction in behalf of the Southern Railroad Company. We are of the opinion that the question thus raised is not a proper one for our decision upon this application.'"

[6] II. "Has the superior court of the state jurisdiction to hear and determine a suit brought in the name of the people of the state of California against a public utility to enjoin it from committing a public nuisance, said suit being instituted by the district attorney of the county at the request of the board of supervisors thereof?"

"The jurisdiction of the superior courts is conferred by the Constitution, and cannot be taken away by any act of the Legislature." City of Tulare v. Hevrne, 126 Cal. 226, 58 Pac. 530. The jurisdiction of any court "is the power to hear and determine, and does not depend upon the regularity of its exercise, or upon the rightfulness of the decision made by the court." Lange v. Superior Court, 11 Cal. App. 1, 103 Pac. 908. The Constitution of California, in section 5 of article 6, provides: "The superior court shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity."

The suit pending in the superior court of Lake county against the petitioner for an injunction is a suit in equity, and that court has jurisdiction to hear and determine it, unless it has been divested of such jurisdiction by some provision of the state Constitution.

Petitioner claims that the power of the superior court to hear and determine this particular suit against a public utility has been taken away from it by virtue of certain provisions found in section 23 of article 12 of the state Constitution, and of section 75 of the Public Utility Act (St. 1915, p. 115).

Section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution states what are public utilities, and is broad enough to embrace petitioner, and as to such declares them to be "subject to such control and regulation by the railroad commission as may be provided by the Legislature," and it further provides:

"The railroad commission shall have and exercise such power and jurisdiction to supervise and regulate public utilities, in the state of California, * * * as shall be conferred upon it by the Legislature, and the right of the Legislature to confer powers upon the railroad commission respecting public utilities is hereby declared to be plenary and to be unlimited by any provision of this Constitution.

"From and after the passage by the Legislature of laws conferring powers upon the railroad commission respecting public utilities, all powers respecting such public utilities vested in boards of supervisors, or municipal councils, or other governing bodies of the several counties, * * * in this state, or in any commission created by law and existing at the time of the passage of such laws, shall cease so far as such powers shall conflict with the powers so conferred upon the railroad commission."

We discover nothing in this constitutional provision that limits in any way the equity powers of the court as conferred by section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution.

The phrase "all powers respecting such public utilities vested in boards of supervisors * * * or other governing bodies * * * shall cease so far as such powers conflict with the powers so conferred upon the railroad commission" does not purport to, nor does it, lessen the jurisdiction of the court to hear and determine this injunction suit. Courts are not "governing bodies" of counties within the sense in which that term is used in the Constitution, nor are they classed as 'bodies." The section of the Constitution declares that—

"The right of the Legislature to confer additional powers upon the railroad commission is plenary and unlimited by any provision of the Constitution."

In pursuance of the powers given to it by section 23 of article 12, the Legislature passed a Public Utility Act, and section 75 of this act provides that if a public utility is doing or about to do anything contrary to law, or any rule or requirement of the commission, it shall direct the attorney of the commission to commence an action in the proper court, in the name of the people of the state, for the purpose of having such violation or threatened violation stopped or prevented either by mandamus or injunction.

It is claimed that this section gives the commission the right and power to bring suits for injunction against public utilities, and that such power so vested in it is inconsistent with the power of a county to institute such suit. With this conclusion we are unable to agree. The purpose and intent in enacting section 75 is obvious.

The Public Utility Act invests the board of railroad commissioners with large powers in the control of public utilities, and gives it power to fine and punish for contempt. But the commission is not a court and has not complete court machinery. It was seen that cases might arise where punishments for contempt and fine would not accomplish the objects sought, that writs of mandamus and injunction might be needed, and such writs the commission had no power to issue. It might become necessary for it to avail itself of the equity powers of the courts. Without express authority granted by the Legislature to so do, the question of its right to bring suit might be raised in any litigation arising. Anticipating such contingency, express power was conferred upon the commission to avail itself of court processes and writs, so that its power in this regard might not be questioned. This grant of a right to the commission to bring injunction suits is not at all inconsistent with the continuance of said right in others who may feel aggrieved by the acts of a public utility.

Powers conferred by the Constitution upon the railroad commission to supervise and regulate public utilities and to bring suits to enforce its orders and compel public utilities to obey the law is not inconsistent with the power conferred upon superior courts to entertain injunction suits instituted by others than the commission against public utilities. To so hold will not create any conflict between the courts and the commission, because in all such suits the courts will be bound and guided and controlled in all respects in entertaining and deciding or dismissing them as much by section 23 of the Constitution and the Public Utility Act as by any other provision of the law.

These views are further strengthened by the language of section 74 of the Public Utility Act, wherein it is said:

"This act shall not have the effect to release or waive any right of action by the state, the commission, or any other person or corporation for any right, penalty or forfeiture which may have arisen or may hereafter arise or accrue under any law of this state."

This section would seem to put a fitting ending to all discussion.

The demurrer to the petition for a writ is sustained, and the writ denied.

ROBBEN v. BENSON et al. (OSCAR C. SCHULZE, Inc., Intervener). (Civ. 2013.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 8, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1195(4)—LAW OF CASE; DIFFERENT FACTS.

The law of a case determined by an appeal does not apply to a new trial of the case in which substantially different facts are presented.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1214—LAW OF CASE; SUFFICIENCY OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

In action involving sufficiency of abstract furnished purchaser to show good title in vendor, opinion on former appeal, declaring that action should have been brought to quiet vendor's title as against grantee named in certain deed as recorded and to establish record that the conveyance was in fact made to vendor's predecessor instead of such grantee, did not preclude vendor from showing on subsequent trial, by evidence not before court on former appeal, that the recorded deed to person so named as grantee was not important.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸209(1)—FINDING ACCEPTED AS TRUE.

Where sufficiency of evidence to sustain finding of trial court is not questioned in any way, the finding will be taken as true on appeal.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1099(1) — SUBSEQUENT APPEAL; LAW OF CASE.

Determination on former appeal that certain names are not within rule of idem sonans is conclusive on subsequent appeal.

5. NAMES ⟸18—IDEM SONANS; PRIMA FACIE CASE.

Names which have the same pronunciation prima facie designate the same person, but the prima facie case so shown is liable to be much shaken by the very slightest proof of facts which produce a doubt of identity.

6. NAMES ⟸18—IDEM SONANS; PAROL EVIDENCE.

Where the case permits parol testimony, such testimony may show two names to be within the rule of idem sonans, though there be considerable difference in spelling.

7. NAMES ⟸16(1)—IDEM SONANS.

Generally, the addition of a letter "s" to one of two names considered takes them without the rule of idem sonans.

8. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸132 — SUFFICIENCY OF TITLE; FAILURE OF THIRD PERSON TO MAKE CLAIM.

In judging whether a title is affected by an instrument of record purporting to show an interest outstanding in another, it is permissible to show that no claim has ever been asserted by such other person.

9. NAMES ⟸16(3)—VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸132 — SIMILARITY BETWEEN OWNER OF RECORD AND CLAIMANT.

Where deed as recorded named "B. W. Robbins" as grantee, but no person of such name was shown to have dealt with or claimed land during 38-year period following the conveyance, or had brought action to quiet title against "B. W. Robben" and his successors, who exercised ownership over and claimed the property during such period, and where the original deed naming "B. W. Robben" as grantee was indorsed by county recorder under Pol. Code, §§ 4137, 4138, as the deed which was so recorded, purchaser was not justified in refusing to carry out contract with B. W. Robben's successor because of insufficiency of title; it being apparent under the circumstances that "B. W. Robbins" and "B. W. Robben" represented same person, even though the two names did not strictly fall within rule of idem sonans.

10. QUIETING TITLE ⟸30(1)—INTERVENTION; JUDGMENT LIEN CLAIMANT.

In action to quiet title, a third party who claimed a judgment lien against the property was properly permitted to intervene under Code Civ. Proc. § 738.

11. QUIETING TITLE ⟸16—RIGHT TO SUE; JUDGMENT LIEN CLAIMANT.

Judgment lien claimant may sue to remove a cloud on the title to the property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by Wm. B. Robben against Mrs. I. M. Benson and others, in which Oscar C. Schulze, Incorporated, intervened. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 173 Pac. 766.

Paul W. Schenck and Richard Kittrell, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for plaintiff and respondent.

F. F. Marshall, of Dixon, for intervener and respondent.

W. A. ANDERSON, Judge pro tem. This is in form an action to quiet title brought by the vendor against the vendees upon an alleged forfeiture by the vendees under a contract for the sale of real property, and the main point urged by appellants for a reversal of the judgment is that the law of the case has been violated. It is also urged that intervention should have been denied.

The complaint contains two counts. The first count is in the usual form employed in an action to quiet title. The second count alleges that on December 6, 1911, the plaintiff, William B. Robben, made an agreement with the defendants, Mrs. I. M. Benson, Alt. G. Smith, and E. W. Benson, whereby plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendants the northwest quarter of section 30, township 7 north, range 2 east, M. D. B. & M., for $21,600, payable in installments. The contract is set out in the complaint.

The plaintiff agreed to furnish an abstract. The contract stated:

"Second parties are to be given 15 days in which to examine said abstract and report upon the same; in the event title to said premises shall be found to be defective, the said first party is to be given a reasonable time in which to perfect the same."

The contract did not in terms provide that time should be the essence thereof; it declared the vendees' rights would be forfeited for failure to comply with its terms. It gave the vendees immediate possession. It is further alleged in the second count of the complaint that on December 6, 1914, there was due on the contract $4,176, and that this sum has not been paid, and that under the terms of the contract the rights of the vendees have become forfeited.

Defendants' first answer denies all the material averments of the first count of the complaint. It is admitted defendants claimed an interest in the property. In their answer to the second count of the complaint the defendants deny that on December 6, 1911, any sum became due under the contract. They admit that they paid nothing on that date, but they deny that any sum was due. The defendants filed a cross-complaint in which they set up the contract, and allege they had entered into the possession of the land; that they had fully performed all of the conditions of the contract; that up to December 1, 1914, the plaintiff had failed to furnish a complete or any abstract of title to the land, although the same was demanded on that date; that on or about December 18, 1914, the plaintiff furnished an abstract which was defective and which was objected to on the grounds that it showed the record title to the property was vested in one B. W. Robbins, and that the United States patent to the lands failed to specify any township or range, and that there was a like omission in a certain deed from William T. Smith to W. D. Vail; that after the objections were made to the abstract plaintiff refused to make correction of the deed from Smith to Vail or to obtain a conveyance from B. W. Robbins or to quiet his title; that, after the first examination of the abstract by defendants and their noting of their objections thereto and their return of the abstract to the plaintiff for correction of the title, the plaintiff again returned it to the defendants, and from a re-examination of said abstract by defendants it was ascertained that the abstract had been falsified so that it was made to appear that no conveyance to B. W. Robbins had ever been recorded, that the abstract failed to show record title to the land; that complaint was made, but that plaintiff refused to furnish any other or additional abstract. The cross-complaint alleged the amounts paid on the purchase price of the land and the amounts expended on the property during defendants' possession. It alleged possession of the property had been surrendered, and prayed for a recovery of the moneys paid and expended.

The answer to the cross-complaint denied that there was any failure to furnish a complete abstract of the title, or that the title was defective, or that there was any refusal to procure a decree quieting title, and alleged that it clearly appeared from the abstract that Robbins had no interest in the land. Plaintiff denied that the abstract was falsified, or that the defendants refused to accept it, or that plaintiff had refused to do anything further with respect to the title.

At the trial it was conceded that the defect in the patenting of the lands had been remedied, and the defendants asserted that the defect upon which they relied was the record of the deed from Vail to Robbins and what had transpired in regard thereto.

The case has been twice tried. On each trial plaintiff prevailed. The first judgment was reversed. 173 Pac. 766. The judgment entered on the second trial, like that entered on the first trial, provided that, if the defendants did not pay the amounts due under the contract within a time specified, their rights in the property would be forfeited.

The point relied on for a reversal is that the former opinion is the law of the case. In this contention appellants overlook the difference between the record of the case as first presented and as now presented. The bill of exceptions used on the first appeal did not contain all of the evidence offered on the first trial; it did not contain the abstracts offered in evidence; it contained a recital in regard to the abstracts which narrowed the court's consideration of the case to a particular point.

[1] The law of a case determined by an appeal does not apply to a new trial of the case in which substantially different facts are presented. Ellis v. Witmer, 148 Cal. 531, 83 Pac. 800; Stockton, etc., Wks. v. Glens, etc., I. Co., 121 Cal. 174, 53 Pac. 565; Duckworth v. Watsonville Water, etc., Co., 170 Cal. 433, 150 Pac. 58. The difference in the facts here is not so much a difference between the evidence received on the first and that received on the second trial, as it is a difference between the evidence offered at the first trial and the record of the same presented to the court on the first appeal.

The former opinion of the District Court of Appeal recites that in order to show complete title it became necessary for the plaintiff to show a conveyance from one W. D. Vail to B. W. Robben; that the abstract showed a conveyance made on November 8, 1876, from W. D. Vail to B. W. Robbins; that this instrument was recorded on November 10, 1876; that after the abstract was returned to the plaintiff the attorney for the plaintiff, together with the abstractor, went to the office of the county recorder of Solano county, and on December 14, 1914, the recorder changed the record so that the word "Robbins" was made to read "Robben"; that thereupon the abstract was changed so that it appeared a deed had been made by the said Vail to the said Robben and that such deed had been recorded; that the defendants had examined the record showing the change and had objected to the title; and that plaintiff had refused to do anything further in the way of furnishing an abstract.

The evidence on the second trial shows that the record of the first recording of the deed was changed as stated, lines being drawn through the name "Robbins," and the word "Robben" being written above; the initials of the recorder and his deputy were written in the margin of the record. The original deed was produced when the change was made. The testimony shows the parties making the change thought the course pursued was proper. The character of the change is evident from the record, a photographic copy of which is set out in the recorder's transcript. As hereinafter shown, the original deed was later re-recorded.

It is conceded in the briefs that the record on the former appeal contained the statement next quoted, with respect to the abstract or abstracts furnished to defendants by the plaintiff:

"The entire abstract was filed in evidence, marked 'Plaintiff's Exhibit B,' and as filed showed perfect record title in the plaintiff. One of the essential muniments of title appearing in said abstract was a deed purporting to have been executed by W. D. Vail to B. W. Robben, dated November 8, 1876, and recorded November 10, 1876, in Book 63 of Deeds, page 117. The said deed as appearing in said abstract did not show anything with reference to any change or correction of the record of the same in Book 63 of Deeds, page 117, since the date of its said recordation."

On the last trial the court made a finding as to the record title of plaintiff, which is to the effect that the record of the deed to B. W. Robbins was not a part of the chain of title to plaintiff's lands. This finding is based upon evidence which was not before the District Court of Appeal, except to the extent shown by the quotation last set forth.

In the former opinion it was also stated that—

After complaint was made as to the change in the record of the deed to B. W. Robbins, "the plaintiff refused to have anything more to do with the abstract, but it does appear that on or about the 15th of January, 1915, a conveyance from Vail to Robben was taken to the recorder's office and recorded. However, the existence of this conveyance and of the fact of its being placed of record was not called to the attention of the defendants, nor does it appear that any supplemental abstract was furnished by the plaintiff to the defendants showing the devolution of title from Vail to Robben. The matter appears to have remained in statu quo until about April 5, 1915, when the plaintiff began this action to quiet title to the premises involved."

This statement was in accordance with the record of the case as presented to the court. On the second trial the exact facts were shown with respect to furnishing supplementary abstracts, and on this appeal these facts and these abstracts are brought up, and the record is not curtailed by the brief recital set forth in the record of the former appeal. (The entire record relating to the evidence on the former appeal contained 25 pages, and on this appeal it numbers 312 pages.)

In regard to the showing as to title, the former opinion points out that on the trial of the case, and for the purpose of showing title to the property, the plaintiff introduced in evidence the original deed from W. D. Vail to B. W. Robben, dated November 8, 1876, and recorded November 10, 1876, and re-recorded January 15, 1915. The court, in the former opinion, declares:

"There does not appear to be any testimony showing that the existence of this deed was called to the attention of appellants until its introduction in evidence."

The testimony of F. F. Marshall, who was acting as the attorney for plaintiff, was offered on the second trial. It showed the furnishing to defendants of a supplementary abstract showing the re-recording of this deed.

This court, in its former opinion, recognized the rule that defendants were entitled to a title fairly deducible of record as well as good title in fact; it held that the county recorder was not authorized to make the change in the record. The court further declared:

"The re-recording of the deed from Vail to Robben on January 15, 1915, and exhibit thereof to the defendants, would have laid a foundation for maintaining an action wherein, all proper parties defendant having been joined, judgment might have been entered by the trial court, finding plaintiff's title valid, quieting any claims of B. W. Robbins to said premises, establishing of record that the conveyance purporting to be made to Robbins was in fact made to Robben, and decreeing performance by the appellants within a reasonable time or suffer the alternative of a forfeiture."

The court then pointed out that the plaintiff had not elected to pursue the course suggested, but had, in effect, elected to treat the contract as ended by bringing suit to quiet title. The court ruled that defendants, having surrendered possession, were entitled to a return of the money they had paid out; that the defendants' motion for a nonsuit should have been granted; that the trial court should have proceeded to determine the amount the defendants were entitled to recover.

It distinctly appeared on the second trial of the case that this original deed bore indorsements of the county recorder made in conformity with sections 4137 and 4138 (formerly sections 4241 and 4242) of the Political

Code, showing that it was the deed which had been recorded on November 10, 1876, in Book 63 of Deeds, p. 117. The indorsements of the county recorder, made upon this original deed, specified the time of recordation and the place thereof, and these indorsements are shown in the supplementary abstracts covering the second recording of the instrument. On the second trial of the case it was shown that this abstract was furnished to defendants, and it also appeared that the evidence before the trial court on the first trial of the case showed the same thing. Defendants on receiving the abstract showing the foregoing facts never called for the production of the original deed. They made general objection that title had not been shown. The original deed was introduced as an exhibit on the trial of the case, and the grantee is therein named W. B. Robben.

It is true that in the first opinion of this court it was, in effect, declared that there should have been not only re-recording of the deed from Vail to Robben and the exhibit thereof to the defendants, but that there should also have been a suit to quiet title against the claims of Robbins. While authorities were not cited in support of the position that such an action was necessary, there are authorities to the effect that, where a mistake has occurred in the name of the grantee in a deed which is essential to a title, and which appears both in the deed and in the record thereof, an action of the kind suggested by this court is essential. Walters v. Mitchell, 6 Cal. App. 410, 92 Pac. 315. The case last cited suggests that a suit in rem will reach such an outstanding claim. But where the plaintiff, as here, has found the original deed, and it is obvious to him that the deed contains no mistake, but that the mistake is in the first recording of it, he could not in good faith swear there was an outstanding claim. But the necessity for maintaining such an action as that referred to disappears, in view of the finding of the trial court, based on evidence offered on the second trial of the case. Finding 8, made by the trial court on the second trial of the case, is as follows:

"That the complete chain of title of record in said property vested in plaintiff is as follows:

"U. S. Patent to William T. Smith;

"Deed from William T. Smith and Mary Smith, his wife, to W. D. Vail;

"Deed from W. D. Vail to Bank of Dixon;

"Deed from Bank of Dixon to W. B. Robben;

"The court finds that B. W. Robbins never had any title to said land, record or otherwise.

"The court finds that, at one time subsequent to conveying said land to Bank of Dixon, W. D. Vail made and executed a deed conveying said land to B. W. Robben; said deed was incorrectly recorded by the county recorder copying said name Robben as Robbins; said deed from Vail to Robben was subsequently correctly recorded in the office of the county recorder of Solano county and the re-recording of said deed set forth in said abstract which was furnished to defendants on or about the 4th day of March, 1915; that plaintiff through mesne conveyances, all of which appear of record and are set forth in said abstract, obtained whatever title the said B. W. Robben might have had to said land."

The foregoing finding evidently proceeds on the theory that Vail deeded to the bank before the recording of the so-called deed to Robbins, that the bank continued to hold title, and later, and during the time defendants were objecting to the record of the title, proceeded to convey the title to the plaintiff herein. The original abstract showed the deed to the bank, and a supplementary abstract showed the deed from the bank to the plaintiff herein. The evidence showed these abstracts were furnished to defendants. It further appears that neither of these deeds constituted any part of the evidence as supplied to the District Court of Appeal on the first hearing. The present appeal is upon a reporter's transcript, which contains all the abstracts furnished defendants.

[2, 3] Appellants refer neither to testimony nor to the absence of testimony for the purpose of showing that the foregoing finding is not supported by the evidence. Their sole point is that what the District Court of Appeal said in its opinion on the former trial in regard to the importance of the record of the so-called deed to Robbins and the remedy to be pursued to clear the record of a possible claim under that deed was binding on the trial court. Certainly the former opinion did not preclude respondent from showing by evidence, which was not before the District Court of Appeal, that the so-called deed to Robbins was not important. As stated, the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court, hereinbefore quoted, is not questioned in any way; and, this being so, the finding is to be taken as true on appeal. Brovelli v. Bianchi, 136 Cal. 612, 69 Pac. 416; Kyle v. Craig, 125 Cal. 116, 57 Pac. 791; Tait v. McInnes, 3 Cal. App. 156, 84 Pac. 674. These cases establish that it is the duty of the appellant to point out the evidence or the lack of evidence showing a finding assailed is unsupported, and that the court on appeal will look only to the objections argued. This finding referred to evidently depends upon evidence consisting of pages of the abstracts which were no part of the record on the first appeal, and this being true, and the finding being unassailed, it is determinative of the case.

[4, 5] In view of the evidence offered at the second trial, we would be compelled to hold that if finding 8 of the trial court could be disregarded, and plaintiff were compelled to rely upon the record of the deed to Robbins, his title would be good and fairly deducible of record. It is true that the former opinion of the court conclusively determines that "B. W. Robbins" and "B. W. Robben" are not within the rule of idem sonans. Names which have the same pronunciation do prima facie designate the same persons. "But this prima facie case so shown is liable to be much shaken by the very slightest proof of facts which produce a doubt of identity. A well-known writer seems to state the rule on this point very acceptably and clearly: 'The probative force of the inference of identity from similarity of names is greatly diminished in force, even to the vanishing point, by introducing into the consideration of the matter facts inconsistent with the truth of the administrative assumption that similar names identify a single individual.' 2 Chamberlayne, Mod. Law of Ev. 1191." Keyes v. Munroe, 266 Mo. 114, 180 S. W. 863.

[6] The following is a further explanation of the rule:

"In the case of Johnson v. State, 65 Fla. 492, 62 South. 655, Mr. Justice Taylor, who delivered the opinion of the court, said: 'Where two names are presented to the consideration of the court, the inference that they designate the same individual is strong in proportion as the difference between the two is slight; and, conversely, the inference of identity is weak as the points of difference between the two names are numerous and marked." Rhodes v. State, 74 Fla. 230, 76 South. 776.

Where the case permits parol evidence, such testimony may show two names to be within the rule although there is a considerable difference in spelling. People v. Fick, 89 Cal. 149, 26 Pac. 759. The part which parol evidence may play in establishing identity of pronunciation and hence identity of persons is further explained in the case next quoted from. In Commonwealth v. Warren, 143 Mass. 568, 10 N. E. 178, it was said:

"The province of the court and jury in cases like the present is governed by the following rule: 'If two names, spelled differently, necessarily sound alike, the court may, as matter of law, pronounce them to be idem sonans; but, if they do not necessarily sound alike, the question whether they are idem sonans is a question of fact for the jury.' "

In Munkers v. State, 87 Ala. 96, 6 South. 358, Clopton, J., said:

"Though this is strictly a question of pronunciation, when raised by demurrer, it may be treated as a question of law; but, in such case, the judgment of the court should express the conclusion of law from facts or rules of which judicial notice may be taken. When there is no generally received English pronunciation of the names as one and the same, and the difference in sound is not so slight as to be scarcely perceptible, the doctrine of idem sonans cannot be applied without the aid of extrinsic evidence, unless, when sound and power are given to the letters, as required by the principles of pronunciation, the names may have the same enunciation or sound." Veal v. State, 116 Ga. 589, 42 S. E. 705.

The court proceeded to specify names that, as matter of law, had been held within the rule, as follows: "Blankenship" and "Blackership," "Owens D. Havely" and "Owen D. Haverly," "Hudson" and "Hutson," "Jeffers" and "Jeffries." It held that "Witt" and "Wid" were the same, as matter of law. The names "Pomp Burton" and "Pomp Burden" are within the rule. Burton v. State, 10 Ala. App. 214, 65 South. 91. Also, "Robert" and "Roberts." Willis v. United States, 6 Ind. T. 424, 98 S. W. 147.

[7] Generally, however, the addition of a letter "s" to one of the two names considered takes them without the rule. 29 Cyc. 276. The footnotes at page 274 show cases in which the use of the letter is not controlling. Among the cases is cited Seaver v. Fitzgerald, 23 Cal. 85, in which the names "Seaver" and "Seavers" were declared to be substantially the same. The case is cited in Brum v. Ivins, 154 Cal. 17, 96 Pac. 876, 129 Am. St. Rep. 137. If, in the days when neither deeds nor the records thereof were typewritten, a deed had been made to D. C. Seaver and recorded as a deed to D. C. Seavers and the transaction had stood unassailed for 40 years, D. C. Seaver and his successors dealing with the property, and D. C. Seavers and his successors not appearing at all in the record of title for a period of 40 years, we think that, although it could be held that such names are slightly without the rule of idem sonans, the record facts in regard to the title, coupled with the great similarity in names, would leave no substantial uncertainty as to the identity of the persons designated by the different names. The facts in regard to the title as shown by the records would be quite as conclusive as an aid in determining the question of identity as would be the clearest kind of parol testimony introduced in those cases where the court is in doubt as to whether two names which are very similar, though somewhat differently spelled, have substantially the same pronunciation and designate the same person.

[8, 9] An examination of the abstract of title shows that the deed in question was made November 8, 1876. The consideration recited was $17,000. The property was evidently of considerable value. The records show that after November 8, 1876, no person by the name of B. W. Robbins ever dealt with the lands, that B. W. Robben did deal with the lands, that no suit to quiet title against him was filed, that the estate of his successor in interest, Dorotha Robben, was duly administered upon in Solano county, and that the property in question was appraised and accounted for as a part of the estate of Dorotha Robben, and was distributed to the heirs of Dorotha Robben, who, in turn, granted to the present plaintiff, W. B. Robben. The identity in sound between Robben and Robbin appears from the abstract. Crop mortgages made by one of the Robben heirs are signed "F. W. Robben," the body of the instruments and certificates of acknowledgment showing "F. W. Robbin." No claim is asserted of record by B. W. Robbins at any time, nor is any claim asserted of record by any one purporting to be his successor. During the long period of 38 years, no one by the name of W. B. Robbins, and no one appearing to claim through W. B. Robbins, has exercised any act of ownership over the property. The silence of the record in this respect speaks as loudly as any words. In judging whether a title is affected by an instrument of record purporting to show an interest outstanding in another, it is permissible to show that no claim has ever been asserted by such other person. This was held in a case in which it was contended that an ancient bond for a deed showed a cloud on title. Reed v. Sefton, 11 Cal. App. 88, 103 Pac. 1095. In this case such evidence bears directly on the point considered. The initials of the two names are the same; the first syllable of the two names is the same, and all that holds them apart is the letter "s," a letter not always preventing the application of the rule of idem sonans as matter of law. The two names appear in connection with the same title. Considering the transactions with regard to the title in question, as shown by the record and covering a period of 38 years, and considering the great resemblance between the two names, B. W. Robbins and B. W. Robben, there would be no substantial reason for saying the two names represented different persons, even though the two names did not fall strictly within the rule of idem sonans. The entire record would leave no reasonable doubt in regard to the title, and a finding on any other theory would not be sustained.

[10, 11] The trial court permitted Oscar C. Schulze, Inc., a corporation, to intervene. The company filed a complaint in intervention against the various defendants, setting up a claim to the interest of defendants in the property based upon judgment liens alleged to have been obtained in various actions heretofore prosecuted. The appellants cite the case of Isaacs v. Jones, 121 Cal. 257, 53 Pac. 793, 1101, as determining the intervention was improper. The case is not in point. A person claiming a judgment lien on real property comes within section 738, Code of Civil Procedure. Such a person may sue to remove a cloud on the title to the property. 32 Cyc. 1334.

It follows therefore that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

NORTH PAC. S. S. CO. v. TERMINAL INV. CO. (Civ. 2954, 2961.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 5, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 3, 1919.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂=130(1) — IMPLIED COVENANTS OF LEASE; QUIET ENJOYMENT AND POSSESSION.

Under Civ. Code, § 1927, there is an implied covenant on the part of a lessor that lessee shall have quiet enjoyment and possession of the premises during the continuance of the term.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂=172(2)—EVICTION; ESSENTIALS.

It is not necessary that there shall be an actual ouster to constitute an eviction for any act of the lessor which results in depriving the lessee of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises will constitute an eviction.

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⊂=53 — CONSTRUCTION OF FINDINGS.

In a suit by tenant to have the lease declared rescinded on the ground that it had been deprived of a material part of the consideration through the fault of the lessor, findings, when read together, held to show that the tenant was not deprived of a substantial as distinguished from an insignificant or inconsequential portion of the premises.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂=130(2), 172(1)—EVICTION; BREACH OF COVENANT FOR QUIET ENJOYMENT.

As no acts of molestation, even if committed by the landlord himself or by a servant at his command, amount to a breach of a covenant to quiet enjoyment unless they are more than a mere trespass, a tenant who was allowed to cut a door through a retaining wall cannot claim an eviction because the lessor allowed another tenant to obstruct the door for a short period each day during several successive days.

5. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⊂=53 — CONTRADICTORY FINDINGS.

Where tenant sued to have his lease canceled and court found that he had not suffered any material damage, also found that the lessor did not fail or refuse to maintain access through a door, etc., except when it was obstructed by a sign placed in front of it on a number of succeeding days by another tenant, held that the findings were not conflicting.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂=34(2)—LEASE; GROUNDS FOR RESCISSION.

Though a tenant was deprived of access through a door by the act of another tenant who obstructed it with a sign, and the lessor for a short time consented to the obstruction, held in view of the length of the term and the slightness of the injury, etc., such obstruction was no ground for rescission of the lease.

7. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⊂=46 — RESCISSION OF LEASE; EVIDENCE.

Where a tenant sought to have a lease rescinded, claiming a constructive eviction, etc., held that where the court found no eviction had occurred it was proper to allow evidence of the circumstances under which the trespass, which furnished the basis for the claim, was abated.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by the North Pacific Steamship Company against Terminal Investment Company. From a judgment for defendant and from order denying its motion to vacate judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Aitken, Glensor & Clewe, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. P. Langhorne, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This action was brought by plaintiff, the tenant, to have a lease declared rescinded, because it claimed to be deprived of a material part of the consideration, which had failed, so it is alleged, through the fault of the lessor. Judgment was entered for the defendant. There are two appeals, one (No. 2954) from the order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the judgment, and the other (No. 2961) an appeal from the judgment. By stipulation, the appeals are considered together.

Defendant's assignor leased to plaintiff the premises, No. 50 Market street, San Francisco, to be used as a ticket office, for the term of 8 years and 8 months, commencing July 1, 1913, and ending February 28, 1922. At the time the negotiations for the lease were begun, a dividing wall of the building between the leased premises and a café and cigar stand, occupying No. 48 Market street, immediately adjoining, extended to a column at the street line. Before taking the lease, plaintiff insisted that the entrance be changed by cutting out two feet of this dividing wall next to the column from floor to ceiling, so that there would be two entrances, or vestibules, at No. 50 Market street—one opening directly on Market street, as before, and a new one opening into and across the adjoining premises, occupied by the cigar stand. The lessor acceded to these requirements, and the change was made. The purpose of plaintiff in obtaining the second entrance was to gain the advantage of having its premises, displays, and advertising matter more readily seen by passers-by.

Plaintiff alleged, as ground for rescission, that defendant caused and permitted the tenant of the adjoining premises, No. 48 Market street, to obstruct this passageway, or "open space," by hanging and displaying therein a café lunch sign, two feet wide, and about six feet in height, during certain hours of the day. It claimed that by reason of such obstruction the consideration for its obligation under the lease failed in a material respect.

It was testified to by witnesses on behalf of plaintiff that on account of the position of the open passageway formed by the alteration the door and a window of the premises being thereby placed in better view of and more easily seen by people walking out Market street from the ferry, this passageway and the view of the place thus gained through the open space were much more important in plaintiff's estimation than the regular entrance on Market street and the Market street windows. It was because of its advertising value that plaintiff insisted on having the vestibule made.

On January 28, 1918, plaintiff, with the consent of defendant, sublet the premises to be used as a photographic gallery, with the understanding that if the business was not a success, the subtenants might move out. When the subtenants inspected the premises before renting, there was no obstruction of the passageway. When it appeared on the first day of their tenancy, the photographic people complained to plaintiff because of its being there. Plaintiff requested defendant to remove the sign. Defendant did not do so, and after a few days the subtenant, complaining that the sign, when in position, rendered their premises dark, and deprived them of their advertising space, demanded of plaintiff the return of the rent that had been paid by them, and on its being refunded they moved out.

The trial court found that the continued existence of said open space, and said right of way, and unobstructed view by passers-by, through and across said space, and of said portion of the corridor was and were a material part of the consideration for the obligation of plaintiff under said lease, and constituted a material inducement to plaintiff to enter into the same; that plaintiff would not have entered into the lease had it not included the right of such unobstructed view through and across said open space. It further found that the obstruction in the open space complained of by plaintiff, and which consisted of a sign, advertising the lunch in the café at No. 48 Market street, was placed by the subtenant of defendant within the interior boundaries of the vestibule and entrance from Market street to the café; that the sign which was first placed in that position on the 25th day of January, 1918, was only maintained over and across the open space from about 11 o'clock to 2 p. m. of each day; that the sign was placed across the open space without the knowledge or consent of defendant, which had no knowledge of the fact until the 5th day of February, 1918, when plaintiff first complained to defendant about the matter; that defendant at first declined to take any action in the matter, but upon further investigation on the 15th day of February, 1918, caused the café people to remove the sign from the passageway, and thereafter it was kept entirely free from any obstruction whatever, and that plaintiff was fully notified that the obstruction had been removed from the open space, and that same was unobstructed. Two days before receiving this notification, however, plaintiff had delivered its notice of rescission.

The court further found that the obstruction of the open passageway for a period not exceeding 21 days did not work a failure of any material or substantial part of the consideration to plaintiff for its lease, and that plaintiff had sustained no substantial or material injury or damage by reason of the obstruction, or by reason of any of the acts complained of. Judgment in favor of the defendant followed.

In explanation of its action in first declining to take steps to have the offending café sign removed from the passageway, after complaint made by plaintiff, the defendant, before plaintiff served its notice of rescission, took the ground that the opening in the partition wall was made after plaintiff took possession. After notice of rescission was served, and after investigating and finding that the opening existed at the time the lease to plaintiff was made, it took steps to cause its tenant at No. 48 Market street to remove the sign complained of. It so notified plaintiff, and refused to rescind the lease or accept surrender or possession of the premises.

In support of the finding that no material or substantial part of the consideration to plaintiff failed, because of the obstruction of the open space by the café sign, respondent first points out that the lease was for a period of 8 years and 8 months, and the obstruction continued but a portion of the day for about 21 days, being promptly removed after defendant had opportunity to look into the matter. Respondent in the next place relies upon the evidence introduced at the hearing, consisting of a number of photographs and diagrams, the testimony of a number of witnesses, and the view of the premises had by the court during the trial. While there was evidence on the part of plaintiff that but for the construction of the passageway leading into the vestibule at No. 48 Market street, plaintiff would not have leased the premises, and that the existence of such passageway was of material benefit in the way of giving better light to the store, and affording a more open view of the place by pedestrians approaching from the east along Market street, there was a strong counter showing that the passageway in the east wall, two feet wide, afforded but little light, sight, and passageway into the place; that obstruction of this open space would only interfere with the view of persons coming from the east along Market street, into a very small window, and the door of the store, until such time as they had passed the column on the edge of the sidewalk before referred to; that the space was too small for an entrance and was rarely used as such; that in addition to the small window and the door there are three other windows, one quite large, giving ample light and sight into the premises, and that the original vestibule to the store is five feet wide, ample for the purposes for which it was and is intended, and has always been used for the main entrance. Furthermore, before the place was occupied by the tenants, who moved out on account of the alleged injury caused by the display of the café sign, the premises had been empty for some time, and it was while the store was vacant that the café people first put up the lunch sign on a board hung on hooks in the passageway. On the evidence, therefore, the lower court was justified in finding as it did that no material injury was done to plaintiff.

Appellant's chief contention is that the amply supported findings of the lower court to the effect that the existence of the open passage was a material inducement in the matter of the lease of the premises, and the other finding that by reason of the obstruction of the same passage in the manner complained of, plaintiff suffered no material detriment, are diametrically opposed, and so fatally inconsistent as to require a reversal of the judgment.

[1] There can be no quarrel with appellant's statement of the law applying generally to the right of rescission in cases of contracts induced through fraud, mistake, and false representations. Those principles are not applicable to the case in hand. We cannot find that either fraud, mistake, or false representations entered into the inducements which led plaintiff to enter into the contract. The covenant on the part of the lessor, which, if not expressed in the lease, was implied, was that plaintiff should have the quiet enjoyment and possession of the premises during the continuance of the term. Civ. Code, § 1927; McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67, 70, 48 Pac. 984. The act complained of, therefore, arises out of the interference by defendant with the enjoyment by plaintiff of the open space or passage under circumstances amounting, so appellant contends, to a forcible eviction from the premises.

[2, 3] While the trial court has not found in so many words that there was no eviction from a substantial portion of the demised premises, it did find "that plaintiff has not suffered, or sustained, any material or substantial damage in any amount of money, or thing whatever, by reason of all, or any, of the acts complained of by plaintiff, and found by the court to have been done, or suffered to be done by defendant." This finding must be read with the other finding that defendant did not "fail or refuse to maintain said open space, and to allow plaintiff to have said right of way, and said unobstructed view through and across said open space, and said portion of said corridor, or allow said open space to be closed or obstructed to a height of more than six feet, or to any height or at all or at any time, during the business, or other hours of each day," except "that such café sign was so placed by Mollenhauer & Co., on or about the 25th day of January, 1918, and was only placed and kept over and across said open space from about 11 o'clock a. m. until about 2 p. m. of each day," until "on said 15th day of February, 1918, said Mollenhauer & Co. did remove its café sign from said" open space, "and did leave the same entirely free from any obstruction whatever." When so read together, we are of the opinion that the effect of the findings must be that plaintiff was not deprived of a substantial as distinguished from an insignificant or inconsequential portion of the demised premises, or, in other words, deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of a substantial portion thereof. If it was not, the rule that "it is not necessary that there should be an actual ouster to constitute an eviction, but that any act of the lessor which results in depriving his lessees of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises constitutes an eviction" (Agar v. Winslow, 123 Cal. 587, 593, 56 Pac. 422, 423 [69 Am. St. Rep. 84]; Skaggs v. Emerson, 50 Cal. 3), does not apply (Kelley v. Long, 18 Cal. App. 159, 163, 122 Pac. 832).

[4] If the interference with plaintiff's possession was no more serious than the findings indicate (and the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings is well established in our minds), the act of defendant's tenant can amount to no more than a mere trespass. And it is the settled rule that no acts of "molestation, even if committed by the landlord himself, or by a servant at his command, amount to a breach of the covenant, unless they are more than a trespass." Taylor's Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) § 309. The defendant at all times during its long lease enjoyed possession and occupancy of these premises, including the use of the open space in the dividing wall, except for the trifling period during which it was interfered with by the act of defendant's tenant in displaying the café sign during lunch hours.

"It most certainly cannot be justly said that this act amounted to an eviction of the defendant from a substantial portion of the demised premises, and should therefore operate as a suspension or extinguishment of the rent. Taylor's Landlord and Tenant, § 309; Ogilvie v. Bull, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 54. A mere passing trespass cannot operate to so oust a tenant of his possession as to amount to an eviction or a dispossession." Kelley v. Long, supra.

[5] The two findings of the lower court, therefore, are not inconsistent and contradictory. While the quiet enjoyment and use of the passageway may have been an inducement to plaintiff to enter into the lease, the act of defendant, as found by the court, was a mere trespass, which did not constitute such a breach of the implied warranty of the lease as to work a failure of consideration, or amount to an ouster or eviction from any substantial portion of the premises, causing plaintiff material injury or loss. McCormick v. Potter, 147 Ill. App. 487, 491; Voss v. Sylvester, 203 Mass. 233, 240, 89 N. E. 241; French v. Pettingill, 128 Mo. App. 156, 161, 106 S. W. 575; Wilkes-Barre Realty Co. v. Levy (Sup.) 114 N. Y. Supp. 713.

[6] Plaintiff first complained to defendant about the offending sign on February 5th. Defendant on the next day declined to act, on the ground that the opening in the wall had been made after the lease entered into by plaintiff, and for the benefit of the tenant occupying No. 48 Market street. On further investigation it caused the sign to be removed on February 15th, and on the 16th so notified the plaintiff, who had served its notice of rescission on the 14th. Appellant contends, therefore, that any act of the defendant, after notice of rescission given, was ineffectual to revive a lease theretofore rescinded by one of the parties. It contends that as it had determined to rescind the contract, and had given notice to defendant that the lease was ended by reason of its failure to comply with its terms, the termination of the lease was complete, and defendant could not by any act on its part alone renew the lease by taking away the sign and thus removing the cause of the alleged eviction. Undoubtedly such principle of law is applicable in cases in which the ouster or eviction is established. An examination of those cases, however, will disclose that under the facts of each the lessee or tenant had good cause for rescission. Such was the holding in McCall v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 201 Mass. 223, 87 N. E. 582, 584, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 38, cited by appellant. There the lease was for the entire fourth floor of a building for a term of five years. The landlord agreed to keep the elevators in the building in repair and running. During the first year of the tenancy the elevators caused trouble. The evidence showed that they stopped at all hours of the business day, and remained so for from 15 minutes to one-half of the day, sometimes at the top and sometimes between floors, holding the passengers imprisoned and unable to get out. The tenant abandoned the premises and moved out. The landlord sued for rent, claiming under the written lease. The tenant defended on the ground that he had been evicted. The court found that the faulty elevator service rendered the building practically unfit for the defendant's business. In approving judgment for the defendant, on appeal, the court said: "Findings would have shown an eviction at the election of the lessee, and it might rightfully abandon the premises and decline to pay further rent (citing cases). Since the tenant was evicted by the landlord, he is not obliged to return, even if the cause of the eviction be removed; and no right to rent exists except upon a voluntary return of the tenant."

This case well illustrates the distinction between the cases relied on by appellant, and the cases already cited by us, which hold that an eviction must be established before the right to a rescission of the lease springs into being.

[7] The trial court, in this case, having found against the plea of the plaintiff that an eviction had occurred, was right in permitting the defendant to show the circumstances under which the trespass was abated.

The order by which the lower court denied plaintiff's motion for an order vacating and setting aside the judgment therein, and entering another and different judgment (No. 2954) is affirmed.

The judgment appealed from (No. 2961) is affirmed.

SMITH v. GOLDEN STATE SYNDICATE et al. (LAUX, Intervener). (Civ. 3028.)

1. TAXATION ⟸820—PURCHASER OF VOID TAX DEED TO BE REIMBURSED.

Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5, providing that whenever it shall be determined that a conveyance by state is void, no decree shall be given declaring a forfeiture of the property until the former owner or other party shall have repaid to the purchaser full amount of taxes, etc., merely affects the remedy of a purchaser of a tax title, and was intended to apply to all cases after its passage in which the invalidity of a tax title is judicially determined, although the tax sale was made prior to its passage.

2. TAXATION ⟸833—REMEDIES OF PURCHASER; REFUNDMENT OF TAXES.

Since Pol. Code, § 3898, provides positively that no decree shall be made against the purchaser of void tax title until taxes, penalties, etc., have been paid to him, it cannot be maintained that prayer in an intervening complaint, asking that title be quieted and alleging that intervener was owner in fee simple, was not one for a refundment of the amount paid for taxes.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(3)—PRESUMPTIONS ON APPEAL ON JUDGMENT ROLL.

In support of a judgment, it will be presumed on appeal from judgment roll alone that evidence supporting the findings was properly admitted.

4. TRIAL ⟸396(5)—FINDING ON EVIDENCE ADMITTED WITHOUT OBJECTION.

If evidence not otherwise admissible is admitted without objection, a finding based thereon is proper.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(3)—PRESUMPTIONS ON APPEAL ON JUDGMENT ROLL.

On appeal on the judgment roll alone, it will be assumed in support of the judgment that all objections to evidence sustaining the findings were waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by J. H. Smith against the Golden State Syndicate and others, in which E. C. Laux intervened. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Everett Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an action to quiet title to certain real property in the city of Los Angeles. E. C. Laux, the respondent, filed a complaint in intervention claiming to be the owner of a portion of the land described in plaintiff's complaint. The action was tried and judgment given upon the complaint in intervention of E. C. Laux and the answer thereto of J. H. Smith. The complaint in intervention was in form a suit to quiet title, and alleged that the intervener was the owner in fee of the real property therein described. The answer was a denial of the title of the intervener. The court found that the intervener had no right or title to the said property, except that he had purchased a tax deed therefor from the city of Los Angeles, and further found that said tax deed was null and void. Judgment was entered against the intervener and in favor of the appellant, but it was provided therein that said judgment should not take effect until payment by the appellant to said intervener of $561.35, the amount of taxes paid by the intervener upon the property. From the portion of the judgment requiring such payment an appeal is taken.

[1] Section 3898, subd. 5, of the Political Code provides:

"Whenever, in any action at law, it shall be determined by a court that the sale and conveyance provided for in this and the preceding section are void for any reason and that the purchaser from the state may not be finally awarded the property so purchased, no decree of the court shall be given declaring a forfeiture of the property until the former owner, or other party in interest, shall have repaid to the purchaser the full amount of taxes, penalties and costs paid out and expended by him, to be determined by the court, in pursuit of the state's title to the property so sold."

Appellant contends that this subdivision of section 3898 is inapplicable here, because it was added by amendment in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 560) and the tax deed under which the intervener claims is dated March 8, 1912. We are of the opinion that this statute merely affects the remedy of the purchaser of a tax title, and that it was intended to apply to all cases after its passage in which the invalidity of a tax title was judicially determined. This seems also to have been the view taken of this section by the court in the case of Real v. County of Kern, 179 Pac. 726, where it is said that, notwithstanding the fact that a purported conveyance was made prior to the enactment of this section, the rights of the purchaser of the tax title were to be measured by the statute as it existed when the court adjudged that he was not entitled to an award of the property.

[2-5] The other point made by the appellant is that the tax title was not pleaded and that the prayer of the complaint in intervention was not for a refund of the amount paid for taxes. We think there is no merit in this contention. Section 3898, Political Code, provides positively that no decree shall be made until this relief is granted to the purchaser of a tax title. The intervener alleged that he was the owner in fee simple of the property. In support of that claim, presumably from the findings, he offered evidence of his tax deed. Appellant contends that the evidence, supporting the finding that the amount paid by the intervener does not exceed the total amount of taxes due on said property at the date of the sale, was improperly admitted because no issue was made upon this question by the pleadings. The appeal comes to us upon the judgment roll alone. We do not know what evidence was introduced, nor what objections were made thereto. In support of the judgment we will presume that evidence supporting the findings was properly admitted. If evidence, not otherwise admissible, is admitted without objection, a finding based thereon is proper. As was said in the case of McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. at page 163, 64 Pac. at page 281:

"Conceding that the pleadings were not sufficient to justify the admission of evidence of the promissory note, it does not appear that any objection was made to such evidence. We must presume that the evidence was received without objection, and that it sustains the findings. It cannot be contended that a finding is not within the issues, if no objection was made to the evidence in support of the finding at the trial"—citing Horton v. Dominguez, 68 Cal. 642, 10 Pac. 186; Moore v. Campbell, 72 Cal. 253, 13 Pac. 689.

On appeal on the judgment roll alone, it will be assumed in support of the judgment that all objections to evidence sustaining the findings were waived. Poledori v. Newman, 116 Cal. 375, 48 Pac. 325.

From the entire record before us, it appears that this judgment is in all respects an equitable judgment, and the same is affirmed.

LAUX v. LOS ANGELES STOVE CO. et al.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 23, 1919.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by E. C. Laux against the Los Angeles Stove Company, H. H. Smith, and others. From an adverse judgment, the last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Everett Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an action to quiet title in the plaintiff to certain real property in Los Angeles. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner in fee simple of such property. The court found that the plaintiff was not the owner of the property; that his only claim to said property was by virtue of a certain tax deed executed by the city of Los Angeles. The court also found certain facts upon which it concluded that said tax deed was null and void, and that the defendant Smith was entitled to the possession of the property as against said plaintiff. Judgment was entered declaring that the plaintiff has no right and title to the property as against any of the defendants, but providing that said judgment shall not take effect until payment be made by the defendants or either of them to the plaintiff of the sum of $561.35, the amount of taxes paid by the plaintiff upon the property. From the portion of the judgment requiring this payment the defendant J. H. Smith has appealed.

The question of law involved in a decision of this appeal is the precise question considered by this court in the opinion this day filed in the case of J. H. Smith v. Golden State Syndicate et al., No. 3028, 185 Pac. 209, which involves the same subject-matter and the rights of the same parties as herein involved. For the reasons stated in that opinion, the portion of the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 30, 1919.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸790—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO LAW.

In view of Pen. Code, § 1127, it is the duty of the court in charging the jury in a criminal case to state to them all matters of law necessary for their information.

2. EMBEZZLEMENT ⟸48(4)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for embezzlement, court did not err in instructing to convict if jury believed defendant did "fraudulently appropriate the moneys of W. after said moneys had been intrusted to him and that said moneys were appropriated to a use or purpose other than that for which such property was intrusted to him," although defendant's claim was that the money was diverted from the original purpose with the consent and approval of the complaining witness, the theory of the state being that such diversion was induced by deceit and fraud, so that accused could obtain possession of the money.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸369(5)—EVIDENCE OF OTHER CRIMES.

Where accused was charged in one count with embezzlement and in a second count with larceny of the same property, the crimes being intermixed and connected so that they formed an indivisible criminal transaction, any testimony tending to establish the essentials of either offense was properly admitted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

George A. Fox was convicted of embezzlement, and from judgment sentencing him to prison and an order denying his motion for a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

John L. Richardson, of Los Angeles, Charles E. Williams, and T. E. Parke, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. By the first count of an information filed against defendant he was charged with the embezzlement of $5,106.25; and by a second count therein he was charged with larceny of a like sum.

The trial resulted in his conviction of embezzlement, as charged in the first count, and his acquittal of the charge contained in the second count.

Judgment sentencing him to prison followed, from which and an order denying his motion for a new trial he has appealed.

[1, 2] Appellant complains of an instruction given to the jury as follows:

"If you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did, on or about the date charged in the information, fraudulently appropriate the moneys of Mrs. Anna G. Walters after said moneys had been intrusted to him and that said moneys were appropriated to a use or purpose other than that for which such property was intrusted to him, you should find the defendant guilty of embezzlement as charged in the information."

While conceding this instruction correct as an abstract proposition of law, he insists that it was not applicable to the case for the reason that defendant admitted the receipt of the money, which, according to his own testimony, was, with the consent and approval of the complaining witness, diverted from the purpose for which it was originally intrusted to him. The evidence of the prosecution, however, was to the effect that defendant by fraud and deceit induced the complaining witness to convey her property to him in order that he as her agent might to better advantage sell and dispose of the same, the proceeds of which sale he was to pay over and deliver to her, and that upon obtaining title to the property, consisting of a valuable orange grove, he exchanged it for an apartment house, the title to which was taken in his name, in addition to which he received $13,000 in cash, and thereafter sold the apartment house for the sum of $5,106.25, all of which latter sum he appropriated to his own use and refused to pay the same to his principal. It is true that defendant admitted the receipt of the money and, as to the charge of embezzlement, based his defense upon the ground, as shown by his own testimony, in contradiction of that of Mrs. Walters, that she consented to his use thereof for a purpose other than that originally agreed upon, and likewise true that, at his request, the court, as applicable to such testimony, instructed the jury as follows:

"If you believe from the evidence that Anna G. Walters voluntarily and of her own free will spent the $5,106.25 described in the information, either on the defendant, or on herself, or on both of them, or if you believe that she voluntarily did so and that in either event she did not expect or intend to receive said moneys back again, or if she gave the money to him as a loan, or if you entertain a reasonable doubt in respect to the foregoing propositions, then I instruct you it is your duty to acquit the defendant."

It was the duty of the court "in charging the jury * * * to state to them all matters of law necessary for their information." Section 1127, Pen. Code. The instruction complained of was a correct statement of the law and clearly applicable to the theory of the prosecution as shown by the testimony of the complaining witness.

[3] It is also claimed that the court erred in its rulings upon the admission of testimony not pertinent to the charge upon which defendant was convicted. Conceding that some of the testimony complained of was improperly admitted in the prosecution of the charge of embezzlement, it was nevertheless competent as tending to prove the charge of larceny for which defendant was prosecuted, and to which a large part of the testimony claimed to have been erroneously admitted was directed. As shown by the record, the means whereby defendant obtained the money was a fraudulent scheme well calculated to deceive a weak-minded woman, and rob her of the property. Any testimony tending to establish the essentials of either offense was proper. As said by Mr. Underhill in his work on Criminal Evidence (section 88):

"If several crimes are intermixed, or blended with one another, or connected so that they form an indivisible criminal transaction, and full proof by testimony, whether direct or circumstantial, of any one of them cannot be given without showing the others, evidence of any or all of them is admissible against a defendant on trial for any offense which is itself a detail of the whole criminal scheme."

As clearly appears from the voluminous transcript, covering upwards of 1,300 pages, the successful conduct of the fraudulent transaction in which defendant was engaged covered a period of several months, during which time he committed acts constituting other offenses than those charged. Such acts, however, were connected with and committed as part of and in furtherance of the larceny and embezzlement, on which charges he was tried.

To our minds, an examination of the entire record leaves no doubt as to defendant's guilt and, had the rulings complained of been otherwise, the jury must have necessarily reached a like verdict; hence in no event can it be said there was a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

TERRY et al. v. SOUTHWESTERN BLDG. CO. et al. (Civ. 3032.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂=313—BOND NOT RELIEVING OWNERS FROM LIABILITY OF PROPERTY.

Bond executed by building contractor and surety company, running to the owners, not conditioned for payment in full of the claims of all laborers or materialmen, and not made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons who might perform labor or furnish materials, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, held not such a bond as relieved the owners from liability of their property for liens under the statute.

2. TRIAL ⊂=404(2)—FINDING OF FACT INCLUDED WITHIN CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

In an action in the nature of a suit in interpleader by owners of a building against the contractor, its surety, and lien claimants, statement of the trial court, in adopting the referee's findings, that the claimants were entitled to enforce liens on plaintiffs' property for payment of the amounts due them as previously set forth, held to amount to a finding of fact that the sums were due, although included within the conclusions of law.

3. TRIAL ⊂=404(1)—FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS CONSTRUED TO UPHOLD JUDGMENT.

The entire findings of fact and conclusions of law are to be construed to uphold the judgment, when from the facts found other facts may be inferred which will support it.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1071(6)—HARMLESS ERROR; FAILURE TO MAKE FINDING.

A judgment will not be reversed for want of a finding, unless it appears there was evidence or lack of evidence which required the court to make a finding in favor of the appellant.

5. TRIAL ⊂=391—FINDING NOT NECESSARY ON POINT ADMITTED BY PLEADINGS.

In an action by owners of a building in the nature of a suit in interpleader, joining as defendants the contractor, its surety, and lien claimants, where the complaint did not state the amounts due the various claimants, nor whether their claims were valid, and the claimants in their cross-complaint alleged that the labor and material went into the building, and that there were due and unpaid the sums claimed by them, which cross-complaint plaintiffs did not deny, but stipulated that their complaint should stand as answer, no finding was necessary that the sums claimed by the lien claimants were due.

6. CONTRACTS ⊂=147(2) — INTENTION FROM LANGUAGE OF CONTRACT.

Under Civ. Code, § 1638, the parties' intention must be ascertained from the language of their contract, if such language is too explicit to permit interpretation.

7. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂=315—NO RIGHT OF ACTION ON BOND FOR BENEFIT OF LIEN CLAIMANTS.

In view of the terms of the bond given the owners of a building by the contractor therefor, considered as a contract of surety, no right of action accrued upon it for the benefit of lien claimants, and the owners could not, either directly or by bringing action against the contractor, its surety, and lien claimants in the nature of a suit in interpleader, work an assignment of the contract, since, under Civ. Code, § 2836, the surety could not be held beyond the expressed terms of the contract.

8. INDEMNITY ⊂=15(3)—NO RECOVERY WITHOUT PAYMENT.

By Civ. Code, § 2778, subd. 2, on an indemnity against claims, or demands, or damages, or costs, expressly or in other equivalent terms, the person indemnified is not entitled to recover without payment thereof.

9. INTERPLEADER ⟸33—PLAINTIFF AS DISINTERESTED STAKEHOLDER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 386, plaintiff in an interpleader suit cannot have a judgment in his favor, nor urge the claims of certain impleaded defendants against others, but must at all times maintain the position of a disinterested stakeholder, which alone gives him right to maintain the suit.

10. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸317—LIABILITY OF SURETY; PLEADINGS TREATING INTERPLEADER SUIT AS CONSOLIDATED LIEN CASE.

In an action in the nature of interpleader by the owners of a building against the contractor, its surety, and lien claimants, the fact that under subsequent pleadings the owners, the lien claimants, and the court treated the action as a consolidated lien case did not change the status of the contractor's surety as not liable to the lien claimants under the terms of its engagement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by E. H. Terry and others against the Southwestern Building Company and others. From a judgment foreclosing mechanics' liens, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

William T. Blakely, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Allen & Weyl, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BRITTAIN, J. The appellants, owners of real property in Los Angeles, on which a building had been constructed, commenced this action in the nature of a suit in interpleader, joining as defendants the building contractor, its surety and numerous lien claimants. The surety was dismissed from the action by the trial court, certain lien claimants were given judgment against the contractor, and the amounts of their several judgments were decreed to be liens on the plaintiffs' property, which was ordered to be sold to satisfy them. The plaintiffs' appeal is on two grounds: First, that the court erred in dismissing the action as to the surety; and, second, that the judgment is not supported by the findings in three particulars which will be defined later in this opinion.

The action is of such an unusual character that it is necessary to an understanding of the appellants' contentions to state the essential facts upon which the suit was brought, as well as briefly to indicate the salient features of the litigation.

[1] The Southwestern Building Company contracted to erect on the plaintiffs' property a building to cost $6,000. The last $1,500 payment was to be made 35 days after the completion. On the day the contract was executed, the contractor, Southwestern Building Company, as principal, and National Surety Company, as surety, executed a bond running to the plaintiffs, for $3,000. It referred to the contract and contained numerous conditions relating to the work and limiting the liability of the surety. It was not "conditioned for the payment in full of the claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in such work," and it was not by its terms "made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons" who might perform labor upon or furnish materials to be used in the work described in the contract, as provided by section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure. On the other hand, it contained the express condition:

"That no right of action shall accrue upon or by reason hereof to or for the use or benefit of any one other than the obligee herein named, and that the obligation of the company is and shall be construed strictly as one of suretyship only."

This was not such a bond as relieved the owner from liability of his property for liens under the statute. Before the final payment, the owners began this action. They alleged they had the fund of $1,500 retained under the contract, which was set forth with a copy of the bond. They alleged the defendants other than the surety company claimed interests in the fund and claimed liens, that the plaintiffs were ignorant concerning the defendants' respective rights, and that the defendants threatened a multiplicity of suits. They prayed the defendants be restrained from taking any proceedings on account of their demands and liens, that they be required to interplead, that the $1,500 be adjudged to be the sum to be paid by the plaintiffs, that upon payment of that sum they and their property be relieved of all further obligations, and that judgment be entered in favor of the plaintiffs "and in favor of said defendants who establish their claims of lien against said premises, against the defendant National Surety Company, for any amount which they may be entitled to in excess of said fund of $1,500," and for general relief.

The demurrer of the National Surety Company was overruled. The lien claimants, or at least some of them, answered and cross-complained upon their respective liens. There was no formal order of interpleader. The case was sent to a referee to take evidence, which is not before this court. The report of the referee, which was adopted as the findings of fact, while perfectly clear in its meaning, was not drawn with the technical nicety of language which might have been used. For instance, the report stated "that the following claimants furnished repairs or materials, or both, on the property of the plaintiffs, and that said repairs and materials were actually used in the construction of said building, and that the charge for said materials was a reasonable charge thereon, and said mechanics' liens were recorded within the time required by law"—following which was a list referring to the respective claims by exhibit letters, giving the respective dates of filing the liens to which the reference was made, and tabulating the respective amounts for which claims were approved.

[2-5] The appellants contend that these findings do not support the judgment because they do not contain the direct statement that the amounts of the claims listed were owing or unpaid. It appears from the record that no exceptions were filed to the findings of the referee, and the court adopted them as its own, adding thereto what were designated as conclusions of law, in which, among other things, it is stated:

"That said lien claimants are entitled to enforce liens upon the real property described in plaintiffs' complaint for the payment of the several amounts found due them respectively as hereinbefore set forth."

This statement amounts to a finding of fact that the sums were due, although included with the conclusions of law, and in such a case the judgment should not be reversed. Lange v. Waters, 156 Cal. 142, 103 Pac. 889, 19 Ann. Cas. 1207.

The entire findings and conclusions of law are to be construed to uphold the judgment, when, from the facts found, other facts may be inferred which will support the judgment. Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257; Pacific States Corp. v. Arnold, 23 Cal. App. 672, 139 Pac. 239. A judgment will not be reversed for want of a finding unless it appears there was evidence or lack of evidence which required the court to make a finding in favor of the appellant. Bliss v. Sneath, 119 Cal. 529, 51 Pac. 848. The evidence is not before this court.

The appellants make no argument upon this point, and do not suggest in their brief that the lien claims were not justly due and unpaid. On the other hand, in their complaint the plaintiffs alleged that they did not know the actual amounts due the various claimants, nor whether or not their claims of lien were valid. The lien claimants respectively in their cross-complaints alleged that the labor and material furnished went into the plaintiffs' building, and that there were due, owing, and unpaid, after deducting all just credits and offsets, the sums claimed by them. The plaintiffs did not deny these allegations, but stipulated that their complaint should stand as their answer to the cross-complaints respectively. The substantial facts were thus admitted by the pleadings, and no finding was necessary. Higgins v. San Diego Sav. Bank, 129 Cal. 184, 61 Pac. 943.

The same rule applies to the appellants' contention in regard to the phrase used by the referee that certain claimants furnished "repairs or materials, or both," and the further phrase that "the charge for said materials was a reasonable charge thereon." The allegations of the cross-complaints in these particulars were not only direct and positive, but technically correct, and they were not denied by the plaintiffs. No ground for reversal is shown so far as the decree establishes the liens.

[6-8] The third contention of the appellants is based on the same grounds as their attack on the dismissal of the surety company. The appellants rely on Fuller v. Alturas School District, 28 Cal. App. 609, 153 Pac. 543. That case was decided on the authority of the decision in Callan v. Empire Surety Co., 20 Cal. App. 483, 129 Pac. 978, 981. In each of those cases the surety guaranteed both directly and by reference to the building contract that the contractor should well and truly perform the building contract. In the present case the condition was:

"That if the principal [i. e., the contractor] indemnifies the obligee [i. e., the owners] against loss or damage directly arising by reason of the failure of the principal to faithfully perform the above mentioned contract, then this instrument shall be null and void; otherwise, to remain in full force and effect: Provided, however, that this instrument is executed by the company as surety upon the following express conditions which shall be precedent to the right of recovery hereunder. * * * 7. None of the conditions or provisions contained in this instrument shall be deemed waived by the company unless the written consent to such waiver be duly executed by its president or vice president, and its seal be thereto affixed, duly attested; * * * nor shall this instrument or any rights thereunder be assignable unless with like consent duly executed and attested as aforesaid. * * * 11. That no right of action shall accrue upon or by reason hereof to or for the use or benefit of any one other than the obligee herein named, and that the obligation of the company is and shall be construed strictly as one of suretyship only."

This language is too explicit to permit interpretation. Civ. Code, § 1638; Pierce v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 472, 61 Pac. 64, 79 Am. St. Rep. 56. Considered as a contract of surety, no right of action accrued upon it for the benefit of lien claimants, and the plaintiffs could not either directly or by the bringing of this suit work an assignment of the contract. The surety could not be held beyond the express terms of the contract. Civ. Code, § 2836. In Fuller v. Alturas School District, supra, and Callan v. Empire Surety Co., supra, the guaranty was of the faithful performance of the contract. In this case it was that the contractor should indemnify the owners against loss or damage arising directly from his breach. Even though under the rule in the Fuller and Callan Cases, this be construed as a direct indemnity, neither at the time this action was commenced nor when judgment was rendered could the plaintiffs have maintained any action on the bond, for it is a statutory rule that "upon an indemnity against claims, or demands, or damages, or costs, expressly or in other equivalent terms, the person indemnified is not entitled to recover without payment thereof." Civ. Code, § 2778, subd. 2; Fernandez v. Tormey, 121 Cal. 518–519, 53 Pac. 1119.

[9] While the action was not strictly one of interpleader, it was in the nature of such a suit. The plaintiffs alleged they held a fund claimed by the defendants. The National Surety Company did not claim, and could not have claimed, any part of the $1,500 fund. The plaintiffs asked that a judgment be rendered against the surety company in favor of other defendants upon a contract unconnected with the fund, and which the plaintiffs could not assign. The plaintiff in an interpleader suit cannot have a judgment in his favor nor urge the claims of certain impleaded defendants against others. He must at all times maintain the position of a disinterested stakeholder, which alone gives him the right to maintain such a suit. Code Civ. Proc. § 386; Orient Insurance Co. v. Reed, 81 Cal. 146, 22 Pac. 484; Pfister v. Wade, 56 Cal. 46; Wells-Fargo & Co. v. Miner (C. C.) 25 Fed. 533.

[10] The fact that under their subsequent pleadings, the plaintiffs, the lien claimants and the court treated the action as a consolidated lien case did not change the status of the surety company. Sufficient facts were stated by the plaintiffs to permit them to maintain an interpleader suit against the lien claimants in regard to the $1,500 fund, but no facts were stated which in this action could have warranted a judgment against the surety company, which was properly dismissed from the suit.

The judgment is affirmed.

HUNT v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 3090.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃398 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; LIMITATIONS.

The mere fact that an employer permitted an injured employé to return to his old position at full pay, and to continue therein for several months, would not give rise to a claim that a portion of the pay which he thus received was in the nature of compensation for his previous injury so as to extend the time within which an application for compensation should be filed under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11; there being no evidence that the work performed after the injury was either unsatisfactory, or that the compensation therefor was more than services were worth.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃398 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; LIMITATIONS.

Where an injured servant went to his employer's physician several times, and was sent to the physician by the employer's claim agent for an examination as to the nature and extent of his injuries, no treatment or medicine being received either time, no such medical service was rendered as would extend the time for filing application for compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃398 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; LIMITATIONS.

An injured servant cannot excuse his failure to make application for compensation within the time required by Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11, on the ground that he was lulled into a sense of security by representations made on behalf of his employer by several car dispatchers, who told him that his claim had been sent in and that he should receive compensation, where there was no showing that such persons had any authority to make such statement, or that their positions were such as to justify the servant in relying thereon.

Proceedings by Arthur Hunt under the Workmen's Compensation Act to obtain compensation for personal injuries, opposed by the United Railroads, the employer. The Industrial Accident Commission denied application and a petition for a rehearing, and the applicant applies for a writ of review. Application denied.

Clarence A. Henning, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner, who was an employé of the United Railroads, received an injury to his spine on or about June 8, 1918, while in the course of said employment, by being thrown from a street car upon which he was at the time acting as conductor. Twenty-eight days after the date of his injury he returned to work at his former employment, and received full pay therein for the next several months, when he was discharged by his employer. During the period that he was away from his work by reason of his injuries, he received independent medical treatment, and after he returned to work and on or about August 15, 1918, he went to the company's physician for an examination, and went again three or four times for the same purpose, but received no treatment or medicine on any of those occasions; the company's physician informing him that the nature of his injuries was such that only time would effect a cure. After his discharge, on or about March 15, 1919, he made a claim for compensation to the claims attorney of his former employer, and was then sent for examination as to his physical condition to its physician; but no medical or surgical treatment was then given. Thereafter, and on March 18, 1919, his application for relief was filed before the Industrial Accident Commission. A hearing was had thereon, after which, upon the applicant's own testimony showing the foregoing facts, the commission denied his application upon the ground that it had been made too late and was barred under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831). After a petition for rehearing before the commission had also been denied, the application for a writ of review was presented by said petitioner to this court.

[1] Upon the hearing of said application the petitioner urged, as a reason for his contention that the Industrial Accident Commission was in error in holding that his claim was barred by limitation, that the evidence showed the payment or giving of compensation for his injuries on the part of his employer which, under section 11 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, would have extended the time within which his application should be filed. This claim as to the receipt of compensation on the part of the applicant was two-fold, his first contention being that when he returned to work for his employer he was still suffering from his injuries, and was not able on that account to fully perform the duties of his position, but that notwithstanding that fact he received full pay for the time that he continued to be in its employ. The applicant, however, failed to show the existence of any agreement or understanding as between himself and his employer to the effect that the full pay which he received through said period, or any portion thereof, was to be in the nature of compensation for his injuries; nor did he show nor attempt to show that the work which he performed during that period was either unsatisfactory to his employer, or that the compensation which he received therefor was more than his services during that time were actually worth. In the absence of such showing, it cannot be held that the mere fact that the employer permitted the employé to return to his old position at full pay and to continue therein for several months could give rise to a claim that a portion of the pay which he thus received was in the nature of compensation for his previous injuries.

[2] The second contention of the applicant under this head is that he received compensation in the way of medical treatment from his employer which would suffice to prolong the time within which his application might be filed under section 11 of the Workmen's Compensation Act; but the evidence which he gave upon that subject is, in our opinion, insufficient to support such a claim. While it is true that some seven months before the date of the filing of his application with the commission he went to his employer's physician, and that he went again several times thereafter at dates not given by him, he testifies that he received no treatment and no medicine at any of these visits; while as to the visit of March 15, 1919, it is clear that he was sent to the physician on that occasion for an examination as to the nature and extent of his injuries in order that the claims agent of his employer might be able to determine the merits of his claim, and that upon that occasion no treatment was given or medicine supplied. There was therefore no service rendered which could be construed to amount to compensation under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act which would prolong the prescribed time for the filing of his claim.

[3] The final contention of the petitioner is that he was lulled into a sense of security by representations made on behalf of his employer to the effect that his claim was being given proper attention during the period that he had returned to his employment and before his discharge; but his evidence is insufficient to support this claim, since it appears that the only persons in the employ of the company with whom he discussed the matter of his right or claim to compensation were two car dispatchers at its barn, who appear to have told him that his claim had been sent in and that he should receive compensation. There is no showing that these persons had any authority from the employer to make such a statement, or that their positions were such in relation to it as to justify the applicant herein in relying upon any assurances of that kind.

Upon the record before us it is clear that the claim of the petitioner was filed too late before the Industrial Accident Commission, and that the ruling of said commission that said claim was barred under the provisions of section 11 of the Workmen's Compensation Act was therefore correct, and it cannot be disturbed upon this application.

It follows that the application must be denied, and it is so ordered.

BELL v. GERMAN-AMERICAN TRUST & SAVINGS BANK. (Civ. 2934.)

1. EVIDENCE ⟹332(1)—JUDGMENT ROLL.

In an action against a bank a beneficial owner of a note for proceeds collected on a note and paid by the bank to the payee named therein, a judgment roll in another case by plaintiff against the payee was admissible in evidence to show that plaintiff was the owner of the note.

2. BANKS AND BANKING ⟹169—COLLECTIONS; RIGHTS OF BENEFICIAL OWNER.

Where plaintiff left a note with a bank for collection and told the bank that he was the beneficial owner thereof and entitled to the proceeds, the bank acted at its peril in paying the proceeds to the payee named in the note without notice to plaintiff, and was liable to plaintiff, unless it could show that plaintiff was not entitled to the money.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Chester A. Bell against the German-American Trust & Savings Bank. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This appeal is by the defendant from a money judgment against it for $2,655.76 and costs. The facts, briefly stated, as filed by the court, as shown by the evidence and as substantially conceded by appellant in its opening brief, are as follows:

The plaintiff, by his attorney, left with the defendant bank for collection a promissory note executed by one F. W. Carlisle and payable to Mary A. Bell. The collection clerk of the bank, who received the note, was informed at the time that, while the note was by its terms payable to Mary A. Bell, who is a sister of plaintiff, it was actually the property of the plaintiff and respondent, Chester A. Bell; and that when the money on the note was collected the same was to be deposited to the account of said Chester A. Bell. On receiving the note, the representative of the bank stated that it would be necessary to have the payee named in the note sign some paper of authorization, and the bank, by its agent, thereupon undertook to write to said Mary A. Bell. There was considerable correspondence and delay before the bank heard from her; and, when she did communicate with the bank, she demanded that the money on the note, when collected, be sent to her in New York. Without notifying the respondent or his attorney that Mary A. Bell claimed the beneficial interest in the proceeds of the note, and repudiated respondent's claim of ownership, the bank collected the amount covered by the judgment and paid it to Mary A. Bell.

[1, 2] The liability of the bank in this action depends upon two conditions: First, the beneficial ownership of the note in question by the plaintiff; and, second, notice to the bank at the time it accepted the note for collection from plaintiff's attorney, or at least before it parted with the money collected, that the plaintiff claimed such ownership.

That the plaintiff owned the note, and that it was made payable to his sister, Mary A. Bell, as his trustee only, was established by testimony of plaintiff and his attorney on the trial, as well as by the judgment roll (admitted in evidence) in the case of Bell v. Bell—an action brought by the plaintiff here against his sister and the defendant bank to determine the ownership of the note and of the moneys collected thereon. The judgment in that action decreed that the respondent here owned the note, that Mary A. Bell was merely named as a trustee, and that the defendant bank surrender the note to plaintiff. It appears that at the time the suit was commenced the bank had already collected this money and paid it over to Mary A. Bell. The record, therefore, was not competent evidence to show that the bank, at the time it received the note, made the collections and paid over the proceeds, had notice that the plaintiff, Chester A. Bell, claimed the beneficial interest in the note and collections; but it was competent evidence, and a determination of the fact that the plaintiff was the owner of the note, and that is all the record seems to have been received in evidence for.

That the bank at all times had actual notice, as found by the trial court in this case, of plaintiff's possession and claim of ownership, and that he was depositing the note for collection on his own account and for his own benefit, we think is clear from the direct testimony, as well as from evidence contained in some of the bank's correspondence relating to the matter. Receiving the note under these conditions from the plaintiff, the bank, in accounting for the collections to the nominal payee, without notice to plaintiff, acted at its peril. It may have concluded and believed that Mary A. Bell, the person named as payee, was entitled to the proceeds of the note, but there is no justification in the evidence for the contention that the plaintiff, or his agent, misled the bank, either by act or omission, or failed to disclose that the note was being deposited in plaintiff's behalf. The failure of the bank to account to plaintiff for the collections made could only be justified by a showing that plaintiff was not entitled to the money.

Judgment affirmed.

ROSENBERG et al. v. BUMP. (Civ. 1675.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 30, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 29, 1919.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS ⊂⊃54(10)—RIGHT TO LOCATE UPON SCHOOL-LAND WARRANTS; REPEAL OF STATUTES.

St. 1857, p. 356, relating to procedure for the location of land warrants, did not repeal St. 1852, p. 41, relating to land warrants for purchase of lands granted to the state by act of Congress; but the latter statute was expressly repealed by St. 1858, p. 248, which provided that school-land warrants "now in circulation" should be received for school lands to be located as now provided by law, so that the right to locate land upon school-land warrants sold under the repealed act continued.

2. PUBLIC LANDS ⊂⊃54(10)—LEGAL AND EQUITABLE RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS OF WARRANTS NOT AFFECTED BY REPEALING STATUTE CONTAINING PROVISO.

St. 1867–68, p. 507, constituting the surveyor general the state's agent to locate the "unsold portion" of the school land grant, section 11, and providing that warrants issued in pursuance of St. 1852, p. 41, should be taken in payment of any part of said grant if paid directly to and canceled by the state land office register, section 54, and for duplicate warrants in case of loss or destruction of originals, section 59, and repealing some 27 statutes relating to disposal of public lands, with provision that the act shall not affect any legal or equitable claims, gives the surveyor general no rights as to "sold portion" represented by such warrants.

3. PUBLIC LANDS ⊂⊃54(10)—SCHOOL LANDS; VESTED RIGHT TO AMOUNT OF LANDS DESCRIBED IN WARRANTS PURCHASED.

The purchasers of school-land warrants under St. 1852, p. 41, and St. 1853, p. 230, acquired under such purchase a vested and indefeasible right to locate warrants upon lands within the government 500,000-acre grant, such right being vested to the amount of lands specified in the warrants which St. 1867–68, p. 507, repealing former statutes, does not interfere with in view of its proviso as to existing legal and equitable claims on such lands.

4. STATUTES ⊂⊃228 — PURPOSE OF SAVING CLAUSE OF REPEALING STATUTE.

The specific purpose of a saving clause in statutes is to preserve existing rights by restricting the repealing acts or continuing repealed acts in force as to existing powers, inchoate rights, penalties incurred, and pending proceedings dependent upon the repealed statute.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂⊃123—IMPAIRMENT OF CONTRACT OF STATE WITH PURCHASER OF LAND WARRANTS.

The sale of warrants by the state under St. 1852, p. 41, constituted a contract between the state and the purchasers for sale of amount of land specified therein, which land was embraced within the 500,000-acre grant by Congress, notwithstanding that at the time of the sale such lands had not been listed to the state, and the Legislature could not take such right from the purchaser by Acts 1867–68, p. 507, without impairing the obligation of a contract which power is expressly denied to the state by Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, although the Legislature may amend the procedure or change the remedy without repealing the right, so that the owner of warrants purchased under St. 1852, p. 41, could locate lands in 1893, since the state held the legal title in trust for the owner of the warrants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Action by Joseph Rosenberg and others, as executors of the will of M. Brandenstein, deceased, against Charles A. Bump. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal on the judgment roll. Judgment reversed, with directions to enter judgment for plaintiffs.

M. W. McIntosh, of San Francisco (Isaac Frohman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Leon Samuels, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was brought in the superior court of Monterey county, under sections 3414 and 3415 of the Political Code, to determine the title of certain lands in said county. Defendant had judgment, from which plaintiffs appeal on the judgment roll.

Plaintiffs claim title to the south half of a certain section 13 and the fractional north half of a certain section 19, while the claim of defendant is to said south half of section 13 and the fractional northwest quarter and the west half of the northeast quarter of said section 19.

The claim of plaintiffs is based upon the following facts: By a certain act of Congress, 500,000 acres of land were granted to the state of California and, pursuant to an act of the Legislature, approved May 3, 1852 (Stats. 1852, p. 41), land warrants were signed and issued by the Governor of the state, countersigned by the comptroller, deposited in the office of the state treasurer, and thereafter sold. Between the 2d day of July, 1852, and the 1st day of October, 1853, four of said land warrants were issued and sold to different purchasers, each for the amount of 160 acres, and paid for at the rate of $2 per acre. On the 20th day of October, 1893, one Henry Jackson, who had by mesne assignments become the owner of said four land warrants, located the same on the lands claimed by plaintiffs, and on the 24th of August, 1900, said locations were approved and allowed by the commissioner of the general land office. Said Jackson, on the 8th day of February, 1901, by deed, conveyed said lands to one M. Brandenstein, who died testate on the 25th of March, 1906. His will was duly admitted to probate, and plaintiffs were appointed as executors thereof and qualified as such.

On the 7th day of November, 1911, defendant filed with the surveyor general of the state his application to purchase all of the lands claimed by plaintiffs, except the east half of the northeast quarter of said section 19.

There is no denial by the answer of or any dispute in any form as to these facts, which are alleged in the complaint, quoting from the reply brief as follows:

"That on October 20, 1893, the day on which the locations were made, the lands involved were vacant and unappropriated lands of the United States and subject to sale and location at the United States Land Office at San Francisco; that they had been surveyed by the United States; that the plats of the survey had been approved and certified by the United States Surveyor General for the state of California and filed more than thirty days prior to October 20, 1893, in said land office; that Jackson, who was then the owner of the land warrants, located them on said lands conformably to the said survey; that he made the locations by filing with the register of said land office his written applications for said lands, specifically describing the same in the applications; that the applications were each accompanied by the affidavits of Jackson and at least one witness that there was no valid adverse claim existing upon any of said lands; that he surrendered the warrants to the register of the United States Land Office, who forwarded them to the General Land Office of the United States; that the locations were made with the consent of the register and receiver of the United States Land Office at San Francisco, and entered by them on the records of said office; that on August 24, 1900, the locations were approved and allowed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; that on January 23, 1901, the lands were certified and listed to the state by the United States as a part of the 500,000-acre grant to the state; that said certificates and listing of said lands was made under and in pursuance of said locations and not otherwise."

The answer, so far as its denials go, does no more than to challenge the allegations of the complaint that Jackson had conveyed the lands to Brandenstein, and that the latter, or the executors of his will, had any legal or equitable title to the lands or were the owners of any portion thereof. Affirmatively, the answer then declares that the act of 1852, under the terms of which the warrants in question were issued and sold to Jackson or his grantors, was repealed by the act of 1868, and that therefore (so the answer concludes), at the time the locations were made by Jackson under said warrants, "there was no law of said state whatever providing for the making of said locations," and that the locations were consequently null and void and conveyed no title or right or estate whatever to said Henry Jackson.

The court found that Brandenstein and his executors, ever since the date of the deed from Henry Jackson to the former, had been in the possession of said lands; that it is not true that M. Brandenstein and his executors have ever at any time been the owners of said lands or any part thereof; that on the 28th of March, 1868 (St. 1867–68, p. 507), the Legislature of the state of California repealed the act of May 3, 1852; and "that at the time the said locations made by said Jackson were made, there was no law of said state whatever providing for the making of said locations, and said locations were, at the time the same were made, ever since have been, and now are, null and void, and conveyed no right or title or estate whatever to said Henry Jackson; and that said Henry Jackson did not at the time said locations were made acquire, hold, or have, nor did he ever acquire, hold, have, or own any right, title, interest, or estate whatsoever either legal or equitable in or to said listed lands or any part of said listed lands." It is then found that on the 7th of February, 1911, when defendant filed his application to purchase said lands, "all of said lands were vacant public lands belonging to the state of California, and subject to sale under the laws of the state," and the findings detail the steps taken by defendant in making his filing.

The judgment, which followed the findings, decreed that the surveyor general approve each of the applications of defendant and, upon further compliance by defendant with the laws relating to the sale of lands, that there be issued to defendant such further evidence of title as is provided by law.

[1] The whole controversy presented by this appeal hinges, it will be observed, on the solution of the question whether the appellants or the grantors of their testator lost their rights by virtue of the asserted repeal of the statute of 1852 by the later legislation respecting the disposal of the lands embraced within the 500,000-acre grant by Congress. The real point of divergence between the parties is upon the question whether the locations of the Jackson warrants were legally made.

The statute of 1852 was entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of the 500,000 acres of land granted to the state by act of Congress" (Stats. 1852, p. 41), and the first section thereof contained the following provision:

"Section 1. The Governor of this state is hereby authorized to issue land warrants for not less than 160 and not more than 320 acres in one warrant, to the amount of 500,000 acres, which warrants when so signed and issued by the Governor, shall be countersigned by the Comptroller, and by him be deposited in the office of the treasurer of state for sale, charging the same to account of the treasurer."

Section 2 provided for the sale of warrants by the treasurer at the rate of two dollars per acre. Sections 3 and 14 of said act read as follows:

"Sec. 3. The parties purchasing such warrants and their assigns are hereby authorized in behalf of this state to locate the same upon any vacant and unappropriated lands belonging to the United States within the state of California subject to such location, but no such location shall be made unless it be made in conformity to the law of Congress, which law provides that not less than 320 acres shall be granted in a body."

"Sec. 14. So soon as the lands which may be located under and by virtue of the provisions of this act, shall have been surveyed by the United States and such locations are made to conform thereto, the Governor of this state shall cause patents to be issued in such manner and form as the Legislature may hereafter direct."

A review and an analysis of the subsequent legislation with respect to the disposal of the 500,000-acre grant are correctly presented in the opening brief of the appellants as follows:

"On April 30, 1857, the Legislature passed an act in reference to the location of warrants issued under the act of 1852, and the issuance of patents for the lands located thereunder entitled, 'An act authorizing the location and patenting of school lands' (Stats. 1857, p. 356), section 1 of which provides:

" 'Sec. 1. In all cases in which the lands of the United States have been duly surveyed by the general government, and the plat thereof shall have been on file thirty days, in the land office of the proper district, it shall be lawful for the owner or owners of school land warrants, issued under the provisions of the act of this state, passed May 3, 1852, in relation to the disposal of the 500,000 acres granted by the act of Congress of 4th September, 1841, to locate the same according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands, by filing a written application by such owner or owners, specifically describing the particular tract so located, with the register of the United States Land Office for the proper district, accompanied by an affidavit of the party or parties applicant, and of one or more witnesses, that there is no valid claim existing upon the land so desired, adverse to the claim of the person making such application for location.'

"On the 10th of April, 1858, the Legislature passed an act creating a 'state land board for the state of California,' and designating its chief officer as 'the register of the state land office,' and constituting the surveyor general ex officio register until otherwise provided. Stats. 1858, p. 127. This act prescribes with much particularity the duties of the register, and among them is that of keeping the record of all lands selected by the agents of the state of California as a portion of the 500,000-acre grant, showing the number of acres, the description of the land, the name of the original purchaser, the selecting or locating agent, the price per acre, and the numbers of school warrants under which the same are located.

"On the 23d of April, 1858, the Legislature passed an act providing for the location and sale of the unsold portion of the 500,000 acres, and the 72 sections additional granted by the United States for the use of a seminary of learning. Stats. 1858, p. 248. By this act the Governor is authorized to appoint and commission in each of the United States land districts of the state, a locating agent, whose duty it is to locate unsold school lands and the seminary lands referred to, in the manner provided by law. The agents are required to proceed and obtain the consent of such settlers who may chance to avail themselves of the benefits of the act, and the request of others who are not settlers, and who may wish to purchase lands under its provisions, such consent or request to be accompanied by the affidavit of the parties and of two disinterested persons that there is no valid claim existing on the land adverse to theirs, and when such consent or request is obtained, under such forms as the Governor may prescribe, to apply to the register and receiver of their respective land offices to permit the location to be made in the name of the state, as a part of the grant above designated, and if permitted, to make the location in conformity with the laws and regulations of the United States.

"The twelfth section repeals the act of May 3, 1852, but declares that school land warrants then in circulation shall be received for school lands and be located as then provided by law.

"On the 16th of April, 1859, the Legislature passed an act for the issuance of patents for lands located under school land warrants, and for lands purchased under the act of April 23, 1858 (Stats. 1859, p. 338). This act provides that in all cases where school land warrants have been issued under the act of May 3, 1852, and the same have been, or may be, located upon any of the public lands within this state subject to such location, and in accordance with the provisions of that act, or with the provisions of the act of April 30, 1857, or where parties have purchased under the act of April 23, 1858, and obtained a certificate of purchase from the registrar of the state land office, the holder of such warrant, or certificate of purchase, shall be entitled to receive a patent from the state for the lands thus located or purchased. The procedure for obtaining a patent is outlined in the act, and section 7 thereof repeals all acts, and parts of acts, conflicting with the provisions.

"Thereafter the Legislature passed an act providing for the issuance of duplicate school land warrants in lieu of those lost, and on April 2, 1866, an act was adopted providing for the issuance by the register of the state land office of his certificate of the proper location of such warrant. Stats. 1866, p. 854.

"These acts were followed by the act of March 28, 1868, repealing all of the foregoing acts, providing a new and different procedure for obtaining patents to the unlocated portions of the 500,000 acres set apart as school land; providing further (section 54) that warrants issued in pursuance of the act to provide for the disposal of the 500,000 acres of land granted to the state by act of Congress shall be taken in payment of any part of said grant, provided that said warrant shall be paid directly to the register of the state land office, and shall be by him canceled before a certificate of purchase shall issue for the said lands; and also providing in section 71 of said act that all the various acts heretofore referred to shall be repealed, but that the provisions of said act 'shall not in any manner affect any legal or equitable claims, now existing on any of the lands, hereinbefore described, in favor of any claimant under the state, nor affect any suit or proceeding which is now pending respecting the same, arising out of any claims now made; but the courts of the state may proceed and adjudicate upon said rights, and patents or other evidences of title may issue for the same to the parties entitled thereto, under any existing laws of this state, the provisions of this act to the contrary notwithstanding.' Stats. 1867–68, p. 507.

"The act of March 28, 1868, in so far as the same relates to school lands, has since been amended in some particulars, but its main features were subsequently embodied in the Political Code of California, in sections 3494 to 3503, inclusive."

The contention of the appellants is that their rights were in no way impaired by the legislation prescribing the manner of the disposal by the state of the 500,000 acres of land granted to it by congress following the enactment of the statute of 1852, but that their rights were preserved by said subsequent legislation and particularly by the saving clause contained in the statute of 1868, above quoted herein.

The specific argument of counsel for the respondent is that the locations made in 1893 could not have been valid locations, if attempted to be made under the act of 1852, for the reason that that act was repealed by the act of 1857, which provided "an entirely new procedure for the location of such land warrants"; that since, however, the appellants claim that, in making the locations, they followed the plan outlined by the statute of 1857 and not that prescribed by the statute of 1852, the inevitable result is that thus they "abandoned their claim to any protection under the act of 1852, so far as the same affected the procedure for locating lands under warrants issued under said act of 1852, and recognizing the right of the Legislature to repeal said procedure or to enact any other provision in relation to such land warrants"; that the act of March 28, 1868, which expressly repealed all prior acts relating to this subject, "provided a new and different procedure for obtaining patents to the unlocated portion of the 500,000 acres granted to the state," and therefore, to make the locations by Jackson valid, he should have followed the procedure laid down by said act of 1868.

Replying to the above argument, we say, first, that the act of 1857 did not repeal the act of 1852 either expressly or necessarily from the general language thereof. To the contrary, it seems plain to us that the act of 1857 made certain portions of the act of 1852 a part of its own provisions, or, if it strictly cannot be said that this is true, it certainly and unquestionably recognized by express language the validity of the warrants issued under the prior act, the sale of such warrants and the rights acquired by purchasers of the same. It will be noted that the initial section of the act of 1857 provides that, when the lands granted to the state shall have been surveyed by the general government, and the plat thereof shall have been on file for thirty days in the land office of the district, it shall be lawful for the owner or owners of school land warrants, issued under the provisions of the act of this state passed May 3, 1852, to locate the same according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands, "by filing a written application by such owner or owners," etc., with the register of the United States land office "for the proper district," etc. It is as obvious as any proposition can be that, far from intending to repeal the act of 1852 by the act of 1857, the Legislature by the latter act merely intended to regulate the matter of locating warrants issued by the state and acquired by purchasers under the act of 1852, so that such locations would conform to the requirements of the United States statutes relative thereto. In other words, at the time of the passage of the act of 1852, none of the government lands in this state subject to location under the congressional grant of 500,000 acres had been surveyed, but the Legislature assumed, nevertheless, that it could then dispose of the granted land according to the plan established by the act of 1852. Toland v. Mandell, 38 Cal. 30; McNee v. Donahue, 142 U. S. 587, 12 Sup. Ct. 211, 35 L. Ed. 1122. The earlier California cases (see, for instance, Doll v. Meador, 16 Cal. 315) held that the method of selecting and locating the unsurveyed granted lands as prescribed by the statute of 1852 was not inconsistent or in conflict with the act of Congress, but later on a different view was taken of that proposition, the Supreme Court finally declaring and deciding that the granted lands could not be selected or located until they were surveyed by the United States and that if other rights to the lands should be acquired by pre-emption, homestead, etc., before such survey, the pre-emptioner or homesteader would be entitled to the land. It was further held that, in a case where two land warrant selections or locations were made on the same land, one prior to and the other subsequent to the survey, the later location would prevail. See Terry v. Megerle, 24 Cal. 609, 624, 85 Am. Dec. 84; Grogan v. Knight, 27 Cal. 515; Hastings v. Devlin, 40 Cal. 358; People v. Jackson, 62 Cal. 548. It was because of the situation so arising that the Legislature of 1857 passed the act of that year, the evident purpose thereof being, as stated, among other things, to preserve the legal integrity of the warrants issued and sold under the act of 1852, said act of 1857 providing, as seen, a method for locating said warrants on surveyed lands, as required by the act of Congress. But, as further showing not only an intention but a determination on the part of the state to protect the rights of purchasers of warrants issued under the act of 1852, and whose validity is expressly recognized by the act of 1857 and intervening subsequent acts, we may refer to the fact that, in 1866, to correct the difficulties the state found itself up against prior thereto, created by its legislation relative to the disposal of the granted lands, resulting in legally improper selections, the Legislature memorialized Congress to pass what in effect might be termed a corrective act, the effect of which was to confirm to the state all selections of the granted lands made by the state, in good faith, and sold by the state in good faith, and the Congress thereupon passed an act, on July 23, 1866, confirming, not all the lands which had been selected by the state, but only such lands as had been selected and sold to purchasers, in good faith, under the laws of the state. This act of Congress "had the effect," said the Supreme Court, in Toland v. Mandell, 38 Cal. 30, 43, "to legalize the possession of locators upon unsurveyed lands under the state, until they should have opportunity to present their claims for determination by the officers of the United States, as therein provided. Thereafter, their claims ceased to be within the rule of Grogan v. Knight, 27 Cal. 515, for they were, by the act, admitted to all the rights and privileges of pre-emptors upon unsurveyed lands, under the laws of the United States, which are comprised in the right of present possession, coupled with the right to purchase the title whenever the time at which a purchase can be affected shall have arrived."

The above decision was followed by the case of Roberts v. Columbet, 63 Cal. 22, where the appellant purchased from the state a school land warrant issued under the statute of 1852, and located the same in 1853, prior to the time that the land had been by the United States surveyed and listed to the state. The claim was that the location was invalid, but the Supreme Court held that the purchase by the appellant was in good faith and came within the confirmatory act of Congress, above referred to. The court, inter alia, said:

"Since the passage of the act [of Congress] of July 23, 1866, we think that the position of the appellant has been essentially the same as it would have been if the land upon which he located his warrant had been, before the date of such location, surveyed by the United States."

From the foregoing considerations, it is entirely clear that the Legislature did not intend by the act of 1857 to repeal the act of 1852, in so far as were concerned the rights acquired by purchasers of warrants issued by authority of the last-named act, assuming for the sake of the present discussion that the Legislature possessed the power to abrogate the rights so acquired by a repeal of the statute, or at all. Indeed, it is clearly manifest, from an examination of all the legislation covering the subject of the disposal of the granted lands in question, from the statute of 1852 down to and including the act of 1868, the Legislature on all occasions intended to and did take special pains to preserve and protect every vital right acquired by and invested in purchasers of school-land warrants under the statute of 1852. The act of April 23, 1858 (Stats. 1858, p. 248), did expressly repeal, among others, the statute of 1852, but it contained the provision that—

"All school-land warrants, now in circulation, shall be received for school lands, and may be located as now provided by law." (Italics ours.)

The meaning of this language, it is clear, is that school-land warrants in circulation at the time of the passage of the act of 1858 may be located as provided by law existing at the time of the passage of said act; or as provided by the law authorizing the issuing and sale of such warrants. And so, in every act passed by the Legislature between the time of the passage of the act of 1858 and the time of the passage of the act of 1868, we find that the rights of the purchasers of these warrants were expressly recognized and preserved. It will therefore not be necessary to examine herein in detail the several acts passed after the act of 1858, except the act of 1868. The important provisions of the several acts referred to are given above and plainly speak for themselves and sustain the construction which, in a general way, we here ascribe to them.

[2] The act of 1868 involved a general revision of the prior laws relating to school lands granted and belonging to the state and also an elaborate scheme for the disposal by the state of such lands. We shall not, nor is it necessary to the decision herein to do so, examine analytically the numerous provisions of that act. It is deemed sufficient to point out that it provides that the surveyor general, who is by the act constituted the agent for the state for that purpose, shall locate the unsold portion of the 500,000-acre grant (section 11); that warrants issued in pursuance of the act of 1852 "shall be taken in payment of any part of the said grant," subject to the condition that said warrants shall be paid directly to the register of the state land office and shall be canceled by him before a certificate of purchase shall issue for the said lands (section 54); that there shall be issued duplicate warrants in case of the loss or destruction of the originals, the duplicate to be of the same validity and have the same force and effect as the original (section 59). The act, as shown above, contains the clause saving pre-existing rights acquired in the lands.

In Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 255, decided before the passage of the act of 1868, the Supreme Court said, quoting the syllabus:

"When the state issues her land warrant and receives the sum of money required to be paid therefor, she thereby sells the amount of land specified in the warrant out of the 500,000 acres granted by the act of Congress, and authorizes the holder, as her agent, to locate the same upon any vacant lands belonging to the United States subject to such location. When this location is made, the locator thenceforth becomes the owner of the entire beneficial interest in the particular tract of land selected, and until the issuing of the patent the state holds the legal title in trust for the locator who has become the purchaser."

This language can only mean that, while the particular tract or parcel of land out of the 500,000-acre grant so sold may not be known either to the state or the purchaser, at the time of the sale of the warrant, yet the amount of land specified in the warrant is nevertheless sold to the purchaser by the state, and it remains with the purchaser to locate the warrant and thus acquire his right to a patent for the land so selected.

In view of the above-stated conclusion of the Supreme Court as to the legal effect of the sale of land warrants by the state issued by authority of the statute of 1852 or under any of the subsequent state legislation of which conclusion the legislative branch of the state government is to be presumed to have had knowledge, particularly since the Legislature had been for a number of prior years wrestling with the problem of a proper plan for the disposing of the government lands within its borders subject to location under state laws, it is (as counsel for appellants aptly suggest) inconceivable that the Legislature would attempt, even if it had the rightful power to do so, to deprive holders of school-land warrants of the rights acquired and which they were authorized to exercise under prior statutes. But that the Legislature intended to make no such attempt by the act of 1868, is plainly manifest, in our opinion, from the language of the several provisions of said act to which we have above referred. For instance, the act provides, as we have shown, that the surveyor general, as ex officio register of the state land office shall act as the agent of the state for the location of the "unsold portion"—not the unlocated portion—of the 500,000-acre grant. By this language, the Legislature expressly recognized and incorporated into the act of 1868 the doctrine laid down in Bludworth v. Lake, viz.: That—

"When the state issues her land warrant and receives the sum of money required to be paid therefor, she thereby sells the amount of land specified in the warrant out of the 500,000 acres granted by the act of Congress."

Thus it is clear to our minds that the Legislature did not intend, as counsel for respondent contend is true, by the act of 1868, to vest solely and exclusively in the surveyor general the right to make school-land warrant selections; for if, as the Supreme Court declared to be true, the sale of the warrant constituted a sale by the state of the number of acres of land specified in the warrant, then it was a sale of land so specified for all time and unconditionally; and there was therefore nothing remaining for the purchaser to do but to locate the number of acres his warrant called for. Having bought and paid for the land, there was no reason why his warrant should be presented to the surveyor general as in payment for something he had already paid for. This view is fortified by the consideration that section 59 of the act of 1868, as we have seen, in authorizing the issuance of duplicate land warrants, in cases where the originals had been lost or destroyed, provides:

"Any person making application for a duplicate school-land warrant, in lieu of one alleged to have been lost or destroyed, shall make satisfactory proof, by affidavit of himself or others, to the register of the state land office, that the party applying therefor is the bona fide owner of such warrant, that the same has not been located, and of the facts establishing the loss or destruction of the same, and shall file with the register of the state land office a good and sufficient bond, in form joint and several, with two or more sureties, to be approved by said register, payable to the state of California, in double the value of said school-land warrant, conditioned that the said warrant alleged to have been lost or destroyed shall not be presented for location."

It is further provided that the duplicate warrant shall be of the same validity, force, and effect as the original. The language "shall not be presented for location" implies that the Legislature recognized all the rights acquired by purchasers of land warrants under previous statutes—not only the right to the number of acres of land designated in such warrants, but to locate the warrants in the manner prescribed by the statute by whose authority they were issued and sold. Again, if the language referred to is not sufficiently clear and explicit in disclosing the intention to preserve to purchasers of such warrants any right acquired under the warrants as indicated above, then it seems to us that that intention is made absolutely clear and unquestionable by the provision requiring the person applying for the duplicate warrant to furnish a bond conditioned that the lost or destroyed warrant shall not be presented for location. "If," as counsel for the appellants well inquire, "the Legislature had intended as claimed, to cut off the right of any one other than the surveyor general to make school-land warrant locations, why did it exact a bond that the warrant represented to be lost or destroyed would not be presented for location? What need was there for this requirement? Manifestly, no such bond would have been required if the Legislature had lawfully terminated the right to use the warrant for any purpose other than as payment on an application to purchase land forming part of the 500,000-acre grant, and we are told by respondent's counsel that it did lawfully terminate all other rights. The state needed no protection against an unauthorized use of a warrant. It could snap its fingers at that and entirely disregard it. Viewed in this way, the exaction of the bond was a useless and vain thing. But we must not assume that the Legislature had an idle or senseless purpose in making this enactment; that it required a bond against doing an act which it said could not be done and which, if done, would have no validity or effect anyway." To our minds, the idea was to provide against the contingency of the loss or destruction of the written evidence—the land warrant—of rights acquired from the state by a purchaser of the warrant, by substituting a duplicate for the lost or destroyed warrant having "the same validity and the same force and effect as the original"; that is to say, a duplicate warrant preserving to the purchaser of the original himself or his assigns to locate such warrant on the number of acres of land sold to him by the state and specified in the warrant. Or, as the same proposition was stated in Stuart v. Haight, 39 Cal. 87, 89:

"The design evidently had in view in the enactment of the statute was to provide for the relief of those who had purchased state land warrants, which, in some way, had become unavailable to them for the purposes for which they had been issued by the state. The intention was to relieve from loss the holder of the warrant, which had been issued by the state, and acquired by the purchaser in the expectation of being able to locate it on the lands which had been granted to her."

Summarizing the situation, then, it is: That the act of 1868 expressly limits the right of the surveyor general to locate lands comprised within the grant by Congress to the unsold portion thereof; that, by the same act, duplicate warrants in lieu of those lost or destroyed, having the same validity, the same force and the same effect or (we may add) scope are authorized to be issued upon sufficient affidavits and the filing of a bond that the originals will not be presented for location; that the effect of selling the warrants was to sell to the purchasers of the warrants the amount of lands specified in the warrants sold. From all these considerations, we hold that it could not have been the intent of the Legislature by the act of 1868 to deprive owners of pre-existing land warrants of the right themselves to locate said warrants as agents of the state.

It is true that the act of 1868 provides that outstanding warrants shall be taken in payment of any part of the grant; but, considering that provision in connection with the other provisions of the said act which we have already considered and construed, we are led to the conclusion that it was intended only to be permissive—that is to say, that it was intended to confer upon owners of outstanding warrants the right, in addition to their pre-existing right to locate the warrants as agents of the state, to present the same as payment on applications to purchase lands embraced within the congressional grant. As we construe the provision, by comparison with other provisions of the act, it means this: That owners of such warrants may, in their discretion, present the same as payment on applications to purchase the lands, in which case the surveyor general shall or must receive the same as such payment. The object of the provision referred to probably was, as counsel for the appellants suggest, not to destroy the right of location in the owners of the warrants, "but to hasten the redemption or cancellation of the outstanding warrants by allowing them to be used as cash," thus, as stated, giving a further or additional right to the owners of the warrants.

But if there may be any question as to the correctness of the foregoing views regarding the matter in hand, a consideration of the saving clause of the act of 1868 will readily dissipate any doubt as to the proposition that, by said saving clause, the Legislature intended to preserve to the purchasers of warrants issued and sold under the act of 1852 all the rights acquired by them by virtue of such warrants. This clause, it will be remembered, follows language in section 71 of the act repealing some 27 statutes relating to the public lands of the state and regulating the disposal thereof, and declares that—

"The provisions of this act shall not in any manner affect any legal or equitable claims, now existing on any of the lands hereinbefore described, in favor of any claimant under the state," etc.

[3] The contention of the respondent is, as to said clause, that it refers only to those rights under school-land warrants which are vested—"that is, rights that arise out of the actual location of the warrants. In other words," further explains respondent, "the saving clause in the repealing words of the act of 1868 referred to accrued rights under located warrants and not to rights arising out of warrants still in circulation." But the first reply to this contention is that purchasers of school-land warrants issued and sold under the statutes of 1852 and 1853 (St. 1853, p. 230) acquired under such purchase vested rights (Bludworth v. Lake, supra); that is, they thus acquired the indefeasible right to locate the warrants upon lands within the 500,000-acre grant. Indeed, the proposition may even be put in stronger form; they acquired a vested right to the amount of land specified in the warrants. The second reply to the construction respondent gives said clause is that, should it be sustained, it would be inconsistent with the provision in the statute that duplicate warrants should have the same validity, force, and effect as inhered in the originals. We have already shown that, while the Legislature prior to the enactment of the statute of 1868, had repealed the general procedure in the statute of 1852 for the disposal of the granted lands, it expressly preserved to purchasers of warrants issued under the latter act all the vital rights acquired by them under such purchases. (See said statutes, above cited and considered.) In adding to the statute of 1868 the saving clause under consideration, the Legislature is to be presumed to have had in mind and considered the act of previous Legislatures in preserving to purchasers of warrants under the statute of 1852 all the rights vested in them by and under the warrants sold by the state; and therefore, reading, in view of that consideration, the language of the clause, "that the provisions of this act shall not in any manner affect any legal or equitable claims, now existing on any of the lands hereinbefore described, in favor of any claimant under the state," the conclusion would seem irresistibly to follow that the intent at the bottom of said clause was to preserve to such purchasers every right acquired by them by reason of the purchase; that is to say, not only the right to the amount of lands specified in the warrants, but the further right given by the statute under which they were issued and sold—themselves to locate such warrants as agents of the state. To give the clause referred to any other construction would be to deny to the purchasers of such warrants a substantial right, and one which, it can well be said, entered vitally into the consideration upon which they purchased the warrants.

[4] The specific purpose of a saving clause in a statute is to preserve pre-existing rights. "It is generally employed," says Mr. Sutherland in his treatise on Statutory Construction (section 225), "to restrict repealing acts; to continue repealed acts in force as to existing powers, inchoate rights, penalties incurred and pending proceedings dependent on the repealed statute." See, also, section 167 of the same work; Black, Interpretation of Laws, p. 270.

[5] The statute of 1852 did not limit the time within which the warrants issued and sold by its authority were to be used in the manner prescribed by said act. The act of 1868 made radical changes in the system for the disposal of state lands acquired by grant from the general government through its Congress, and the Legislature, by the saving clause of the act of 1868, certainly intended to say to purchasers of land warrants that they were to be permitted to utilize their warrants in the manner and according to the plan or procedure established by the law from which they secured their rights to portions of the grant made by Congress to the state. This conclusion is not only reasonable, but eminently just.

Thus we think we have shown that the Legislature, in the place of attempting to repeal by the act of 1868 the previous statutes relating to the public lands of the state so as to destroy the right of purchasers of land warrants issued under the authority of the previous acts to locate, as agents of the state, such warrants, intended by said act to preserve said right to such purchasers, and that thereby it did do so. But it is to be further suggested that, even if such attempt were made by the Legislature, it would be wholly futile. The sale of the warrants by the state constituted a contract between the state and the purchasers of the warrants. This is true, although at the time of the sale the lands granted by Congress had not been listed to the state. The terms of the warrant were that the purchaser was entitled to locate the same in behalf of the state of California. The warrant constituted a contract of sale of the amount of land specified therein and which land was embraced within the grant to the state by Congress of 500,000 acres of land. Bludworth v. Lake, supra.

Whether the purchaser had ever exercised his right under the contract is a matter of no consequence. He might have delayed locating the warrant until the entire congressional grant had been exhausted, and thus have lost his rights under his warrants; but this consideration would render the sale and the purchase none the less a contract of sale of the amount of land specified in the warrant between him and the state. As heretofore herein declared, the right thus given the purchaser to locate the warrant in behalf of the state, or as the state's agent, constituted a vital element or covenant of the contract of sale. We do not say that the purchaser, after the passage of the act of 1868, was himself compelled to locate the warrant to complete his right to a patent; but we do say that he was vested with the right to do so or to take that course to obtain the actual benefits of his contract. The Legislature was therefore without the power to take that right from the purchaser. To do so would be impairing the obligation of a contract, a power which is expressly denied to the state by the tenth section of article 1 of the federal Constitution. The Legislature may amend the procedure or change the remedy whereby rights are judicially asserted, and such amendment or change may have a retroactive effect, except in those cases where the procedure or the remedy as amended or changed directly affects and impairs the right. See James v. Oakland Traction Co., 10 Cal. App. 785, 792, 103 Pac. 1082, and authorities therein cited. As shown, the act of 1868, as construed by respondent, although it may be regarded, as all the previous statutes might have been, as involving largely a procedural scheme for acquiring ownership of or title to lands comprised within the grant from Congress, would result in divesting purchasers of land warrants under previous legislative acts of the vested right to locate their warrants in behalf of the state.

The cases cited by respondent upon the proposition under consideration are not in point. The case of Campbell v. Wade, 132 U. S. 34, 10 Sup. Ct. 9, 33 L. Ed. 241, so cited, was where, under a Texas statute, the sale of a portion of the vacant lands of that state, lying within certain counties, was authorized, upon a survey of any of the said lands by the person desiring to purchase the same and upon the payment into the state treasury of the purchase money therefor, when it became the duty of the commissioner of the general land office, upon the presentation to it of the receipt for said purchase money, to issue to the purchaser a patent for the land. The proposed purchaser applied to the surveyor of the county to have the lands applied for surveyed, the applicant paying the required fees for the filing of the application; but no survey was ever made, and before the expiration of the time within which the surveyor was authorized to make the survey the Legislature of the state withdrew from sale all of the public lands mentioned in the act under which the applicant applied to purchase the lands. An action by the applicant against the surveyor to compel the latter by mandate to survey the lands which the former sought to purchase was brought, and found its way to the United States Supreme Court, before which it was contended that the petitioner for the mandate, by his application for a survey, had acquired a vested right in the lands he desired to purchase which could not be impaired by their subsequent withdrawal from sale. The court held that the position of petitioner was clearly untenable, saying:

"The state was under no obligation to continue the law in force because of the application of any one to purchase. It entered into no such contract with the public. The application did not bind the applicant to proceed any further in the matter; nor, in the absence of other proceedings, could it bind the state to sell the lands."

The case of Shiver v. U. S., 159 U. S. 491, 16 Sup. Ct. 54, 40 L. Ed. 231, merely holds that a person who has entered a homestead under the homestead laws upon lands of the United States does not acquire a vested interest in such lands by a mere entry upon the lands and continued occupation and improvement thereof.

The distinction between these two cases and the one at bar is obvious. And the case of Messenger v. Kingsbury, 158 Cal. 611, 112 Pac. 65, also cited by respondent, very clearly points out the distinction.

Some discussion is had in the briefs of the long delay after their purchase in locating the warrants in question, it being intimated that by reason of such delay Jackson was guilty of laches in exercising his rights under the warrants. But we regard this position as of absolutely no consequence. The state was not, and could not have been, prejudiced by the delay. No rights as against the owners of these warrants could accrue to the state by reason of the delay. The warrants, or the amount of land specified therein, had been fully paid for and the state had the money. Moreover, as before suggested, there was no time limit fixed by the statute of 1852 within which the locations were to be made. Besides, it is alleged in the complaint, and not denied, that the lands upon which the locations were made were certified and listed to the state by the United States on the 23d day of January, 1901, as a part of the 500,000-acre grant, and that said listing and certification "was made under and in pursuance of said locations of said Jackson, and not otherwise, and that ever since said last-mentioned date said state has held the legal title to said listed lands in trust for said Henry Jackson." It may further be suggested that it is alleged in the complaint, and not denied, that Jackson's locations in 1893 were made with the consent of the register and receiver of the United States land office at San Francisco, and were finally approved and allowed by the commissioner of the general land office in 1900.

Thus we have given this appeal extended consideration. Indeed, we have perhaps written more than might by some be deemed to have been necessary. But the main question, as well as some of the subsidiary points, are important, and the latter, we think, called for considerable attention.

Our conclusion is, as is indicated by the discussion, that the court below committed error in awarding judgment to the defendant; for it is clear to our minds that the facts found by the court show that the appellants are entitled to judgment. The judgment appealed from, as has been shown, rests entirely upon the alleged "finding" that there was no law existing in the year 1893, when the locations in question were made, authorizing such location or locations made in the manner that these were. That "finding" is, obviously, a mere conclusion of law, and, as has been at least inferentially stated, is not supported by the facts found.

Accordingly, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to enter a judgment for and in favor of the appellants upon the facts as found.

VALLEJO HIGH SCHOOL DIST. OF SOLANO COUNTY v. WHITE, County Superintendent of Schools. (Civ. 2045.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=79 — SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⊂=133—CONFLICT BETWEEN CITY CHARTER AND GENERAL SCHOOL LAW.

Under Const. art. 11, § 8, providing that charters adopted by cities shall be subject to the general laws, a city cannot by charter provision change the rule prescribed by Pol. Code, § 1617, relating to the duties of trustees and boards of education, and declaring that teachers may be elected on or after June 1st for each ensuing year, and each teacher so elected shall be deemed re-elected, unless the governing body of the school district shall, on or before June 10th, give notice in writing that the services of such teacher will be no longer required; hence the principal of a high school, who was notified in accordance with statute, is not re-elected for the ensuing year, because notice was not given two months before end of the fiscal year, as required by the charter of the city which embraced the same territory as the high school district.

Application by the Valley High School District of Solano County for a writ of review to be directed to Dan H. White as County Superintendent of Schools of Solano County. Writ granted.

Breed & Burpee, of Oakland, for petitioner.

Arthur Lindauer, Dist. Atty., of Vallejo, for respondent.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. The petition sets forth that the petitioner is a high school corporation; that the respondent is county superintendent of schools of Solano county, Cal.; that the petitioner school district is composed of the city of Vallejo and adjacent territory of an area of approximately the same as the city of Vallejo; that prior to the year 1918 petitioner employed one Carl H. Nielsen, as principal of said high school, and he acted as such until the 30th day of June, 1919, at which time his employment ceased; that after the 1st day of June, and before the 10th day of June, 1919, petitioner, in writing, duly notified said Carl H. Nielsen that his services as principal of said high school would not be required after June 30, 1919, and that this notice was served upon him before the 10th day of June, 1919; that thereafter said Nielsen appealed to respondent as county superintendent of schools, and asked that the action of the board of trustees of petitioner be reversed, and he be reinstated as principal of said high school; that respondent, without notice to petitioner herein, reversed its action, and reinstated said Nielsen as principal of said high school. Petitioner, claiming that respondent had no authority of law to entertain the appeal or make an order reinstating said Nielsen, applies to this court for a writ of review, and asks that said action of said superintendent of schools in reinstating said Nielsen be annulled and set aside. Respondent, by return of the writ, has set forth all his actions and proceedings as superintendent in connection therewith.

The controversy between petitioner and respondent grows out of the fact that the charter of the city of Vallejo contains different provisions on the subject of employment of teachers from that contained in the Political Code, and one of the questions submitted for decision is: Are the parties' rights to be governed by the state law, as found in the Political Code, or by the provisions of the charter of the city of Vallejo? The record shows that the petitioner received no notice that his services would not be needed after the current fiscal year, prior to the 1st day of May, 1919.

Section 1617 of the Political Code, under the heading of the powers and duties of trustees and boards of education in said school districts, provides:

"* * * Except that teachers may be elected on or after June first for the next ensuing school year, and each teacher so elected shall be deemed re-elected from year to year thereafter unless the governing body of the school district shall on or before the 10th day of June give notice in writing to such teacher that his services will not be required for the ensuing school year."

Section 127 of the charter of the city of Vallejo (Stats. of 1911, p. 2027) reads as follows:

"Every person employed as a regular teacher by the school department shall be considered re-elected for the ensuing fiscal year unless at least two months before the beginning of such fiscal year he or she is notified in writing, by authority of the board of education, that it is expected that his or her services will not be required for the ensuing fiscal year."

If the provisions of the Political Code are to control, then it is clear that Mr. Nielsen's term as principal of the high school ceased on the 30th day of June, 1919. If the provisions of the city charter control, by reason of his not having the notice served on him at least two months before June 30th (which concededly was not done), he was deemed employed for another year, beginning July 1, 1919.

Do the provisions of the Political Code control in this particular matter or is it controlled by the provisions of the charter of the city of Vallejo? Counsel for respondent has argued the case on the theory that Nielsen was discharged after he was employed, and the superintendent had the power of reinstating him. The question is really a somewhat different one. It is: Was he employed for the year beginning July 1, 1919? Both the quoted section of the Political Code and the charter of the city of Vallejo are very specific in using the word "re-elect." If the written notice is not given he is re-elected. There was no express employment of Nielsen for another year, beginning July 1, 1919. If employed at all, it was because of the failure to give him proper notice that his services would not be needed for another year. If the state law controls, then the notice which was given to him by the petitioner prevented him from being re-elected for another year. If the provisions of the city charter control, then as notice was not given as provided therein, he was re-elected for another year.

We are of the opinion the state law controls in the matter, and not the city charter.

Turning to the constitutional provision (article 11, § 8) which confers power upon cities to form and have adopted city charters, it is provided:

"It shall be competent in any charter framed under the authority of this section to provide that the municipality governed thereunder may make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters and in respect to other matters they shall be subject to general laws."

The government of schools and the employment and discharge of teachers are not municipal affairs, and, by virtue of the constitutional provision referred to, the state law controls whenever a conflict arises. This has been decided so often by the Supreme and appellate courts of this state that any lengthy discussion seems unnecessary.

Thus, in Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 434, 32 Pac. 560, it is said:

"The powers and duties of the board of education in a city cannot trench upon the system that the Legislature has provided for the entire state, since the charter is limited in its operation by any general law that may be passed by the Legislature, and, in addition thereto, such powers and duties are, by the terms of the section in which they are authorized to be given, limited by the provisions of the Political Code."

"It is not, and cannot be, claimed that the election and dismissal of teachers in the public schools are 'municipal affairs,' which may, by a freeholders' charter, be regulated in a manner in conflict with that provided by the general law. See Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal.

429 [32 Pac. 558]; Mitchell v. Board of Education, 137 Cal. 372 [70 Pac. 180]."

These decisions are conclusive upon the point that in the matter under investigation the rights of the parties must be controlled by the provisions of the Political Code, and not by the charter of the city of Vallejo.

It was suggested in argument that the Code provisions that a teacher should be deemed re-elected unless he were given a 20 days' notice was passed for the benefit of the teacher, and that the charter provisions, declaring that he should be given a two months' notice, was in line with the Code provision, and more favorable to the teacher than the Code, and therefore there was really no conflict between the two. But if the city, by provision in its charter, can lengthen the time for giving notice to two months, it can lengthen it to six months. And if the city by its charter has the power to lengthen the time of the notice to be given to a teacher, it has the power to shorten it to ten days, or five days, or one day.

We hold that Nielsen was not re-employed for the fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1919; that at the time the appeal was taken he was not a teacher in the employ of the high school district, and that the respondent had no authority or power to entertain his appeal or to reinstate him in his office as principal of the high school of the city of Vallejo.

The writ of review is granted, and the orders of the respondent purporting to reinstate him, Carl H. Nielsen, as principal of the Vallejo high school are set aside, and petitioner will recover its costs.

BROWN v. WHITE, County Superintendent of Schools. (Civ. 2046.)

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⟹144(1) — RIGHT TO COMPENSATION.

On petition for mandate to require county superintendent of schools to approve requisition for petitioner's salary as high school principal, held that petitioner was the regularly employed principal, and, having performed his duties as such, was entitled to the relief asked; the contention of school superintendent that another person was the duly employed principal being untenable.

Application by Charles S. Brown for writ of mandate to be directed against Dan H. White, as County Superintendent of Schools of Solano County, Cal. Writ granted.

Breed & Burpee, of Oakland, for petitioner.

Arthur Lindauer, District Attorney, of Vallejo, for respondent.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. Petitioner represents that the Vallejo high school district is a public high school corporation, composed of the city of Vallejo and of an additional area of approximately the same size as the city of Vallejo; that respondent is the county superintendent of schools of Solano county; that on the 3d day of June, 1919, the Vallejo high school district of Solano county employed petitioner, as principal of said high school and said intermediate schools for the school year commencing July 1, 1919, at an annual salary of $2,400, payable in 12 equal monthly installments of $200 on the first of each and every month of said term; that thereupon said petitioner accepted said employment, and on the 1st day of July, 1919, entered upon the performance of his duties as such principal; that under the terms of said employment said Vallejo high school district of Solano county agreed to pay to your petitioner the sum of $200 on the 1st day of August, 1919; that said petitioner has duly performed all of the duties as such principal during the month of July, 1919, and has duly performed all conditions precedent to the payment of said sum of money; that thereafter said Vallejo high school district issued and delivered to petitioner a requisition in writing upon the high school fund of said high school district, in the regular and usual form, on respondent, as county superintendent of schools of Solano county; that petitioner presented said requisition to respondent in regular business hours, and demanded that he approve said requisition and order the same paid; that said respondent refused, and still refuses, without any cause, to approve said requisition, or to order the same paid, and that the whole of said $200 remains unpaid. Petitioner prays that an alternative writ of mandate issue, directed to respondent, requiring him, immediately after the receipt of said writ, to approve said requisition and order said sum paid to petitioner, or to show cause, etc., and for general relief.

In response to said alternative writ of mandate respondent has filed an answer, in which he states that the Vallejo high school district of Solano county was, on the 3d day of June, 1919, without any right or authority to employ petitioner, Charles S. Brown, as principal of said high school and said intermediate schools for the year commencing July 1, 1919, at the annual salary of $2,400, or any other amount; that said school district was without any right or authority to pay said Brown any salary, as principal of said high school and intermediate school, because one Carl H. Nielsen, a regular teacher of the Vallejo high school of Solano county, was and is the duly employed and acting principal of said school, by virtue of a contract entered into by and between Carl H. Nielsen and the Vallejo high school on the 1st day of August, 1918, wherein Carl H. Nielsen was employed and accepted said employment as principal of said school, at a yearly salary of $2,400; that said contract has never been terminated, and is now in full force and effect, Carl H. Nielsen having been re-elected principal of the Vallejo high school district for the ensuing fiscal year of 1919, by virtue and under the provisions of section 127 of the charter of the city of Vallejo.

The same question is involved in this case as was under consideration in the case of Vallejo High School District of Solano County v. White, No. 2045, 185 Pac. 302, this day decided. In this case, as in that, it is claimed by respondent that Nielsen was never discharged from his position as principal of said school; that he, being the principal of the school, the board had no authority to employ petitioner Charles S. Brown.

In Vallejo High School District of Solano County v. White, supra, it was held that Nielsen's employment as principal of said high school ended June 30, 1919. This being so, the board had authority to employ some one to take his place. And it appearing that the high school district before July 1, 1919, regularly employed petitioner as principal of said school, and that he entered upon and performed the duties thereof, it follows that he is legally entitled to the relief asked.

It is therefore ordered that the writ of mandate issue to respondent, commanding him, as county superintendent of schools of the county of Solano, to issue and deliver to petitioner a requisition for his salary for the month, beginning July 1, 1919, and ending July 31, 1919, in the sum of $200, and that petitioner herein recover his costs.

PEOPLE v. SCOTT. (Cr. 477.)

ROBBERY ⇐24(1)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to justify conviction of robbery by striking, knocking down, and going through the pockets of an aged and intoxicated man whom defendant had volunteered to help home.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

T. K. Scott was convicted of robbery, and from the judgment, and an order denying him new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Emmett Phillips, Jr., and Donald McKisick, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted, under an information duly filed in the superior court of Sacramento county, of the crime of robbery, and has brought the cause to this court on an appeal from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

No brief was filed in behalf of the defendant in support of his appeal, nor was there any appearance for him and in his behalf when the cause was regularly called at the late term of this court for argument; the case having previously been regularly placed on the calendar of the court at said term for hearing and the attorney of record of the defendant duly apprised by the clerk of this court of that fact. Accordingly, the Attorney General submitted the case for decision on the record.

[1] The people produced evidence at the trial amply sufficient to justify the verdict, such testimony having been accepted by the jury.

The robbery was committed in the early hours of the morning of March 11, 1919, in the city of Sacramento, and one Charles E. Sundahl, an elderly man, was the party robbed. It appears that Sundahl had been at the Southern Pacific passenger depot in the city of Sacramento with some acquaintances who were waiting at the depot for and finally took a belated train for some point. Sundahl and his friends had, during the hours preceding the time when the latter took the train, indulged more or less in intoxicating liquors, and when, after leaving the depot, Sundahl had arrived at the corner of Fourth and K streets, in said city, on his way home, at about the hour of 2 o'clock a. m., he was in some degree under the influence of intoxicants. At Fourth and K streets he applied to a taxi driver to convey him home, but the driver asked 75 cents for the service, and Sundahl refused to pay that sum, and thereupon started in the direction of L street, walking on the west side of Fourth street. The defendant started away with Sundahl, taking the latter by the arm and walking with him towards L Street, and, when they reached the alley between K and L streets, Scott forcibly took Sundahl down the alley a few feet, struck him, knocking him to the ground, and then went through his pockets and abstracted therefrom and took with him several dollars in silver. This latter proceeding was witnessed by a Japanese night watchman, who arrested Scott and delivered him over to the custody of two police officers.

[2] We have examined the charge of the court and the record generally, and from such examination are justified in saying that the law pertinent to the case, as made by the evidence, was correctly stated to the jury and was fair to both sides, and that the court's rulings on the evidence were generally correct. No prejudicial error in that respect was discovered by our examination of the record. Indeed, we think the defendant was accorded a perfectly fair trial according to law, and we may add the suggestion that the fact that the defendant's counsel did not press the appeal may be taken as evidence that they, too, came to the conclusion, after an examination of the record subsequently to the trial, and after it was made up, that the convicted man has no just legal ground for complaint against the manner in which the court below conducted the trial.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

WESTERN INDEMNITY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 3077.)

INSURANCE ⟸435 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; LIABILITY OF INSURER.

A policy against liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act, which covered the business of an electrical store, retail, or combined wholesale and retail, including installation and repairs upon electrical equipment within buildings, etc., and covering enumerated classes of employés, including "chauffeurs and helpers," did not cover injuries to or death of a chauffeur of the employers, irrespective of the duty he was performing, as when at the instance of an employer he was gratuitously taking to her home a former female employé of the business.

Certiorari to Review Award of Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) by J. L. Millard and Julie E. Millard, dependent father and mother of Byron J. Millard, the deceased employé, opposed by the Western Indemnity Company, the insurer. Compensation was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the insurer petitions for certiorari. Award as to petitioner annulled.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, and Swanwick & Donnelly, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. The applicants before the commission were the father and mother of Byron J. Millard, who was accidentally killed while operating an automobile belonging to P. R. Kennedy. Kennedy was conducting at Long Beach, in the county of Los Angeles, an electrical business. The business was, at the time material here, being directly managed by the son of Kennedy. When he met with the accident which caused his death, young Millard was engaged in conveying to her home a friend of the Kennedys from a point in the city of Long Beach. He was performing this service at the direction of the younger Kennedy. Petitioner here was the insurance carrier which had agreed by its contract to respond to any damage which might accrue on account of injuries or death resulting therefrom suffered by any employé of the assured "in and during the course of and arising out of the operation of the trade, business or work described." In the schedule of statements which formed a part of the contract of insurance, the business so covered was described as:

"Electrical Store. Retail or combined wholesale and retail. Electrical Equipment. Installation and repairs within buildings and on buildings incidental to such inside work, including the making of service connections for such work, excluding the installation of equipment in power plants."

The contract was made to cover the various enumerated classes of employés, including "chauffeurs and helpers." Rodger Kennedy, the son of the assured, testified that on the day of the accident young Millard was at the electrical store in Long Beach and under his (Kennedy's) direction; that a Miss Blevins had at a prior time worked as bookkeeper in the electrical store and that she had left Kennedy's employ about a month and a half previous and gone to work for an oil company; that, learning that Miss Blevins was ill at her place of employment, young Kennedy instructed the chauffeur, Millard, to go and get her and take her to her home or her mother's home, whichever she desired; that while performing this service Millard was killed. The service which Kennedy required young Millard to perform in transporting Miss Blevins to her home was, so far as appears, as between Kennedy and the lady, purely gratuitous and without any obligation in any wise connected with the business then being transacted at the electrical store or in connection therewith.

Under this state of facts, petitioner argues that its policy of insurance did not cover the case and that it should not be made to respond in the damages assessed against it. In this conclusion we must concur. The contract of insurance does not purport in any of its terms to cover injuries suffered to a chauffeur of the Kennedys irrespective of the duty which such chauffeur might be performing at the time he suffered injuries. The policy quite clearly related to the business being transacted in and about and in connection with the electrical establishment maintained by the Kennedys at Long Beach. Counsel for petitioner well argues that, if the award of the commission in this case is allowed to stand, then the insurance carrier might be held liable for any injury whatsoever occurring to a chauffeur employed by the Kennedys, regardless of the nature of it, so long as such injury was suffered while such chauffeur was operating an automobile under the direction of his employers. This notwithstanding that the policy, as has been before mentioned, purported to furnish insurance covering injuries to employés while engaged in and about the concern of the electrical establishment. That the employer of Millard would be liable, there would seem to be no question; that an insurance carrier whose policy relates to injuries suffered by employés while engaged in a particular and specified business would not be so liable, we think is just as clear.

The findings and award as against this petitioner are annulled.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸361—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; SANITARIUM HOUSEMAID NOT EXCEPTED AS IN "DOMESTIC SERVICE."

Service to the proprietors of a sanitarium, rendered by a maid performing general housework in addition to attending on patients, was not a service falling within the exception from the Workmen's Compensation Act of any employé engaged in "domestic service."

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸405(4) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; EVIDENCE OF SERVANT'S ENGAGEMENT IN OWN BUSINESS.

In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act for injuries to a housemaid employed by the proprietors of a sanitarium, evidence held to show that at the time of injury the maid was engaged only in the performance of washing her own soiled linen, and not in her employers' business.

Certiorari to Review Award of Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) by Mrs. Emma Ottesen, opposed by Mrs. Bertha Gernhardt and John F. Gernhardt, the employers. Compensation was awarded, and the employers petition for certiorari. Award annulled.

Chas. P. Huey, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Certiorari. Petitioners here were the respondents before the Industrial Accident Commission. The commission upon the application of Mrs. Emma Ottesen, made its order requiring petitioners to make certain payments of money for which they were found liable under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation and Insurance Act. By this proceeding petitioners seek to have the award annulled on the ground that no legal authority existed under the showing made to support the action of the commission. The respondent Emma Ottesen, who was employed at a sanitarium which petitioners were conducting, slipped upon a wet floor on the premises of petitioners and fell, sustaining a fracture or sprain, or both, of the left forearm. Mrs. Ottesen was employed as a maid, her duties consisting of what is known as general housework, in addition to which she attended upon patients in the sanitarium. The petitioners lived in the same building, and the place answered to a residence for them, as well as a sanitarium for the conduct of the business in which they were engaged.

[1, 2] Answering first one of the objections of the petitioners, we are of the opinion that the service for which Mrs. Ottesen was engaged was not one falling within an exception of the Workmen's Compensation Act, which exception excludes from the benefits of the act "any employé engaged in household domestic service." The most serious objection urged against the award of the commission refers to the question as to whether at the time Mrs. Ottesen received her injury she was engaged in the performance of any duty having reference to her employment. We think, under the undisputed facts shown, it should be concluded that this respondent was at the time engaged only in the performance of work of her own, which was wholly disassociated from any duty that she owed to her employers. The facts were these: Mrs. Ottesen, having some leisure time allotted to herself, intended to go to her own home for the purpose of washing her own clothes. She intended to take up her abode permanently with petitioners, but had not yet brought her effects to their establishment. She intended to go to her home to do her laundering early in the afternoon. Mrs. Gernhardt, one of the petitioners, suggested to her that she could as well do her laundering at the sanitarium, as there was hot water and materials there available. Mrs. Gernhardt further suggested that on that particular day, as she intended to go downtown, she would be glad to have Mrs. Ottesen at the sanitarium while doing the washing, so that she might answer the doorbell. Mrs. Gernhardt stated to Mrs. Ottesen that she would not go downtown until 4 o'clock, and it also appeared that there was another attendant who would be on duty until that hour. Mrs. Ottesen, however, as she stated in her testimony, concluded that she would return to the sanitarium earlier and so have more uninterrupted time within which to complete her laundry work. She therefore returned at 3 o'clock, one hour in advance of the time she was requested to appear, and was making ready to do her washing. She had not commenced at this when, walking across a kitchen floor which had been scrubbed by another attendant and was still in a wet condition, she slipped and fell, injuring her arm as before stated. Explaining her reason for coming at 3 o'clock instead of 4, she gave the following testimony:

"Q. The truth is that you were working on your own material and on your own soiled linen between 3 and 4? A. I hadn't commenced yet. Q. Had you come at 4 o'clock that floor would have been dry, and the accident would not have happened? A. Yes, but I couldn't possibly have done my washing and waited on the patient, and the doorbell and telephone, as Mrs. Gernhardt requested me to do, if I had not come before 4 o'clock, when Miss Spicker was off duty. Q. If you had waited and gone on duty at 4 o'clock this accident would not have happened, would it? A. You don't cross a bridge until you come to it; I had to be there at 4 o'clock, to go on duty."

So it appears that the time between 3 and 4 o'clock was wholly at the disposal of Mrs. Ottesen; in other words, it was her own time during which she was not expected and had not been requested to perform any service for her employers. We see no difference in the case than were it one where the employé had, during such portions of the day allotted to her for her own purposes, been engaged in performing any act wholly for her own benefit. A different legal situation, we apprehend, would have been presented had 4 o'clock arrived and had Mrs. Ottesen been left in charge of the premises as was designed, even though she might have been occupied for a portion of the time in washing her own clothes. At the time of the accident she was not in the kitchen of her employers upon any business of theirs. Neither does the case fall within those decisions which recognize liability on the part of the employer where the employé is entering the premises of his employers at a seasonable time for the purpose of commencing his labors, or of departing therefrom by the usual way provided. In our opinion the contention made by these petitioners that they incurred no liability by reason of the accident which befell the employé must be sustained.

The findings and award of the respondent Industrial Accident Commission are annulled.

on each of the three counts on which the judgment is founded.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⊂⊃44(1)—PROFESSIONAL MISCONDUCT JUSTIFYING DISBARMENT.

Where an attorney retained for his own use money paid him by a client to pay a judgment testified falsely as to his ownership of lots in order to qualify as surety on a bail bond, and drew a complaint for labor performed and services rendered when instructed to prosecute action for damages in collision with an automobile, he was guilty of professional misconduct, and was properly disbarred.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

In the matter of proceedings for the disbarment of W. J. Hittson, an attorney at law. From judgment of disbarment, respondent appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 178 Pac. 149.

Gesner Williams, W. I. Gilbert, John S. Cooper, Alfred F. MacDonald, and S. W. Thompson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. J. Ford, Frank C. Collier, and Henry G. Bodkin, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The judgment from which this appeal is taken is a judgment permanently disbarring the appellant from the right to practice as an attorney and counselor in the courts of this state. The accusation was filed on behalf of the Bar Association of Los Angeles County. The court found that the allegations contained in the first, third, and fifth counts of the accusation are true. The judgment is based upon those findings.

Briefly stated, the first count charged that while appellant and one Cleveland Schultz, also an attorney at law, were employed by one Plevros to represent him in the defense of a certain action, Plevros paid into the hands of said attorneys $142.50 to be applied on the payment of any judgment rendered against Plevros in said action, and for no other purpose; that judgment was rendered against him in the sum of $22.05; that said attorneys, although having in their joint possession the money so delivered to them by Plevros, converted the money to their own use, did not pay the judgment, and refused to return the money or any part thereof to Plevros. It appears from the evidence that Schultz did pay the amount of the judgment without formal entry thereof. The evidence is, however, sufficient to justify the finding on this count as to all other facts alleged. Plevros had paid said attorneys a separate cash fee for the defense of said action, and the evidence was sufficient to prove that they were not entitled to retain the additional sum for their services.

The third count charges that in a criminal action in the justice court of Ballona township, in Los Angeles county, appellant qualified as surety for the defendant on a bail bond in the sum of $250, and in connection therewith testified that he was at that time the actual owner of eight lots in the county of Riverside, that said lots were at that time of the value of $250 each, and were at that time assessed for the sum of $50 each by the assessor of Riverside county. The accusation then alleged that in fact Hittson did not at that time own any lots whatsoever in Riverside county; that in making such affidavit he well knew that he did not own said lots, and that his statement was made for the purpose of defrauding the justice of the peace and of enabling him to qualify on said bond. The justice of the peace in his testimony stated that at the time in question and upon becoming surety on said bond Hittson was sworn as to his qualifications, and testified that he owned eight lots just outside of the city of Riverside in the county of Riverside, that they were assessed at $50 each, and that their real value was $250 each; that Hittson gave no description of said lots, but promised to mail to the justice a detailed description thereof, which, however, he did not do. There is other evidence which, in our judgment, is sufficient to support the court's conclusion that appellant did not own any such lots.

The fifth count of the accusation alleges that appellant was employed by one Sagar to prosecute an action against one Lange for damages arising out of a collision with an automobile; that instead of commencing such action appellant framed a complaint as stating a cause of action for indebtedness for labor performed and services rendered, and in connection therewith filed an affidavit for attachment wherein it was stated that the amount demanded was due to the defendant upon an express or implied contract for the direct payment of money; that appellant knew when he commenced said action and when he filed said affidavit for attachment that said money was not due for services rendered or labor performed. The record shows that the complaint was made and the affidavit for attachment filed as stated in the accusation. The testimony of Sagar is to the effect that in his statement of facts to appellant he told appellant that his claim was for damages to the machine in the collision, and that he did not tell Hittson that he had performed any labor for the defendant, or that he had any claim against the defendant for work and labor.

[1-3] The points urged in support of the appeal are each and all directed to the claim made on behalf of appellant that the evidence is insufficient to support these several accusations. It may be admitted that there is a conflict in the evidence relating to these several charges against appellant; nevertheless, after reading the record, we are satisfied that there is evidence of a substantial nature supporting the material allegations on each of the three counts on which the judgment is founded. That is sufficient for the purposes of this appeal. In re Morton (Sup.) 177 Pac. 453; In the Matter of Danford, 157 Cal. 425, 108 Pac. 322. The facts found established appellant's guilt of professional misconduct, and showed that he is wanting in that integrity of character and conduct which the law rightfully requires from an attorney at law.

PEOPLE v. GILMAN. (Cr. 485.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 6, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 4, 1919.)

1. ABORTION ⟸11—CORROBORATION OF PROSECUTRIX.

Under Pen. Code, § 1108, the evidence of a prosecuting witness in an abortion case must be corroborated to justify a conviction.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸693 — OBJECTIONS IN TRIAL COURT.

An objection to a question is too late when made after it is answered.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸396(2) — ADMISSIBILITY OF PART OF CONVERSATIONS PREVIOUSLY INTRODUCED.

In a prosecution for abortion, where a witness, in response to a question as to whether anything was said between witness and defendant as to what witness saw and what transpired, answered that witness said that she thought the prosecuting witness "was quite lucky to be living," held admissible as part of a conversation previously admitted.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸413(1)—WITNESSES ⟸270(2) — ADMISSIBILITY OF SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS.

In a prosecution for abortion, an objection on cross-examination to a question asked of prosecutrix, as to whether defendant told her she would help to obtain employment for her elsewhere, was properly sustained as calling for a self-serving declaration and as being immaterial.

5. ABORTION ⟸9—EVIDENCE AS TO PHYSICAL CONDITION OF DEFENDANT AT TIME OF TRIAL.

In a prosecution for abortion, the exclusion of evidence as to defendant's physical condition and medical treatment at the time of trial was proper as having no bearing on the charge against her.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸404(4)—EVIDENCE AS TO ASHES CONTAINING FRAGMENTS OF HUMAN BONES.

In a prosecution for abortion, evidence of certain ashes containing, according to medical testimony, fragments of human bones, was admissible in view of circumstantial evidence that the ashes were the product of a fire made by defendant to destroy the fœtus.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸404(3)—ADMISSIBILITY OF SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS.

In a prosecution for abortion, evidence of surgical instruments found on the premises where the crime was committed was admissible, where it appeared that the instruments were adapted for the commission of the crime and were owned by defendant at the time the offense was committed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

May Gilman was convicted of abortion, and, from the judgment and a denial of a new trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

W. E. Davies, of Marysville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of abortion, and from the judgment and order denying her motion for a new trial the appeal has been taken. Some claim has been made that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, and the appellant indulges in a criticism of the testimony of certain witnesses of the prosecution, claiming that in certain respects it is inconsistent and unsatisfactory. After a careful reading of the record, however, it must be stated that the verdict is supported in ample measure. The prosecutrix seems to have related a straightforward story that carries upon its face convincing evidence of her veracity. She manifested no unwonted hostility to the defendant, but was apparently disposed to relate all the facts of the case within her knowledge just as they transpired.

[1] It is true that her evidence alone, within the purview of the statute (section 1108, Pen. Code), must be corroborated in order to justify legally a conviction. That corroboration is, however, found in full measure in the record before us. We deem it unnecessary and unprofitable to set out in detail the evidence which justifies the conviction. It is sufficient to say that one Mrs. Johnson was present at the place where the offense was committed at the very time of the delivery of the fœtus, and her testimony is strong and convincing as to the criminal conduct of defendant. She also related a conversation which she had with defendant which was indicative and persuasive of defendant's guilt. It may be added that the record contains substantial, significant, and important circumstantial evidence, all tending toward the support of the verdict of the jury. Indeed, it is rare that a case of this character is established by such a strong array of positive and circumstantial evidence. It would be singular and unexpected if the jury had failed to convict after a careful and conscientious consideration of the showing that was made in this case.

Viewing the whole record in the light of the strong and conclusive evidence of guilt, it could fairly be said that none of the assignments of error could have resulted in a miscarriage of justice, and hence we would be justified in brushing them aside as not warranting specific consideration. We have, however, examined them with some degree of care and are prepared to say that no substantial error was committed by the trial court. The defendant seems to have been granted every right to which she was entitled under the law. The trial judge conducted the proceedings cautiously, impartially, and justly. The instructions thoroughly and correctly presented the law of the case and left nothing unsaid that was necessary for the guidance of the jury in their determination of the guilt or innocence of the defendant. It is true that certain instructions, proposed by her, were refused; but, as far as correct in doctrine and applicable to the facts of the case, they were entirely covered by instructions which were given.

[2] As to the rulings upon the admissibility of evidence, they are so palpably and clearly sound that we are hardly called upon to specifically notice them. However, we may refer to one or two of these assignments of error. Objection was made, for instance, to this question addressed to Mrs. Johnson:

"Q. Was there anything said subsequent to, after what you saw, between you and the nurse, this defendant, Gilman, as to what you saw and what transpired?"

The answer of the witness was:

"I spoke afterwards, that I thought Mrs. England was quite lucky to be living."

[3] In the first place, no objection was made to the question until after it was answered, and hence the objection came too late. Again, under a familiar rule it was admissible as a part of the conversation, in view of the response made by said defendant to said statement. That answer was: "She said her work always spoke for itself." As a part of the same conversation, it may be added, the witness testified:

"I asked her what she might do about it, about the baby, and she says, 'I told Mrs. England that I would take it to the coroner, but that would cause me too much questioning,' and she further said, 'I will build a good fire.'"

It may be added that the only objection to this part of the conversation was upon the ground that it was leading, which, of course, is inconsequential.

[4, 5] Another ruling of which complaint is made was in sustaining an objection to the following question, asked of the prosecutrix on her cross-examination:

"Q. Now, did she, at any time when you were leaving, tell you she (the defendant) would help you to obtain employment elsewhere?"

This manifestly called for a "self-serving" declaration on the part of defendant and was clearly inadmissible. Besides, it was clearly a matter of no importance in the consideration of the merits of the case. It may be suggested that a similar ruling was made by the court in reference to questions propounded to the defendant by her counsel as to her physical condition and medical treatment, that she was receiving, at the time of the trial. It is clear enough that such matters had no bearing whatever upon the charge against the defendant. If there had been any attempt to show or suggestion that her physical condition, at the time of the commission of the alleged offense, was such as to make it impossible or even difficult for her to have committed it, then, of course, a different question might be presented. We may also refer briefly to the action of the court in sustaining an objection to the question asked of a certain witness as to whether Police Officer Hanney had tried to intimidate her by threatening to prosecute her for perjury. The only purpose of the question could be to discredit the testimony of said officer by showing an unfair anxiety to convict the defendant. However, as to this, in fairness to him, before the effort was made to impeach him his attention should have been called to the circumstance in order that he might have an opportunity to acquit himself of any just censure, or, at least, to explain what occurred. Moreover, the consideration is not of sufficient importance to justify a reversal of the cause.

[6, 7] The only ruling during the trial that is worthy of serious consideration relates to the admissibility in evidence of certain ashes containing, according to the testimony of Dr. Nahl, the fragments of human bones and also certain surgical instruments that were found in the washstand in the bedroom where the crime was committed. As to the first, however, there was strong circumstantial evidence that said ashes were the product of a fire made by the defendant to destroy the fœtus, in accordance with her statement made to Mrs. Johnson. At least, the showing was sufficient to justify its consideration by the jury. In reference to the surgical instruments, consisting of a catheter and sound, they are admittedly of a nature to be used in the commission of such an offense as was charged against the defendant. It is true that there is no positive evidence that they were used by her in the present instance, the prosecutrix only identifying a certain speculum as having been used by defendant; but there are circumstances, which we need not detail, sufficient to justify the inference that they were so used. The case in that respect is entirely different from People v. Hill, 123 Cal. 571, 56 Pac. 443, and People v. Muhly, 11 Cal. App. 129, 104 Pac. 466, wherein no connection by either defendant with the material object was shown. Herein, not only is there circumstantial evidence that defendant used these instruments, but it was admitted by her without objection that she owned them and had them in her possession at the time the alleged offense was committed. The fact that they were adapted to such use and were owned by her at the time of the commission of the crime, and were so near at hand, afforded at least some evidence that she had made preparation for the commission of this particular offense. In this connection it may be stated that no explanation was made by defendant as to why or for what purpose she had these instruments, and no objection was made to their introduction in evidence upon the ground that they tended to show the commission of another offense than the one charged against her. In the cases cited above it may be further said the evidence of guilt was slight and unsatisfactory, while here it is full and persuasive.

Before concluding, we may state that the case of People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 393, involves a very different state of facts from the case before us. Therein there was no corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix, and it is only instructive in the present instance in its discussion in the supplemental opinion of the court as to the character of the corroboration that is required to justify a conviction. Herein, as we have before seen, there was ample corroboration, not only by the testimony of a disinterested witness, but also by an array of circumstantial evidence that is quite significant and potential.

We deem it unnecessary to notice further the various contentions of appellant, as, after careful examination of the whole record, we are entirely satisfied that the defendant was justly convicted and that there is no substantial merit in any of the points made for a reversal.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

WINKLER v. LOS ANGELES INV. CO. (two cases). (Civ. 3040.)

1. INFANTS ⟸58(1)—DISAFFIRMANCE OF CONTRACTS OF PURCHASE.

Under Civ. Code, § 35, minors may disaffirm contracts of purchase actually made by them.

2. INFANTS ⟸58(1)—DISAFFIRMANCE OF CONTRACTS MADE BY PARENT.

Where contracts for the purchase of corporate stock were made by the father of certain minors for their benefit, but without their knowledge, such contracts could not be disaffirmed by the minors; they being the contracts of the father rather than of the minors, who had no power to delegate to the father authority to contract, or to retrospectively make the father their agent, in view of Civ. Code, § 33.

3. INFANTS ⟸100 — ON DISAFFIRMANCE OF CONTRACTS EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SHOW EXECUTION OF CONTRACT BY PARENT.

In a suit by a guardian ad litem to recover money paid for the purchase of corporate stock, upon disaffirmance of the contract by the minors for whom the stock was purchased, evidence held to sustain a finding that the contracts were not made by the minors, but by their father.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Separate actions by George C. Kemp, guardian ad litem for Kemp J. Winkler and Lois M. Winkler, infants, against the Los Angeles Investment Company. Judgments after a joint trial for defendant in each case, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Morse, Jr., and S. M. Johnstone, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Flint & Jutten, H. S. MacKay, Jr., Ed. R. Brainerd, Jr., Wm. R. Flint, and J. H. Schenck, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. George C. Kemp, guardian ad litem for Kemp J. Winkler and Lois M. Winkler, both minors, instituted two separate actions in the superior court on behalf of said minors to recover back money paid for the purchase of stock in the defendant corporation. The actions were tried jointly, and by stipulation are brought to this court on one record. It is alleged that both of the minors were under the age of 16 years when the actions were commenced; that at different times between the 8th day of April, 1910, and the 25th day of April, 1913, they purchased shares of stock from the defendant corporation; and that prior to the commencement of the action each of the defendants disaffirmed the contracts and demanded the return of the money paid. All of the allegations of the complaints were denied by the defendant, and the court found that it was not true that the plaintiffs entered into any agreement whereby defendant sold and plaintiffs bought shares of stock in said corporation, and that it was not true that the plaintiffs paid any sum of money for said stock, or that they disaffirmed any contracts with the defendant. These findings constitute the only assignment of error upon this appeal; appellants arguing that the evidence is not sufficient to support them.

The material facts are that when each of the minors was about 2 years of age their grandfather, George C. Kemp, delivered to their father, J. H. Winkler, shares of stock of the value of $500 for each, with the intention on the part of the grandfather to make a gift of this stock to each minor, to be held by their father and invested and reinvested by him for the purpose of providing means for their education. From time to time, with the consent of said George C. Kemp, J. H. Winkler sold the stock and invested the proceeds of the sales by loaning some and investing the balance in other stocks. From these investments the original gifts increased from $500 to $746.43 in the case of Kemp J. Winkler, and to $1,269.20 in the case of Lois M. Winkler. During the period from 1910 to 1913 the father of the minors, with the consent of the grandfather, disposed of all of the securities held by him for the two minors, and, without the knowledge or consent of the minors, purchased certain shares of stock of the defendant corporation. Certificates of stock were issued in the name of the minors, and thereafter dividends were made by checks drawn in their names. These checks were all indorsed for payment by the minor in whose name they were drawn and by J. H. Winkler, who received the money. Prior to the commencement of the action a notice of rescission was given to the defendant by the attorneys for the minors upon the ground that the sale of the stock to the minors was a fraud upon them because of misrepresentations as to the value of the stock on the part of the agents of defendant corporation. The action was tried upon the theory that the contracts for the purchase of the stock were the contracts of the minors, made while they were under the age of 18 years, and that this notice of rescission was in effect a notice of disaffirmance of these contracts.

There is no conflict of evidence as to the manner in which the purchases of the stock were made. It appears that the grandfather had great faith in the value of the stock, and frequently urged the father to dispose of the securities which he held for the minors and to invest the proceeds thereof in the stock of this corporation. This was done without the knowledge or consent of the minors. The names of the minors were signed to the contracts of purchase and certain promissory notes by the father without their knowledge or consent, and the stock certificates were issued in their names at the father's request and without their knowledge or consent.

[1, 2] Preliminarily it may be said that under section 35 of the Civil Code, if the contracts of purchase had been actually made by the minors, they could disaffirm and be relieved from any further burdens under them. But in this case the minors did not make any contract, either individually or by agent: First, because they had no knowledge of the execution of any contract; and, second, because they could not give a delegation of power to the father to contract for them. Section 33, Civ. Code. The contracts having clearly been made by the father without the knowledge of the minors, they would become the contracts of the minors only through the adoption of the action of the father, and this could be done only upon the theory that the minors thereby retrospectively made the father their agent. This could not be done under our statute, and the contracts must be deemed, therefore, to be contracts of the father rather than of the minors.

Though these are the issues made by the pleadings, counsel argue at length as to the power and liability of the father as trustee for the minors. It would seem to be apparent that such was the relation of the father to the minors, and that, occupying such position, his powers as to the investment and reinvestment of the funds held by him as such trustee depend upon the terms and conditions imposed by the trustor. But the question of such powers and liability is not put in issue in this case.

[3] The trial court properly held that the contracts were not made by the minors.

The judgment is affirmed.

SALOMON v. CAWSTON OSTRICH FARM.
(Civ. 3043.)

1. GUARANTY ⊂=27—STRICT CONSTRUCTION OF GUARANTY OF LEASE.

The obligations of a guarantor, as a lessee who assigns and guarantees that his assignee will pay rent, are strictly construed.

2. GUARANTY ⊂=50—RELEASE OF GUARANTY OF LEASE BY ALTERATION OF PREMISES.

Where the lessee of a store assigned the lease, guaranteed the payment of rent by the assignee, and, after a second assignee was in default, the lessor took possession and subdivided the store so as to lease it as two, the original lessee was released from its liability as a guarantor by the change made in the subject to which the guaranty applied, and was not liable to the lessor for the difference between the specified rental and that raised from other tenants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by W. J. Salomon against the Cawston Ostrich Farm, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff for less than claimed, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Bond & Babson, of New York City, and Wm. F. Craig, of Lynn, Mass., for plaintiff.

Donald Barker, of Los Angeles, and Arthur R. Smiley, of New York City, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The plaintiff and appellant sued the defendant as a grantor of a lease made and performable in New York. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff for $2,197.48, the unpaid portion of rent for the month of October, 1914, with certain surcharges. The appellant maintains the judgment should have been for $6,045.36, to include the difference between the rentals specified in the lease and that received between November 1, 1914, and April 1, 1915.

The appellant leased to the respondent, a California corporation, for five years, the most northerly store and basement thereunder, on the Fifth avenue side of the Bristol building, at Fifth avenue and Forty-Second street, in New York. The single store was 17 feet wide. The front of the store consisted of the show windows and entrance, with two stone pilasters. The lease was assigned by the California corporation to a New York corporation of a similar name, and by the latter to a Mrs. Cohen. The landlord consented to each assignment. The trial court accepted the views of the appellant, based on decisions of the New York courts, that the original lessee was the guarantor of each assignee successively for the rents reserved in the lease. Manley v. Berman, 60 Misc. Rep. 91, 111 N. Y. Supp. 711; Ranger v. Bacon, 3 Misc. Rep. 95, 22 N. Y. Supp. 551; Wallace v. Dinniny, 11 Misc. Rep. 317, 32 N. Y. Supp. 159; People v. German Bank, 126 App. Div. 231, 110 N. Y. Supp. 291; Zinwell Co. v. Ilkovitz, 83 Misc. Rep. 42, 144 N. Y. Supp. 815. The respondent prosecutes no cross-appeal from the judgment. It is therefore unnecessary to consider any change in the legal status of the parties which may have resulted from a later express guaranty by the respondent of the performance of the conditions of the lease by the first assignee. The lease provided that, in the event the landlord should take possession of the premises by summary proceedings after the default in rent, he should relet the premises or any part thereof, and the lessee should pay the difference between the amount of rent reserved in the lease and that collected as rent of the demised premises.

In October, 1914, Mrs. Cohen having defaulted in the payment of rent the landlord took possession under summary proceedings. Prior to that time, at the instance of Mrs. Cohen, he had unsuccessfully made some attempt to rent the premises as they were. After taking possession, he made no effort to rent the premises as a whole, but removed the entire front, and by the removal of the two pilasters increased the glass area 4 or 5 feet in width. He also divided the store in two by a longitudinal partition 2 inches thick and put two doors in the front instead of one, thus changing the demised store into two new stores, each somewhat less than 8½ feet wide. None of the changes were made because of needed repairs or for the preservation of the premises.

The plaintiff took possession about November 1st. The changes were completed about November 15, 1914. Neither Mrs. Cohen nor the defendant had any knowledge of, or consented to, the changes.

It was found the plaintiff used due diligence in his efforts to obtain a tenant or tenants, and that he did relet the said premises for sums segregated between the two new tenements for various terms between November 1, 1914, and the end of March, 1915. It was further found that the plaintiff thought two smaller stores would be more rentable than one large store. Upon conflicting evidence, the trial court found that certain affirmative allegations of the answer were true. Among these were that by the alterations the premises were so changed that they were not adapted to the use of one tenant; that the premises were more valuable for rental purposes and more readily rentable as one store than as two; and that, if the alterations had not been made, the plaintiff could have obtained in the reletting an amount of rental equivalent to the rental payable under the lease. There was sufficient evidence to sus-tain these findings. Upon them the trial court concluded that by the summary proceedings and the subsequent acts of the plaintiff the lease was terminated, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the net amount of rents, with surcharges unpaid for the month of October, 1914, in which the plaintiff resumed possession. The implication necessarily follows that the plaintiff was not entitled to the difference between the rents collected and those reserved in the lease after the lease was terminated. The only real question presented on this appeal is whether or not, despite the evidence and the findings, the conclusion of law upon this subject was correct.

The appellant contends that, since under the lease he had the right to relet the premises in whole or in part, he had the further right to divide them into two stores. He relies upon the doctrine announced in New York:

"The spirit of the agreement required him to lease again the same subject which he had demised to the first lessee. If he elected to make it more valuable, it was without any authority from the lessee or his surety, the defendant. They cannot complain, as they are not prejudiced by the improvements; and, if they are benefited by them, it is an advantage which the plaintiff has chosen to confer upon them without any agreement or obligation on their part to reimburse him." Hackett v. Richards, 13 N. Y. 138; McCready v. Lindenborn, 172 N. Y. 400, 65 N. E. 208.

[1, 2] The respondent maintains that its obligation as a guarantor could not be extended beyond the terms of the guaranty. Under the New York rule, as announced in the quotation just made, the agreement required the landlord to lease the same subject which he had demised to the first lessee. In the present case the landlord entirely changed the identity of the premises demised to the first lessee and created two new tenements. Under the New York case it was held that the lessee and his guarantor could not complain because they were not prejudiced by the improvements to the original premises. In this case the trial court found that the guarantor was injured by the changes which had been made, because the premises thereby became less rentable, of lower value, and incapable of being rented as a single tenement. The appellant argues that the finding of the trial court is not supported by the evidence, because under the present lettings the rentals are $20,000 per annum or $2,000 a year higher than the highest rentals reserved in the original lease. The lease provided that, if increased rentals were collected, the excess over the reserved rents was to be divided between the lessee and the owner; but the owner reserved the right at any time within six months, by notice, to deprive the lessee of the benefit of this clause. In the present case the landlord sought to recover the deficiency of rentals for the period of six months. The argument, based upon the profits made by the landlord after the expiration of the six months, does not tend to show that he might not have rented the premises originally demised for an amount equivalent to the reserved rentals during the six months. The finding of the trial court upon this subject is conclusive of the appellant's claim in this regard. The utmost the respondent did was to guarantee the deficiency of rentals of the subject of the original lease. In New York, as well as in California, the obligations of the guarantor are strictly construed. Any change made by the person to whom performance is due in the subject to which the guaranty applies, without the knowledge or consent of the guarantor, releases the latter. Page v. Krekey, 137 N. The bar of the statute of limitations should have been set up by a demurrer calling attention to the proper section of the Code.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1170(3)—SUSTAINING DEMURRER TO ANSWER SETTING UP SHAM DEFENSE HARMLESS.

In an action for the price of oil well casings sold, where the defense of breach of warranty was palpably a sham, error in sustaining demurrer to the part of the answer which set up the defense was harmless, and no ground for reversal under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊜141—WAIVER OF BAR BY ACKNOWLEDGMENT AND PROMISE TO PAY.

Where the buyer of oil well casing, within four years prior to commencement of the seller's action for the price, through its agent and president acknowledged its obligation to pay for the casing, and promised to pay, signing by its president, the case was taken out of the purview of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 312–363.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊜143(1) — AUTHORITY OF PRESIDENT OF CORPORATION TO WAIVE BAR.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3, oil company which purchased well casing held bound by the acts of its president in acknowledging the indebtedness and promising to pay it, to effect waiver of the bar of the statute of limitations within Code Civ. Proc. § 360, the by-laws of the company authorizing the president in his discretion to proceed with the business of developing the land of the company, also authorizing him to procure a drilling rig and necessary appliances, while the promises of the president, signed by him personally, were made on letter heads using the corporate name.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by the Union Oil Company of California, a corporation, against Purissima Hills Oil Company, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Manning, Thompson & Hoover, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Glen E. Huntsberger, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued on two counts: One for balance due for goods, wares, and merchandise sold at an agreed price; the other for the reasonable value of such goods. The judgment was in favor of plaintiff for the full amount demanded. Defendant appeals.

The goods sold and delivered by plaintiff's assignor consisted principally of casing necessary for the use of defendant in the creation of an oil well on its property. The merchandise was delivered between the 31st of January and the 31st of August, 1911. Defendant paid $1,500 on account. The judgment prayed for and given was for a balance of $2,791.25. The complaint was filed July 8, 1916, more than four years after the last delivery of supplies to defendant, but it was alleged by the plaintiff and found by the court that within four years of the institution of the suit defendant acknowledged the indebtedness in writing, and thereby promised and agreed to pay the amount due.

Defendant, by its answer, denied the indebtedness, and alleged that the sum of $1,500 paid was the full and reasonable value of the goods, denying also that any certain price had been agreed upon. The answer also set up the bar of sections 337 and 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and by way of counterclaim averred breach of warranty, in that the casing supplied was entirely unfit for the purpose for which plaintiff's assignor had warranted it. The damage caused by such breach of warrant was placed by the pleadings at $5,000, but in this part of the answer defendant prayed for nothing more than that plaintiff take nothing by its suit.

Plaintiff's general demurrer to the part of the answer averring a counterclaim was sustained, admittedly upon the ground that such claim was barred by the statute of limitations.

At the trial defendant offered no proof regarding the reasonable value of the property purchased, the only issue being whether or not the statute of limitations operated in favor of the defendant. This issue was determined in favor of the plaintiff.

[1, 2] Appellant insists that the judgment should be reversed because of error in sustaining plaintiff's general demurrer to defendant's counterclaim and error of the trial court in holding that plaintiff's claim was not barred. Undoubtedly, the bar of the statute of limitations should have been set up by a demurrer calling attention to the proper section of the Code. Bliss v. Sneath, 119 Cal.

526, 51 Pac. 848; California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Sierra, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 690, 698, 112 Pac. 274, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 729; Murphy v. Stelling, 8 Cal. App. 702, 97 Pac. 672. But appellant was not injured by the ruling because at the trial it was demonstrated that the defense of breach of warranty was wholly frivolous and groundless. The casing was delivered; was used in the oil well; and payments were made on the purchase price more than a year after the alleged warranty. In all of the correspondence between defendant's president and the plaintiff or its assignor (to which we shall presently refer) is found not one word of protest regarding the quality of the casing. There was absolutely nothing in defendant's pleading to the effect that defendant had ever demanded damage for any breach of any contract of warranty, or had sought rescission because of violation of any such agreement under section 1786 of the Civil Code. The defense of breach of warranty was so palpably a sham that the error in sustaining the demurrer to that part of the answer was harmless. Section 4½, article 6, Constitution of California.

[3] The court found that payments on account were made by defendant within four years prior to the commencement of the action; that one Howard A. Broughton, president of defendant corporation during all but one year of the period between the purchase of the casing and the filing of plaintiff's complaint, and a director during all of that time, "represented the defendant company in all its negotiations with the Union Well Supply Company", plaintiff's assignor, and that in a series of letters between the seller and the purchaser of the casing "the letters written by the said Howard A. Broughton acknowledged the aforesaid obligation of the said defendant company, and contained a promise to pay said obligation, and were signed by the said Howard A. Broughton, and sent to and received by the said Union Well Supply Company, and were written and received within four (4) years prior to the commencement of this action."

The findings are sustained by the proof, and are sufficient to take the case properly out of the purview of title 2, part 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[4] It was proved without contradiction that payments of $500 each were made, respectively, on April 12, 1912, June 10, 1912, and September 19, 1912. These payments were credited to defendant on the account generally, and were not applied to any particular items. Respondent insists that the account was an open book account, and that the statute of limitations runs from the payment of the last sum of $500, which was made within four years of the filing of its complaint, citing in this behalf subdivision 2, § 337, Code of Civil Procedure, Mercantile Trust Co. v. Doe, 26 Cal. App. 246, 146 Pac. 692, Barron v. Kennedy, 17 Cal. 574, Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 66 Pac. 40, and McCormick-Ormand Co. v. Nofziger Bros. Lumber Company, 10 Cal. App. 241, 101 Pac. 688. It is unnecessary to determine whether the last payment alone would take the matter out of the statute of limitations, because in addition to that very significant partial settlement of the debt the defendant did in writing acknowledge the said obligation, less than four years before the filing of the complaint. It is true that the letters of acknowledgment, written upon the stationery of defendant, were signed by Mr. Broughton personally. Appellant's principal contention is that he had no power to bind the corporation, but the court properly found to the contrary. By the by-laws the president was authorized in his discretion to proceed with the business of developing the land of the company. He was authorized to procure a drilling rig and all necessary appliances. True, he was to have, "subject to the advice of the directors," direction of the affairs of the corporation, yet their minutes fail to show any meeting of the directory between February 26, 1908, and January 1, 1913. He, and he alone, conducted all business with the assignor of plaintiff. He, and he only, replied to letters addressed to the corporation. It is apparent from all of these facts that defendant is bound by his acts as the managing officer of the corporation, which may not now, after so long acquiescence, repudiate his negotiations with plaintiff's assignor. Section 1962, subd. 3, C. C. P.; Nicholson v. Randall Banking Co., 130 Cal. 533, 62 Pac. 930; Chandler v. Hart, 161 Cal. 405, 119 Pac. 516, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1094; Newton v. Johnston Oregon & Piano Manufacturing Co., 180 Pac. 7.

In his letter to plaintiff of November 30, 1912, Mr. Broughton wrote:

"My understanding is that I promised you some money by the first of the month. I did this with the assurance that I could safely make such a promise but have been grievously disappointed in receiving money that I had a right to depend upon."

On December 9, 1912, he wrote a letter to plaintiff's representative containing, among other things, the following expressions:

"I promised you $500 by December 1st which I find I cannot pay, and I am primarily interested in showing you that I did not make you the promise without justification. I am generally pretty careful about making definite promises, but in this instance I felt I was absolutely safe in doing so. * * * Several days before going down to see you I wrote to my brother, sending him the original letters which I had received from your credit department, and explaining to him the necessity of making you a substantial payment, and asked him to wire me whether he would be able to do so. On the 29th of October he wired me that he would send $2,000 in ten days, and that I could make definite promises based upon this. I received this wire while in Los Angeles, and consequently felt perfectly safe in making you the promise which I made you. * * * The stockholders have until the end of this month in which to pay the assessment. At the end of that time we intend to reorganize and get out among our stockholders and get a subscription for $10,000 worth of stock. Out of this we will pay you in full and pay Fairbanks-Morse a small balance we owe them, which will be our total indebtedness. We will not commence work again on the well until you are fully paid.

"With the assurance we have of getting oil there, I cannot see any reason why we shall not be able to raise the sum stated, and I shall insist on raising that amount at least."

On March 24, 1913, he wrote:

"I wrote Mr. Berry fully some time ago as to our plan. It is to raise $10,000.00 with which to complete our well, out of which we will pay you our indebtedness before work is resumed.

"I have nearly $6,000.00 subscribed and am working on several lines which ought to bring in the balance before long. I had expected to have it subscribed before this time, but find it slower work than I anticipated.

"I am doing the very best I can and will work it out all right and your bill will be paid, but it takes hard work to enthuse people on the oil situation now."

And on November 1, 1913, after setting forth a plan of getting the stockholders in Honolulu to co-operate with certain investors in financing the company, he closed with the following paragraph:

"I am doing everything that I possibly can, and, as I have stated before, this bill will be paid before we start work."

It is to be remembered that the communications of Mr. Broughton were written upon letterheads upon which, in addition to the corporate name, was printed his own as president; that he frequently used the pronoun "we" in reference to the indebtedness and the promise to pay it; that throughout the letters various references were made which were appropriate to the corporation; and that Mr. Broughton had very plenary powers in reference to binding the corporation in the very matter of this development. Under all the circumstances it would be sacrificing substance to form for us to hold that he could take the indebtedness out of the purview of the statute by subscribing the corporate name and adding "per Howard A. Broughton, President," yet could not do so by the subscription of his own signature alone. We think that under the circumstances the letter head was incorporated by reference in the communications, and that the signature of the president appearing at the foot of each letter constitutes a sufficient promise to take the claim out of the bar of the statute of limitations.

All of the quotations from Mr. Broughton's letters, taken in connection with his undoubted authority to bind the defendant corporation, fully justify the findings of the court and the conclusion of law that an acknowledgment of the debt had been made as required by section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that such new promise to pay took the indebtedness out of the bar of the statute of limitations.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re PAGE'S ESTATE. (L. A. 6232.)

1. WILLS ⟸506(2)—LEGACY TO "LAWFUL HEIRS" OF WIDOW TESTATRIX; RIGHTS OF HUSBAND'S HEIRS.

Under will of widow with no issue or parents, leaving one-fourth of residue to deceased husband's "lawful heirs" and the other three-fourths to her "lawful heirs," the three-fourths should be distributed to persons who would have inherited it in absence of will; the husband's heirs being entitled, as widow's heirs under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, to all of such portion of residue inherited by widow from husband and to one-half of what had been community property, notwithstanding legacy to them of one-fourth of residue, or use of term "lawful heirs" in providing for such legacy; and wife's heirs, under subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 1386, being entitled to her separate property and that acquired after husband's death, and to other half of community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Lawful Heirs.]

2. WILLS ⟸524(2)—TIME OF ASCERTAINMENT OF LAWFUL HEIRS.

Under widow's will, giving legacy to "lawful heirs" of deceased husband, the term "lawful heirs" is to be construed as of the date of the death of testatrix, and to include only those who were his heirs at that time, excluding those who died before death of testatrix.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Philura B. Page. From a decree of final distribution of estate on application of Frank Bryson, administrator, Zeno T. Page and others, heirs of deceased, appeal. Reversed.

Stewart & Stewart, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from a decree of final distribution of the estate of Philura B. Page, a widow, who left no issue, no father, and no mother. The principal question is as to the proper construction of the following clause of the will of the deceased:

"I give, bequeath and devise to Russel G. Page, my husband, all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate of whatever kind or nature or wherever situated, and in the event that my husband dies before my death, then I give, bequeath and devise one-fourth of the rest, residue and remainder of my estate to his lawful heirs and the balance, after deducting said one-fourth, to be equally divided among my lawful heirs." (Italics ours.)

[1] The husband, Russel G. Page, predeceased the testatrix March 17, 1912. A portion of the property owned by the testatrix at the time of her death was the community property of herself and her deceased spouse, and a portion was the separate property of such deceased spouse, and as to other property of the testatrix, while it is claimed to have been the community property of herself and her deceased spouse, there is no finding on the question, and that it may have been her separate property, although we express no opinion on that matter. In the absence of a will and issue, the right to succeed to the property of a widow, derived from her deceased spouse, is regulated by section 1386, subdivision 8, of the Civil Code, and as to her separate property acquired before or after the death of the spouse by subdivision 2 or 3 of section 1386. It is held in Estate of Watts, 175 Pac. 415, that where there is no issue a devise and bequest by a widow "to my heirs" is to be construed as a devise and bequest to those who would take under section 1386, subdivision 8, of the Civil Code, where such persons would succeed to the property in the absence of a will. It will be observed, then, that different heirs of the deceased inherit the different classes of property. Her separate property owned by her during the marriage or acquired by her subsequent to the marriage would be distributed in accordance with section 1386, subdivision 3. The common property of the testatrix and her deceased husband would be divided between the relatives of herself and the relatives of her deceased husband. The separate property of the deceased husband would go to his relatives alone. In view of the above decision, the only difficulty in interpreting the clause of the will in question arises from the fact that a direct devise and bequest is made to the "lawful heirs" of the predeceased spouse, and there was, therefore, apparently in the mind of the testatrix a distinction, to use her own language, between "his lawful heirs" and "my lawful heirs," which might lead to the conclusion that when she referred to "my lawful heirs" she meant to exclude "his lawful heirs." The distribution was ordered on this theory, and therefore only the heirs designated in section 1386, subdivision 3, were permitted to share in the "three-fourths" left to "my lawful heirs." The difficulty of interpretation arises rather from the character of the property left by the testatrix and the peculiar provisions of the law governing its succession than from the language used in the will. If the property had been entirely the separate property of the testatrix, or acquired by her subsequent to her husband's death, there would be no difficulty about the provision of the will. The heirs of the husband would take one-fourth, and the heirs of the wife—that is to say, those persons designated in subdivision 3 of section 1386—would take the remaining three-fourths. As the language of the will is plain and unambiguous, the fact that some of the property to be disposed of thereby was community and some other separate property of her deceased husband, to be distributed under the provisions of section 1386, subdivision 8, is not sufficient to change the interpretation that otherwise should be placed upon the plain and unambiguous terms of the will. In other words, the fact that the undivided one-fourth devised and bequeathed to "his [the husband's] lawful heirs" and the undivided three-fourths of the residue bequeathed and devised to "my [the wife's] lawful heirs" may in whole or in part be distributed to the same persons is not decisive of the question as to who the testatrix intended to designate by the words "my lawful heirs," for she made no attempt to limit or define the term "heirs," leaving that to the law. The separate provision for the lawful heirs of the husband does not deprive them of their rights, if any, as heirs of the wife. The decree is erroneous, in so far as it fails to distribute such portions of the estate as come within the provisions of section 1386, subdivision 8, in accordance with the provisions thereof.

[2] Another difficulty arises in the interpretation of the provisions of the will. The appellants contend that, as to the one-fourth left the heirs of the deceased husband, such heirs must be determined as of the date of his death, and, inasmuch as some of such heirs died before the testatrix, that the decree distributing such one-fourth to the persons who would have been the heirs of the deceased, had he died at the same time as did the wife was erroneous. We think, however, that the decision of the trial court in this respect was correct, that the term "his lawful heirs" is to be construed as of the date of the death of the testatrix, and to include only those who were his heirs at that time, excluding those who died before the death of the testatrix.

It follows that one-fourth of the residue should have been distributed to the heirs of the deceased spouse, to be determined as of the date of the death of the testatrix; that the remaining three-fourths should be distributed in accordance with the provisions of section 1386, subdivision 8, of the Civil Code, except such portions, if any, as were the separate property of the testatrix, or acquired by her after her husband's death, and as to that portion it should be distributed in accordance with section 1386, subdivision 3, of the Civil Code. It is conceded by the respondents that, the bequest to the brother, Bradford G. Bass, having lapsed, the property should be divided among the residuary legatees.

It is ordered that the portion of the decree relating to the distribution of the residue of the estate and that portion of the decree distributing the legacy of Bradford G. Bass to Edward L. Bass, Ellen F. Brown, and Clemie R. Pratt be reversed, and that the property distributed to the heirs of Bradford G. Bass be distributed as part of the residue; that said residue, consisting of the separate and community property of the deceased spouse, be distributed in accordance with subdivision 8, section 1386, of the Civil Code, and the balance, if any, be distributed in accordance with subdivision 3 of section 1386 of the Civil Code; that the trial court take such evidence as may be necessary to determine the rights to such residue.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1011(1)—REVIEW OF FINDING ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

That there was evidence which would justify a conclusion contrary to that reached by the trial court requires the application of the rule that where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence the decision of the trial court on the facts is binding on the court on appeal.

2. SALES ⟸441(4)—EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT FOR BREACH OF WARRANTY.

In action by buyer of automobile for breach of warranty that automobile was free from defects in material or workmanship, evidence held to justify judgment for plaintiff for $2,000 under Civ. Code, §§ 3300, 3313.

3. SALES ⟸442(4)—DATE FOR MEASURE OF DAMAGES ON BREACH OF WARRANTY.

Where buyer and sellers of automobile contemplated that engine should be used continually, and that defects discovered should be remedied from time to time as discovered, the time of the first discovery of the breach may be taken as the proper date for fixing the measure of damages, where it is ultimately ascertained that attempts to remedy the defects are unavailable.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Leon F. Moss against Clarence F. Smith and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Leo V. Youngworth and Frank P. Doherty, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Leon F. Moss, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for a breach of a written warranty given by the defendants at the time of the purchase by plaintiff from them of an automobile. Plaintiff recovered a judgment of $2,000. Defendants appeal.

The automobile in question was guaranteed in the following language, to wit:

"To be free from defects in material or workmanship for one year from the 13th day of October, 1914, and will replace such defective part or parts in the car absolutely free of charge when delivered at our place of business."

It is conceded that the engine and clutch of the automobile in question were defective, but the appellants claim that the defects were those of design instead of material or workmanship. Respondent alleged that the automobile was defective in both material and workmanship, in that the clutch would not operate properly in certain specified particulars, and that the engine on said automobile, consisting of six cylinders and pistons and other parts, was so defective "that it would not properly operate and drive said automobile, in that the pistons did not properly fit the cylinders, the cylinders were not properly put together and placed on said engine, and were not properly in line, and in other respects concerning which plaintiff is not informed, but defendants are fully informed. The court found the facts in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and also found that but for the defects in said automobile the same would have been worth $3,000, but that in the condition in which the same was sold and delivered to respondent same was at the said time of the value of $750, and no more.

[1] The question presented is whether or not the evidence is sufficient to justify the finding of the trial court that the defects were those of workmanship and material, and not of design. The evidence upon the subject covers over 450 pages of the transcript. It would serve no useful purpose to analyze this evidence. Suffice it to say that evidence was introduced showing the representations made by the manufacturers through the appellants to the respondent as to the design of the automobile and its engine. These statements, if believed by the court, as they no doubt were by the respondent in purchasing the car, fully justified the conclusion that the defective operation of the car was due, not to the imperfect design of the engine, but to faulty workmanship in its construction. The fact that there was evidence which would have justified a contrary conclusion merely requires the application of the rule that where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the decision of the trial court upon the facts is binding upon this court.

[2, 3] Appellants contend that there is not sufficient evidence as to the damages to justify the judgment, for the reason that the testimony was as to the difference in value of the automobile at the time it was purchased had it been in the condition warranted and its value in the condition in which it actually was, and that the proper amount of damages is the difference between its actual value at the time of the discovery of the defects and its value had it been as represented. It was alleged and the court found that the defects were discovered within a week after the purchase. It is true that from that time forward for nearly a year respondent and appellants had dealings with reference to the machine, respondent from time to time calling attention to the defective condition of the engine of the automobile and the appellants conceding the defects and endeavoring to remedy them by various changes in the engine and repairs to the clutch. In November, 1915, respondent requested certain repairs to the machine, and at that time the appellants requested that he take the machine to Mr. John Stintin for repair. After the report of Mr. Stintin on November 16, 1915, respondent notified the appellants that they must either take the car off his hands and furnish him a new car, or that he would be compelled to sue them for damages. Thereafter repairs were made by said Stintin at an aggregate cost of $353.84, which was paid December 29, 1915. These repairs proving unsuccessful, respondent brought suit January 25, 1916, and in July, 1916, traded in said automobile on a new machine for the allowance of $750. The entire distance traveled by the automobile was about 5,000 miles. In view of these facts we see no reason why the evidence introduced was insufficient to justify the conclusion of the court as to the amount of damages suffered by the plaintiff. If we assume that the rule adopted by this court in the cases involving the sale of nursery stock (Shearer v. Park Nursery Co., 103 Cal. 415, 37 Pac. 412, 42 Am. St. Rep. 125; Burge v. Albany Nurseries, 176 Cal. 313, 168 Pac. 343) controls, in that the measure of damages is to be ascertained at the time that the breach of the warranty is discovered, there is no reason why, in a case of this sort, where it is contemplated by the parties that the engine guaranteed should be used continually, and that defects discovered from time to time should be remedied as discovered, the time of the first discovery should not be taken as the proper date for fixing the measure of damages, where, as here, it is ultimately ascertained that the attempts to remedy the defects were unavailable. A substantial part of the warranty was that the appellants would "replace such defective part or parts in the car absolutely free of charge." Respondent refrained from bringing suit until it was apparent that it was impossible for the appellants to make good their warranty in that respect, and thereafter sued for damages suffered. The evidence was sufficient to justify the finding of the trial court as to the amount of damages. See sections 3300 and 3313 of the Civil Code.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Charles K. Blech against J. W. Jeal and others, in which J. W. Jeal and Jessie Jeal filed cross-complaints against Charles K. Blech and another. From the judgment rendered, the cross-complainants appeal. Affirmed.

Crandall & Edmonds, E. Earl Crandall, and C. L. Welch, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

F. D. R. Moote, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment upon the judgment roll alone. The question presented for our determination is whether or not the findings support the conclusion of law that respondent Blech is entitled to have a mortgage held by him in trust for respondent Rutledge satisfied out of the lands of appellants.

From the findings it appears that appellants, defendants and cross-complainants below, executed a note wherein they promised to pay to one Earle L. Roberts the sum of $9,500. At the same time appellants executed a mortgage on various parcels of land owned by them to secure this note. By assignment respondent Blech became the owner of the note and mortgage which he holds in trust for respondent Rutledge. Three thousand dollars of the principal sum remains due, owing, and unpaid. A portion of the land covered by the mortgage was conveyed by appellants to respondent Rutledge prior to the time at which she acquired the equitable title to the note and mortgage. Mrs. Rutledge assumed no personal obligation to pay the mortgage indebtedness, which had at the time of the conveyance been reduced to $8,500. Respondent Blech, subsequent to his acquisition of the note and mortgage as trustee for Mrs. Rutledge, without consideration, released from the mortgage the land conveyed to her by appellants.

Appellants contend that the above-mentioned release was in effect a fraud upon them. In this behalf it is argued that, when Mrs. Rutledge accepted the conveyance of the land subject to the mortgage, she undertook, as between herself and appellants, to pay part of the mortgage indebtedness. The existence of this obligation, which appellants assert should be implied from the facts surrounding the conveyance, is further supported by the argument that the debt for which the land was liable must presumably have been considered in determining the price which Mrs. Rutledge was required to pay appellants for the land.

Assuming, although by no means admitting, that such would be the interpretation to be placed upon the transaction in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, respondents rely upon two agreements executed by appellants and Mrs. Rutledge at the time of the conveyance. Respondents allege that by these agreements Mrs. Rutledge undertook to pay $5,500 of the mortgage indebtedness, and that appellants agreed to pay the remaining $3,000; it being further stipulated that, should appellants fail to pay this portion of the debt as agreed by them, and it should, therefore, become necessary for Mrs. Rutledge to advance the entire sum in order to secure a release, appellants would execute a mortgage on certain land owned by them to secure the repayment to Mrs. Rutledge of the sum so advanced.

Although the court found that appellants had been guilty of a breach of the agreements collateral to the contract for the sale of the land to Mrs. Rutledge, appellants assert that there is no sufficient finding as to the terms of the said agreements to enable the judgment to be supported on the theory that the mutual obligations of appellants and Mrs. Rutledge with respect to the mortgage indebtedness were determined by express agreement at the time of the sale. This contention is not sustained by the record. In the finding numbered XIII the court finds that, at the time of the sale of the property to Mrs. Rutledge, appellants agreed that, upon the payment by Mrs. Rutledge of the sum of $3,000 to apply on the principal of the mortgage indebtedness, they would execute a mortgage on certain land to secure the payment to her of this sum by them, and that at the same time Mrs. Rutledge agreed to credit on the sum so to be secured to her any payments made by appellants and applied to reduce the mortgage indebtedness. This finding is fairly, if not necessarily, subject to the construction that the parties agreed that appellants should pay $3,000 of the debt, and that Mrs. Rutledge should pay the remainder.

It follows that appellants cannot successfully contend that the obligations of Mrs. Rutledge are to be determined merely by implication from the facts surrounding the conveyance of the land sold to her by them. The appeal is based upon this contention, and is therefore without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

GRUMMET v. FRESNO GLAZED CEMENT PIPE CO. et al. (S. F. 8397.)

1. TRIAL ⟸165—PRESUMPTIONS OF TRUTH OF EVIDENCE ON MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

A motion for nonsuit assumes as true every fact which the evidence and presumptions fairly deducible therefrom tend to prove, and which was essential to entitle plaintiff to recover.

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸319(7) — PRIMA FACIE CASE IN ACTION FOR SALARY.

In an action by an assistant manager of a corporation for a balance due on salary, it was not necessary for plaintiff, in order to make out a prima facie case, to prove that his employment had been especially authorized by the board of directors, or that the president and manager had acted on the advice of the directors; notwithstanding that the by-laws of defendant corporation gave the president direction of the affairs of the corporation, subject to the advice of the directors.

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸308(11)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE IN ACTION FOR SALARY TO BAR NONSUIT.

In an action by the assistant manager of a corporation against the corporation for a balance due on salary, evidence held to make a prima facie case for plaintiff, so that it was error to grant a nonsuit.

4. CORPORATIONS ⟸432(2)—POWERS OF OFFICERS; AUTHORITY TO HIRE EMPLOYÉS.

In an assistant manager's action against a corporation for salary, it was not necessary for plaintiff to show that the president was authorized to hire him, where the services were rendered to and accepted by defendant with knowledge and consent of its president in the ordinary course of business; it being presumed that the acts of the president pertaining to the business of the corporation not clearly foreign to his powers were authorized.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by John Grummet against the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company, a corporation, and another. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. W. Carlson and W. P. Thompson, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Miles Wallace, of Fresno, and J. E. Light, of Berkeley, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit in an action upon contract brought by the plaintiff against the defendant corporation for a balance of $2,340, alleged to be due the plaintiff as salary under a contract of hire; it being alleged that he was employed by the said corporation through H. H. Backer, the president and manager thereof, in the capacity of assistant manager, at a salary of $150 per month.

From the record before us it appears that plaintiff's salary was to begin on September 1, 1914, and continue until he was discharged, or he resigned; that he entered upon his duties as assistant manager of said defendant corporation in the month of August, 1914, and continued until May 10, 1916; that plaintiff was never discharged from said employment; that at one time while acting as secretary pro tem. of the corporation he tendered his resignation, which was not accepted; that, according to the bill of particulars which was stipulated into the record in lieu of the books of account, the plaintiff was credited with salary at the rate of $150 per month from September 1, 1914, to May 10, 1916—a total of $3,050—on account of which there was paid to the plaintiff in varying sums a total of $710, leaving a balance due of $2,340.

At the close of plaintiff's case the defendant corporation made a motion for nonsuit. The motion was granted on the ground that the plaintiff had not made out a prima facie case because he had not shown that the president and manager of the defendant corporation was specially authorized by the board of directors to make the contract of employment sued on herein. On appeal the respondent argues that plaintiff failed to show that the said president and manager had acted upon the advice of the board of directors as provided in section 8 of the by-laws. Section 8 reads as follows:

"The board of directors at the regular meeting shall elect one of their number president. The president, or, in his absence, the director appointed as above provided has these powers:

"Under 3 (b). Shall call the directors together whenever he deems it necessary and shall, subject to the advice of the directors, have direction of the affairs of the corporation, and shall discharge such other duties as may be required by the by-laws." (Italics ours.)

On the other hand, the appellant contends:

"That he could, and did, make out a prima facie case without proving either of these things, and that such proofs were not necessary to make out his case in the first instance."

The one question to be decided on this appeal is: Was the motion for a nonsuit properly granted?

[1] The law governing motions for nonsuit is well settled in this state. In Marron v. Marron, 19 Cal. App. 328, 125 Pac. 914, it was said:

"A motion for nonsuit assumes as true every fact which the evidence, and presumptions fairly deducible therefrom, tend to prove, and which was essential to entitle the plaintiff to recover. Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252. On such motion the evidence must be taken most strongly against the defendant. Contradictory evidence must be disregarded (In re Daly, 15 Cal. App. 329, 114 Pac. 787), and the motion denied if there is any substantial evidence tending to prove plaintiff's case without passing on the sufficiency of such evidence (Zilmer v. Gerichten, 111 Cal. 73, 43 Pac. 408; Vermont Co. v. Declez, 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143). The rules as to a nonsuit are the same, whether the trial is by the court or by a jury. Freese v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 139 Cal. 394, 73 Pac. 172."

[2, 3] It is clear from the above authorities that it was not necessary for the appellant in order to make out a prima facie case to prove that his employment had been specially authorized by the board of directors, or that the president and manager had acted on "the advice of the directors" when he employed the appellant. There was "substantial evidence tending to prove plaintiff's case," for it appears in evidence from the testimony of plaintiff, witnesses George C. Thomas, bookkeeper, Reginald V. Smith, who succeeded Thomas as bookkeeper, J. E. West, secretary, and defendant H. H. Backer, president and manager, that the plaintiff had been engaged by the president and manager of the corporation; that he performed services for the corporation; that the employment continued for nearly two years; that plaintiff's name appeared as assistant manager in the advertising of the defendant corporation; and that the books of the corporation showed that he received a fixed compensation for his services, $710 of which had been paid him, the balance of $2,340 standing credited to his account on the books. Upon this showing the motion for a nonsuit should have been denied. In the determination of such a motion the trial court is not to pass on the full effect of such evidence or consider contradictory evidence, but simply to decide whether the evidence on its face substantially tends to establish the cause of action. We think the plain tendency of the evidence before the trial court was to establish a contract of employment between the appellant and the respondent. The question of special authorization being properly a matter of defense was not a necessary element in making out a prima facie case. Referring to the power of the president of a corporation to make contracts, it was said in Skinner Mfg. Co. v. Douville, 54 Fla. 251, 44 South. 1014:

"It is argued that the president of the corporation was not shown to have the power to make a contract for the sale of the property, and therefore no authority to make a contract for commissions. Any unusual restrictions in the charter powers of the corporations are within its peculiar knowledge rather than in the knowledge of the other party and were therefore defensive matter."

[4] From the evidence before the trial court it is to be presumed that the president and manager of the defendant corporation acted within the scope of his authority when he made the contract of employment with appellant. Subdivision 20, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc.; Reardon v. Richmond Land Co., 21 Cal. App. 358, 131 Pac. 894; Lloyd v. Matthews, 223 Ill. 477, 79 N. E. 172, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 376, 114 Am. St. Rep. 346; Skinner Mfg. Co. v. Douville, supra; Patterson v. Robinson, 116 N. Y. 193, 22 N. E. 372. In Lloyd v. Matthews, supra, it was said:

"A corporation can act only through its agents, and the president of a corporation, as the agent and corporate representative, has the power, in the ordinary course of business and in furtherance of the corporate interests, to execute contracts and to bind the company in so doing. He is, by virtue of his office, recognized as the business head of the company, and any contract pertaining to the corporate affairs, within the general powers of such officer, executed by the president on behalf of his corporation, will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to have been done by authority of the corporation"—citing cases.

It was stated in Reardon v. Richmond Land Co., supra:

"The point is made that the plaintiff's evidence failed to show that the president of the defendant was authorized by resolution of its board of directors to contract for the services of plaintiff. There is no merit in this contention. The services sued for were rendered to and accepted by the defendant, with the knowledge and consent of its president, apparently in the ordinary course and conduct of its business. This was sufficient evidence of the authority of the president of the corporation to contract for the services in question."

See, also, Crowley v. Genesee Mining Co., 55 Cal. 276.

It is clear that it did not rest upon the plaintiff to show a special authorization of its board of directors, or that the president acted upon the advice of the board, in order to make out a prima facie case. Newton v. Johnston, etc., Co., 180 Pac. 7.

McGROREY v. HEGGERTY. (S. F. 7293.)

CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃139—SUFFICIENCY TO SUPPORT FINDINGS AS TO OWNERSHIP OF STOCK.

In an action to recover certificates of stock, which had been delivered by plaintiff to defendant under a receipt which plaintiff took and which specified that the defendant held the certificates for a third party, since deceased, evidence held sufficient to sustain the court's finding that the stock was not the property of plaintiff.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Bernard Campbell against Charles J. Heggerty. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Pending appeal, plaintiff died, and Thomas McGrorey, as executor of his estate, was substituted as plaintiff. Judgment affirmed.

Bernard Campbell, Ogden & Ogden, R. Clarence Ogden, and Albert C. Aiken, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Knight & Heggerty, of San Francisco, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. This is an action brought by one Bernard Campbell to recover certain stock certificates in the possession of the defendant. Judgment went for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff died, and his executor was substituted.

The possession of the certificates is admitted by the defendant, who, however, while sued in his individual capacity, claims no personal interest of any sort in the property. His claim is that the stock is part of the estate of Patrick Campbell, deceased, of whose will he is the executor, and the sole issue in the case is as to whether the plaintiff or Patrick Campbell, when alive, was the owner of the property. On this issue the trial court found against the plaintiff.

It appears that the certificates had been delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant while Patrick Campbell was alive, and under a receipt which the plaintiff himself took which specified that the defendant held the certificates for Patrick. The presumption arising from this receipt is confirmed by letters from the defendant to the plaintiff, written in Patrick's lifetime, in which the stock is spoken of as belonging to Patrick. The defendant also testified that he always understood the stock to be Patrick's and he held it for him, and that the plaintiff had never made any claim to it until the present action was commenced after Patrick's death.

To overcome this evidence all that appears is the testimony of the plaintiff himself and a certain writing. The character of the plaintiff's testimony and the weight to which it is entitled may be judged from the following excerpt, which is but typical:

"Q. When you had this stock, why didn't you have it transferred in your name? A. Because afterwards you transferred it. Q. I mean before I ever got it at all? A. I never wanted to have anything to do, and I was opposed to ever forming the New Bluepoint Mining Company, and it came out I was always opposed to it, for I considered it was nothing more than a swindle, and I went to Ireland to put monuments on the old folks' graves there, and that was in 1900, and I came back to New York, and I went to Smartsville within 30 days from the time I heard of it in Ireland. I left Smartsville on the 4th day of July, 1900, and I had no breakfast there, and I had to go into a grocery store to get some crackers and milk until we came to Wheatland, and the same man that drove the stage is living there today."

If the plaintiff's testimony itself were not sufficient to convince us that the trial judge was justified in disregarding it in toto, the brief which the plaintiff in propria persona filed with us would leave no doubt. The following is a fair sample:

"And Patrick Campbell never claimed to defendant that he claimed to own any of the stock belonging to the plaintiff. On the contrary, Patrick Campbell's letter of June 19, 1911 (Trans. p. 13), has been carried on before any of the honorable judges had been elected to the bench, and it is a more unjust and illegal system than the police court, as the judges reduce the bail for lawyers' clients affording means of escaping justice. The judge in the police court admitted it was a custom before his time, but was a bad system, and he would stop it. That would be sufficient for me to have them stopped, but the citizens of San Francisco would not and have the recall."

The writing relied on by the plaintiff was a letter to the defendant, purporting to be signed by Patrick Campbell. In it is the statement, occurring rather incidentally, that the plaintiff owns the greater part of the stock. What part is not specified. The trial court may well have had some doubt as to the authenticity of the letter, although there was no direct evidence upon the point, and in any case the letter is not such a document as, uncorroborated, would justify an affirmative finding against the estate of the person for whom the stock was being held that it actually belonged to some one else.

Counsel for the plaintiff's executor make the point that the defendant is not the legally appointed executor of Patrick's will, because of lack of jurisdiction on the part of the court appointing him. But it makes no difference whether the defendant was legally appointed, or appointed at all. If the stock did not belong to the plaintiff, he could not recover it in any case.

Judgment affirmed.

SQUIER v. DAVIS STANDARD BREAD CO. et al. (L. A. 5318.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(7) — SPEED OF MOTORCYCLE NOT NEGLIGENCE AS MATTER OF LAW.

Running a motorcycle at a rate of 10 miles an hour on a city street does not amount to negligence as a matter of law.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(7)—FAILURE TO SOUND HORN OF MOTORCYCLE NOT NEGLIGENCE AS MATTER OF LAW.

Though under State Motor Vehicle Act it was plaintiff's duty to sound the horn on his motorcycle before attempting to pass defendant's wagon going in the same direction on the same street, it cannot be said that failure to sound horn was negligence as a matter of law, where jury might have found that there was no such duty prior to collision, because of absence of intent on plaintiff's part to make an immediate attempt to pass.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸705(2)—PASSING VEHICLE ON WRONG SIDE IN CASE OF PERIL.

It is not negligence to turn to the right of a vehicle being approached from the rear if a situation of peril is presented in which, to avoid a possibility of injury, a reasonably careful man might well consider it the more prudent course.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(5)—PERIL JUSTIFIES PASSING VEHICLE ON WRONG SIDE.

Evidence held to warrant finding that plaintiff, approaching defendant's vehicle from the rear with a motorcycle, was confronted with a condition of peril which justified his turning to the right of defendant's vehicle.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸705(4)—VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE TO KEEP TO RIGHT OF CENTER OF INTERSECTION.

If driver of vehicle approached intersection with intent to proceed into intersecting street, and started at an angle which would place the center of the street on his right, he violated the ordinance from the moment he began to turn; it not being the mere passing of the center of the intersection on the driver's right which is rendered unlawful.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(8) — INSTRUCTION IN ACTION ON COLLISION IN STREET NOT MISLEADING.

In action for injuries due to collision between plaintiff's motorcycle and defendant's delivery wagon at street intersection, instruction with reference to defendant driver keeping to the right of center of intersection when turning into intersecting street held not subject to criticism that its grammatical construction was such as to make the words "keeping the center on his right" misleading and confusing.

7. TRIAL ⟸296(4, 5)—INSTRUCTION ON CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE NOT MISLEADING.

Instruction that if plaintiff's negligence was "the proximate cause" of the injury the verdict should be against him held not to have misled jury, where the sentence containing the quoted words was preceded by a sentence requiring jury to determine whether plaintiff's negligence was "a proximate cause," and the jury was elsewhere fully and correctly instructed on the law of contributory negligence.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by F. C. Squier against the Davis Standard Bread Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hickcox & Crenshaw, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Clyde C. Shoemaker and George H. Woodruff, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an action to recover for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when the motorcycle upon which he was riding collided with a horse-drawn delivery wagon owned by the defendant corporation and driven by defendant Masters. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appeal.

From the plaintiff's evidence it appears that just prior to the accident the two vehicles were proceeding in an easterly direction along Vernon avenue in the city of Los Angeles at a point near to the intersection of that avenue with Ascot avenue. The motorcycle upon which plaintiff was riding was a short distance behind the wagon, and, a few seconds prior to the collision, it was moving at a speed of 14 miles an hour. Plaintiff testified that he intended to stop at the corner to permit a car to pass on Ascot avenue, from which, in view of all of the circumstances, it might fairly be inferred that he had no immediate intention of passing the wagon. It also appears from plaintiff's testimony that the defendant Masters, although aware of plaintiff's approach, without the warning required by ordinance turned his horse's head sharply to the left as though about to turn north into Ascot avenue, keeping the center of intersection of Ascot avenue and Vernon avenue on his right, but that, instead of keeping on in this course, he stopped and backed the vehicle. Plaintiff, seeing the horse start to turn, and fearing that he would not be able to veer sharply enough to the left to avoid striking the horse, made a sharp turn to the right, and in so doing struck the right hind wheel of the wagon and fell, sustaining the injuries complained of. The evidence indicates that he was not at the time traveling at much over 10 miles an hour. It also appears that at the moment of the collision the head of the horse was a few feet out into Ascot avenue and a few feet to the right of the center line of Vernon avenue, the equipage heading in a northeasterly direction at an angle of about 45 degrees from the line of the direction of Vernon avenue.

[1-4] In the face of this evidence, appellants contend that the court should have held as a matter of law that plaintiff was guilty of negligence by reason of traveling at an excessive rate of speed, by reason of failing to sound his horn, and by reason of attempting to turn to the right of the vehicle with which he collided. The record discloses no justification for the contention that plaintiff was traveling at a rate of speed which amounted to negligence as a matter of law. Under the State Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 397), it was, of course, plaintiff's duty to sound his horn before attempting to pass the wagon, but the jury might well have found that there was no such duty prior to the collision by reason of absence of intent to make an immediate attempt to pass. Finally, it is not negligence to turn to the right of a vehicle which is being approached from the rear if a situation of peril is presented in which to avoid a possibility of injury to life or property a reasonably careful man might well consider it the more prudent course to drive to the right. There was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that plaintiff was confronted by such a situation of peril when he turned to the right of defendants' wagon.

It is next contended that the court erred in giving the following instruction on the traffic ordinance of the city of Los Angeles:

"Section 12 provides that the driver of any vehicle in or upon any street shall, in turning to the left into another street, pass to the right of and beyond the center of the street intersection before turning. Under the provisions of this ordinance, if you find from the evidence that the defendant driving the delivery wagon in question intended to and started to turn from Vernon avenue, proceeding easterly, into Ascot avenue, proceeding northerly, the court instructs you that it was his duty to pass to the right of the point which indicates the center of the intersection of those streets, and if you find from the evidence that the defendant was making this turn with the intention aforesaid, and that he did not pass to or beyond the center of the intersection of these streets, keeping the center on his right, then you will find that he was guilty of negligence, and if you find that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries to plaintiff, and that plaintiff was not guilty of negligence proximately causing his own injuries, then the verdict shall be in favor of the plaintiff."

It is urged that the intent of defendant Masters was absolutely immaterial; that the section of the ordinance here in question can be violated only by an actual turning into another street, and that such turning is not accomplished until some portion of the equipage has passed the center of intersection of the two streets.

[5] The court's instruction did not make defendants' violation of the ordinance depend solely upon the intent of defendant Masters. It merely made the intent, and properly so, an essential element in determining whether or not Masters was, as a matter of fact turning into Ascot avenue. If his sudden and sharp change in direction was made with another and lawful purpose, there was, of course, no violation of the statute. If, however, his purpose was to proceed into Ascot avenue, and he started at an angle which would place the center of intersection on his right, it is not open to dispute, we think, that he was violating the ordinance from the moment he commenced to turn. It is not the mere passing of the center of intersection on the driver's right which is rendered unlawful by the ordinance. It is rather the very turning itself from the moment of its beginning. To construe the ordinance otherwise would be to permit the driver of a vehicle to turn suddenly and sharply to the left at an intersection as often as he might please, so long as he changed his mind in time to crowd back into the stream of traffic before any part of his vehicle crossed the center line of the street. Such a construction would be unreasonable, and would utterly destroy the purpose and effect of the statute.

[6] Appellants also contend that the grammatical construction of the instruction is such as to make the words "keeping the center on his right" misleading and confusing. This is a clear instance of hypercriticism.

[7] The court, after charging as to the duty of the driver of an overtaking vehicle to sound an audible signal before passing a vehicle proceeding in the same direction, and after instructing the jury that if plaintiff was under such a duty and failed to sound his horn he was guilty of negligence, continued to the effect that if such negligence was found to be "the proximate cause" of the injury, the verdict should be against the plaintiff. Appellants insist that the use of the article "the" instead of the article "a" before the words "proximate cause" constituted reversible error. The sentence containing the objectionable words is immediately preceded by a sentence requiring the jury to determine whether plaintiff's negligence, if any, was "a proximate cause" of the injuries received by him. Moreover, the jury was elsewhere fully and correctly instructed on the law of contributory negligence. Considering the instructions as a whole, we consider the possibility that the jury could have been misled by the error complained of so remote as to be altogether unworthy of serious consideration.

Error is claimed in the refusal of the trial court to give certain instructions offered by appellants. These instructions embody appellants' theory of the law of the case, which we have held to be erroneous.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re NUTT'S ESTATE. (L. A. 6047.)

1. WILLS ⟸166(1)—EVIDENCE OF UNDUE INFLUENCE AND FRAUD.

In a contest of a will, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding of undue influence and fraud.

2. WILLS ⟸163(4)—PRESUMPTION OF UNDUE INFLUENCE ARISES FROM CONFIDENTIAL RELATION.

If a confidential relation between a testatrix and the beneficiary appear, coupled with activity of the latter in the preparation of the will, a presumption of undue influence arises, and the burden is on the beneficiary to show that the testament was not procured by undue influence.

3. WILLS ⟸386—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE.

Conclusions reached by the jury and the court in a will contest will not be disturbed on appeal, where based upon conflicting evidence.

4. WILLS ⟸277—CONTEST; DOMINATION AND SUPPRESSION OF FACTS.

A count in a will contest, alleging domination of the mind of testatrix, was not incompatible with a count alleging suppression of facts; domination and suppression sometimes being handmaidens of fraud, working together.

5. WILLS ⟸153—CONTEST; WITHHOLDING OF MEDICAL OPINION AS SUPPRESSION OF FACT.

Withholding by physician from testatrix of opinion that she would die soon was not only the withholding of the belief of the physician, where the progress of the disease as indicated by the symptoms justified only a prognosis of its early termination, but was the suppression of a fact that could be considered in a contest of a will wherein the physician was charged with fraud.

6. TRIAL ⟸219 — DEFINITION OF SIMPLE WORDS IN INSTRUCTIONS.

In a will contest, where one of the grounds of contest was suppression of facts, court did not err in refusing to give in the instructions a definition of the word "fact"; court not being called upon to define simple words.

7. TRIAL ⟸214—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO COMMONPLACE MATTERS UNNECESSARY.

Court did not err in refusing to instruct that a party had a right to enter into a trust agreement with another party, as such an instruction would be merely the statement of a commonplace familiar to all.

8. TRIAL ⟸251(2)—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO MATTERS NOT INVOLVED UNNECESSARY.

In contest of a will, court did not err in refusing to instruct that proponent had a right to enter into a trust agreement with testatrix, the validity of a trust agreement entered into by them not being involved, although proponent put the trust agreement in evidence as answer to the contest.

9. TRIAL ⟸251(2)—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO MATTERS NOT INVOLVED UNNECESSARY.

In a will contest, court properly refused to instruct that the quality of trust funds deposited by a trustee in his own name is not changed merely because he failed to place the designation "trustee" after his name; such instruction referring to a trust agreement the validity of which was not involved in the contest.

10. TRIAL ⟸302 — EXCUSING JURY DURING ARGUMENT OF MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

Whether jurors should be excused during the argument of a motion for a nonsuit rests entirely within the discretion of the trial court.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

In the Matter of the Estate of Carolynn E. Nutt, deceased. From a judgment in favor of contestants of a will, the proponent appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 181 Pac. 661.

Stephen G. Long, of Long Beach, and Hahn & Hahn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

M. B. Butler, of Pasadena, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by the proponent of an alleged will of Carolynn E. Nutt, deceased, from a judgment in favor of Martha and David Nutt, beneficiaries under an earlier will, who, being minors, sued by their guardian ad litem contesting the validity of the purported will of later date.

It appears, without conflict, that proponent of the later will, W. Ray Simpson, is the husband of Dr. A. Winegar Simpson, a physician practicing her profession at Long Beach. Mr. Simpson was connected with the Long Beach Sanitarium as manager. To that institution Mrs. Nutt came as a patient of Dr. Simpson in June, 1917. Later, the physician correctly diagnosed the malady of the patient as pellagra, and told Mrs. Nutt that she was afflicted with that disease.

In the month of August, 1917, Mrs. Nutt sent for Mr. George M. Martin, an attorney at law, and, after consulting with him, caused him to prepare a will, which, on the 17th day of August, 1917, was executed in due form. By this will the contestants herein, who are niece and nephew, respectively, of the late husband of Mrs. Nutt, were made her sole beneficiaries.

In the month of September, 1917, Mr. Simpson entered into negotiations with Mr. Long, an attorney, and under the former's instructions certain instruments were prepared by which disposition was made of all of Mrs. Nutt's property (amounting in value to about $15,000). One of these was the will afterwards successfully attacked in this suit. This and the other writings were brought by Mr. Long to the sanitarium on the 24th day of September, 1917, and were first taken by Dr. Simpson to Mrs. Nutt's room. Half an hour later Mr. Long and a notary were admitted to the sick room, and there the will was executed with due formality, Dr. Simpson being present all the time. Mrs. Nutt also executed the following instruments: (1) A declaration of trust whereby, in consideration of the transfer to him of all of her property, Mr. Simpson promised to furnish Mrs. Nutt with all necessary medical attendance, food, clothing, etc., during her life, such care to be paid for out of the income and principal of the property, and if more money should be required, out of the private funds of said W. Ray Simpson; (2) an assignment of a note for $5,000 and accompanying mortgage; (3) a grant deed to Mr. Simpson of lots in Oklahoma worth $4,500; (4) an assignment of 2,400 shares of stock of the Yellow Pine Mining Company, worth about $3,700. Mr. Long was hired and paid by Mr. Simpson. Mr. Martin was not summoned, nor was any other lawyer called to give the sick woman independent advice. Mr. Long, in preparing the necessary papers, had not conferred with Mrs. Nutt, but had obtained his information from Mr. Simpson.

On the day following the execution of the will Mr. Simpson prepared a letter, which was taken by Dr. Simpson to Mrs. Nutt for her signature. By this letter the writer demanded custody of the earlier will from the trust company having it for safe-keeping, and the instrument was returned to the hospital. Mrs. Nutt died on the 4th of October, 1917. The purpose of the transactions attacked by contestants was to provide for Mrs. Nutt's care and treatment during her life, even if she should live so long that, without the creation of a trust or arrangement such as was contemplated, all of her financial resources would have been exhausted. Mrs. Nutt had great confidence in her physician.

It also appears that the physician was present at the time of the execution of the will; that she remained in close physical contact with Mrs. Nutt; that she passed to the invalid the pen for signing the will; and that just before the execution of the instrument she said to her patient, "Never mind, Mrs. Nutt, it will be all right," or words to that effect.

At the request of the patient, Dr. Simpson had written to a kinsman of Mrs. Nutt's deceased husband asking for financial aid to pay the expenses of the invalid's treatment, as her income was insufficient to meet those charges. This letter, dated September 9, 1917, is of strong significance, both as an indication of the relations between physician and patient and as expressing the former's belief in the very serious condition of Mrs. Nutt. The following quotations from the letter will serve to illustrate its value to the court and jury in the trial of the case:

"She is in a critical condition as you will understand when I tell you she is suffering from pellagra. She has not been well since her husband's death and has without doubt been suffering from this disease for a number of years. Her suffering is intense and the depression is indeed distressing. She is obliged to have a nurse with her day and night—one nurse cares for her during the day and another sleeps in her room and cares for her at night. She feels very lonely and I have tried to be to her not only a physician but a friend. * * * Her condition is critical and it is a very grave question whether she will recover. Since treating her for this disease she has improved some but we cannot yet say what the outcome will be nor how long she may live. * * * Unless she makes greater improvement soon I fear she will not live long."

[1] All of the foregoing facts appear without conflict, and it is evident that they create prima facie a condition which justifies the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court. The jury, by special verdict, found that appellant or his wife had exercised the confidence and authority imposed in them by Mrs. Nutt for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage over her; that the contested will was the product thereof; that unfair advantage was taken of Mrs. Nutt's distress of mind; and that facts known to proponent or his wife to be true had been suppressed from Mrs. Nutt, such suppression influencing the making of the will.

[2] Respondents rely upon the rule that if a confidential relation between the testatrix and the beneficiary appear, coupled with activity of the latter in the preparation of the will a presumption of undue influence arises, and the burden is on the beneficiary to show that the testament was not procured by undue influence (citing Estate of Baird, 176 Cal. 381, 168 Pac. 561), and the rule that any undue influence exercised by Dr. Simpson would be imputed to appellant (citing Ross v. Conway, 92 Cal. 632–637, 28 Pac. 785).

Appellant seems to concede the first of these rules, but insists that he has met the burden which the law imposes. With this assertion we are unable to agree.

[3] It is appellant's first contention that Mrs. Nutt was of so strong mind that she could not be easily influenced. Upon this matter there was a conflict of evidence which prevents this court from overturning the conclusions reached by the jury and the court. Certain it is, in view of the undisputed facts, that the sick woman did radically change her mind within the period of a few weeks.

It is next contended that her mind was not weakened by her illness. Yet, when the purported will was executed she was under the constant care of nurses, and the testimony of some of the witnesses tended to show that she uttered no word at the time of the execution of the will, indicating her answers to questions by pantomime.

During the time that Dr. Simpson was discussing the condition of Mrs. Nutt with the latter the patient was told that if she could live until cool weather set in she had a good chance to recover; that she might pass out quickly, or that she might live a long time; and it is argued that this was a sincere expression of opinion justified by the history of the disease. There was some conflict in the testimony of the medical experts relative to pellagra which is a rare disease in this climate, but there was testimony to the effect that when the disease reaches the stage in which the patient suffers from sore mouth and profuse flow of saliva the probabilities of early dissolution are very great, and that this is known generally to physicians. Dr. Simpson herself said that she noticed some soreness of the patient's mouth about the middle of September, and there was testimony regarding the undue amount of saliva at the time of the execution of the will.

It would be useless to review in detail the mass of testimony given in this case. It is sufficient to note that appellant and his wife offered no adequate excuse for their failure to secure for this unadvised widow living in their institution (and suffering from a disease which, according to Dr. Simpson's certificate signed at the time of Mrs. Nutt's death, had existed about six years) that sort of advice to which she was entitled under the existing circumstances. The preparation of the will by a lawyer who obtained all his knowledge from appellant and was neither requested to consult nor given opportunity of adequate conference with the testatrix speaks volumes against the good faith of the Simpsons. Upon the whole record, we find most abundant justification for the judgment.

In the briefs of appellant and in the oral argument our attention was directed to the case of Estate of Wickes, 139 Cal. 195, 72 Pac. 902, and counsel for appellant declared that to be substantially "on all fours" with the case at bar and an authority supporting appellant's contentions. But that case differs in many essential particulars from this one. The superior court had decided against the contestant, and this court sustained the judgment. The testatrix was an aged woman with no relatives. She was suffering from an incurable disease, as was her husband. He was amply provided for, and he, too, was without kindred. Dr. Shannon had cared for the old lady for half a year, charging her almost nothing, and he had been very kind to he "as much so as a son." Under these circumstances she expressed a wish to make a will in his favor, and asked him to have a testament prepared in harmony with her desire. He accordingly consulted with Judge Zenas N. Goldsby, who called at the hospital where Mrs. Wickes was a patient. Dr. Pratt accompanied the lawyer to the old lady's room, but Dr. Shannon, the prospective beneficiary, remained outside during all of the negotiations concerning the will. Before executing the instrument Mrs. Wickes was interrogated with reference to her desires, and although a form of will had been prepared in advance, it was not produced and read to her until the attorney had satisfied himself that it really expressed her testamentary wishes.

From the brief outline of the facts in the Estate of Wickes, given above, it will appear at once that there are several points of difference between that case and the one at bar. That was a contest between strangers to the blood of both of the testatrix and her husband; this is between the kindred of Mrs. Nutt's deceased husband and a stranger. There was no pretense in that case that Dr. Shannon had worked upon the fears of the testatrix to convince her that she might become destitute if she did not transfer her property to him. And in that case the important element of the personal presence of the trusted physician at the moment of the testamentary act was not in existence, as it is in this contest. And the witnesses were entirely different in the two cases, their credibility being a subject for different tribunals. Mr. Justice Lorigan well expressed the rule regarding credibility in the following words, in the opinion in the Estate of Wickes:

"Whether evidence is sufficient to sustain a will must in all cases mainly depend on the credibility of the witnesses by whom the testimony is offered, and how far credibility should be given to their testimony is to be determined by the judge who heard it. That matter is solely committed to him, and his judgment upon it is conclusive upon us."

[4, 5] Appellant takes the ground that the pleadings of the contestants were not sufficient to set forth a ground of contest, and that therefore no testimony should have been admitted over his objection. Respondents had set forth their contest in three counts. In the first was pleaded Dr. Simpson's undue influence over the mind of Mrs. Nutt by the domination of her mind over the weakened invalid, towards whom she owed the greatest fairness by reason of her confidential relation to her patient. The second pleaded fraud by overreaching Mrs. Nutt by means of suppression; and the third averred fraud and undue influence, accomplished by taking advantage of Mrs. Nutt's distress of mind. It is contended that domination and suppression are utterly incompatible. On the contrary, they are sometimes handmaidens of fraud, working together. But appellant's counsel say that actionable suppression must be of fact or facts, and that Dr. Simpson, if she suppressed anything, only withheld her opinion that Mrs. Nutt would die soon. But the fact concealed was not only the belief of the physician that her patient would not and could not long survive, but the further fact that the progress of the disease as indicated by the symptoms justified only a prognosis of its early fatal termination.

Proponent's motion for nonsuit was properly overruled for reasons which must be apparent from the foregoing discussion of the essential parts of the evidence.

[6] There was no error in the court's refusal to give in the instructions a definition of the word "fact" offered by proponent. The court is not called upon to define simple words employed in instructions.

[7, 8] The court declined to give an instruction to the effect that as matter of law proponent had a right to enter into a trust agreement with Mrs. Nutt. This was proper, because the proposed instruction contained merely the statement of a commonplace familiar to all, and, secondly, because this was a will contest, and not a proceeding or suit to invalidate a trust. True, the trust agreement was in evidence, but of that appellant may not well complain. He had made it a part of his answer to the contest.

[9] Another instruction refused by the court was to the effect that the quality of trust funds deposited by a trustee in his own name is not changed merely because he failed to place the designation "trustee" after his name. This instruction was not pertinent to the issues, and was correctly refused.

[10] The court did not err in refusing to excuse the jury during the argument of the motion for nonsuit. Whether the jurors should be excused or not was a matter entirely within the discretion of the court. In denying the motion the court, with most commendable care, instructed the jurors as follows: "I want to say to the jury that in denying this motion I am not deciding the case at all. It simply amounts to this: That if it was to stop right here I should leave it for the jury to determine on proper instructions after the argument of counsel."

The judgment is affirmed.

KROBITZSCH v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 9123.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=405(2)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; EVIDENCE OF TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT INSUFFICIENT.

Employer's letter to employé and employer's testimony held to warrant a finding by the Industrial Accident Commission that the employment was not terminated prior to employé's injury, but he was given the option of leaving or continuing at his old salary.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=417(7)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; REVIEW OF COMMISSION'S FINDINGS.

A finding of the Industrial Accident Commission that employé's injury arose out of and in course of the employment will be upheld by court where evidence is conflicting.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=363—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; "FARM LABOR" AND "STOCK RAISING."

An employé of one engaged in the propagation of trout for domestic purposes, a business prohibited by Pen. Code, § 632, prior to St. 1911, p. 378, held not excluded from the benefits of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, by section 8, subd. (a), excluding employés engaged in "farm, dairy, agricultural, viticultural, or horticultural labor, in stock or poultry raising"; the term "farm labor" meaning labor engaged in the production of hay, grain, vegetables, and the like by tillage of the soil, and the term "stock raising" meaning the raising of domestic animals.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Farm Laborer.]

In Bank.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 by Gertrude Starkey and others for compensation for the death of Charles Edward Starkey, opposed by R. W. Krobitzsch. An order awarding death benefit was made by the Industrial Accident Commission, and employer applies for certiorari to review order. Award affirmed.

Henry A. Jacobs and Jacobs & Oliver, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. Certiorari to review the proceedings of the Industrial Accident Commission in awarding a death benefit in the sum of $2,807 and $100 for funeral expenses to the widow and children of Charles Edward Starkey, deceased, and against the petitioner.

The commission found:

"(1) That Charles Edward Starkey, hereinafter called the employé, was injured on the 8th day of October, 1918, in Santa Cruz county, California, while in the employment of defendant,

R. W. Krobitzsch, hereinafter called the employer, as an employé on the 'Santa Cruz Trout Farm' at Olympia, in said county, and that said injury proximately caused the death of the employé on the said day.

"(2) That said injury arose out of and in the course of such employment, was proximately caused thereby, and occurred while the employé was performing service growing out of and incidental to the same, and happened in the following manner: While engaged in clearing weeds, brush, ferns, and other natural growth from the neighborhood of the flume on said 'Santa Cruz Farm' and carting it away in a small wagon for the purpose of burning same, a part of the load on said wagon slipped off, carrying the employé with it, and causing a pitch-fork to fall on the employé, wounding him and causing his death.

"(3) That at the time of said injury the employé was not engaged in farm labor, stock raising, or any of the occupations or employments excluded by section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 835) from the provisions of said act, and the employé and the employer were subject to the compensation provisions of said act and to the jurisdiction of this commission."

1. Petitioner contends that the award of the commission should be annulled on the ground that "the decision and award are contrary to the evidence relating to the employment of said Charles Edward Starkey, in that his term of employment had ceased seven days prior to the injury," that is to say, that deceased was not the employé of the petitioner at the time of his injury and death. This contention is based on the fact that deceased had become dissatisfied with his pay, which was $80 a month, and had asked that his salary be raised to $100, and that in reply to this request the petitioner, on September 27, 1918, wrote the following letter:

"Mr. Chas. E. Starkey, C/o Santa Cruz Trout Farm, Olympia, Calif.—Dear Sir: In thinking the matter over regarding the advance in salary that you ask for, I find that I will not be able to meet with your views.

"Rather than have any argument over same, and feeling that perhaps you are dissatisfied, I would ask you to find a new position after October 1st, 1918.

"If you will feed the fish for me until I send a man down, I will allow you in return for this work and without any further consideration, to live in the house you now occupy free of rent until you locate yourself.

"Before leaving the place advise me three or four days in advance so that I can send a man down to take care of the fish.

"Thanking you for what you have done for the Santa Cruz Trout Farm, beg to remain,

"Yours very truly."

[1] Petitioner contends that this letter terminated the employment of the deceased. It seems to us that this letter did not have the effect of terminating the employment, but that it gave Starkey the option of leaving or of accepting the employment and continuing therein at the rate of $80 a month. This conclusion is sustained by the testimony of the petitioner himself, wherein he said:

"I expected Mr. Starkey to be up—that is what I really expected. I thought when he received this letter he would come up. I expected him in almost any time. I thought he would either do one thing or the other because it had got to a point where one thing or the other had to be done." (Italics ours.)

Upon this state of the evidence the finding of the commission that the deceased was at the time of his death in the employ of the petitioner cannot be disturbed.

2. It is contended that the award should be annulled "on the further ground that said decision and award are contrary to the evidence relating to the issue as to whether the accident arose out of or in the course of the employment of said Charles Edward Starkey by the petitioner." As we have already seen, the commission found on this point that the deceased was killed while engaged in clearing brush and ferns and other natural growth from the neighborhood of the flume and carting it away in a small wagon for the purpose of burning it. The petitioner testified that the sole duties of the deceased were to feed the fish, to clean the ponds where the fish were kept and keep them supplied with fresh water, and prepare the fish for the market as orders came in, and that he had never given instructions to Starkey to clear away any brush or ferns or the like from the vicinity of the flume, and that such was not a part of the work for which he was employed. Petitioner further testified that he made a tour of inspection throughout the entire length of the flume after the fatal accident, and that there was no evidence that any clearing had been done near the flume, but that at one place across the road from the flume he found a patch about 15 by 18 feet which had been cleared of brush, and that there was a pile of fern brakes in this clearing, and that Mrs. Starkey had pointed out this place as the one where her husband was killed. He also testified that he found a quantity of these fern brakes on the floor of the stable where the deceased kept his cow, the claim being made that the deceased was at the time of his death engaged in hauling fern brakes to be used as bedding for his cow, and therefore that the injury did not arise out of and was not received in the course of his employment. Witness McGuire also testified that he went up to the barn and "could see the remains of fern brakes used as bedding for the cow." Witness Miller, the former manager of the trout farm, when asked what advantage, if any, there would be in clearing ferns in October along the flume, answered, "None whatever."

However, Mrs. Gertrude Starkey and William E. O. Starkey, the 14 year old son of deceased, both testified that it was the custom on the trout farm to clear away the brush from the vicinity of the flume every fall; that this was done to minimize the fire risk; that this work of clearing away the fern and brush had been done in the fall of the years 1915, 1916, and 1917; and that the deceased was engaged in that work at the time of his death.

[2] In view of this conflict in the evidence the finding of the commission that the injury to the deceased "arose out of and in the course of such employment, was proximately caused thereby, and occurred while the employé was performing services growing out of and incidental to the same," must be upheld.

3. Petitioner contends, also, that the award "should be annulled upon the ground that said Industrial Accident Commission, in rendering a decision and entering an award against the petitioner, acted without and in excess of its authority, in that the business conducted by the petitioner, E. W. Krobitzsch, to wit, the propagation of trout for domestic purposes, comprises farm labor and stock raising, and that an employé of such business is excluded from the benefits of the 'Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917,' by virtue of subdivision 'a' of section 8 of said act." The said subdivision reads, in part:

"* * * Excluding any employé engaged in household domestic service, farm, dairy, agricultural, viticultural or horticultural labor, in stock or poultry raising. * * *"

[3] We are of the opinion that the petitioner is not entitled to exemption under the provisions of this act. It seems clear beyond question that the Legislature did not intend to use in a general sense the terms employed in describing the excluded classes. If that had been the intention of the Legislature, it would not have used the terms "farm, dairy, agricultural, viticultural or horticultural labor," for "farm labor" would, in the broad sense, include labor engaged in dairying, agriculture, horticulture, stock raising, and poultry raising and anything which can be defined as cultivation of the soil. 19 Cyc. 456; 2 C. J. 988. The very wording of the clause of the act upon which petitioner relies shows that the Legislature was giving a restricted meaning to the term employed and was segregating into certain definite and exclusive classes all kinds of "labor" which in the broad and unrestricted sense would come under the head of farming. "Farm labor" must, we think, be taken in its ordinarily accepted meaning as labor engaged in the production of hay, grain, vegetables, and the like by the tillage of the soil. To give the term a broader meaning would be to restrict the terms "dairy, agricultural, viticultural or horticultural labor," as used in the statute, for by the employment of the words used it is clear that the Legislature did not intend to include dairy farming, fruit farming, grape growing, or, we may add, "fish farming," within the term "farm," or it would not have employed terms of narrowing import.

Likewise, we must interpret the term "stock raising" in the sense in which it is commonly employed, namely, the raising of those domestic animals usually classed as "live stock," and commonly raised on farms or ranches, such as horses, mules, cattle, sheep, goats, hogs, and the like. Petitioner has gone to great length in quoting from dictionaries and encyclopedias to show that the term "stock raising," in its broadest sense, includes the propagation of domestic trout. It is clear that, if the term is to be taken in its generic sense, it will include the propagation and rearing of all domestic animals, which, it may be conceded here, includes domestic trout. But it is equally clear that the Legislature did not use the term in its generic sense so as to include the raising of all domestic animals; otherwise, "poultry raising" would not have been specially mentioned.

The business conducted by the employer herein was one prohibited by law (section 632, Pen. Code) prior to the adoption of the statute of 1911 on the subject of raising trout for domestic purposes (Stats. 1911, p. 378). In the title of that act the business is thus described: "Persons engaged in the business of propagating and rearing such fish." The license issued by the board of fish and game commissioners under this act is entitled: "Licensed Pond for Culture of Domesticated Trout or Other Fish." The certificate recites:

"That a holder thereof is the proprietor of a private pond or ponds called ——— and situate in the county of ———, state of California, upon the real property described as follows: ——— is hereby authorized to keep and propagate therein and dispose of as provided by law, trout or other fish."

It will be observed that in this legislation, which was on the statute books at the time of the enactment of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917, neither the word "farm" nor "stock" is used. Instead thereof, the words used are "pond" and "fish." It seems to us that, if the Legislature had intended to exclude labor employed in such an enterprise from the operation of the Workmen's Compensation Act, it would have in terms so specified.

We do not think, therefore, that such labor is to be included in the terms "stock raising" or "farm" labor.

It follows that the award must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

RANKIN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY. (Miscellaneous 202.)

MANDAMUS ⊜154(2)—PETITION INSUFFICIENT TO AUTHORIZE WRIT.

An application for a writ of mandate to require the superior court of county to deliver to the Supreme Court for petitioner's use in preparing an application for habeas corpus certified copies of the records of the court in his cause, which merely alleged that petitioner's restraint was illegal, that court had no jurisdiction to try his cause, that the matter purported to be charged in the information did not constitute a public offense, and that petitioner had good cause for discharge on habeas corpus, does not set forth sufficient facts to warrant relief.

In Bank.

Application by Nathan Rankin for a writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court of San Joaquin County, State of California. Application denied.

See, also, 183 Pac. 686.

Nathan Rankin, in pro per.

PER CURIAM. One Nathan Rankin, confined in the California state prison at San Quentin under a judgment of the superior court of San Joaquin county, has presented, with an application that the same be filed without payment of costs, a petition for a writ of mandate against said superior court to require said court to deliver to this court for his use in preparing an application for a writ of habeas corpus, certified copies of the records of said court in his cause. In so far as said petition attempts to show any matter which would be material on an application for a writ of habeas corpus or for a writ of mandate it is manifestly insufficient to warrant any relief, inasmuch as it appears to allege no specific facts showing illegality in his imprisonment. The bare allegations that his restraint is illegal, that the court had no jurisdiction in his cause, that the matter purported to be charged in the information does not constitute a public offense, and that petitioner has good cause for a discharge on a writ of habeas corpus or other proceeding do not sufficiently set forth the specific facts warranting relief either under mandamus or on habeas corpus.

No merit appearing in the application sought to be filed, it is ordered that leave to file the same without payment of fees is denied.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 20. 1919. Opinion of Supreme Court In Bank Denying Hearing, Nov. 17, 1919.)

1. INSURANCE ⊜558(1)—INDEMNITY INSURANCE; WAIVER OF NOTICE OF ACCIDENT.

Conditions of a liability policy requiring immediate notice to insurer of an accident are waived, when the insurer actually assumes control of the litigation growing out of an accident.

2. INSURANCE ⊜388(5) — LIABILITY INSURANCE; WAIVER OF CONDITIONS BY ASSUMING CONTROL OF ACTION.

The fact that attorneys for a liability insurance company gave attorneys for insured permission to take part in the case and represent the insured did not prevent assumption of control of the case by the company from constituting a waiver of prior breach of conditions by insured, in the absence of a complaint that the defense was interfered with by insured's attorneys.

3. INSURANCE ⊜670—FINDINGS NOT INCONSISTENT.

In an action by insured under a liability insurance policy, finding that plaintiff "performed all the conditions of said policy" may be considered as surplusage, and not inconsistent with a further finding of waiver on the part of the insurer of performance of conditions.

4. INSURANCE ⊜670—CONSISTENCY OF FINDINGS.

A finding in an action by insured under a liability insurance policy that F., W., D., C., and B. were all acting as legal representatives of both the insured and the insurer, and were co-operating in the defense of an action under the terms of the policy, was not inconsistent with a further finding that F., insured's attorney, in making a motion for new trial, was representing the insurer and not the insured.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1071(1)—HARMLESS ERROR IN INCONSISTENT FINDINGS.

In an action on a liability insurance policy, that a finding that F., W., D., C., and B. were all acting as the legal representatives of both the insured and the insurer was inconsistent with a further finding that F. was representing the insurer and not the insured could not harm defendant.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1071(3)—HARMLESS ERROR IN FINDINGS OF FACT.

In an action on a liability insurance policy, insurer cannot complain that a finding that plaintiff had performed all the conditions of the policy was unsupported by the evidence, where the court also found upon ample evidence that insurer had waived any breach of conditions.

7. INSURANCE ⊂⊃435—LIABILITY INSURANCE; NEGLIGENCE OCCURRING PRIOR TO POLICY.

Where accident happened during the period of a liability insurance policy, insurer cannot claim that it was not liable, in that the negligence causing injury was in construction work done prior to the issuance of the policy.

8. INSURANCE ⊂⊃514—LIABILITY INSURANCE; PAYMENT OF LOSS BY CHECK.

Where insured in a liability insurance policy, after an accident sold his business under an agreement reciting that the judgment of an injured person was a lien upon the property, and that the balance due insured under the agreement should not be paid by the purchaser until such judgment and lien were fully satisfied of record, and the purchaser drew a check to insured with which insured, together with a small check of his own, paid the judgment, insured actually sustained loss and paid money in satisfaction of the judgment within the meaning of the insurance policy.

9. INDEMNITY ⊂⊃6—STRICT CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

A contract of indemnity is to be strictly construed, and measures the rights of the parties thereto.

10. INSURANCE ⊂⊃513, 598—LIABILITY INSURANCE; INTEREST ON JUDGMENT AS EXPENSE OR COST OF DEFENSE.

An insured who pays a judgment for the full amount limited in a liability policy indemnifying against actual loss, or a judgment for a smaller amount than such limited sum, can recover the sum with interest only from the time of such payment, but interest accruing on the judgment pending an appeal therefrom is not an expense or cost of defending the action.

11. INSURANCE ⊂⊃513 — LIABILITY INSURANCE; ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Insured in a liability insurance policy was not entitled to recover from insurer attorney's fees paid by him to his own attorneys, who participated in the defense of an action by injured person by permission of the insurer; insurer having furnished its own attorneys who defended the action.

12. VENUE ⊂⊃7—IN ACTION ON LIABILITY INSURANCE POLICY.

In view of Const. art. 12, § 16, and Civ. Code, § 1626, under an affidavit of an agent of a liability insurance company, that the policy was received by affiant in Tulare county by mail from the head office of the insurer at San Francisco, and affiant as agent of insurer personally delivered the policy to insured in Tulare county, and it was the practice and custom of insurer to pay its losses incurred in Tulare county by sending drafts to affiant, and affiant would thereupon deliver them personally to the beneficiaries, court could properly find that the contract was made in Tulare county and was to be performed therein, and could properly deny a motion for a change of venue to the county in which San Francisco is located.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by the Tulare County Power Company against the Pacific Surety Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Denson, Cooley & Denson and Cooley & Lachmund, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Middlecoff & Feemster, of Visalia, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was brought by plaintiff to recover upon a liability insurance policy, issued by defendant, dated June 18, 1913. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for $5,460, with interest and costs, from which judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

From the allegations of the complaint it appears that plaintiff was a California corporation doing business in the county of Tulare, and "between noon on the 16th day of June, 1913, and noon on the 16th day of June, 1914, was engaged in the business of operating and maintaining an electric light and power plant" in said county, together with extension lines and service connections, etc.; "that on said 18th day of June, 1913, said defendant made its contractor's public liability policy of accident insurance," a copy of which was attached to and made part of the complaint, to portions of which we shall hereinafter refer. It was further alleged and found that, "on the 18th day of June, 1913, said defendant delivered said policy of insurance to this plaintiff, and plaintiff paid the full amount of the premium provided for in said policy of insurance to said defendant." It was found that said premium was paid to defendant on or about the 3d day of January, 1914, "and defendant waived the payment thereof prior to such time, and waived any defense it had to said policy by reason of said premium not being paid prior to the time it was so paid."

On the 10th day of July, 1913, one L. C. Bergen was being furnished for hire by plaintiff with electricity for lighting and power on certain property in Tulare county, and "in order to use said power said L. C. Bergen maintained on said lots a well for irrigating purposes, and an electric motor and pump and pumphouse"; that plaintiff had erected along the south line of said premises a line of poles and a system of wires known as "primary" wires, "charged with a dangerous and life-destroying force and current of electricity, * * * to wit, 6,600 volts"; that the motor was to be operated by 220 volts and the lights by 110 volts; that, to reduce said

6,600 volts to 220 and 110 volts, respectively, transformers and ground wires were "supplied, furnished, installed, and erected at said pumping plant" by plaintiff, the system of wires, switches, etc., being known as "secondary" wires. On said 10th of July, 1913, said Bergen descended into the pit in which said pump was located for the purpose of inspecting said pumping plant; at that time "there was a dangerous, unusual, and excessive current of electricity passing from said 'primary' wires and into the drop cord and electric light which hung in the pit of said pumping plant, * * * rendering said drop wire and electric light highly dangerous to handle, and that this dangerous condition was at said time unknown to said Bergen and unknown to this plaintiff." Bergen came in contact with the drop wire and light and was instantly killed, without any fault on his part.

It was alleged in the complaint and found by the court that "upon the occurrence of said accident, and as soon thereafter as plaintiff was informed that a claim was made against plaintiff on account of said accident, plaintiff did, to wit, on the 16th day of September, 1913, give immediate written notice thereof, with the fullest information obtainable at the time, to the defendant's head office at San Francisco, and at the same time by the said notice gave like notice of the making of said claim on account of said accident." The notice above referred to was in the form of a letter, signed by Drew & Drew, attorneys, Fresno, addressed to the defendant at San Francisco, and read as follows:

"You are hereby notified that on September 3, 1913, Mrs. Sarah E. Bergen, as administratrix of the estate of L. C. Bergen, deceased, has through her attorneys * * * made a claim against the Tulare County Power Company [assured under policies Nos. C. P. 2347 and C. E. 4212], for and on behalf of herself and the minor children of said deceased [naming them] for the death of said L. C. Bergen, claiming that the death of said deceased was caused by coming in contact with a drop cord in the pit of the pumping plant belonging to the deceased. The attorneys have not made claim for any particular amount. We are serving this notice on your company under the provisions of your policy. Mr. Bergen met his death some time in July, but this is the first direct intimation that we have of any claim against the company for his death."

On September 17, 1913, the defendant replied to the above letter as follows:

"You are hereby advised that the above policies have been canceled upon the books of this company by reason of the nonpayment of premiums thereunder, and that the same have been void and of no effect from date of issue."

On December 8, 1913, Sarah E. Bergen, as administratrix of the estate of L. C. Bergen, deceased, commenced an action against plaintiff, in the superior court of the county of Tulare, in which she asked for $50,000 damages on account of the death of her husband. Summons was duly issued, and a copy of the complaint and summons was served on plaintiff, and on December 11, 1913, plaintiff forwarded to defendant, at San Francisco, said summons and complaint. On December 27, 1913, defendant wrote the following letter to Messrs. Holley & Holley, Visalia:

"In rel: L. C. Bergen v. Tulare County Power Co. Our Mr. W. B. Renton has made a thorough investigation of the facts surrounding the nonpayment of premium in this case and this office is in receipt of his report thereon, in view of which this company will, upon receipt of the Tulare County Power Company's check for earned premium in the amount of $572.08 due from 6/16/13 to 9/16/13, be pleased to reinstate this policy without prejudice. We inclose bill for this amount. For this purpose, we will ask you to have assured return to us at once the papers in the case."

On December 29, 1913, Holley & Holley wrote plaintiff as follows:

"I have received a letter from the Pacific Surety Company this morning offering to reinstate the liability policies in that company which were written and effective June 16, 1913, and which were canceled for nonpayment, upon the payment of the earned premium from June 16th to September 16th. As I understand it, this contemplates the assumption of all liability under these policies from the date of their issuance, including the case of L. C. Bergen v. Your Company which has been filed for action, on which case the Pacific Surety Company formerly denied liability. * * * You will understand that if you accept the proposition, you will be relieved of all expense in connection with the defense of this case of Bergen's."

Upon receipt of said last-mentioned letter, plaintiff paid to defendant the amount of premium demanded by it. On March 3, 1914, defendant wrote plaintiff:

"This letter will serve to notify you that policy No. CP–2374, issued to you on June 16, 1913, and subsequently canceled, has been reinstated as of the date of issue, and is in full force and effect."

It was then found that thereupon plaintiff rendered to defendant all assistance in plaintiff's power in the protection of its interest; that defendant, in the name of plaintiff and on its behalf, filed an answer to the Bergen complaint; that a trial of said action was had, and judgment was given therein in favor of the administratrix for the sum of $12,500 and $160 costs. Further facts, appearing from the record, will be adverted to in the discussion of the points raised upon the appeal.

[1] 1. It is first contended by appellant that plaintiff failed to perform the first condition of the policy, namely, "Upon the occurrence of an accident, the assured shall give immediate written notice thereof with the fullest information obtainable at the time," and that plaintiff failed to give immediate notice of the claim "with full particulars," as required by the policy.

The court found "that the defendant waived any defense which it had herein by reason of the failure and neglect of said plaintiff to give immediate written notice of said accident."

We think this point is disposed of in favor of plaintiff by the case of J. Frank & Co. v. New Amsterdam C. Co., 175 Cal. 293, on page 298, 165 Pac. 927, on page 930, where it is said:

"Of course the conditions of the policy requiring notice to the home office of probable liability are intended primarily to afford opportunity to the insurer promptly to take charge of a defense. Such requirements are reasonable and just, but they are waived when, as in this case, the insurer actually does assume control of the litigation growing out of the accident."

2. It is claimed "that plaintiff violated condition 2 of the policy, in that it took complete control of one of the legal proceedings in the Bergen litigation, namely, the motion for new trial, and did not even notify us of the date of the hearing of the motion."

The following facts were stipulated to by the respective parties at the trial:

"That at the time of hearing of the motion for new trial in the Bergen Case, Denson, Cooley & Denson, E. I. Feemster, and A. E. Cooley were acting as attorneys on behalf of the defendant in said action, and that no notice of the time of said hearing was given by said E. I. Feemster, to Denson, Cooley & Denson, or to A. E. Cooley, and that neither Denson, Cooley & Denson nor A. E. Cooley took part in the argument of said motion for new trial, but said motion for new trial was argued for the defendant in said action solely by said E. I. Feemster; that the reason that E. I. Feemster did not notify Denson, Cooley & Denson or A. E. Cooley of the time set for the hearing of said motion for new trial was that he believed it would be a useless tax upon the time of said A. E. Cooley to go to Visalia from San Francisco for that purpose, and that said E. I. Feemster believed that the trial court would refuse the motion for new trial and pass the matter up to the appellate court for decision."

As seen, the action of Bergen v. Tulare County Power Co. was commenced on December 8, 1913, and the summons and complaint were sent to the surety company on December 11th. Between that date and the 27th of December, defendant was denying any liability on account of the death of Bergen. Before the date when the defendant announced that it would defend the action, the power company had appeared therein and filed a demurrer to the complaint. On January 17, 1914, Denson, Cooley & Denson of San Francisco, by A. E. Cooley, wrote to Feemster & Walker, at Visalia, the attorneys for the power company, suggesting that an amended demurrer to the complaint be filed, and stating, "We shall be glad to co-operate in every manner in the defense of this action." An amended demurrer was filed and overruled and an answer was filed on behalf of the defendant by "Feemster & Walker, Denson, Cooley & Denson, Attorneys for Defendant." Mr. Cooley was present and participated in the trial, and the decision of the Supreme Court (173 Cal. 709, 161 Pac. 269) shows him to have been one of the attorneys for the appellant on the appeal.

In Williams v. Harter, 121 Cal. 47, 52, 53 Pac. 405, the appellant made the point that the trial court arbitrarily denied his motion for a new trial without hearing or considering the grounds urged in support thereof. The Supreme Court refused to consider the point because not properly brought before it, but said, "Besides, the real and only question is, Did the court err in denying the motion?"

The Supreme Court having affirmed the judgment in the Bergen Case, we think, under the authority of the above-cited case, that it becomes immaterial whether Denson, Cooley & Denson were notified of the date set for the hearing of the motion for new trial.

[2] 3. It is next urged that "no waiver of breach of conditions was proved, and none could have been under a complaint alleging due performance by plaintiff of all conditions of the policy." In this connection, the allegations of the complaint, which the court found to be true, were:

"And this plaintiff has duly performed all the conditions of said policy of insurance upon its part to be performed. That defendant herein through its own attorneys and counselors at law controlled all said legal proceedings, and had charge of the trial of said action, and tried the same. And this plaintiff alleges that by reason of the facts herein alleged the defendant waived and excused any further notice of said accident, and waived any and all defenses it might have had herein."

In J. Frank & Co. v. New Amsterdam C. Co., supra, it is stated in a syllabus:

"When an insurance company, with full knowledge of all the facts, enters into negotiations and relations with the assured, recognizing the continued validity of the policy, the right to a forfeiture for any previous default which may be asserted is waived."

In Rodgers v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co., 33 Cal. App. 70, 164 Pac. 1115, it was also held that—

"Where an insurance company * * * takes charge of and assumes exclusive control of an action brought against the insured for damages for injuries from * * * an accident, it recognizes a liability, if it fails to defend successfully, to pay the assured the amount of the judgment not exceeding the amount stipulated in the policy."

Appellant attempts to distinguish those cases from the one at bar, because here the insurance company did not have, while in the cited cases it did have, "full and exclusive control" of the litigation. In the Frank Case the attorney for the insurance company invited the attorney for the insured to participate in the preparation and trial of the case, but he refused to do so. In the present case, Mr. Cooley, in the letter to plaintiff's attorneys, suggesting that an amended demurrer to the complaint be filed, wrote:

"Inasmuch as the plaintiff has sued for very much more than the policy limit of the Pacific Surety Company, we presume the defendant will want to employ its own attorneys to represent it in the trial of the action. This is customary, and permission is always granted by the Pacific Surety Company to the assured to do so."

The attorneys for the power company consented to act, and thereafter did act, in conjunction with the attorneys for the surety company in the conduct of the case. Aside from the matter of the argument of the motion for new trial, appellant makes no claim that plaintiff's attorneys interfered with their conduct of the defense in the Bergen Case. While appellant's attorneys may not have had "full and exclusive control" thereof, the absence of any complaint that the defense was interfered with by plaintiff's attorneys would seem to indicate that the point now made is without merit.

Appellant cites Todd v. Union Cas. & Surety Co., 70 App. Div. 52, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1062, wherein it is stated:

"If he [the plaintiff] has performed, then that fact must be alleged without qualification. If he has not performed, for the reason that defendant waived performance, then the conditions waived and the facts and circumstances constituting such waiver must be alleged."

Peek v. Steinberg, 163 Cal. 127, 133, 124 Pac. 834, is also cited to the same effect. As seen, in the present case, both the fact of performance and the fact of waiver, "with the facts and circumstances constituting such waiver," were alleged.

[3] "The findings of the trial court are to receive such a construction as will uphold rather than defeat its judgment." Haller v. Yolo Water & Power Co., 34 Cal. App. 317, 167 Pac. 197. The finding that plaintiff "performed all the conditions of said policy" may be considered as surplusage, as the evidence fully justifies the further finding of waiver on the part of defendant, and this disposes of the further contention of appellant that said findings are inconsistent.

[4, 5] 4. Appellant complains that the finding that "Feemster & Walker, Denson, Cooley & Denson, and Chas. E. Bush, Esq., were all acting as the legal representatives of both said Tulare County Power Company and Pacific Surety Company, and were co-operating in the defense of said action under the terms of said insurance policy," is inconsistent with the further finding that E. I. Feemster, in making the motion for new trial, "was representing the Pacific Surety Company, and not the Tulare County Power Company." We cannot see that these findings are inconsistent, but if it be conceded that they are, we do not perceive how any harm could have resulted to the defendant therefrom.

[6] 5. The point is made that there is no evidence supporting certain of the findings essential to the support of the judgment. The findings referred to we have already considered in connection with the consideration of other points urged as grounds upon which a reversal of the judgment should be ordered. We will not enter herein upon an analytical examination of the evidence for the purpose of showing, as easily it may thus be shown, that there is no merit in this point. It is enough to say that there is but one of the findings of which it is asserted that there is no evidence to support them which might justly be held to be amenable to that criticism, and that finding is the one to the effect that plaintiff had performed all the conditions of said insurance policy imposed upon it; but as to that finding it is, as above suggested, immaterial whether it does or does not derive support from the evidence, since the court also found, upon ample evidence, that the defendant had waived any breach of any of the conditions of the insurance policy of which the plaintiff might have been guilty, and also waived any defense which might have been based upon any such breach.

[7] 6. It is next argued that "the policy did not cover this accident because no premium was received based upon the compensation paid the employés of plaintiff who negligently installed the Bergen plant." The argument is that the installation of the wires on the Bergen plant "was made three months prior to the accident and the premium was based upon the pay roll from June 16, 1913: * * * that none of the compensation paid prior to the issuance of the policy entered into the computation of the premium. No consideration passed from plaintiff to defendant to cover insurance for negligence occurring prior to the issuance of the policy."

The policy agreed to indemnify the assured "against loss or expense arising or resulting from claims upon the assured for damages on account of bodily injuries, including death therefrom, accidentally suffered, or alleged to have been suffered, during the period of this policy, by any person or persons not employed by the assured by reason of the operation of the business described in the schedule

* * * when such injuries or death result from accident occurring within the period hereinafter mentioned."

The accident in question happened "during the period of this policy," and we think it entirely immaterial that the installation of the wires which caused the accident occurred two months prior to the issuance of the policy. Nor is it material that defendant, as is the claim, may not have learned of the date of the installation of the plant until after the trial of the Bergen Case. The fact, if known to the defendant before the trial, could not have excused the power company from liability for the accident, and could have availed defendant nothing, because its liability was for accidents occurring during the life of the policy.

[8] 7. Section 3 of the policy reads as follows:

"No action shall lie against the company for any recovery under this policy, unless it shall be brought by the assured for loss or expense actually sustained and paid in money by the assured in satisfaction of a judgment after actual trial of the issue, nor unless such action be brought within one year after such payment."

There was introduced in evidence an agreement, of date June 30, 1915, between Tulare County Power Company and Mt. Whitney Power & Electric Company, supplemented by an agreement of August 2, 1915, whereby said Mt. Whitney Company purchased the properties of the Tulare County Power Company, and wherein it was recited that the judgment in the Bergen Case was a lien upon said properties and that the balance due the Tulare Company under said agreement of sale should not be paid by the Mt. Whitney Company until said judgment and lien had been fully satisfied of record.

It appeared that the Mt. Whitney Company paid $14,000 of the Bergen judgment and the Tulare Company paid $1,036.10 thereof. It is claimed by appellant that this payment by the latter company does not constitute the payment provided in said section 3 of the policy.

Appellant cites Philadelphia Pickling Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 89 N. J. Law, 330, 98 Atl. 433. There a policy of insurance was issued by the defendant to "Philadelphia Pickling Company," which was in reality Sallie Wittenberg, she having adopted that trade-name. One Chambers, an employé, was injured in the assured's factory, and brought suit and recovered judgment. After the verdict and before final judgment, Sallie Wittenberg transferred her business to the plaintiff, Philadelphia Pickling Company, a corporation, which took over the assets and assumed the liabilities of the trade-name, including the Chambers claim. The policy was attempted to be passed by a parol transfer and delivery, but at the time of the incorporation of the plaintiff the policy had expired. The corporation paid the Chambers judgment, and brought the action against the surety company to recover the money paid. Said the court:

"Clearly the appellant cannot recover as the assured under the policy. The difficulty, however, is this: Sallie Wittenberg never suffered any loss. She never paid any money. The money that was paid was paid by the present appellant, the Philadelphia Pickling Company, Incorporated. * * * There was no loss under the policy. While it is true Sallie Wittenberg had assigned her cause of action, she could not assign any loss, for she had already had that loss made good to her by the Philadelphia Pickling Company, not by way of indemnity, but as a part of the purchase price of the property."

The facts in the case at bar differ from those in the above case in the following particulars: The assured here did suffer loss; there was loss under the policy; the assured did not assign its cause of action, but itself prosecuted the suit. The check of the Mt. Whitney Company for $14,000 was drawn to the order of plaintiff, and bore the indorsement that it was in full satisfaction of the Bergen lien. This check, together with one of the plaintiff for $1,036.10, was delivered to the county clerk and by him to Mrs. Bergen. It is said, in J. Frank & Co. v. New Amsterdam C. Co., supra:

"It is therefore immaterial to the insurance carrier how or when that corporation [plaintiff] obtained the money or the credit which enabled it to pay Cousins [judgment creditor] the amount due."

And it was said, in Rodgers v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co., supra, that when the judgment against the assured became final the liability of the insurer became fixed, and it would have been competent for the assured to assign her claim against the insurer to the judgment creditor in satisfaction of the judgment. We can see no merit in the point under discussion.

[9, 10] 8. Appellant contends that the court erred in allowing interest from the date of the entry of the Bergen judgment and in allowing plaintiff's attorney's fees. This contention must be sustained. A contract of indemnity is to be strictly construed, and the contract of indemnity measures the rights of the parties thereto, and, consequently, the liability of the indemnitor. The defendant here agreed to indemnify the plaintiff "against loss or expense arising or resulting from claims upon the assured for damages," etc., to the extent of $5,000 in the case of bodily injuries or death to one person, etc. In addition, the indemnitor agreed that, in the event of any suit brought against the assured to enforce a claim for damages covered by the policy, it "will defend such suit, whether groundless or not, in the name and on behalf of the insured," and that "the expenses incurred by the company in defending such suit, including costs, if any, taxed against the assured, will be borne by the company whether the judgment is for or against the assured."

It is claimed by the respondent that interest upon the judgment is a part of the costs or expenses of the litigation. But this cannot be so. The "costs" referred to in the contract of indemnity refer to the costs of defending the suit for the recovery of damages against the assured, and certainly it cannot reasonably be said that interest on the judgment recovered against the assured is any part of the cost necessarily incurred or to be incurred in defending the action in which said judgment was obtained. As stated, the assured is bound by the limitation as to reimbursement prescribed by the contract of indemnity, and obviously the allowance of interest on the judgment from the date of its entry and pending the appeal therefrom would result in extending the liability of the indemnitor beyond the amount to which the contract of indemnity expressly limits such liability. This conclusion as to interest is supported by the cases generally.

In Maryland Casualty Co. v. Omaha Electric L. & P. Co., 157 Fed. 514, 519, 85 C. C. A. 106, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth District, considering the precise point under discussion in an action on bond such as the one involved herein, said:

"Is the interest accrued after the original judgment was rendered, and pending the appeal in the Supreme Court, an expense or outlay incident to defending the suit, and when paid by the assured does it constitute a loss within the meaning of the policy? In answering this question we must not forget that the matter resides in the domain of contract, and that the contract measures the rights of the parties. They agreed that defendant's limit of liability should be $5,000, except as it might be increased by failure on its part to pay the cost of making the defense. The interest, in our opinion, is not a part of such cost. It may be remotely related to the delay occasioned by making a defense, in that if no appeal had been prosecuted and no supersedeas secured, the judgment as an indirect result would probably have been paid, and no interest would have accrued. But this is a forced and unnatural view to take. An agreement to pay the cost of making a defense in the common and well-understood acceptance of the term fairly and reasonably contemplates the attorney's fees, court costs, stenographer's fees, and other expenditures necessary and directly required to present the defense, and does not include the collateral and indirect results of doing so."

See, also, Pacific Coast Casualty Co. v. General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co., 240 Fed. 36, 153 C. C. A. 72, 77; Davison v. Maryland Casualty Co., 197 Mass. 167, 83 N. E. 407; Munro v. Maryland Casualty Co., 48 Misc. Rep. 183, 96 N. Y. Supp. 705; National & Providence Worsted Mills v. Frankfort Marine & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 28 R. I. 126, 66 Atl. 58; Stephens v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 135 Mich. 189, 97 N. W. 686, 3 Ann. Cas. 478.

The sum of the rule as to interest in such cases is this: That an assured who pays a judgment for the full amount limited in a liability policy indemnifying against actual loss, or a judgment for a smaller amount than such limited sum, can recover the sum with interest only from the time of such payment, but that interest accruing on the judgment pending an appeal therefrom is not an expense of defending the action. The case of Saratoga Trap Rock Co. v. Standard Accident Ins. Co., 143 App. Div. 852, 128 N. Y. Supp. 822, sets forth and elaborately examines the reasons for the disallowance of interest upon a judgment pending an appeal therefrom or before the judgment has become final (which occurs only when the judgment has been affirmed by the appellate court) in a case, like the one involved herein, in which a security company has bound itself to indemnify the judgment debtor against loss by reason of such judgment. The case is an instructive one on the proposition, but it is not necessary to do more than refer to it herein.

Counsel for respondent declare that interest ought to be allowed upon the judgment for the reason that the defendant, by exercising its right of appeal in the Bergen Case, delayed the payment of the judgment and thus permitted the interest to accumulate thereon. A similar position was taken in Maryland Casualty Co. v. Omaha Electric L. & P. Co., 157 Fed. 514, 85 C. C. A. 106, and was disposed of by the court in said case as follows:

"The argument of plaintiff's counsel that the defendant, by exercising its right of appeal, and by superseding the execution of the judgment pending that appeal, caused the accumulation of interest in question, and thereby created an additional charge against the plaintiff for which it should be held responsible as a loss to the plaintiff, is more specious than sound. The fallacy rests in a failure to recognize the advantage which the appeal gave the plaintiff. By reason of it plaintiff was permitted to retain and use the $5,000, which otherwise would have been paid out by it. The value of the use is equal to the accrued interest, that being only a consideration paid for the use of money or for forbearance in demanding it when due. Accordingly the assured lost nothing by the delay occasioned by the appeal or by paying the interest which accumulated pending the appeal. The assured stood after paying the interest exactly as it would have stood if it had paid the judgment of $5,000 on January 3, 1902, when originally rendered. Nothing was lost by the appeal, as the interest ultimately paid was neutralized by the use and enjoyment of the money before that time."

The judgment in the Bergen Case was rendered and entered on the 23d day of May, 1914, and was paid by the plaintiff herein on February 1, 1917. It follows that interest on the judgment between those dates is not recoverable by plaintiff.

[11] The attorney's fee of $250, awarded by the judgment to plaintiff's attorneys should not be allowed. The fact is that the surety company notified plaintiff that it would defend the Bergen action and did defend it, and the participation therein by plaintiff's attorneys was by defendant's permission, and was not required by the terms of the policy. Indeed, the evidence clearly enough shows that the part taken in said action by the attorneys for the plaintiff were wholly voluntary and gratuitous on their part. Moreover, in a letter of January 17, 1914, to Feemster & Walker, attorneys of the plaintiff, Mr. Cooley, one of defendant's attorneys, wrote that the expense of plaintiff's attorneys was "to be borne by the assured."

[12] 9. It is lastly contended that the court erred in denying defendants' motion for a change of venue. The affidavits upon which the motion was made showed that defendant was a resident of and had its principal place of business in San Fransisco; that the insurance policy was made and countersigned in San Francisco and was to be performed there; that it was customary amongst insurance companies to make payments to the persons insured at the home office, or principal office, of such companies. Respondent contends that the action was properly tried in Tulare county because the contract was made and was to be performed, the liability sued on arose and the breach occurred in said county. Const. art. 12, § 16. Section 1626 of the Civil Code reads:

"A contract in writing takes effect upon its delivery to the party in whose favor it is made, or to his agent."

In answer to the affidavit made on behalf of defendant on the application to change the place of trial, H. H. Holley deposed as follows:

"That at the time of the execution and delivery of the policy No. C. P. 2374, * * * affiant was the agent of defendant Pacific Surety Company, through whom said policy was solicited and delivered; that said policy was received by affiant in Visalia, Tulare county, by mail from the head office of said defendant, and affiant acting as the agent of defendant personally delivered said policy to said plaintiff in Tulare county; and during the time affiant was the agent of said defendant, it was the practice and custom of defendant to pay its losses occurring in Tulare county by sending drafts to affiant, as its local agent, and affiant would thereupon deliver said drafts personally to the beneficiaries of defendant's policies, who suffered losses."

It is true that a different state of facts was set up in the affidavits filed by defendant, but the court did not hold with it. Under the authority of Ivey v. Kern County Land Co., 115 Cal. 196, 201, 46 Pac. 926, the court was justified in finding, from the facts set forth in the Holley affidavit, that the contract was made in Tulare county, and was to be performed therein. The business of plaintiff was conducted in that county, and the liability of the defendant under the policy arose therein.

The judgment should be modified by eliminating therefrom the sum of $250, attorney's fees, and the sum of $1,017.80, interest on the sum of $5,460 from May 23, 1914, to February 1, 1917, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court In Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District is denied.

In so far as the claim of interference by the respondent in the matter of the motion for new trial is concerned, we base our denial of a hearing in this court upon the finding of the trial court substantially to the effect that Mr. Feemster represented appellant. which we believe under all the circumstances shown by the record to be sufficiently supported by the evidence.

All concur.

On application for a writ of prohibition to prevent a receiver from selling a certain apricot crop, title to which was in dispute, the ownership of the fruit cannot be decided, where it appears that the court had jurisdiction to appoint the receiver.

2. RECEIVERS ⊂=2—RETROACTIVE EFFECT OF AMENDMENT OF STATUTE EMPOWERING APPOINTMENT.

The amendment of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 251) to Code Civ. Proc. § 564, adding subdivision 6, which provides that a receiver may be appointed in unlawful detainer, where the superior court has exclusive original jurisdiction, not being a change of remedy merely, is not retroactive.

3. RECEIVERS ⊂⊃4, 16—PRESERVATION OF PERISHABLE PROPERTY AS GROUND FOR APPOINTMENT.

Where title to perishable property is in litigation, and it appears that plaintiff has an interest therein which is reasonably certain, the court may appoint a receiver, and an action to recover possession of leased property involving ownership of apricot crop, came under Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 7, providing for such appointment "in all other cases where receivers have been appointed by the usages of courts of equity."

4. PROHIBITION ⊂⊃3(1), 10(1)—PURPOSE AND FUNCTIONS OF WRIT.

The sole function of a writ of prohibition is to arrest or prevent the prosecution of proceedings before, or to be taken by, any tribunal, board, or corporation, whether exercising judicial or ministerial functions, when such proceedings are without, or in excess of, jurisdiction, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1102, and the writ will issue only where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, as provided by section 1103, and cannot be used to undo something which has already been done; that being the function of the writ provided for in sections 1067 and 1068.

5. RECEIVERS ⊂⊃34—NONJOINDER OF SUBSEQUENT PURCHASER OF PROPERTY INVOLVED.

The jurisdiction of the court to appoint a receiver in a suit wherein the ownership of an apricot crop was involved is not affected by the fact that a subsequent purchaser of the crop from one of the litigants was not joined, and had no opportunity to protest against the appointment.

6. PROHIBITION ⊂⊃3(1)—EXISTENCE OF REMEDY BY INTERVENTION.

Where a dispute has arisen between a landlord and a tenant as to the ownership of an apricot crop, wherein a receiver has been appointed, a subsequent purchaser of the crop from the tenant, having obtained knowledge of the action, could have intervened and have his rights litigated and adjudicated, hence was not without adequate and sufficiently speedy legal remedy, entitling him to writ of prohibition.

7. PROHIBITION ⊂⊃3(1)—EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY.

Where, in a controversy between a landlord and a tenant over the possession of an apricot crop, a receiver has been appointed to take charge of the crop, a subsequent purchaser thereof could have sued the receiver and his bondsmen in conversion, or claim and delivery, or for damages for its wrongful taking and appropriation, hence was not without an adequate, speedy, legal remedy, entitling him to writ of prohibition.

Original Application by T. Takeba against the Superior Court in and for the County of San Joaquin and others, for a writ of prohibition to require restoration of property. Writ denied.

W. Goodwin Williams and John R. Cronin, both of Stockton, G. M. Steele, of Lodi, and George F. McNoble, of Stockton, for petitioner.

Wm. E. Kleinsorge and Elliott & Atkinson, all of Sacramento, Clarence E. Fleming, of Los Angeles, and Arthur L. Levinsky, of Stockton, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an original application for a writ of prohibition. The petition alleges as follows:

That there is pending in the superior court in and for the county of San Joaquin, before Hon. George F. Buck, the judge thereof, an action in which Charles W. Mier is plaintiff and M. Mizushima is defendant. In the complaint in said action it is alleged: That plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of certain real property in the county of San Joaquin. That on the 4th day of November, 1918, Laura M. Eagan was the owner of said property; that she and defendant entered into a lease of said property, among the terms of said lease being the following: That the terms of the contract should apply only to the crops grown on said land during the season of 1918–1919. The tenant agreed to furnish all labor and supplies free of cost to the owner, and agreed properly to cultivate said land. All fruit grown upon the land was to be marketed in the name of the owner. Said lease contained the following covenant:

"It is further understood and agreed that should said owner sell the whole or any part of said ranch during the life of this agreement, and the purchaser is not willing to abide by the terms of this agreement, then said tenant will accept reasonable compensation for his labor up to that time performed on the whole or the portion of said ranch which may be sold. In case of disagreement as to the amount of compensation to which said tenant shall be entitled for said labor performed, each of the parties, said owner and said tenant, may select an arbitrator, and those two may select a third person and a decision of a majority of said three arbitrators shall be accepted as final and binding on the parties to this agreement."

It was then alleged in the complaint that defendant entered into possession of the land and was in possession thereof at the time of the commencement of the action. "That on the 2d day of May, 1919, said Laura M. Eagan sold and conveyed said above-described real property to the plaintiff herein and so notified said defendant in writing" on said day, that the plaintiff was not willing to abide by the terms of said lease, as provided in the portion of the lease above quoted, and that, on the 2d day of May, 1919, plaintiff and Laura M. Eagan tendered defendant the sum of $1,000 "for and as reasonable compensation for the labor of said defendant performed on said premises during the term of said lease," which tender defendant refused to accept; that, on the 3d of June, 1919, plaintiff notified defendant in writing of the appointment of an arbitrator and demanded that defendant appoint another, for the purpose of fixing the amount of compensation to be paid defendant for his labor, which defendant neglected and refused to do, and that, on said last-mentioned date, plaintiff caused to be served on defendant a notice to quit and surrender possession of said premises, which defendant refused; that approximately 30 acres of said land were planted to peach trees, and approximately 15 acres to apricot trees, and that the crop of apricots was ready to be harvested and was of the value of $4,500; that defendant wrongfully claims the ownership of said apricots, and that unless restrained he will sell and dispose of said crop. The prayer of the complaint was for judgment for restoration of the premises, and that defendant be ordered to surrender possession thereof upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for his labor; and that defendant be restrained from selling or disposing of said crop of apricots or committing any waste of the premises.

On the 11th day of June, 1919, the court issued a restraining order as prayed for in the complaint, and set the 16th day of June as the date upon which defendant might show cause why an injunction should not issue. On said last-named date, defendant filed an affidavit in opposition to the issuance of an injunction, a hearing was had upon the order to show cause, and the restraining order was dissolved. On the 29th day of July, 1919, defendant filed an answer in the action.

On August 8, 1919, an affidavit was filed in support of plaintiff's application to have a receiver for the premises appointed, and on August 11th defendant filed an affidavit in opposition thereto. On August 12, 1919, the court appointed E. A. Humphrey as receiver of said real property.

The petitioner herein, T. Takeba, on August 19, 1919, filed a petition in said action, in which it was alleged that, on the 18th of June, 1919, the defendant Mizushima had conveyed to one J. A. Ballantyne all his right, title, and interest in and to said crop of apricots, and that on June 24th said Ballantyne, for a good and valuable consideration, sold said crop of apricots to petitioner; that subsequent to the 24th of June, 1919, petitioner harvested and sold said crop of apricots; that there was a crop of peaches growing upon said land, which the receiver threatened to harvest. Petitioner asked that the court revoke or modify the order appointing receiver; that the receiver be directed to cease from interfering with petitioner in the harvesting of said crop of peaches; and that he surrender full possession and control to petitioner of said crop.

Said petition of T. Takeba came on for hearing in the superior court on the 22d day of August, 1919, and was by the court denied.

The petition for writ of prohibition was filed in this court on the 26th day of August, 1919, and, after setting out the proceedings above referred to, alleged that the receiver was in possession of and was harvesting said crop of peaches, and threatened to sell and dispose of the same; that petitioner had no knowledge of the application made for the appointment of said receiver, nor was he afforded any opportunity to be heard in opposition thereto. The prayer of the petition is for a writ of prohibition directed to the superior court of the county of San Joaquin and to the receiver to prohibit them from exercising any control over the property of petitioner, and that all property taken by respondents be restored to petitioner.

The petition here asks that the writ prayed for be made to run against the receiver as well as against the court appointing the receiver; but, as is said in Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 389, 24 Pac. 121, 137 (10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192):

"Property in the hands of a receiver is in the hands of the court. The receiver is the mere instrument of the court, and what he does the court does. It is the court, therefore, and not the receiver, which holds, administers, and disposes of the property in his hands; and so long as the property remains undisposed of, action by the court is necessary. * * * The writ runs to the court, and operates directly upon the court, but indirectly upon the receiver. If it is served upon the receiver, it is only that he may have timely notice that the proceedings of the court are arrested, and may stay his hand, as he is bound to do, having no power to act independently of the court, from which he derives all his authority."

The sole and only question to be determined in this proceeding is, manifestly, whether the respondent court stepped beyond its jurisdiction in appointing a receiver in the case of Mier v. Mizushima, mentioned above, and in taking, through the receiver so appointed, possession of the fruit referred to in the petition for this writ.

[1] Numerous affidavits have been filed herein touching the merits of the controversy; that is, affidavits addressed to the question as to the ownership of the fruit. But we cannot decide that controversy in this proceeding. If it appears that the court was within its jurisdiction under the law in appointing the receiver, then the inquiry, so far as this proceeding is concerned, is at an end.

Section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure enumerates, in as many different subdivisions thereof, a number of occasions upon which, upon a proper showing, the superior court may appoint a receiver. As said section read before an amendment thereof by the Legislature of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 251), whereby a new subdivision was added thereto, the only subdivision of said section from which the authority for the appointment of a receiver could be drawn in a case of the character of the one involved herein was subdivision 6. In 1919, however, the Legislature added to the section the following provision, numbered 6:

"In an action of unlawful detainer, in those cases in which the superior court has exclusive original jurisdiction."

The subdivision which, previous to said amendment, was numbered 6 is still retained in said section as No. 7.

The amendment above mentioned did not take effect until 90 days after the adjournment of the Legislature of 1919 (Const. art. 4, § 1. See page 204, Treadwell's Const.), which was on the 22d day of April, 1919. The action involved herein, in which the receiver was appointed, was instituted on June 10, 1919, which was before the amendment referred to went into effect.

[2] It is contended by the attorneys for the respondents that the said amendment of section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure, since it involves a change only in the matter of a remedy, is retroactive in its effect, and that therefore the respondent court acted, when appointing the receiver, within or under a provision of law expressly authorizing the appointment of a receiver in cases of unlawful detainer, of which said court has original jurisdiction, and that this is such a case. We are unable to coincide with that view. The power vested by the Codes in superior courts to appoint receivers in actions pending before them involves in its effect more than a mere remedy. Of course, the power is in a sense remedial, but in its exercise the substantive rights of the parties are necessarily dealt with. When exercised, it means the taking of property by the court from one who may turn out to be the rightful owner thereof, and transferring it, pro re nata, to an agent of the court vested with power to handle and dispose of it according as the court may direct for the purposes of the action in which such agent or receiver is appointed. There is no power vested in the courts more jealously guarded or safeguarded than this very power to appoint a receiver to take, for the court, the possession and control of the property of others, and this is because, as above suggested, the exercise of the power may mean the divesting the owner of his lawful right to remain in possession of his property. It is therefore obvious that, while the power to appoint a receiver is provisional and an ancillary remedy, its scope may go beyond that of a mere remedy and strike at the very substance of a person's property rights. It cannot therefore be well contended that a legislative amendment extending the power of the superior courts in the matter of appointing receivers or giving such courts the right to appoint an officer with the usual powers of such a representative of the court is retroactive. At the time the court made the appointment in this case, it was limited in its power to do so by the law as it then read. The Legislature having taken upon itself the right to name the cases in which a receiver may be appointed, its statute enumerating those cases is the measure of the power of the superior courts in that particular, and if the right to appoint a receiver in this case did not exist by virtue of the statute when the appointment was made, then it is very obvious that the court was without authority to make the order.

[3] But we think the respondent court was authorized to act in this case, upon a proper showing, of course, upon the provisions of what was formerly subdivision 6 of the Code section above named, but which is now, and has been since the above considered amendment of 1919, subdivision 7. It reads:

"In all other cases where receivers have heretofore been appointed by the usages of courts of equity"

Where the dispute in a litigation is as to the title to the property involved therein, and it is made satisfactorily to appear that the property is of such a character or is in such a situation as that it is likely to be lost or destroyed or greatly deteriorated in value in the hands of the party in possession before the merits of the controversy can be adjudicated, and a satisfactory showing is made that the plaintiff has some interest in the property, or that the plaintiff's right thereto or to some portion thereof is reasonably certain, the court may, in the exercise of its discretion, appoint a receiver to take custody of the property pending the litigation and the determination of the rights of the parties. This means of course, that the court itself may take possession or custody of the property and hold or dispose of it, according as the nature of the property or the exigencies of the situation with respect to it may require.

[4] That the court did not transcend its lawful authority in making the appointment cannot, it seems to us, for a moment be doubted. Whether the facts disclosed to the court on the application for the appointment of a receiver were such as legally to warrant it in putting in operation or applying its jurisdiction in that regard in the action involved herein presents another and an entirely different question, but one which we are precluded from inquiring into or reviewing in this proceeding. The sole function or office of the writ of prohibition is to arrest or prevent the prosecution of proceedings before or to be taken by any tribunal, corporation, board, or person whether exercising judicial or ministerial functions, when such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such tribunal, etc. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1102), and will issue only where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1103). Thus it is plain that the sole object of the writ is to prevent the taking of some action or the doing of some act on the part of an inferior tribunal, board, etc., which has not been done but which such tribunal or board or person threatens to do. Obviously, as the very name of the writ plainly implies, its object is not to undo something which has already been done. There is another writ whose specific office is to do that. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1067, 1068.

When the application was made for this writ, the very action to prevent which this writ was sought had already been done. The receiver had then been appointed, and the action of the respondent court in that particular had been fully completed. But the theory of the petitioner in applying for this writ was that the order appointing the receiver was void, and that, therefore, as was held in the Havemeyer Case, supra, the action of the receiver in taking the property and threatening to dispose of it constituted the action and the threatened action of the court which could be prevented through the operation of this writ. We hold, however, that the order appointing a receiver here was, under the law, within the jurisdiction of the court. In the Havemeyer Case, the respondent court, in a proceeding instituted by the Attorney General of the state in quo warranto against the American Sugar Refinery Company, a California corporation, to have the forfeiture of its charter declared, made an order appointing a receiver, and the Supreme Court held that the superior courts were wholly without the right or jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of a corporation in an action in quo warranto, the purpose of which is to cause its charter to be forfeited, and that, therefore, the appointment of a receiver in that case was void ab initio. Hence it was said in that case that it was proper to arrest and annul the action of the receiver done under that void order, the action of the receiver within the scope of his assumed powers as such being the action of the court. It was further said in that case (quoting from the syllabi):

"The operation of the writ of prohibition is primarily and principally preventive, rather than remedial, and is excluded when the action of the inferior tribunal is fully completed, and nothing remains to be done under its void order; but if its action is only partially and not fully completed, further proceedings may be stayed, and in such case the office of the writ is so far remedial that it will annul such prior proceedings as may be necessary to make the remedy complete."

Here, as before stated, the action of the court in appointing a receiver was fully completed, and when the receiver proceeded to exercise the functions or perform the duties of his receivership, by taking charge of the property, he was then acting under a lawful and not a void order of the court, and with full authority to do the things his office required of him. And so he has continued, as such receiver, to act in the premises in every step he has taken, so far as we are advised by the petition here. Obviously, this case is in no sense similar or analogous to the Havemeyer Case.

[5] The plea of the petitioner that he was not a party to the action of Mier v. Mizushima, that he had no knowledge of the application by the plaintiff for the appointment of a receiver, and had no opportunity to be heard in opposition to said application, reveals as to him, perhaps, an unfortunate situation but it does no more than that, so far as the present proceeding before us is concerned. The power of the court to appoint a receiver still existed, notwithstanding that he or other parties who might claim an interest in the property of which the receiver was authorized under his appointment to take possession were not made parties to that action. It may be, and probably is, true that at the time of the preparation and filing of the complaint in said action the plaintiff had no knowledge of any claim of petitioner to the fruit. In any event, as stated, the court's jurisdiction to appoint a receiver is in no wise affected by the fact that the petitioner was not a party to the suit, and was without opportunity to protest in court against the appointment of the receiver.

[6, 7] We may add, although the suggestion is wholly gratuitous so far as the requirements of the decision herein are concerned, that the petitioner is not without an adequate and sufficiently speedy legal remedy. In the first place, it may be observed that, having in some way obtained notice of the commencement of the action of Mier v. Mizushima (he filed a petition asking for the revocation of the order appointing a receiver), he could have intervened in that action, and therein had his rights litigated and adjudicated. And he still has remaining to him an action against the receiver and his bondsmen in conversion or claim and delivery for the return of the property or for damages or the value thereof, in case it cannot be returned, for the wrongful taking and appropriation thereof, assuming it to have been so taken and appropriated.

However, it is plain that the writ of prohibition is not the proper remedy for the correction of the action of the court in appointing the receiver in the action of Mier v. Mizushima, and the alternative writ or order to show cause must therefore be discharged; and it is so ordered.

We concur: ELLISON, Presiding Judge, pro tem.; BURNETT, J.

SWARTZ v. BURR et al. (Civ. 2160.)

1. EVIDENCE ⟸459(2) — PAROL EVIDENCE SHOWING OFFICER'S CONTRACT WAS FOR COMPANY.

Parol evidence may be invoked to hold a corporation upon a contract, entered into by its president or manager in his own name, if it was intended for and inured to the benefit of the corporation and there is anything on the face of the instrument suggesting that it was made for an undisclosed principal.

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸402—CONTRACT OF OFFICER.

The law is not scrupulously particular in discriminating between the contracts of one who owns practically all the stock of a corporation and controls its affairs, as to whether he executes a contract relating to the corporate business in his individual or in the corporate capacity.

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸79—CONTRACT BY OFFICER; SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit to recover money paid and to cancel a note given for corporate stock, evidence held to justify the finding that both plaintiff and the individual defendant, president and general manager of the corporation, made the contract for the transfer of the stock on the understanding that the individual defendant's voice was the voice of the company and that whatever he agreed to would bind the company.

4. CORPORATIONS ⟸79—KNOWLEDGE OF OFFICER'S CONTRACT.

A corporation is presumed to know of the execution, of a contract for the transfer of its stock on its behalf, by its president and general manager, the terms of the contract, and that itself was the recipient of the consideration.

5. CORPORATIONS ⟸79 — CONTRACT BY OFFICER; SUBJECTION OF COMPANY TO OPTION.

Where the president and general manager of a company on its behalf agreed to sell its stock to plaintiff, consummation of the executory contract and permanent transfer of the stock being dependent on the condition precedent that at expiration of one year plaintiff should elect to retain it, the corporation which had received the money paid and the note executed by plaintiff, with knowledge of the contract, held money and note subject to the exercise of plaintiff's option to retain the stock, not being able to accept benefits and repudiate obligations.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1011(1)—REVIEW OF FINDINGS.

The appellate court will not disturb the findings of the trial court sustained by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by E. F. Swartz against E. Burr and the Burr Creamery Company, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. G. Tyrrell, A. L. Abrahams, and Chas. W. Fricke, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Daly & Daly, of Long Beach, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover $3,000, and cancel a promissory note for $2,000, in pursuance of the terms of an agreement in writing as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 8th, 1913.

"This agreement entered into this 8th day of October, 1913, by and between E. F. Swartz, party of the first part of Fresno, Cal., and E. Burr, party of the second part of Los Angeles, California, witnesseth: That in consideration of the first party paying second party the sum of three thousand ($3,000.00), receipt of which is hereby acknowledged and note for two thousand dollars ($2,000.00), due on or before 15 months from date hereof, second party agrees and does hereby deliver to first party fifty shares of the capital stock of the Burr Creamery Company to be held for a period of one year by first party. If at the expiration of that time first party desires to sell said stock he agrees to sell only to second party who agrees to pay first party for same the sum of $5,000.00 with interest at 8 per cent. per annum. In the event first party is satisfied to remain a stockholder after a period of one year then he will participate in any and all dividends, improvements and increased assets of the corporation, share and share alike with other stockholders. E. F. Swartz.
"E. Burr."

It is alleged in the complaint, and the court on the trial found, that although this agreement was executed in the name of the defendant E. Burr, and ostensibly as his personal obligation, it was made for and as the contract of the defendant Burr Creamery Company, a corporation of which E. Burr was the president and general manager. Judgment was against the corporation.

[1] It has become a well-settled rule of evidence under the decisions in this state, at least, that parol evidence may be invoked to hold a corporation upon a contract entered into by its president or manager in his own name, if it was intended for and inured to the benefit of the corporation, and there is anything on the face of the instrument suggesting that it was made for an undisclosed principal. West v. Prather & Co., 7 Cal. App.

"Thus the rule is well settled that where a reading of a simple contract, however inartificially it may be drawn, discloses that it is executed for or on behalf of a principal. * * * or even leaves the matter one of doubt, parol evidence may be employed to determine whose contract it is, and this even in cases where the instrument is sufficiently clear in its terms to bind the agent."

The opinion further adopts with approval the following quotation, italicized as here shown, from Abbott's Trial Evidence:

"If upon the face of the instrument there are indications suggestive of agency, such as the addition of words of office or agency to the signature, or the imprint of the corporate title on the paper, parol evidence is competent to show whom the parties intended should be bound or benefited. And even where the contract bears no such suggestion on its face, the rule as now generally received is, that parol evidence is competent, either in favor of or against the corporation."

The same citation from Abbott's Trial Evidence is approved in Bean v. Pioneer Mining Co., 66 Cal. 451, 6 Pac. 86, 56 Am. Rep. 106.

The reference in the foregoing contract to the Burr Creamery Company as a possible party in interest is obscure at best. But it does appear that the stock involved is that of the Burr Creamery Company, that the delivery of the stock is something less than an executed transfer, and is to be held only for a year at the option of the purchaser, and that the right to participate in the dividends, improvements, and assets of the corporation, by virtue of said stock, is to be postponed until the purchaser has made his election to retain it. At any rate the trial court did admit parol evidence to explain the contents and execution of this instrument, to which no exception seems to have been taken; and the main question appears to be whether the evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings of the court that "E. Burr did not in any of the matters upon which this action is based act in an individual capacity, nor otherwise, except for and on behalf of the defendant corporation," and "that said agreement was authorized and ratified by said corporation, and it received and accepted and used for its corporate purpose all the benefits of said agreement." That the transaction was wholly for the benefit of the corporation is not disputed. The stock bargained for was the unissued stock of the company. The $3,000 payment was to the order of the corporation, and was used for its benefit, and the note for $2,000 was executed to the corporation, as payee, and the reservation of dividends and profits during the year in which the option was to be exercised inured to the corporation.

[2] That the plaintiff did not enter into this agreement with Burr in his individual capacity is not so clear. Nominally the transaction was with Burr personally. The only theory on which it can be held that the minds of the parties met on an obligation intended to bind the corporation is that Burr considered himself, in the negotiations, and was considered by plaintiff, as being the personification of the corporation. If the evidence had disclosed that this was a "one man corporation," and that Burr was the only person beneficially interested in it to any material extent, there would be no difficulty in maintaining this theory. The law is not scrupulously particular in discriminating between the contracts of one who practically owns all the stock of a corporation and controls its affairs, as to whether he executes a contract relating to the corporate business in his individual or in the corporate capacity. While such is not the situation here, so far as shown by the evidence, it does fairly appear that the defendant E. Burr not only was the president and manager of this company, but that he ran its affairs largely in his own discretion. The vice president of the company, who was a party to the negotiation of this agreement, represented to plaintiff that "Burr is the corporation." The fact that his name identifies the corporation, and that he is the only member or officer of the corporation connected, so far as the record discloses, with the defense of this action, tends to confirm such a conclusion.

[3, 4] It may reasonably be inferred from the evidence that both Burr and the plaintiff entered into this contract on the understanding that Burr's voice was the voice of the corporation, and that whatever he agreed to would bind the corporation. It may also be found, as a legal inference from Burr's relation to this company, that the corporation is presumed to know of the execution of this contract, and its terms, and that it was the recipient of the consideration. Goodwin v. Central Broadway Bldg. Co., 21 Cal. App. 376, 131 Pac. 896; Balfour v. Fresno Canal Co., 123 Cal. 397, 55 Pac. 1062; Montecito Valley Co. v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 597, 77 Pac. 1113; Anderson v. Kinley, 90 Iowa, 554, 58 N. W. 909.

This brings us to a consideration of the question as to whether there is anything in the terms of the agreement to put the corporation on inquiry as to its liability thereon, or to estop it from repudiating the agreement and retaining the consideration. The corporation had notice that this was a contract for the transfer of a block of its un-issued capital stock; that it had received the $3,000 cash payment, and that the note was made payable to it, in its corporate name; that while E. Burr is named as the "second party" to this agreement, and signs it in his individual name, the contract recites that this $3,000 which was paid the corporation was paid to the "second party" to the contract; and that the note which names the corporation as the payee was executed to the "second party." The corporation further knew that Burr was its president and manager, and had been intrusted by it with a large measure of discretionary control of its affairs.

[5, 6] Furthermore, it is indicated on the face of this contract that the sale of stock is in a sense not a completed, but an executory or conditional, sale. It recites that "said second party does hereby deliver to first party fifty shares of the capital stock of the Burr Creamery Company to be held for a period of one year by first party," with the condition that the second party may terminate the purchase at his option and receive his money back. And there is the further implied agreement that the corporation may retain all dividends and profits of the shares of stock until the election of the party of the first part to retain the stock. All of these conditions tend to identify the corporation as the party in interest designated as the "second party." If this appeared on the face of the agreement to be a completely executed sale of the shares of stock, and the consideration paid, with the only condition a condition subsequent—that if after a year the purchaser was dissatisfied E. Burr would repurchase the shares from him—doubtless the only remedy of the plaintiff would be on such new and independent contract to repurchase. But if the agreement for the sale of the stock to plaintiff can be considered executory, and its consummation dependent on the condition precedent that at the expiration of one year plaintiff elects to retain it, then the corporation which has received the money and the note, with knowledge of the contract, holds them subject to the exercise of plaintiff's option, and must repay the money, and cannot collect the note, but must surrender it for cancellation in the event plaintiff decides not to retain the stock. It cannot accept the benefits and repudiate the obligations. Pauly v. Pauly, 107 Cal. 8, 40 Pac. 29, 48 Am. St. Rep. 98. Such seems to have been the view taken by the trial court under the evidence. We will not disturb its findings. The contract not being an executed contract of sale, but merely one whereby plaintiff, in effect, was given the optional right either to purchase at the end of the year or to receive back that which the corporation had received from him through Burr, the case is in no wise analogous to those cases wherein the purchaser and owner of stock seeks to enforce a contract of resale by attempting to compel "B." to purchase the stock under a contract that was made with and in the name of "A."

The judgment is affirmed.

NORMAN B. LIVERMORE & CO. v. GUARDIAN CASUALTY & GUARANTY CO. (Civ. 2320.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸110—ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL NOT APPEALABLE.

An order denying a motion by plaintiff for a new trial cannot be appealed from.

2. HIGHWAYS ⟸113(5)—LIABILITY ON BOND OF CONTRACTOR ON STATE HIGHWAY.

A surety on a bond of a state highway contractor, made pursuant to the provisions of St. 1897, p. 201, amended by St. 1911, p. 1422, was not liable to one who leased a steam shovel to another, who furnished the shovel to a subcontractor, although it was agreed between the subcontractor and the one who furnished him the shovel and the lessor of the shovel that the the rent for the shovel should be paid to the lessor, and an order on the contractor was given by the subcontractor for the payment of the same; the contractor agreeing, but failing to pay the same to the lessor, and the one furnishing the shovel not being agent for the lessor under the circumstances.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by Norman B. Livermore & Co. against the Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Company. From a judgment in favor of the defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Appeal from order dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

W. E. Lady and V. J. Cobb, both of Los Angeles, and Arthur H. Redington, of San Francisco, for appellant.

James, Smith & McCarthy and Schweitzer & Hutton, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. [1] The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. As there is no right of appeal from such a motion, the latter appeal will be dismissed.

On the 6th day of April, 1915, Brashear-Burns Company, a corporation, as contractor, entered into an agreement with the California highway commission for the construction of a portion of the state highway in Orange county. At the same time and in connection therewith, the defendant Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Company, as surety, together with said contractor, as principal, executed a bond to the state for due payment to be made by the principal for all labor, materials, and supplies furnished for the work of construction under the principal contract. This bond was made pursuant to the provisions of an act approved March 27, 1897. Stats. 1897, p. 201, amended Stats. 1911, p. 1422.

On the 4th day of May, 1915, Brashear-Burns Company entered into a subcontract with W. S. Cook for the performance of work which was a part of the principal contract. Thereupon Cook entered into a contract with one W. F. McDowell whereby it was agreed that McDowell would furnish a certain steam shovel to be used in the performance of the work contracted to be done by Cook. That steam shovel was furnished and used in the performance of said work. Thereafter Brashear-Burns Company's contract with the state was duly completed and the work accepted. Thereafter, and within the period limited by said act of 1897, as amended in 1911, plaintiff filed a duly verified statement of claim, stating that such steam shovel was furnished by it to be used, and that the same was used, in the performance of the work contracted to be done by Cook under his contract with Brashear-Burns Company. This claim was filed with the California highway commission and conformed to the requirements of the statute. Thereupon the plaintiff, claiming to be a person coming within the class of persons for whose benefit said statutory bond was given, brought this action to recover from the defendant the amount so set forth in its verified statement of claim.

On the 2d day of March, 1914, the plaintiff entered into a written contract with W. F. McDowell concerning said steam shovel in substance as follows: It is stated in the instrument of contract that the plaintiff (therein called lessor) leased to McDowell (therein called lessee) the said steam shovel for a term ending February 5, 1915, for the total rental of $4,749, of which $750 was paid in cash on delivery of the steam shovel, and the remainder was to be paid in accordance with 10 installment notes of which the last was to fall due on the 5th day of February, 1915. It was further agreed as follows:

"Lessee covenants that it will keep said steam shovel in first-class repair and working order during the term of this lease; that it will not remove it from the state of California or assign this lease without the consent in writing of the lessor; and that it will, upon the termination of this lease, return and surrender possession of said steam shovel to lessor at San Francisco, Cal., in as good condition as when taken, ordinary wear and tear excepted. Lessor agrees that lessee may, at the expiration of this lease, and within 10 days thereafter, provided it shall have promptly and duly paid the entire rental herein specified, and shall have performed all the other conditions and covenants hereof, and shall have paid for all extra parts and repairs furnished or made by lessor during the time hereof, elect to purchase said steam shovel for the sum of one dollar, and if lessee so elects, and so notifies lessor, said steam shovel shall, upon payment of said sum, become and be the property of the lessee, and lessor will execute a bill of sale thereof. In case of any breach of this agreement by the lessee, arising by failure of said lessee to pay rent as the same becomes due, or otherwise, the lessor may, at his option, forthwith terminate this lease, and may enter upon the premises of the lessee and retake possession of the said steam shovel wherever found, and said lessee hereby agrees to said lessor's entry and retaking possession, and releases said lessor from any cause of action which the lessee might otherwise have on account of said entry or removal or retaking of possession."

It will be noted that in May, 1915, when McDowell agreed with Cook for the furnishing of the shovel to be used in the performance of the Cook contract, the specified term named in the contract between plaintiff and McDowell had expired. McDowell was then delinquent in his payment to plaintiff to the extent of more than one-half of the total rental or price therein named. The evidence further shows, however, that the plaintiff had made no attempt to interfere with McDowell's possession of the shovel and had not given any notice of termination of the lease or contract. Prior to this time, and while delinquent in payments on the contract, McDowell had used the shovel on two other contracts. In each of those instances he had made arrangements with the person by whom the shovel was used, whereby they made payments to the plaintiff for account of McDowell. That was done with the consent of the plaintiff, although it is not clear from the terms of the contract that any such consent was necessary. In like manner, when McDowell entered into his contract with Cook, it was made a part of their agreement that, during the time that the shovel was used upon that contract, the Brashear-Burns Company should deduct from the moneys payable to Cook the sum of $400 per month and pay the same to the plaintiff. Thereupon Cook, on the 5th day of May, 1915, executed a written order to Brashear-Burns Company, directing that it pay to the order of the plaintiff the sum of $400 per month during the time that the shovel was used on the said highway work, said payments to be charged against the money due Cook from Brashear-Burns Company. An acceptance of that order was indorsed thereon, on the same day, signed "Brashear-Burns Company, by F. J. Truman, Secretary." None of the moneys mentioned in this order were paid. The evidence shows without dispute that the reasonable value of the use of the shovel was $400 per month. The controversy herein relates, not to the amount of the claim, but goes to the question of any liability at all of the defendant as surety on said bond.

[2] The liability of defendant as surety on the bond executed by it cannot be maintained by plaintiff by proving that the shovel, used as it was in the described work, was furnished by McDowell; yet in fact that is the effect of the evidence, and we think there is no merit in appellant's contention that, in bringing the shovel to the place of work, for use therein, McDowell was acting as agent for the plaintiff. Counsel have debated the question whether the "lease" contract between plaintiff and McDowell was a lease or was a conditional sale. That question need not be decided. If the contract was one of conditional sale, it remained in force by manifest intention of the plaintiff, which had never demanded or attempted to recover possession. If the contract was only a "lease" or bailment, then McDowell was a bailee holding over after expiration of the time limited in the lease, and liable to his lessor as such bailee. Under either interpretation, he held possession of the shovel in his own right, and not as agent for the plaintiff. The evidence well supports the court's finding that it was not furnished to Cook by the plaintiff

The appeal from the order is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

FOX v. CRANE et al. (Civ. 2981.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸160—NEGOTIABILITY OF NOTE UNAFFECTED BY PROVISION AS TO ATTORNEY'S FEES.

In view of the change in the statute, so as to admit of a condition in a note with reference to attorney's fees, a note does not lose its negotiability by reason of a provision that, should suit be commenced or an attorney employed to enforce payment, the maker will pay an additional sum as attorney's fees in such suit, on the theory that attorney's fees were provided for, though suit was not brought.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸158—PROVISION FOR COMPOUNDING INTEREST DOES NOT AFFECT NEGOTIABILITY.

A provision in a note for one year for compounding interest after maturity does not impair the negotiability by introducing an element of uncertainty as to amount.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸338—ACQUISITION IN "USUAL COURSE OF BUSINESS."

As applied to commercial paper, the term "usual course of business" means the delivery for value under such circumstances that a business man of ordinary intelligence and capacity would give his money, goods, or credit for it, when offered for the purpose for which it is transferred.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Usual Course of Business.]

4. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸338—ACQUIREMENT IN DUE COURSE OF BUSINESS.

Where plaintiff, after consulting one of the makers, who assured him that the note was good and that he signed it, accepted it in exchange for real property, plaintiff acquired it in due course of business.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. M. Andrews, Judge.

Action by C. W. Fox against Alex T. Crane and others. From a judgment in favor of defendant Crane, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Sweet, Stearns & Forward, of San Diego, for appellant.

E. S. Torrance, of San Diego, for respondent Crane.

Eugene Ferry Smith, of San Diego, for respondent McKee.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought by plaintiff, appellant herein, to recover judgment on a promissory note for $5,000, dated May 13, 1913, executed by defendant Alex T. Crane, and made payable one year after date to the order of C. W. McKee and Kit Carson, defendants herein. Before maturity the note was indorsed and delivered to appellant, together with three other promissory notes; the four notes amounting to the sum of $14,500. These notes were transferred by defendant Crane to plaintiff in payment for certain real property situated in the city of San Diego. To secure their payment a declaration of trust was entered into by the parties, under which the property was conveyed to a certain trust company, to be held by it in trust and until the notes were paid, or to be sold by the company in the event of the nonpayment thereof. For failure to pay two of the notes when they became due, the trust company sold the real property as provided by the terms of the declaration of trust.

As a defense to the note sued upon, defendant claimed that it was nonnegotiable, and that he had been induced to execute the same through fraud on the part of the payees. Plaintiff claimed, however, that the note had been transferred to him before maturity, in due course, and for a valuable consideration, and that the defense of fraud could not be set up as against him. The trial court found the instrument to be negotiable, and that the plaintiff had acquired it before maturity, duly indorsed, in good faith, and without any notice, information, or knowledge whatever of any claim of defendant that he had any defense thereto, but further found that defendant was induced to sign it by fraud, and that plaintiff did not acquire it in the usual course of business or for a valuable consideration, and accordingly rendered judgment in favor of defendant Crane. Judgment went against Carson by default.

[1] The principal contention in the court below related to the question as to whether or not the instrument sued upon was a negotiable promissory note. Defendant claimed that it was nonnegotiable by reason of certain conditions therein contained. The finding of the trial court being against him upon this question he presents the same objection here.

The note reads as follows:

"$5,000.00 San Diego, Cal., May 13, 1913.

"On or before one year after date, for value received, we or either of us promise to pay to the order of C. W. McKee at the Merchants' National Bank of San Diego, the sum of $5,000.00, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from date until paid, payable annually, and if not so paid to be compounded and bear the same rate of interest as the principal, and should the interest not be paid when due then the whole sum of the principal and interest shall become immediately due and payable at the option of the holder of this note. All payable in U. S. gold coin, and should suit be commenced, or an attorney be employed to enforce the payment of the note, we agree to pay an additional sum of 1 per cent. on principal and accrued interest as attorney's fees in such suit. Alex T. Crane.

"Kit Carson."

Two reasons are urged by respondent in support of his contention that the note is not a negotiable instrument. The first of these is that the provision, "Should * * * an attorney be employed to enforce the payment of this note, we agree to pay an additional sum of 1 per cent. on principal and accrued interest as attorney's fees," brings about this result. This contention is based upon the construction given to a similar provision by our Supreme Court in Adams v. Seaman, 82 Cal. 636, 23 Pac. 53, 7 L. R. A. 224. Since the rendition of that decision the statute has been changed so as to admit of a condition with reference to attorney's fees. Considering the changed condition of the statute, we fail to see how the reasoning in that decision has any application to the instant case.

In Glen v. Rice, 174 Cal. 269, 162 Pac. 1020, the identical condition here involved was contained in the note there sued upon, and the note was held to be negotiable in form. It is claimed, however, that the objection here raised, viz. that the condition complained of admits of an interpretation that an attorney would be entitled to a fee, even though he did not bring suit, was not urged in that case, and for that reason the decision is not authority upon the question. The question of the character of the note was before the court, and was passed upon, and is decisive of this question.

[2] The second reason urged against negotiability of the note relates to the provision allowing compound interest after maturity; the presence of this provision being claimed to have this effect, in support of which contention we are cited to the cases of Cornish v. Wolverton, 32 Mont. 456, 81 Pac. 4, 108 Am. St. Rep. 598, Hegeler v. Comstock, 1 S. D. 138, 45 N. W. 335, 8 L. R. A. 393, Rudolph v. Hudson, 12 Okl. 516, 74 Pac. 946, and Bracken v. Fidelity Trust Co., 42 Okl. 118, 141 Pac. 6, L. R. A. 1915B, 1216. The note sued upon in Cornish v. Wolverton, supra, presents a different question. There the interest on the note was payable semiannually and the note did not mature for five years. In the instant case the interest was payable annually, and, as the note was payable one year from date, no interest would be due until the maturity of the note. Hegeler v. Comstock, supra, was not followed in the later case of Merrill v. Hurley, 6 S. D. 592, 62 N. W. 958, 55 Am. St. Rep. 859, and Rudolph v. Hudson, and Bracken v. Fidelity Trust Co. are both expressly overruled in the later case of Bank v. Gleichmann, 50 Okl. 441, 150 Pac. 908, L. R. A. 1915F, 1203. In the case last cited the cases are reviewed, and the conclusion reached that the decided weight of authority is to the effect that a provision in a note for an increased rate of interest after maturity, in case of default, does not introduce such uncertainty of amount into the instrument as to impair its negotiability. See, also, note in 125 Am. St. Rep. 204, and Glenn v. Rice, 174 Cal. 269, 162 Pac. 1020.

For the reasons given, we conclude that the court correctly determined that the note was negotiable.

[3, 4] We are of the further opinion, however, that the evidence fails to support the findings of the trial court that the appellant did not acquire the note in the ordinary course of business, and that he did not acquire it for value or pay a valuable consideration for the transfer and delivery thereof from McKee to himself. The evidence upon this subject is without conflict. Appellant owned and sold his land in San Diego to McKee for the sum of $15,000; $500 was paid in cash, and the balance by four promissory notes, two of which were signed by defendant McKee as maker, and the remaining two by defendants Crane and Carson, as makers, in favor of defendant McKee, and indorsed by him and delivered to plaintiff at the time the contract of purchase was made. No fraud on the part of plaintiff is charged. The evidence of defendant Crane himself affirmatively shows that plaintiff visited him and informed him of the transaction, and asked him if the notes were good, and was informed by Crane that they were and that he had signed them. Under these circumstances we fail to see how the notes were not acquired for value and in the usual course of business.

As applied to commercial paper, the term "in the usual course of business" means the delivery for value under such circumstances that a business man of ordinary intelligence and capacity would give his money, goods, or credit for it when offered for the purpose for which it was transferred. 2 Raad, Com. Paper, § 988. And one who receives a note in exchange for real property acquires it in the usual course of business. Cunningham v. Holmes, 66 Neb. 723, 92 N. W. 1023.

Here there is no claim, and the evidence presents no facts which show any fraud or lack of fair dealing on the part of plaintiff. He suffered a detriment by being deprived of a right to dispose of his land during the time the property was held in trust. We conclude, therefore, that the note was acquired by plaintiff for value, and in the usual course of business, and without any notice of fraud, and before its maturity.

For the reasons given, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

BRADFORD BAKING CO. v. WEBER BAKING CO. (Civ. 3034.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 14, 1919.)

1. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⟸71—CONTROL OF USE TO PROMOTE UNFAIR COMPETITION.

A name or mark of such nature that no one may acquire an exclusive right to its use, and which cannot become a trade-mark, may become a trade-name, and the use of it to promote unfair competition may be prevented or redressed.

2. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⟸93(3)—EVIDENCE SHOWING UNFAIR COMPETITION OF DEFENDANT.

Under admission of allegations of plaintiff's complaint and exhibits in evidence, held, that the court should have found that plaintiff had acquired the right to the use of the term "German Toast" as a trade-name for its bread as against the defendant, and that defendant was guilty of unfair competition in the use of the term upon labels upon its bread.

3. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⟸84—ABANDONMENT OF ILLEGAL USE NO GROUND FOR REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT FOR PLAINTIFF.

That defendant has abandoned use of wrapper in question is not a sufficient reason why judgment denying relief to plaintiff should not be reversed, since a voluntary abandonment will not afford plaintiff adequate relief, as defendant might resume the use of the label.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by the Bradford Baking Company against the Weber Baking Company. Judgment denying relief, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Richard A. Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Clyde E. Cate, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the defendant in an action brought to enjoin the defendant from using the words "German Toast" upon wrappers used on bread manufactured by the defendant. The action was based upon the ground that the words "German Toast" had been copyrighted by plaintiff, and upon the further ground that the use of these words by the defendant upon its wrappers was with the fraudulent intent to injure and divert the business of the plaintiff and to deceive and mislead previous purchasers and consumers of the plaintiff's bread. At the time of the trial the parties stipulated that all the facts set forth in the complaint were true, except that defendant specifically denied that the name "German Toast" was susceptible of being appropriated as a trade-mark, and also specifically denied that the wrappers used by the defendant are similar to those used by the plaintiff, and also denied that said wrappers used by the defendant are such wrappers as would have a tendency to deceive the public, or to cause the public to believe that the bread manufactured by defendant was the same bread sold by the plaintiff. No evidence was introduced, other than the wrappers used by the plaintiff and the defendant. The appellant urges two points for a reversal: First, that the words "German Toast" were the subject of registration, and were registered by the plaintiff, who thereby acquired a property right in the same; and, second, that even though the first contention be unsound, yet the plaintiff had used its label and trade-name for about four years, and built up a demand for the product so designated before the defendant applied the name to its product, and that the defendant was guilty of a fraud in using this name subsequently with reference to a product of the same character as the product of the plaintiff.

[1] It is not necessary for us to decide here whether the words "German Toast" are words in which the plaintiff may acquire a property right as a trade-mark, because a name or mark of such a nature that no one may acquire an exclusive right to its use, and which cannot become a trade-mark, may become a trade-name, and the use of it to promote unfair competition may be prevented or redressed. 38 Cyc. 684; Schmidt v. Brieg, 100 Cal. 672, 35 Pac. 623, 22 L. R. A. 790; Weinstock, Lubin & Co. v. Marks, 109 Cal. 535, 536, 42 Pac. 142, 30 L. R. A. 182, 50 Am. St. Rep. 57. As against a particular defendant using the name upon a similar product, it is only necessary to show such facts as to put in operation the rules governing unfair competition. The facts bearing upon this question which were alleged in the complaint and admitted by the stipulation are that the plaintiff and its predecessors in interest have continuously, since the 20th day of March, 1913, been the manufacturers and vendors of bread, and that said plaintiff and its predecessors have been the exclusive owners of the trade-mark, label, and trade-name consisting of the phrase "German Toast" since said time; that since the 29th day of May, 1916, the plaintiff has used the said trade-name "German Toast" upon the wrappers inclosing its product, together with a pictorial representation on said wrappers as shown in the exhibit attached to the complaint; that the plaintiff and its predecessors have been the exclusive owners of said trade-name since March 20, 1913, and have used said trade-name to designate the origin and ownership of the manufacturer, and to designate the bread manufactured by it in its said business, and that, prior to the use of said trade-name by plaintiff, the same had never been used by any other person, firm, or corporation; that by reason of plaintiff's long experience and great care in its business of manufacturing the said bread, and by reason of the good and useful quality of said article, the same became, and was at the time of the grievance set forth in the complaint, widely known under the said trade-name to the community as a valuable and useful article, and had acquired a high reputation as such, and commanded an exclusive sale at the city of Los Angeles and elsewhere, which sale was the source of great profit to plaintiff; that on or about the 3d day of June, 1916, notwithstanding the long and quiet use enjoyed by plaintiff of said trade-name, the defendant, well knowing plaintiff's right to the same, willfully, wrongfully, and unlawfully, disregarding the rights of the plaintiff herein and with intent to injure and destroy the business of the plaintiff, prepared and offered for sale and sold an article of bread in imitation of plaintiff's bread and with intent to deceive and defraud the public and the buyers and consumers of plaintiff's bread and to defraud the plaintiff, caused the said bread to be wrapped in paper wrappers similar in size and shape to those used on plaintiff's bread, and caused the same to be labeled with a similar device, a label upon which is inscribed the name "German Toast," etc., as shown by exhibit attached to the complaint. The labels used by the plaintiff and defendant, as appears from the exhibits, are of the same general size and shape and on each appears the words "German Toast," in precisely the same style of printing and of precisely the same size, with the capital letters blocked in the same manner and the words underlined alike.

[2] We consider it unnecessary to discuss here in detail the points of similarity in the labels and the particulars in which they differ. It is not necessary that the defendant should have duplicated the label used by the plaintiff before relief may be had. Weinstock, Lubin & Co. v. Marks, 109 Cal. 529, 42 Pac. 142, 30 L. R. A. 182, 50 Am. St. Rep. 57. Under the admissions hereinbefore enumerated and the exhibits in evidence, we think the court should have found that the plaintiff had acquired the right to the use of the term "German Toast" as a trade-name for its bread as against the defendant, and that the defendant was guilty of unfair competition in the use of its said label upon its bread. Under such circumstances, an injunction should have been granted restraining the defendant from using the said wrapper on the bread manufactured and sold by it. Banzhaf v. Chase, 150 Cal. 180, 88 Pac. 704; Modesto Creamery Co. v. Stanislaus, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 289, 142 Pac. 845.

[3] The respondent urges in its brief as a reason why the case should not be reversed that it has already abandoned the use of the wrapper in question. The record contains no such information but a voluntary abandonment would not afford the plaintiff adequate relief, as the defendant might later decide to resume the use of the label. If the label has been abandoned in good faith and for all time, an injunction can do the defendant no harm, and it is a protection to which we deem the plaintiff entitled.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to grant an injunction restraining the use by the defendant of the label involved here.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1011(1)—REVIEW OF FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Findings of fact on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal as unsupported by the evidence.

2. PARTITION ⟸22—WAIVER OF RIGHT.

The right of partition conferred by Code Civ. Proc. § 752, on cotenants may, by contract, be waived under Civ. Code, § 3513, permitting any one to waive the advantage of a law intended solely for his benefit, as distinguished from one established for a public reason.

3. PARTITION ⟸22—RELEASE FROM AGREEMENT WAIVING RIGHT.

The consideration for plaintiff's agreement with defendant that land owned by them should not be partitioned being plainly a part of the agreement that defendant, who was to farm the land, should keep books accessible and intelligible to plaintiff, showing his expenditures therefor, and should account to her for all grain raised thereon and sold by him, she was released by his failure so to do.

Appeal from Superior Court of San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by Jannett Asels against David Asels. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, of Stockton, for appellant.

C. W. Miller, of Stockton, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was for partition of 640 acres of land in San Joaquin county, which in 1906 was purchased in the joint names of plaintiff and defendant with money which was partly community and partly the separate money of the plaintiff, but the moneys had been so intermingled that it was held by the trial court to have become community property. The court ordered a partition of the land, and from the final decree of partition this appeal has been taken. The only defense to the action grew out of and was based upon an agreement in writing made by the parties on the 20th day of October, 1916. Said agreement recited that plaintiff and defendant were the owners of the land (describing it), and that there had been a misunderstanding and disagreement between them as to the distribution of the money received from the crops raised on said land, and that they had consulted with their respective counsel and had agreed upon—

"and do hereby agree upon the following:

"(1) That there shall be no division or partition between the parties hereto, of the hereinbefore described land and premises."

Paragraphs 2 and 3 of said agreement related to certain moneys in the possession of the Fabian-Grunauer Company and moneys deposited in the Bank of Tracy in the name of either or both of the parties to the agreement, being moneys received for the sale of grain raised on said land during the farming season of 1915 and 1916, and it provided that these moneys should be divided equally between said parties, and that said division should constitute a full and final settlement as to all matters between them after the date of the agreement.

Paragraph 4 is as follows:

"It is mutually contracted and agreed by and between the parties hereto that the said David Asels shall farm the hereinbefore described land, as he has done in the past, and he shall keep a book wherein shall be truly set forth all expenditures made by him, which said book shall always be accessible to the said Jannett Asels, and any matters therein set forth which she does not understand, shall be fully explained to her by the said David Asels, and she shall be informed of all costs and expenses of farming, and upon a sale of the crops each year, there shall be deducted from the amount realized from said sales all of the aforesaid expenses, and the balance of the moneys realized, each year, from the sale of crops raised on the aforesaid lands, shall be divided equally among and between the parties hereto, which said division shall be made upon the sale of said crops, each year."

The fifth paragraph recited that the said David Asels was the owner of the live stock and farming implements and machinery used in farming said land, and provided that he would make no charge for the use of the same "in and about the farming and harvesting of the crops raised on the aforesaid lands."

The sixth and concluding paragraph of said agreement provides—

"That the parties hereto being agreed among themselves to the foregoing, and then having consulted their respective attorneys in the presence of all the parties hereto, and of the said attorneys, and knowing the contents of this instrument, each of the parties hereto does freely and voluntarily execute this instrument which has been drawn, and is executed for the purpose of, and it does settle all matters of difference in regard to money matters, heretofore existing between the parties hereto up to this date."

In reference to this agreement the court found—

"That the said defendant, David Asels, did not keep and has not kept all of the terms and conditions on his part to be provided and kept as in said agreement provided, in this, that the said David Asels did not keep a book wherein should be truly set forth all expenditures made by him in the farming of said lands, and that no such book was always, or at all, accessible to the said Jannett Asels, and no matters required to be set forth in said book which the said Jannett Asels did not understand, were fully, or at all explained to her by the said David Asels, and she was not, and since the execution of said agreement has not been, informed of all the costs or expenses of farming said lands, and the said defendant David Asels did not and has not, upon a sale of the crops each year, deducted from the amount realized from said sales all of the aforesaid expenses, and divided equally between himself and plaintiff the balance of the moneys realized each or either year from the sale of crops raised on the aforesaid lands, either upon the sale of said crops or at all."

Then follows a finding that 350 sacks of barley raised on said premises in 1916 and 75 sacks in the year 1917 were sold by defendant and unaccounted for to plaintiff, and that plaintiff often demanded of defendant an accounting for the same, which he refused to give or render.

[1] This finding of the court that he had failed to keep his covenant and agreement is attacked by the appellant on the ground that it is unsupported by the evidence. As to this, however, appellant is entirely in error. It is true there is a substantial conflict, but there is positive and unequivocal testimony on behalf of plaintiff in favor of the finding, and by that we are, of course, concluded. As to his failure to keep a book of accounts and render it accessible at all times to plaintiff it is sufficient to quote the following testimony of plaintiff:

"Q. Has he ever shown you any book of account since the date of this paper? A. No, sir. Q. Did you ask him in 1917? A. Yes, sir. Q. To see the account? A. Yes, sir. Q. What reply did he make? A. He said he hadn't any —had no book—didn't have to keep a book. Q. Don't you know Mr. Asels showed you—he had two books that he showed you on each occasion when you wanted to see them, and that he gave you a written statement, and you examined it, and when he settled with you he wanted you to sign it, and you refused? A. I never saw any of these books at all. I kept asking him time after time for those books. He said he had none; he didn't have to keep them. Q. Sure of that? A. Yes, sir."

The evidence is equally as clear that the defendant failed to account for a large quantity of grain raised on said premises. It seems unnecessary to quote the testimony as to this, which is set out in the brief of respondent. It is true that plaintiff claimed that he overlooked the two lots of grain worth about $1,100, but the court no doubt believed that his concealment of the facts was deliberate and willful, and that it was his purpose to appropriate to himself plaintiff's one-half of the proceeds of said grain. The lower court also concluded that his failure to keep a book of account, or to show it to plaintiff, or to explain the items of expenses in regard to the farming of the land was also willful and deliberate, and that it was in pursuance of his purpose to appropriate a portion of the proceeds from the ranch to which plaintiff was rightfully entitled. In view of the familiar and well-established rule as to conflicting evidence it would be altogether improper for an appellate court to hold that any of the findings of the lower court is unsupported.

[2] As to the legal effect and integrity of said agreement of October 20, 1916, little needs to be said. The right to partition was conferred upon either party by section 752 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but that this right may be waived is established by section 3513 of the Civil Code and by the decisions of the courts. The law upon the subject is summed up in Freeman on Cotenancy and Partition (2d Ed.) § 442, as follows:

"We have spoken of the right of partition as an absolute right incident to every species of cotenancy, * * * and as yielding to no considerations of hardship or inconvenience. In so speaking, we have had in view the law of cotenancy and partition as it exists independent of express or implied agreements between the respective parties in interest. There are cases from which it may be inferred that the right to partition cannot be waived, and that, to an application for partition, no other defense will be noticed by the courts than that the parties do not hold the property together undivided."

The learned author thereupon cites cases apparently so holding, but concludes as follows:

"But we think the decided preponderance of authority supports the proposition that the general principle of law that the right to partition is absolute must be confined 'in its application to ordinary joint tenancies or tenancies in common, where the right to partition is left to result as an ordinary legal incident of such tenancy, and that it was never intended to interfere with contracts between the tenants modifying or limiting this otherwise incidental right, nor to render it incompetent for parties to make such contracts, either at the time of the creation of the tenancy or afterwards.'"

[3] We think it equally plain that the consideration which moved plaintiff to agree that the land should not be divided was the promise on the part of the defendant to keep said books showing his expenditures in farming the land, and to render them accessible and intelligible to her, and also to account to her for all the grain raised upon said premises that should be sold by defendant. In other words, it cannot be successfully controverted that these covenants were mutual and concurrent, and that upon the failure of either party to keep his agreement the other would be released from any legal or moral obligation to carry out his own promise or covenant. Any other construction of said agreement of October 20, 1916, appears unreasonable and opposed to the manifest intention of the parties. We are satisfied that the findings of the court are amply supported, and that these findings warrant a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte LOWRIE. (Cr. 682.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 13, 1919.)

1. LOTTERIES ⊂⊃3—BANKING GAME OF RAZZLE-DAZZLE NOT A "LOTTERY."

The banking game of razzle-dazzle, played with chips and dice for merchandise, held not to constitute a "lottery" within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 319.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Lottery.]

2. GAMING ⊂⊃68(½) — RAZZLE-DAZZLE A "BANKING GAME."

The acts of petitioner for habeas corpus in operating with chips and dice the game or device known as "razzle-dazzle" for prizes of merchandise held to constitute a misdemeanor as defined by Pen. Code, § 330, providing that every person who conducts any banking game with dice for money, or other representative of value, is guilty of a misdemeanor, a "banking game" being a game where there is a fund against which everybody has a right to bid, the bank being responsible for payment of all funds, taking in all it wins and paying out all it loses.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Banking Game.]

3. GAMING ⊂⊃68(½)—CHIPS USED IN BANKING GAME AS REPRESENTATIVE OF VALUE.

Chips costing ten cents apiece, and redeemable in merchandise at that value by the banker, used to pay losses and receive winnings in the banking game of "razzle-dazzle," held included within the language of Pen. Code, § 330, prohibiting all banking games "played for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value."

4. GAMING ⊂⊃63(3)—STATUTE RELATING TO "BANKING GAME" NOT REPEALED BY IMPLICATION.

Pen. Code, § 330a, does not repeal by implication the provisions of section 330, rendering a misdemeanor the playing or carrying on of any banking game played with cards, dice, etc., for money or other representative of value.

In the matter of the application of John N. Lowrie for writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded to custody.

John S. Cooper, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Thomas Lee Woolwine, Dist. Atty., of Los Angeles, and Bonner Richardson, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Habeas corpus. At the time of the issuance of the writ herein petitioner was imprisoned under a complaint charging him with conducting a lottery or scheme for the distribution by chance of property to the complainant, and the public, for which chances valuable considerations were paid, and which alleged unlawful scheme was conducted "in the manner following and no other, to wit: In that the said defendant, John N. Lowrie, did have five dice and a cup, which said dice were dice having six bases or faces and no more, and which dice were in the form of cubes with the faces thereof numbered consecutively from one to six, and were used in the following manner in the conducting of said lottery: That complainant James F. Smith and the public were invited to engage in said lottery, and to play the same. That complainant paid to defendant the sum of $1, and received therefor from said defendant 10 white chips. That complainant laid one of the chips upon the board, and the other players engaged therein did likewise. That the defendant then threw the dice, and when the dice were exposed said defendant counted the number of pairs, and there were one pair of 4's. The defendant then handed the cup and dice to complainant, who thereupon threw the dice, and there was exposed upon the upper side one pair of 6's. That thereupon defendant handed to complainant a white chip of the same kind that he had purchased. Then the cup was handed to the other players, who did throw the dice, and who won and lost, and when each player lost, the defendant took a white chip, and when each player won the defendant gave the player a white chip. In some instances a player would place upon the board more than one chip, and when he won the defendant would give to him an equal number of chips, and when he lost the defendant would take all the chips deposited by the player upon the board. When the player had finished playing the game he was invited by the defendant to surrender his chips and receive therefor merchandise only to the value of his chips, each chip being computed at ten cents and merchandise distributed to each winner by defendant; and if the player had no chips he received nothing. Which said scheme for the distribution of property by chance, raffle and gift enterprise is designated and known as razzle-dazzle."

[1, 2] The greater part of the argument of counsel is devoted to the question as to whether the complaint charges defendant with conducting a lottery as defined by section 319, Penal Code, in the chapter designated as chapter 9 and entitled "Lotteries," as claimed by respondent, and with which contention petitioner takes issue. Under our view of the case it is unnecessary to discuss the points made for and against this proposition by the respective parties or to review the many authorities cited by each in support of his contention. Suffice it to say that, in our opinion, the facts alleged, and which we have fully set out, do not constitute a lottery within the meaning of the statute. Nevertheless, we are of the opinion that the acts with the commission of which defendant is charged constitute a misdemeanor as defined by section 330, Penal Code, under chapter 10 thereof, entitled "Gaming." This section provides that—

"Every person who deals, plays, or carries on * * * or who conducts * * * any game of faro * * * or any banking * * * game played with cards, dice, or any device, for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value * * * is guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *"

A banking game, as defined in People v. Carroll, 80 Cal. 153, 22 Pac. 129, "is a game conducted by one or more persons where there is a fund against which everybody has a right to bet, the bank being responsible for the payment of all the funds, taking all that is won, and paying out all that is lost. The fund which is provided for that purpose is generally called the bank, and the person who conducts it the banker." And in Shaw v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 394, 33 S. W. 1078, it is said, in effect, that where a person threw the dice, took the bets, stood behind the table, and was one against many, he was the dealer of the game, and hence the game was a banking game. From the allegations of the complaint it clearly appears that defendant was engaged in conducting a game wherein, to any one wishing to play the same, he sold ten white chips for a dollar, one or all of which chips each of the purchasers thereof might lay upon the table as a bet, and in each case the defendant covered the bet by a like number of chips. He then threw the dice from the box, followed by the others doing likewise, the result of which determined who lost or won, and the bets were paid accordingly. All chips won by defendant went into a common fund kept by him, called the bank, and out of which he paid all losses. That it was a banking game we entertain no doubt. Ex parte Williams, 7 Cal. Unrep. 301, 87 Pac. 565.

[3] Conceding the character of the game as stated, petitioner properly claims that under section 330, Penal Code, he could not be guilty of an offense unless it was "played for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value," none of which terms, he insists, can be said to include the white chips constituting the stakes played for in the instant case; in support of which contention he cites the Williams Case, supra. In that case a slot machine was used by the defendant's customers in gambling for cigars and tobacco, and while the court held that it constituted a banking game, it was also held that cigars were not moneys, checks, nor credits, nor were they included within the term "other representative of value"; and hence the acts with which Williams was charged did not constitute an offense within the meaning of the statute. We may concede the correctness of the court's conclusion in that case. The game which defendant is charged with conducting was not played for cigars or other merchandise, but for chips, each of which under the agreement and scheme represented the value of ten cents and was redeemable at such value by the defendant as banker, in merchandise selected by the winner of the chips, and hence they were representative of the value of the merchandise so received in exchange therefor. Had the chips been redeemable in money of the realm, it seems, under the decisions in the Williams Case and People v. Carroll, supra, there would be no question as to the acts alleged constituting an offense. But the merchandise given in exchange for the chips must be deemed of value and the value of the goods which, in accordance with the scheme, were given in exchange for the chips won was represented by the chips, possessing no intrinsic value whatever. Hence, conceding the correctness of the Williams Case, wherein it was held that the cigars constituting the stakes were not representative of value, it is distinguishable from the facts in the present case, in that the chips played for were, under the scheme and agreement, intended to and did represent ten cents each in value, to be paid for and redeemed in merchandise.

[4] There is nothing in section 330a, Penal Code, upon which to claim a repeal by implication of the provisions of section 330.

The writ is discharged, and petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county.

EDWARDS v. BODKIN. (Civ. 2826.)

1. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER ⟸4—ENTRY WITHOUT FORCE OR THREATS.

One was not guilty of forcible entry under Code Civ. Proc. § 1159, where his entry was not accompanied by any kind of violence or circumstance of terror, and where he did not turn out party in possession by force, threats, or menacing conduct.

2. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER ⟸29(4)—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW DEMAND.

In forcible detainer action, evidence held insufficient to support finding of a demand upon defendant for surrender of premises required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1160, subd. 2.

3. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER ⟸30(1)—RECOVERY OF POSSESSION NECESSARY TO AWARD OF DAMAGES.

Damages for forcible entry are not awarded unless the plaintiff recovers the possession of the premises in controversy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Action by William B. Edwards against Patrick H. Bodkin. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Duke Stone and H. C. Wesley, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William B. Edwards and Sarau & Thompson, of Riverside, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The complaint stated a cause of action in forcible detainer. The trial court in its decision of the case found that on or about December 17, 1912, the defendant unlawfully and forcibly entered upon the described premises. The complaint alleged an unlawful entry during the absence of the plaintiff, but did not allege a forcible entry. The complaint also alleged, and the court found it to be a fact, that on said 17th day of December the plaintiff made demand in writing upon the defendant to deliver to the plaintiff the possession of said premises, and that the defendant refused for a period of five days thereafter to surrender possession thereof to the plaintiff; the court did not find that the entry was made during the absence of the plaintiff, but that fact was not denied.

Forcible entry is defined as follows (Code Civ. Proc., § 1159):

"Every person is guilty of a forcible entry who either:

"1. By * * * any kind of violence or circumstance of terror enters upon or into any real property; or,

"2. Who, after entering peaceably upon real property, turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct, the party in possession."

[1] There is no evidence to show that defendant's entry upon the premises on the 17th day of December, 1912, was accompanied by any kind of violence or circumstance of terror, or that the defendant turned out by force, threats, or menacing conduct the party in possession. It follows that there was no forcible entry.

At the trial evidence was produced showing that the defendant had also entered upon the land on the 23d day of November, 1912, and remained there for a few hours. The evidence does not show where the plaintiff was at the time of such entry, but it does show that a short time thereafter, and on the same day, the plaintiff appeared on the premises accompanied by a constable, by whom the defendant was arrested. Defendant's occupancy at that time continued for only a few hours, and he did not enter again until the 17th day of December following. We have carefully examined the evidence showing the circumstances of said entry of November 23, 1912, and we are satisfied that it is not sufficient to support the claim of forcible entry at that time.

[2] If this action can be maintained at all, it must be as an action of forcible detainer under subdivision 2 of section 1160 of the Code of Civil Procedure. According to that section, a person is guilty of forcible detainer who, "during the absence of the occupant of any lands, unlawfully enters upon real property, and who, after demand made for the surrender thereof for the period of five days, refuses to surrender the same to such former occupant." If it be granted that defendant's entry under the circumstances shown by the evidence herein was an unlawful entry made during the absence of the occupant, nevertheless the action must fail because there is no evidence sufficient to support the finding of a demand made for the surrender of those premises. The plaintiff testified that on the evening of December 17, 1912, he gave to the defendant a copy of "a notice." Neither the notice nor any copy thereof was produced to the court, and the plaintiff did not testify to the contents of the so-called notice. Instead of such evidence, the plaintiff called as his own witness the defendant, who testified that on the evening of December 17, 1912, the plaintiff served on him "some kind of a notice." Being asked to state the contents of the notice, he replied:

"The notice said that he wanted me to leave there, and not contaminate the vicinity with my presence. That was the words."

This is all of the evidence of any notice served by the plaintiff upon the defendant. So far as appears from this evidence, the property in question was not mentioned in the notice, nor was any demand made that the defendant surrender the same.

During the pendency of this action and prior to the trial thereof defendant, Bodkin, as plaintiff in an action of ejectment against Edwards, obtained a judgment against Edwards for possession of the property described in the complaint in this action. At the time of trial of this action that judgment had become final, and the same was introduced in evidence herein by the defendant, Bodkin. It was therein determined that at all times after June 1, 1912, Bodkin was the owner and entitled to possession of the land described, which was the same land described in the complaint in this action. Presumably by reason of that judgment, the court in this present action refused to award judgment for possession in favor of plaintiff, Edwards, but granted judgment for damages, as for a period of forcible detainer, down to the time of entry of the judgment in the ejectment case. If the court was right in refusing to award possession to the plaintiff, it is doubtful whether damages could be separately granted.

[3] In Brawley v. Risdon Iron Works, 38 Cal. 676, the court said that in an action of forcible entry or forcible detainer the substance of the recovery, when the plaintiff is successful in the action, is the possession of the premises. "Damages for the forcible entry are not awarded, unless the plaintiff recovers the possession of the premises in controversy."

The judgment is reversed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=353—EXTENSION OF TIME ONLY BY PENDENCY OF NEW TRIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, the 60-day limit of time for appealing from a judgment cannot be extended except by the pendency of the proceedings on motion for new trial.

2. NEW TRIAL ⊂=139—WAIVER OF DEFECT IN SIGNATURE OF NOTICES OF MOTION.

Where appellants and their single counsel requested another attorney to become an attorney of record for appellants, no formal substitution in conformity with Code Civ. Proc. § 284, being made, and authorized him to sign notices of motion for new trial, and when he came to do so such other attorney signed the notices in his own name alone, such notices were in fact the intended act of appellants and their first counsel, the physical fact of signature was merely a mode of identification for the benefit of respondents, and, having received copies and acknowledged receipt without objection, respondents waived the matter of signature, and cannot deny the validity of the notices.

3. NEW TRIAL ⊂=137—LACK OF SIGNATURE TO NOTICES OF MOTION NOT JURISDICTIONAL.

Though the law requires that notices of motion for new trial be signed, failure to observe the requirement does not establish a defective jurisdiction any more than in the case of a complaint filed without signature, which does not make the pleading a nullity.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=345(1)—TIME FOR APPEALING AS AFFECTED BY DEFECTIVE NOTICE OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

A notice of motion for new trial, with defect in signature waived by the parties, suspends running of limitations as affecting appeal.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Actions by E. O. Leake, by Fred L. Alles and others, and by Braun, Bryant & Austin against the City of Venice and others. From the judgments, defendants other than the City appeal. On motion to dismiss. Motion denied.

C. E. McDowell and E. B. Coil, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes and E. O. Leake, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. [1] Respondents move to dismiss the appeals from the judgments herein, on the ground that no appeal was taken until more than 60 days after entry of judgment in each of the three cases included in the consolidated record on appeal; it being contended by respondents that no proceeding on motion for new trial was pending at any time in either of said actions.

Under section 939, Code of Civil Procedure, the 60-day limit of time for appealing from a judgment cannot be extended, except by the pendency of proceedings on motion for a new trial. The records on which the motion to dismiss is based are alike in the several cases.

At and before the time of entry of the judgments, C. E. McDowell was the sole attorney for appellants. Within the time required by law, a notice of intention to move for a new trial was, in each case, served and filed. These were sufficient in all respects, unless they were void by reason of the fact that they were signed by E. B. Coil as attorney for defendants, and not by C. E. McDowell. As shown by affidavits contained in the bill of exceptions, Coil had been requested, by McDowell and by the defendants, to become an attorney of record for defendants in the action, together with McDowell, and had been authorized on behalf of both McDowell and the defendants to sign the notices. By an oversight, due only to inadvertence, Coil omitted to use the name of McDowell in the notices, and signed them by his own name alone. At that time no formal substitution of attorneys, conforming to the requirements of the Code of Civil Procedure, § 284, had been made. When those notices were served on the attorneys of the plaintiffs, they indorsed thereon acknowledgments of receipt of copies, and made no objection to the notices at that time. When the motions for new trials were about to be heard by the court (that being long after the time within which notice of intention to move for a new trial could have been given), the plaintiffs for the first time suggested that the notices of intention were insufficient because not signed by the attorney of record.

[2-4] So far as respondents are concerned, the situation is not different from that which would have existed if McDowell himself had prepared and served the notices, but had inadvertently omitted to sign his name thereto. For the notices were in fact the intended act of McDowell and of his clients. This being so, the physical fact of signature on the paper was merely a mode of identification, required for the benefit of respondents, which they might waive. Having received the copies and given acknowledgment of receipt thereof, without seasonable objection, respondents should not later be heard to deny the validity of notices so given. Livermore v. Webb, 56 Cal. 489. While the law requires that such notices be signed, failure to observe this requirement does not establish a defect of jurisdiction, any more than in the case of a complaint filed without signature. But the omission of the signature to a complaint does not make the pleading a nullity. Canadian Bank v. Leale, 14 Cal. App. 307, 111 Pac. 759.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

CHASE v. OEHLKE et al. (Civ. 2368.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 3, 1919.)

1. PLEADING ⊜129(1)—ADMISSIONS BY FAILURE TO DENY.

Allegations of complaint not denied must be deemed to be true.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜79(2), 110(1) — LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEE OF LEASE UNDER NAKED ASSIGNMENT.

Where a tenant holds under a mere naked assignment of a lease, his liability is limited to occupancy of premises, and terminates with abandonment of possession; the sole basis of his obligation being the privity of estate under Civ. Code, § 822.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜195(1), 208(2)—LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEE FOR RENT.

Assignees of lease who by express terms in writing covenant and agree to pay the rent reserved in the lease are liable, upon abandonment of possession of premises before expiration of term, for the rent in the same manner and to the same extent as if they had been original lessees, such assignees having two sets of obligation, those arising from relation of landlord and tenant based upon privity of estate, and the others due to privity of contract by the terms of which the obligation of assignees of the lease is to be measured.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜208(2) — CONSIDERATION FOR LESSEE'S ASSIGNEE'S COVENANT TO PAY RENT.

Covenant of assignee of lease to pay the rent reserved in the lease is based upon the consideration of the transfer of the lease.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜225—ACTION ON COVENANT TO PAY RENT BY ASSIGNEE OF LEASE.

Under Civ. Code, § 1559, lessor may bring action against assignee of lease on assignee's covenant to pay the rent reserved in the lease; such covenant having been made for benefit of lessor.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜195(1) — RELEASE OF TENANT'S LIABILITY BY POSSESSION OF LANDLORD.

In lessor's action against assignees of lease who had covenanted to pay the rent reserved in lease, but had repudiated lease and abandoned premises before expiration of term, and the landlord unsuccessfully tried to obtain another tenant, the principle that landlord's unqualified possession of premises releases tenants from further liability upon theory of rescission was not applicable, in absence of allegation or finding that lessor had taken unqualified possession, or any possession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Charles W. Chase against William Oehlke, F. D. Griffith, Ella Swickard, and others. Judgment for plaintiff against defendants Griffith and Swickard, and they appeal. Affirmed.

E. A. Miller, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles W. Chase, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

SHAW, J. [1] This action to recover rent under the terms of a written lease and covenants of the assignments thereof arose out of the following facts: On February 1, 1913, plaintiff executed to one William Oehlke a lease to certain premises for the term of two years at a specified rental. Oehlke assigned the lease to J. F. Petell, by whom it was assigned to F. D. Griffith, who in turn assigned the same to defendant Ella Swickard, and in each case the assignee agreed in writing to carry out and fulfill the terms of the lease in the place and stead of his assignor, all of which facts were set forth in the complaint, which also alleged that the rent reserved in said lease was fully paid up to and including the month of March, 1914, at which time defendant Swickard, as the last assignee of the lease, was in possession of the premises, and "that about the latter part of the month of March, A. D. 1914, the defendant Swickard abandoned and left said demised premises, and removed therefrom and repudiated said lease, and refused then and always thereafter to be bound by the same, and refused to be bound by any of the terms thereof, all of which was without the consent and against the wishes of the plaintiff," who did not at any time terminate said lease nor exercise any right or option to terminate the same, which allegations, since not denied, must be deemed, as found by the court, to be true.

The appeal is by defendants Griffith and Swickard, against whom judgment was rendered for the balance of the rent due from March 31st to the end of the term specified in the lease.

[2, 3] Appellants' first contention is that, as assignees of the lease, their liability as tenants of the property was, as to the landlord, limited to their occupancy of the same, and terminated with their abandonment of possession. This is true where the tenant holds under a mere naked assignment of the lease, since the sole basis of his obligation is what is termed the privity of estate (section 822, Civ. Code; Samuels v. Ottinger, 169 Cal. 209, 146 Pac. 638, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 830; Carter v. Hammett, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 608; Bonetti v. Treat, 91 Cal. 226, 27 Pac. 612, 14 L. R. A. 151, under which the liability grows out of the relation of landlord and tenant. Where, however, as in the instant case, the assignees by express terms in writing covenant and agree to pay the rent reserved in the lease, it presents two sets of obligations and rights; one comprising those due to the relation of landlord and tenant based upon privity of estate, and the other due to privity of contract by the terms of which the obligation of assignees of the lease is to be measured. Samuels v. Ottinger, supra; Brosnan v. Kramer, 135 Cal. 39, 66 Pac. 979; Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 181; 18 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 675.

[4, 5] As stated, the action is based upon the covenants made by the appellants—the consideration therefor being the transfer of the lease—to pay the rent reserved therein. The contract was for the benefit of the lessor and, regardless of whether or not he was a party to the transfer, he was entitled to maintain an action thereon. Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 158; Civ. Code, § 1559. Appellants having upon sufficient consideration assumed and agreed to pay the rent, their obligation is identical with that of the original lessee upon his express covenants so to do, and when they, as alleged and found, repudiated the lease and abandoned the premises, the plaintiff was entitled to stand upon the terms of the contract made with the lessee and his assigns for the lessor's benefit, and sue thereon to recover the rent which they had agreed to pay, in the same manner and to the same extent as though they had been the original obligors under the terms of the lease. The error of appellants' counsel is due to the fact that he assumes the action to be based upon the relation of landlord and tenant, rather than upon express covenants.

[6] It is next contended that where a tenant abandons leased property and repudiates the lease, if the landlord takes the unqualified possession thereof, the tenant, upon the theory of a rescission, is released from further liability, in support of which may be cited Baker v. Eilers Music Co., 26 Cal. App. 371, 146 Pac. 1056, and Rehkopf v. Wirz, 31 Cal. App. 695, 161 Pac. 285. The principle announced in those cases, however, is not applicable to the facts in the case at bar, for while, as heretofore stated, plaintiff alleged a repudiation of the lease and abandonment of the demised premises, for which, without success, he tried to obtain a tenant, it is neither alleged in the answer nor found by the court that plaintiff, as in the cases cited, took unqualified possession, or any possession, of the premises so leased. No such issue was involved in the case. There is no merit in the claim that under the terms of the lease the tenant was given the option to cancel and terminate the lease by an actual surrender of possession and payment of rents due or to become due from the subletting of a part of the property.

As appears from the record the appellants in consideration of an assignment of the lease covenanted and agreed to pay the rent accruing thereunder from the date of such assignment, which covenant they repudiated by refusing to pay the rent, and abandoned the leased premises. Whereupon plaintiff, without any allegation or finding that he took possession of the premises, or rented them to another, brought suit upon the contract to recover the rent, for which judgment was properly rendered against appellants.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON v. THOMAS et al. (Civ. 3006.)

1. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃310 — RIGHTS OF SUCCESSIVE GRANTEES TO RELEASES OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY.

Where mortgage gave mortgagee right to release part of property without affecting her right against any one liable for indebtedness secured, or her right to look to remainder of mortgaged premises as security for full payment, held, that mortgagee, though having notice of several successive alienations of parts of mortgaged premises, could grant partial release of mortgaged premises for less than market value of property released and enforce balance of claim against remainder of property.

2. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃310 — PROVISION GIVING RIGHT TO RELEASE PART OF PROPERTY VALID.

Provision of mortgage, giving mortgagee right to release part of property without affecting her right against any one personally liable for the indebtedness, or her right to look to remainder of mortgaged premises as security for full payment of indebtedness, is not contrary to public policy.

Action by Mary O. Thompson against John R. Thomas and others. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in an action to foreclose a mortgage. The facts are as follows:

On August 13, 1913, a note, secured by the mortgage in question, was executed by the defendant Thomas to the plaintiff in consideration of a loan of $4,000; the mortgage covering a number of lots of land situate in San Bernardino county. On March 7, 1914, Thomas executed and delivered to Harold P. Collins a grant deed covering a portion of the mortgaged property. This deed was taken subject to the mortgage, and also contained a provision that the grantee agreed to pay the same. On September 12, 1914, Thomas conveyed the remaining lots, except three thereof, to defendant Callie L. McDowell, the deed reciting that the lots were subject to the mortgage. On September 23, 1914, Harold P. Collins by deed conveyed the property acquired by him above mentioned to R. F. Howard, this deed also being made subject to the mortgage. On July 7, 1915, the mortgagee, with actual notice of the aforesaid conveyances and of their terms, in consideration of the sum of $350, released the lots conveyed to Collins and by him subsequently transferred to Howard. In its findings the court places a value of $2,000 upon these lots. The various instruments referred to were all duly recorded.

The mortgage contained the following provision:

"The mortgagor agrees that the mortgagee may at any time without notice release portions of said mortgaged premises from the lien of this mortgage without affecting the personal liability of any person for the payment of said indebtedness, or the lien of this mortgage upon the remainder of the mortgaged premises for the full amount of said indebtedness then remaining unpaid."

The court in its decree decided that this provision of the mortgage was invalid, and in ordering judgment for the plaintiff directed as a credit upon the amount claimed the sum of $2,000, which the court found to be the value of that part of the mortgaged premises released by her to Howard. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

[1] As we view the record, there is only one important point in the case. The appellant contends that under the provision of the mortgage quoted she had a right to grant the partial release of the mortgaged premises to Howard for less than the market value of the property so released and to hold the remainder for the balance. Generally this could not be done, for the rule appears to be that a mortgagee, with notice of several successive alienations of parts of the mortgaged premises primarily liable for the payment of the debt, cannot be permitted to charge other portions of the premises with the payment of the mortgage debt without deducting therefrom the market value of the part released. Woodward v. Brown, 119 Cal. 283, 51 Pac. 2, 542, 63 Am. St. Rep. 108; Irvine v. Perry, 119 Cal. 352, 51 Pac. 544, 949; Blood v. Munn, 155 Cal. 228, 100 Pac. 694; Humboldt Savings Bank v. McCleverty, 161 Cal. 285, 119 Pac. 82, 2 Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) § 722 et seq.; 27 Cyc. 1372. In other words, under this principle of equity the plaintiff, having knowledge of the several conveyances of portions of the mortgaged premises made subsequent to the giving of the mortgage, and of their terms, could not release the parts thereof conveyed to Howard for less than their reasonable value and enforce the balance of her claim against the remainder of the land. But the provision in the mortgage upon which this controversy turns appears to have been inserted therein for the express purpose of avoiding the application of this equitable doctrine, and we perceive no reason why the provision should not be given the effect intended. Any person dealing with the mortgaged property did so charged with knowledge of the terms of the mortgage, one of which expressly gave to the mortgagee the right to release part of the property covered thereby without affecting her right against any one personally liable for the payment of the secured indebtedness, or her right to look to the remainder of the mortgaged premises as security for the full payment of the indebtedness remaining unpaid.

[2] We cannot regard as meritorious the respondents' suggestion that this provision of the mortgage is contrary to public policy and, therefore, void. The law of this state gives very wide latitude to persons in respect of making contracts affecting their private interests, and we see no reason for holding that considerations of public policy forbid persons from entering into a contract by which they provide, as was done in this case, for the effect of a release of a portion of the mortgaged premises. If we are correct in this view, it results that the trial court erred in its conclusion of law by which it credited upon the mortgage indebtedness the sum of $2,000 on account of the release by plaintiff of the lien of her mortgage upon that part of the premises transferred to R. F. Howard, instead of the sum of $350, and also in its conclusion of law that the provision of the mortgage hereinbefore set forth was not binding upon purchasers or lienholders for value when actual notice of their interest has been brought home to the mortgagee, and also in its conclusions of law numbered IV and V in so far as they are affected by the construction of the said provision of the mortgage adopted by said trial court.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

CALVERT et al. v. G. G. BURNETT ESTATE CO., Inc. (Civ. 2905.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 6, 1916.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇐167(5)—LIABILITY OF LANDLORD FOR INJURIES ON SIDEWALK.

Despite charter of the city of San Francisco, art. 6, c. 2, § 16, and article 1, § 5, the owner of a building is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian from failure to keep the sidewalk in repair where the building is occupied by a lessee who has agreed to repair, and where the owner has no notice, actual or constructive, of the defect.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Calvert and Joseph Calvert against the G. G. Burnett Estate Company, Incorporated. From judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. Schapp and W. H. R. McMartin, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Black & Clark, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action to recover for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff, Elizabeth Calvert, and alleged to have been caused by the negligence and carelessness of the defendant corporation in permitting and allowing the sidewalk in front of a building owned by it to become defective. The defendant corporation is, and was at the time of the accident, the owner of a certain building on Turk street near Market street, which was occupied by a tenant holding under a written lease. The facts are practically undisputed, and the court found that, at the time of the leasing of the premises by the defendant to the tenant, the said premises, including the sidewalk in front thereof, were in first-class condition, and that there were no holes, breaks, or depressions or other defects of any kind whatsoever in the sidewalk, and that said premises were in all respects in good condition; that the tenant expressly agreed in the said lease that all repairs necessary to the said premises should be made by said tenant at its own cost and expense and that the lessor should not be called upon to make any repairs whatever; that the lease was in full force and effect at all times mentioned in the complaint; that whatever holes or breaks may have occurred in the sidewalk were made without the knowledge of the defendant and without any negligence on the part of the defendant; and that they were not either knowingly, negligently, or carelessly allowed or permitted to remain or continue in said sidewalk by said defendant. The evidence is undisputed that the defendant had no knowledge of any breakage in the sidewalk until after the accident. Upon these facts the record presents but one question: Whether the owner of a building is liable in damages for injuries resulting from failure to keep the sidewalk in repair, where the building has been leased and is being occupied by a lessee who has agreed to repair, and where the owner has no notice of any defect in the sidewalk, and there are no facts in evidence which would have put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry.

Appellant admits that formerly, in this state, the owner of property was not liable for failure to keep the sidewalk in front thereof in repair. She recognizes the rule as announced in the case of Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. at page 17, where the court said, in speaking of the duty of a property owner to repair the public highway:

"As the defendant's responsibility in this action, if any exists, rests solely upon allegations of nonfeasance, or neglect of duty, devolved from the fact of his possession and control of the lot fronting on the side of the street where the defect occasioning the injury existed, and not upon any pretense or allegation of any affirmative action, misfeasance, or malfeasance, it follows that, unless there exists some positive legislative enactment imposing such duty, the responsibility cannot attach. From a most careful consideration of all the statutes relating to the public streets and highways of the city and county of San Francisco, we find no personal duty primarily or inceptively cast upon the individual owners of lots or lands therein, in respect to the care, management, control, improvement, or repair of the public streets and highways. * * *"

In the case of Martinovich v. Wooley, 128 Cal. 143, 60 Pac. 760, the court says:

"A sidewalk is a part of the highway. Bonnett v. San Francisco, 65 Cal. 231 [3 Pac. 815]; Ex parte Taylor, 87 Cal. 94 [25 Pac. 258]. At common law, no duty was cast upon the owner of the abutting property to maintain the street in good repair. If such duty exists in this state, it must be by virtue of some statutory enactment. Since culpable negligence cannot exist except from failure to perform a duty imposed by law or by contract, if the duty to repair the sidewalk in this instance was not cast upon defendants they were not responsible for its condition, and the general demurrer was properly sustained."

The court then calls attention to the statutory provision wherein it is made the duty of the superintendent of streets to require by notice in writing the making of necessary repairs by the property owners, and also calls attention to the fact that the statute imposes a liability upon the property owner for injuries occasioned by defects in the street fronting his property if such defects shall have existed for the period of 24 hours or more after notice thereof by the superintendent of streets. The court then quotes from the case of Eustace v. Jahns, supra, and declares the law to be that a duty to repair is cast upon the property owner only after notice given by the superintendent of streets as required by the act, and after such notice has been disregarded for the specified time.

The appellant in the present case contends that the law has been changed since these cases were decided, that amendments to the charter of San Francisco have placed a primary responsibility upon owners of property, with relation to the repair of the sidewalk in front of the same, and that such responsibility is not dependent upon notice by the superintendent of streets of a defective condition. Reliance is placed upon the portion of section 16 of chapter 2 of article 6, which provides that—

"Until the sidewalk or roadway of any improved street in the city and county of San Francisco is finally accepted, * * * the obligation to repair, reconstruct or improve the same is imposed upon the owner or owners of the lots fronting thereon."

The appellant points out that section 21 of the Statute of 1862, p. 401, providing that not less than the whole width of the street shall be accepted, has been changed by section 23 of the present charter, which provides that not less than the width of the roadway shall be accepted, and argues that this change indicates an intention that the city shall not now accept the sidewalks. This argument is supported further by calling attention to other amendments to the charter which appellant construes as indicating an intention in harmony with her views. Upon this assumption appellant's argument proceeds, and it is urged that, as the sidewalk in the case at bar was not accepted, the above-quoted provision of section 16, chapter 2, of article 6, becomes applicable. Reliance is then placed upon section 5, art. 1, providing that no recourse shall be had against the city and county for damages suffered by reason of the defective condition of any sidewalk which has not been finally accepted by the supervisors of the city and county as by law or in the charter provided, but, in any such case, the person or persons on whom the law may have imposed the obligation to repair such defect in any such sidewalk shall be liable to the party injured for the damage suffered or sustained.

In passing we call attention to the fact that the language of section 16, above quoted, "until the sidewalk * * * is finally accepted, * * *" by its very terms recognizes the fact that at some time certain sidewalks may be accepted. But we deem it unnecessary for us to decide here whether or not the city accepts the sidewalks in accepting the "roadway," or whether a change has been made in this respect by the amendments to the charter upon which appellant relies. Because, even though we accept appellant's position, for the purpose of the determination of this case, and agree that the sidewalk in front of defendant's house was not accepted, and that the primary responsibility for its repair rested upon the abutting property owner, and that he was not entitled to formal notice of defects from the superintendent of streets, yet the above-quoted language of the charter, imposing upon the owner such responsibility and declaring his liability for injury suffered by reason of his failure to meet his obligation in this respect, is not such as to make the owner an insurer of all persons passing along said sidewalk. We think, if such an unusual liability were sought to be placed upon owners of property, that the charter would have been more specific in stating it. An owner is primarily responsible for the repair of all portions of his premises, and yet he must have notice of defects before he can be held liable in damages for failure to repair. He is not an insurer with respect to the condition of his premises generally, although primarily liable. It seems clear to us that even if the appellants' contention be granted, nevertheless the owner is only liable for failure to perform the duty to repair his sidewalk, placed upon him by the charter, under the same circumstances as he would be liable for the failure to repair any other portion of the premises of which he is the owner, i. e., he is liable for a negligent failure to repair, and negligence cannot exist without knowledge of defects or circumstances which would put a prudent man upon inquiry. Even conceding that the defendant is not entitled to the formal notice by the superintendent of streets, he must yet have some notice—some knowledge of the need of repairs acquired in some manner.

In the case of Kalis v. Shattuck, 69 Cal. 596, 11 Pac. 346, 58 Am. Rep. 568, the court says that it is well settled that a landlord is not liable for the consequences to the plaintiff of a nuisance in connection with a building in the possession and control of his tenants unless "(1) the nuisance occasioning the injury existed at the time the premises were demised; or (2) the structure was in such a condition that it would be likely to become a nuisance, in the ordinary and reasonable use of the same for the purpose for which it was constructed and let, and the landlord failed to repair it (Jessen v. Sweigert, 66 Cal. 182 [4 Pac. 1188]; Rector v. Buckhart, 3 Hill [N. Y.] 193; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567 [15 Am. Rep. 530]; Hussey v. Ryan [64 Md. 426, 2 Atl. 729, 54 Am. Rep. 772]; Wood on Nuisances, §§ 295, 676; Wood on Landlord and Tenant, 918); or (3) the landlord authorized or permitted the act which caused it to become a nuisance occasioning the injury." Appellant argues that the present case comes within the second class because, as any sidewalk was bound to wear out in the course of time with the ordinary and reasonable use of the same for the purpose for which it was constructed, that it was bound in time to become a nuisance. We think the court did not mean that everything which was not absolutely impervious to wear and tear was to be in contemplation of law a prospective nuisance. And as we see from the language last quoted, ordinarily the owner of a building which is in the possession of a tenant would not be liable to third persons for injuries resulting from a defective condition of any portion of the premises unless the building had been defectively constructed or he had notice of such defective condition. Practically the same rule has been applied with regard to a sidewalk in front of premises, for in the case of Frassi v. McDonald, 122 Cal. 404, 55 Pac. 139, 141, the court said:

"The owner of property fronting on the street is not an absolute guarantor that no opening may be found in his sidewalk. * * * Before liability attaches to the owner in such a case, he must have known of its defective condition, or, as a careful, prudent man, should have known it."

This case is quoted with approval in the case of Rider v. Clark, 132 Cal. 387, 64 Pac. 564. In the latter case the court lays down the rule that, when a tenant enters into possession under a lease, the landlord parts with all his right to and control over the premises and is not liable to third persons, except for such defects in the premises or defective construction as existed in the premises when let to the tenant, and numerous authorities are cited in support of this statement. The liability in actions like the present is predicated upon negligence or want of care. The landlord cannot be guilty of negligence in failing to repair when he does not know of any defect in the premises and is not charged with such knowledge as a reasonable man. This seems to be the law, not only in this state, but in other jurisdictions as well. Hutchinson v. Cummings, 156 Mass. 329, 31 N. E. 127.

Unless the provisions of the charter relied upon by the appellant make the owner an insurer, the findings of the trial court that the holes in the sidewalk alleged to have caused the injury to the plaintiff were made without the knowledge of the defendant, and that they were not knowingly, negligently, or carelessly allowed or permitted to remain or continue in said sidewalk by the defendant, make necessary its conclusion that the defendant in the present action is not liable. It is not necessary for us to discuss the relative rights and duties of the defendant and the city authorities under the charter provisions relied upon by the appellant. It is sufficient for the present case to decide that such provisions do not make the owner of property an insurer of the safety of persons using the sidewalk, nor a guarantor that the sidewalk contains no openings.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. WILLS ⊜489(2) — INTERPRETATIVE TESTIMONY TO AID IN CONSTRUCTION.

Interpretative testimony is inadmissible to show that the word "personal" in a residuary bequest to "personal legatees named" in the will was not used to differentiate people from corporations named, but to distinguish personal friends from relations.

2. WILLS ⊜487(3)—EVIDENCE OF DECLARATIONS INADMISSIBLE TO SHOW INTENT.

In view of Civ. Code, §§ 1324, 1318, 1340, evidence of an oral declaration of the testator at variance with the express language of his will is inadmissible to show his intent in using a well-understood word.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Henry F. Spencer, deceased. From an order of partial distribution, certain legatees appeal. Affirmed.

Alexander Heyneman, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Jefferson P. Chandler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

Richards, Heaney & Price, of Santa Barbara, for executors.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from an order of partial distribution in the estate of Henry F. Spencer, deceased, by certain legatees under the will.

The whole controversy centers around the intended meaning of the word "personal" as inserted by testator's order in the will after the reading of the first typewritten draft, and the substitution of the number "15" for the number "26."

The will, after two paragraphs, one directing the payment of debts and the other bequeathing a certain watch to a friend, provides for the disposition of the remainder of the property in 26 numbered "clauses," and preliminary to these clauses is the direction that those from and including 1 to and including 15 shall be paid in full, even if any deficiency must be made good by abatement or cancellation of legacies from and including 16 to and including 24. These latter are all legacies to religious, educational, and eleemosynary societies or corporations, while the first 15 are to persons. It is evident, therefore, that the mind of the testator was directed to the two general classes of bequests, namely, one to personal and another to artificial entities. It is to be noted, further, that by the first "clause" bequests are made to Henry Spencer Smith and Lucia W. Smith, children of a deceased sister. Small bequests are also made therein to three sons of Bradford Smith "in token of remembrance," but it does not appear whether or not said Bradford Smith was related to the sister of the testator. In the "clause" numbered 2 a bequest is made to Lucy A. Weed, testator's sister. Clause 25 contains a bequest to a religious newspaper. The final provision, No. 26, so far as pertinent to this discussion, is as follows:

"All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, real, personal and mixed, which I may own or possess at the time of my death, or may in any way be entitled to, and all rights in action as well as in possession, I give, devise and bequeath in the manner following, to wit:

"To Henry Spencer Smith and Lucia W. Stimson, hereinbefore mentioned as Lucia W. Smith, one-eighth part each, and one-fourth part I give, devise and bequeath to my sister, Lucy A. Weed, and the remaining one-half part to the personal legatees named in the foregoing clauses of this my will from and including 1 to and including 15 in proportion to each of said legatees as the amount of his or her legacy bears to the total amount of the legacies bequeathed."

[1] The will was a typewritten document except that the word "personal," before the word "legatees," was written in ink, and the number "26," following the word "including," had been stricken out and the number "15" had been written above it in ink. Both changes were attested by the initials of the witnesses to the will, and there is no contention but that they were regularly made at testator's request. But the statement is made that the word "personal" was not used to differentiate the people, to whom various sums were bequeathed, from the societies and corporations, but to distinguish personal friends from collateral relations. To state this contention is almost to answer it. If the meaning for which appellants contend could be attributed to the word "personal," then there would be no necessity for including clauses 1 and 2, wherein the collateral kinsfolk are made beneficiaries. Yet the words "from and including 1 to and including 15" are used. This language is entirely in accord with the usual meaning of the word "personal" because clause 15 marks the end of the series of bequests to persons. All those following are to organizations, not to persons. There is no ambiguity in the language, and therefore no reason for interpretative testimony. We know of no use of the word "personal," either technical or colloquial, which would justify its employment in distinguishing those not related from those who are.

Appellants insist that the testator could not possibly have intended to give to Henry Spencer Smith, Lucia W. Stimson, and Lucy A. Weed each three portions of the property, namely, a legacy of a definite amount of money, a certain fraction of the residue, and a further sum to be computed according to the rules of proportion. But why not? He intended two portions for each stranger to the blood. Is it remarkable that he favored his sister, his nephew, and his niece above those not of his family? These favored ones were the only relatives specified in the will, unless Bradford Smith's sons (to whom small sums "in token of remembrance" were given) were grandnephews, which does not appear, and even if it did their legacies were so small as to indicate that testator did not consider them peculiar objects of his bounty. It is true that there were legacies of $2,500 each to Charles J. and Arthur A. Adams, described as "my nephews," but it was admitted that they were nephews of testator's predeceased wife. There is nothing remarkable, therefore, in the fact that his favored relatives, his sister Lucy (to whom there was a direct bequest of $7,500 in her own right), his niece Lucia, and his nephew Henry (bequeathed respectively $7,000 and $10,000), should also share twice in the residue.

[2] Henry F. Spencer was blind when the will was executed in January, 1916. The scrivener who prepared the testament was Mr. Jarrett T. Richards, an attorney at law. At the time of the hearing in the probate court he was too ill and infirm to attend, and appellants sought to introduce his deposition for the purpose of showing what occurred at the time of the emendations of the text of the will. This deposition was properly excluded, for the reason that the plain terms of the instrument required no exposition. Words of a will are to be taken in their ordinary and usual meaning. Section 1324, Civ. Code; Fancher v. Fancher, 156 Cal. 13, 103 Pac. 206, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 944, 19 Ann. Cas. 1157; Estate of Purcell, 167 Cal. 176, 138 Pac. 704; Garner v. Purcell, 173 Cal. 495, 160 Pac. 682. Resort may be had to evidence of the facts or circumstances surrounding the execution of the will when the language is ambiguous or doubtful. Section 1318, Civ. Code, which, it is to be noted, excludes a testator's oral declarations; section 1340, Civ. Code; Estate of Murphy, 157 Cal. 63, 106 Pac. 230, 137 Am. St. Rep. 110. But we are bound by the terms of the will as written (Estate of Rounds, 181 Pac. 638), when they are clear. The purport of the testimony in the deposition (elicited largely by leading questions which were none the less suggestive because, "owing to the advanced age of the witness," counsel sought to draw his attention to certain "salient facts") was that witness told the testator that by the expression "personal legatees" he would be indicating "those personal legatees in contradistinction to collateral," and that "people other than Henry Spencer Smith, Lucia W. Stimson, and Lucy A. Weed" were to receive half of the residue. This advice was given, said witness, after testator had declared that he did not want his relatives to share ratably with the other legatees in one-half of the residue described in clause 26. If such testimony had been introduced its tendency would have been not to clarify the terms of the testament, but to show that Mr. Richards and the testator had used a well-understood word with a meaning not attributed to it generally by users of the English language. Moreover, the very essence of the testimony offered and rejected, indeed, its only material part, was an oral declaration of the testator at variance with the express language of the will. Such declarations must be excluded. Sections 1318, 1340, Civ. Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

In a landlord's action to recover possession of fixtures removed by a tenant, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that the landlord executed a new lease, expressly agreeing that the defendant had 30 days in addition to time allowed by prior lease during which to remove such fixtures.

Objection to the admissibility of parol evidence as having the effect of adding to the terms of a written contract cannot be questioned for the first time in the appellate court.

4. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⟸157—FAILURE TO OBJECT TO PAROL EVIDENCE.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by C. D. McComish against C. C. Kaufman. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ralph C. McComish, of San Jose, and Alva A. King, of Colusa, for appellant.

Elise Harlan and Millington & Millington, of Colusa, for respondent.

ELLISON, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff brought this action to recover possession of 235 opera chairs, a lot of scenery, stage fixtures, and an electric sign. From a judgment in favor of defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

On the 12th day of March, 1912, the plaintiff gave to the defendant a lease of a room in a building in the town of Colusa, known as the "Herald Building," to be used for the purpose of moving picture entertainments. At the time the lease was executed, the defendant was in possession of the premises and had been for some time under prior contract with plaintiff. The lease was for a term ending December 31, 1913, with the option to the defendant of a two years' extension. The rental was $35 per month. At the date of the lease there was certain personal property in the room consisting of chairs, scenery, and other articles used in the moving picture business, which concededly belonged to the defendant. The lease stated that this furniture and fixtures were pledged to the plaintiff for the faithful performance of the conditions of the lease. Defendant exercised his option and held under this lease until December 31, 1915. Thereafter he held the premises and conducted the moving picture business in said room as a tenant at will or from month to month without any written lease until August 5, 1918, at which time plaintiff served upon him a written notice to vacate within 30 days.

Upon receiving said notice, defendant had an interview with plaintiff and informed him that 30 days was too short a time within which to move his fixtures and furniture and asked for a new lease for a longer term than 30 days, and stipulated that, if such additional time were given he would pay an increased rental, and remove all his property, including the property here involved, before the expiration of such new lease. As a result of this interview, the plaintiff gave to the defendant a new lease of the premises. This lease was dated August 12, 1918. The property leased was described as "that room known as the 'Gem Theater' located in the Herald Building in the town of Colusa." The term was for one month beginning the 1st day of September, 1918, and ending the 30th day of September, 1918. The rental for the month was $60. No mention was made in the lease of the fixtures or furniture. Within the life of the new lease the defendant removed from the building all the property, the subject of this litigation.

The appellant's position may be fairly stated as follows: When the lease of August 12, 1918, was executed, the fixtures, which had been put in the building during the existence of a prior lease and not removed before its expiration, had become the property of the plaintiff, and, the new lease not providing for their removal by the tenant, he had no right to take them from the building. In support of his position, he quotes from Wadman v. Burke, 147 Cal. 354, 81 Pac. 1013, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1192, 3 Ann. Cas. 330, as follows:

"And it follows that, whatever was a part of the freehold when the lessee accepted and began, his occupation under the new lease must be delivered up at the end of the term, and cannot be severed on the ground that it was put in as a trade fixture under a previous lease which has expired. The failure of the lessee to exercise his right to remove during the former term, or to reserve it in his new contract, precludes him from denying the title of his landlord to the estate, and the fixtures annexed, which have become part of it."

The decisions present some apparent conflict upon the matter set forth above.

Thus, it was held in Woods v. Bank of Haywards, 10 Cal. App. 93, 106 Pac. 730, that a holding over from month to month after the expiration of a written lease amounted to a continuance of the original holding and that the tenant's right of removal was not lost. A petition for hearing by the Supreme Court was denied.

[1] Conceding for the purposes of the argument only that the law is as claimed by appellant, still, after the original term has expired, the plaintiff could waive the right claimed and could by contract grant to his tenant the right to remove the fixtures during the new term which expired September 30, 1918, and, if he did so, the removal by defendant would be a legal act.

"Any one may waive the advantages of a law intended solely for his benefit." Civ. Code, § 3513.

In finding 9 is this language:

"Plaintiff did make, execute and deliver to defendant his certain agreement in writing whereby he did let and lease to the defendant that room known as the 'Gem Theater' located in the Herald Building upon the 31st day of September, 1918 (?) (12th day of August [?]) at an increased rental and plaintiff then and there expressly agreed that defendant should have thirty days in addition to the time given by said prior lease and notice during which defendant could and should remove all property from the room occupied by the defendant and known as the 'Gem Theater' and said defendant so agreed to remove said property before September 31, 1918, and said defendant so agreed and did pay said increased rental and prior to September 31, 1918, did remove said property."

[2] This finding, in connection with the others, is sufficient to support the judgment, and, if it is to stand, the judgment must be affirmed. Counsel for appellant attacks it upon the ground that it is not supported by the evidence. The evidence in the record amply sustains the finding.

The defendant testified:

"I told Mr. McComish when he handed me this notice: 'Isn't that rather short time for me to move out? Isn't that rather short notice for me to get the things moved out? This is a mighty short time to move all of this furniture and fixtures and get everything out immediately. It would be impossible to do it in thirty days.' And he said: 'Well, I will see about it,' and a few days afterwards he came and said: 'I am willing to sign up an agreement that you have another month.' Q. For what purpose? A. I should have another month to get out my stock. Q. And did you sign such an agreement? A. Yes, and he charged me $10 a month more for the privilege of giving me 30 days of getting my stuff out."

It is true the plaintiff denied this conversation, in part, at least. His testimony, at most, only raises a conflict, but does not alter the fact that the record contains sufficient evidence, if accepted by the court, to sustain the finding. The court accepted it and its action is binding on this court.

[3] Counsel raises the point that the evidence of plaintiff above quoted is inadmissible, because it was parol evidence introduced for the purpose and had the effect of adding to the terms of a written contract. This evidence was admitted without objection, and its admissibility cannot be questioned for the first time in this court.

[4] "Parties who permit a fact to be proved by incompetent evidence, without objection, waive all question of inadmissibility. This is true even under the statute of frauds, and as to witnesses incompetent to testify." Walberg v. Underwood, 180 Pac. 55.

"Conceding now that the contract declared on was void, by reason of the statute of frauds, because it was verbal, still, as no objection was made by plaintiff to the evidence when offered, it must be held that the right to invoke the statute of frauds was waived by the appellant, and it cannot now be invoked in this court as a reason why the judgment should be reversed or a new trial granted. The defense of the statute of frauds can be waived, and that it was waived by the plaintiff in failing to object at the time to the parol evidence when offered, we think there can be no doubt." Nunez v. Morgan, 77 Cal. 427, at page 433, 19 Pac. 755.

The finding of the court that the plaintiff for an increased rental agreed that defendant might have until September 30, 1918, to remove the property in dispute, being supported by the evidence, is decisive of the case, and renders a discussion of other points unnecessary.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: BURNETT, J.

HART, J. I concur in the judgment and also in the proposition, stated by the acting presiding justice, that the point made by appellant that the parol testimony disclosing the purpose for which the new or additional lease was given to the defendant is incompetent, and therefore was inadmissible, is not reviewable because it was not objected to and hence the objection must be deemed to have been waived. But I do not think that that testimony was incompetent. The terms of the additional lease were these, to wit: That the defendant might use and occupy the room known as the "Gem Theater" situated in the Herald Building, in the town of Colusa, for the term of one month, beginning on the 1st day of September, 1918, and ending September 30, 1918, for the sum or rental of $60 for said month. These terms could not, of course, be changed by parol. The defendant could not have proved by parol, except under a plea of fraud or mistake, that the lease was for a longer term than one month or that the rental was less than that specified in the writing. But the testimony referred to was not offered for that purpose. It was not offered to vary the contract as it was written in any respect or to substitute new terms for those expressed in the writing. Its sole purpose was to show the reason why the lessee asked for and secured an extension of the lease for one month. The obvious purpose of the testimony was to show that the plaintiff recognized the defendant's ownership of the furniture and fixtures and his right to remove them upon the expiration of the term and that his failure to remove the property within the original term or at the expiration thereof was because he did not have sufficient time within which to do so. I do not understand the main opinion to hold that the testimony was inadmissible, but the conclusion therein upon the question of its admissibility is upon the assumption that it was improper testimony, hence these views by me, and with these views I perceive no conflict in anything said in the case of Harrison v. McCormick, 89 Cal. 327, 329, 26 Pac. 830, 23 Am. St. Rep. 469, cited by appellant. In that case it was held that—

"Where a contract for the sale of merchandise is in writing, and nothing in the written contract indicates that a sample was used or referred to, parol evidence is inadmissible to show a sale by sample."

The rule so stated is unquestionably correct, but it does not fit this case as to the point here considered.

STONE v. McWILLIAMS. (Civ. 2922.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=957(1)—JUDGMENT ⊂=139—DISCRETION OF COURT IN VACATING DEFAULTS.

Applications to be relieved from an order or judgment by default are addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and its action upon such applications will not be reversed on appeal unless it clearly appears that the court abused its discretion.

2. JUDGMENT ⊂=139—VACATION OF DEFAULT HELD NO ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Where defendant, who was over 70 years of age, totally blind, and illiterate, defaulted in an action by plaintiff, who claimed that he had broken a contract whereby plaintiff was to care for him during his declining years, etc., held that, under the circumstances, the vacation of the default could not be deemed abuse of trial court's discretion, notwithstanding plaintiff's showing that shortly before commencement of the action defendant had withdrawn his money from a bank and transferred his real estate with the apparent intention of protecting himself against her claim.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; M. F. McCormick, Judge.

Action by Callie Stone against George W. McWilliams. From an order setting aside a default and vacating judgment entered thereon in her favor, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Stanley Moffatt, of Fresno, for appellant.

Burns & Watkins, of Fresno, and E. S. Reichard, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order setting aside a default and vacating the judgment entered thereon in favor of plaintiff.

The default was taken in an action commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover the sum of $1,000 for breach of contract. The complaint alleged that the parties entered into an agreement by the terms of which the plaintiff was to make her home with the defendant, keep house for him, and give him such care and attention necessary for the comfort of a man of his age and condition during the remainder of his life, in return for which she was to receive board and lodging for herself and two minor children, with the further advantage that the defendant would by last will and testament leave to plaintiff whatever property he might own at the time of his death. It further appears that the plaintiff entered upon the performance of this agreement, and remained at the home of defendant for about one year, when, after a quarrel with him, she left, and shortly thereafter commenced this action. The summons and complaint were served upon defendant by a deputy sheriff, and, defendant making no answer thereto, plaintiff caused his default to be entered, upon which the court rendered judgment in plaintiff's favor for $1,000, the amount demanded. Within a reasonable time under the attending circumstances defendant moved the court to set aside his default and to vacate the judgment upon the ground of his mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect. The court granted the motion, imposing terms under which the defendant was required to pay into court for the use of plaintiff the sum of $50.

[1, 2] From the record it appears that the defendant is over 70 years of age, totally blind, illiterate, and unable to write his name. Upon the motion to set aside the default he made and filed an affidavit which stated, among other matters, that at the time the summons and complaint were served upon him he was wholly unfamiliar with court proceedings, and neglected to make seasonable answer to the complaint by reason of what he understood the deputy sheriff to advise him or inform him he might safely do at the time that officer made such service; his advice or information being to the effect that under the circumstances of the case it would be needless for the defendant to do anything, either in the way of writing a letter to the plaintiff or her attorney or otherwise, and that no trouble would ensue from such inactivity. On the other hand, it is stated in the counter affidavit filed by the plaintiff in opposition to the motion that shortly before the commencement of the action the defendant withdrew his money from a bank and transferred his real estate with the intention apparently of protecting himself from any claim plaintiff might make or prosecute, but the steps he took in this behalf are the subject-matter of another action instituted by plaintiff; and, whatever his object may have been, he seems to have believed that he was acting within his legal rights. In any event, we do not think this circumstance would warrant us in holding that the court abused its discretion in setting aside the defendant's default. It is invariably held that applications to be relieved from an order or judgment by default are addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and that its action upon such applications will not be reversed on appeal unless it clearly appears that the court abused its discretion. Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 667, 63 Pac. 63. In the case of Berri v. Rogero, 168 Cal. 736, 145 Pac. 95, which, upon the facts, was less favorable to the party appealing from the order vacating the default than the present case, the court said:

"The law does not favor snap judgments. The policy of the law is to have every litigated case tried upon its merits, and it looks with disfavor upon a party who, regardless of the merits of his case, attempts to take advantage of the mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or neglect of his adversary."

Here the defendant made a seasonable application to be relieved from his default and filed an affidavit of merits showing a good defense. His age, blindness, and illiteracy might well have appealed to the court to exercise its discretion in his favor even more liberally than in ordinary cases. It does not appear that the plaintiff has suffered any prejudice, or that any injustice will result to her from a trial of the case upon the merits. Under these circumstances we are not inclined to hold that the court abused its discretion in granting defendant's application.

The order is affirmed.

BONNARJEE et ux. v. PIKE et ux.

(Civ. 3020.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 10, 1919.)

1. BROKERS ⊜8(3)—EVIDENCE OF AGENCY FOR BOTH PARTIES.

In an action for damages for false representations as to property exchanged, which representations were made by the broker negotiating the transaction, evidence held to show that the broker was the agent of both plaintiffs and defendants.

2. FRAUD ⊜58(1)—EVIDENCE OF VALUE OF REAL ESTATE EXCHANGED.

In an action for damages resulting from fraudulent representations in an exchange of real estate, evidence as to value of properties held sufficient to support the court's finding in plaintiff's favor as to damages.

3. EVIDENCE ⊜113(8, 11)—RENTAL AND SALE PRICE TO DETERMINE VALUE.

In an action for damages resulting from an exchange of properties, in which there were false representations as to value, evidence of a bona fide rent paid for the use of the property is generally admissible, as is also the price actually paid at bona fide sale of the property whose value is in dispute, made about the time the transaction arose.

4. FRAUD ⟸11(2)—REPRESENTATION OF VALUE AS MATTER OF FACT.

A representation as to value of property is often a representation of fact and actionable, if false, especially where the purchaser to whom the representation is made is so situated as to have no means of investigation, and therefore relies on the statements of value made by the vendor or his agent.

5. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸171(4)—RATIFICATION; ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFITS OF FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.

When a false representation of value is made by vendor's agent in the transaction of his principal's business, the latter accepting the benefit of the transaction, is liable in damages for the agent's wrongful act (Civ. Code, § 2330).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Basanta C. Bonnarjee and wife against George W. Pike and wife. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry K. Norton and Wilbur Bassett, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John F. Poole and Valentine & Newby, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought by the plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, to recover from the defendants, also husband and wife, the sum of $3,000 as damages resulting from an exchange of properties by the respective parties, brought about by the aid of false representations on the part of the agent who negotiated the transaction. Judgment went for plaintiffs in the sum demanded, and the defendants appeal.

The appellants make several contentions in support of their appeal, among them being that the evidence is insufficient to show that the agent in the transaction was in fact the defendants' agent; that it is also insufficient to show the values of the respective properties upon the difference in which the court based the amount of damages allowed; and, furthermore, that the appellants are not responsible for the fraudulent representations of the agent, even conceding that he acted for them. The facts are substantially these:

Basanta C. Bonnarjee (hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff), a native of India and a convert to the Christian religion, was living with his wife in Chicago, and there owned a brick building. Desiring by reason of his wife's illness to go to Los Angeles and there reside, he sought the services of one Wendell, a real estate broker, and a member of a church which the plaintiff sometimes attended. Stating his desire to Wendell, the latter immediately informed him:

"I know a person over there [Southern California], and he wanted me to exchange his property, and he wants to come here, and we all want him to come. He is a good man, and belongs to our church. He is a Sunday school superintendent, a sanctified man, and I will write him and see if he has the property still left, and will exchange that with you."

Wendell accordingly wrote to the defendants, with whom he had a previous acquaintanceship, having visited them at their home in Los Angeles. They also were members of a church of the same or an allied denomination, and Wendell addressed them as "Dear Brother and Sister," and in signing his letters seldom omitted an allusion to the founder of the Christian religion. This, also, was the practice of the defendant George W. Pike, who, in his correspondence both with Wendell and the plaintiff, also invariably preceded his signature with the words "Your brother in Christ." In his first letter to Pike, Wendell gave full particulars of the plaintiffs' property, including the price, which was put at $5,500, and stated that they would trade with the defendants for their cottage, "if the price was right." The correspondence which ensued resulted in an exchange of properties; the plaintiffs transferring to the defendants their said house at a valuation of $5,500, subject to a mortgage of $1,500, and receiving from the defendants their cottage at a valuation of $4,500, subject to a mortgage of $1,300, and a vacant lot, situated on a hillside, over a mile from transportation facilities, barren of street improvements of any kind, and the taxes on which were $5 per annum, at a valuation of $2,500, and subject to a mortgage of $1,000; the agreement of exchange also provided that the plaintiffs should pay to Wendell, not only a commission on their own account, but also one agreed to be due to him from the defendants upon this transaction.

There was testimony in the case from which the court was justified in finding that the value of the plaintiffs' property was the figure at which it was put in the transaction. This was the price paid for it by the plaintiffs, and it was rented for $40 per month, one of the conditions of the lease being that the tenant should make all repairs, and, according to the testimony of the plaintiff, could have been rented for more. He testified that he could easily have rented it for $50 per month, but, having a good tenant, whom he described as a prompt payer, he accepted the lower rent. As to the defendants' property, it was testified to that the cottage was worth from $2,000 to $2,500 only, and was subject to a mortgage of $1,300, which would make their equity therein of the value of from $700 to $1,200; that the vacant lot was worth, one witness testified, $400, and another, $500. Burdened as it was with a mortgage of $1,000, secured directly by the defendants from an old lady (whether a member of their church does not appear), the equity therein would have no value.

During the negotiations the plaintiff expressed grave concern to Wendell that the defendants' property was not of the value at which the trade was sought to be made. Wendell quieted him by saying:

"Don't you worry about that. I told you that Brother Pike is a good man, and he will never do anything at all that is wrong, * * * and now here is an opportunity for you, and you are getting a bargain. * * * On the price which you are getting, I tell you it is a bargain. I was there, and I have seen the property; both of these properties I have seen, and I can assure you they are worth just what Brother Pike wants for it, and he would not misrepresent at all, so you can take his word for it, and when you go there you will find that you are not at all anyway loser, but you get a bargain."

The plaintiff's wife was equally dubious about the value of the defendants' property, but her fears were also overcome by similar assurances from Wendell. He said:

"Sister Bonnarjee, don't worry anything at all. I am doing the best I can for you, and when you go there you will see that you have made a bargain. Brother Pike is a good man; he belongs to our church, so you can take his word for it, and you will see when you go that it will be all right. You are getting a bargain."

[1] We think the trial court was fully justified in holding that Wendell was the agent both of the plaintiffs and the defendants. Bearing on the question of his employment is the direction contained in one of Pike's letters to Wendell:

"If I can trade in both places, I would say you can see what you can do."

Clearly in seeing what he could do he was acting for defendants. In addition to the fact that the defendants recognized their liability to pay Wendell a commission upon the transaction (for which, of course, they were not liable, unless he was their agent), the evidence also shows that by their direction he received and receipted for money due them incidentally from this same transaction, gave to the plaintiff instructions as to the form of the deed to be executed by him and his wife, recorded it, and during the course of the same negotiation was intrusted by defendants with a third piece of property for disposal.

[2, 3] The evidence as to value sufficiently supported the court's finding thereon. "A bona fide rent paid for the use of property may generally be shown as an aid in establishing its value." 13 Ency. of Evidence, 435. "In several jurisdictions the price actually paid at a bona fide sale of the property the value of which is in dispute, about the time the transaction arose, may be proved as an aid in determining its value." Id. p. 447.

[4, 5] That a representation as to the value of property is often a representation of fact, and actionable, if false, is well established, especially where the vendee to whom the representation is made is so situated as to have no means of investigating the question for himself, and therefore relies on the statements of value made by the vendor or his agent. Crandall v. Parks, 152 Cal. 772, 93 Pac. 1018; Phelps v. Grady, 168 Cal. 73, 77, 141 Pac. 926. It is equally well settled that, when such a representation is made by an agent in the transaction of his principal's business, the latter, accepting the benefit of the transaction, is liable in damages for the agent's wrongful act. Civ. Code, § 2330; Riser v. Walton, 78 Cal. 490, 21 Pac. 362.

We conclude from the foregoing that the court's findings are sufficiently supported by the evidence, and that the judgment entered in the plaintiffs' favor was the correct legal conclusion therefrom.

The judgment is affirmed.

GENTLE v. WARREN et al. (No. 3020.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 3, 1919.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by John R. Gentle against T. C. Warren and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. A. Stice, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
H. E. Gleason and F. M. Shepard, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought by the plaintiff against defendants for the purpose of setting aside a certain deed made by one Anna Gentle, plaintiff's deceased wife, to defendants, on the ground that it was made as the result of fraud and undue influence exerted upon the grantor, and because her mind was in a weakened condition—which defendants denied. The court found in favor of defendants on all the issues, and entered judgment accordingly. From the judgment so entered, plaintiff appeals.

For a reversal of the judgment plaintiff attacks one of the findings as not supported by the evidence. That finding, so far as the same is objectionable to plaintiff, is as follows: "That it is not true that her mind was weakened and affected, or weakened or affected, on the 9th day of March, 1916; but the court finds that on the said 9th day of March, 1916, the mind of Anna J. Gentle was in a sound, strong, and normal condition."

No evidence has been called to our attention which shows that there is any conflict, so far as the condition of deceased's mind is concerned. This is not only a case where there is evidence to support the finding, but the plaintiff's own evidence, as well as defendants', supports it, and for this reason we are unable to agree with the appellant's contention.

No other point is urged.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MARTINEZ. (Cr. 472.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 23, 1919.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Jesse Martinez was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Judgment amended, and judgment and order affirmed.

A. J. Carlson, of Modesto, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. Defendant was informed against by the district attorney of Stanislaus county, state of California, in which he was charged "with having, on or about the 20th day of August, 1918, in the county of Stanislaus, state of California, and prior to the filing of this information, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously accomplished an act of sexual intercourse with and upon one Catherine Medina, then and there a female under the age of 18 years, to wit, of the age of 12 years, and not then and there the wife of the said 'Jessie' Martinez."

Defendant, on the 1st day of July, 1919, secured from this court an order extending his time to and including the 20th day of July, 1919, within which to file his opening brief on appeal from the judgment of conviction; the Attorney General, by stipulation, having previously agreed thereto. No brief was filed by either party, nor was any appearance made by the defendant at the argument on the day set therefor in this court, nor was any further stipulation or order made extending defendant's time to file his brief. Upon motion by the Attorney General the cause was accordingly submitted on the record.

In the case of People v. Young, 176 Pac. 696, under a similar set of circumstances, the court held that it must be assumed that the appeal has been abandoned and the judgment should be affirmed for want of prosecution. See, also, People v. Wong Bow, 175 Pac. 802, People v. Schiaffino, 181 Pac. 813, and People v. Mediani, 181 Pac. 673.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, we have carefully perused the pleadings, the evidence and the instructions, together with the rulings of the court upon the admission and rejection of evidence, and are fully convinced that the defendant, after a fair and impartial trial, was justly convicted of the crime of statutory rape with which he was charged. No sufficiently prejudicial errors appear in the record to warrant any interference with the action of the lower court.

The judgment is amended by striking out the words "for the term of not more than fifty (50) years, the exact term to be determined as provided by law," and, as so amended, the judgment and the order are affirmed.

1. FRAUD ⟸34 — RESCISSION AND RESTITUTION NECESSARY TO RECOVERY FOR UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Prompt rescission and offer of restitution are essential to recovery on the ground of undue influence; and, since neither is alleged, the complaint fails to state a cause of action for undue influence.

2. FRAUD ⟸45 — ALLEGATION THAT REPRESENTATION WAS UNTRUE.

It is essential to an action for false representation that the representation be alleged to be untrue.

3. FRAUD ⟸41—ALLEGATION OF FALSITY.

An inference is not a sufficient allegation of falsity of representation.

4. FRAUD ⟸45—ALLEGATION A MERE OPINION.

Allegation that defendants represented that it was to plaintiff's best interests to dispose of his property was one of mere opinion, complaint not showing its falsity, but alleging plaintiff had been subjected to many business cares, etc., and was not capable of devoting to affairs of his business or his said stock, transferred to defendants, ordinary care or attention.

5. FRAUD ⟸45 — COMPLAINT BASED ON FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION INSUFFICIENT.

Allegation of representation that plaintiff was about to be indicted by grand jury, that defendants had great influence with the United States district attorney, and could through him either cause or prevent an indictment being found against plaintiff, and that if plaintiff did not sign the papers involved herein he would be indicted was insufficient to state a cause of action at law for fraud, the falsity of the representation not being alleged.

6. PAYMENT ⟸82(1)—RECOVERY OF COMMISSION PAID.

Plaintiff, who, though knowing all the facts, paid defendant commissions demanded, cannot recover; there being no basis for recovery, aside from allegation as to plaintiff's mental weakness, not amounting to incompetency.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by D. McDougall, administrator of the estate of Theodore Wiesendanger, deceased, against C. Wesley Roberts and others. Judgment denying relief, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. F. Oster, Peyton H. Moore, and A. W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

M. K. Young, of Los Angeles, W. W. Middlecoff, of Visalia, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, James E. Degnan, and Hunsaker & Britt, all of Los Angeles, M. M. Armstrong, of Rawlins, Wyo., and C. S. Anderson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. The complaint herein presents an action for damages based upon the fraud of defendants, one of whom was plaintiff's attorney. It recites, in substance, that while plaintiff was sick in body and mind he was induced to transfer, for a consideration of less than $100,000, real and personal property worth $1,403,060. The complaint was filed about a year and a half after the transaction occurred, and was in three counts. The trial judge sustained defendants' demurrer to the first and second counts of the second amended complaint, without leave to amend. As to the third count he granted plaintiff leave, within 15 days after notice, to apply to the court on 5 days' notice for leave to file an amended third count. In accordance with the leave so granted plaintiff served and asked leave to file his third amended complaint. The motion to amend was opposed by defendants upon the ground, among others, that the proposed complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, that said motion was not made in good faith, and that the allegations of the proposed amended complaint were sham and false.

Upon the hearing defendants offered and the court received in evidence, without objection, the original complaint, the first and second amended complaints, together with the demurrers and answers thereto, and also the deposition of plaintiff, which had been taken and was on file. After argument and before decision plaintiff withdrew his proposed complaint, and asked for and received permission of the court to submit a further amended pleading. Thereafter plaintiff served an amended pleading, which he styled "third amended complaint," and moved for leave to file it. Defendants objected thereto, urging in opposition all of the objections they had theretofore made to the filing of an amendment. Permission to file the amended document was denied by the court upon the ground, among others, that the proposed complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, that the alleged cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, and that said motion was not made in good faith, and that the allegations of the proposed amended complaint were sham and false. Judgment followed for defendants, and plaintiff now takes this appeal.

As grounds for reversal it is urged: First, that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrers to the second amended complaint and in rendering judgment of dismissal thereof; and, second, the trial court erred in denying plaintiff's application to file his proposed third amended complaint.

As stated by counsel for appellant, the main question here involved is as to whether or not the second amended complaint and the proposed third amended complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, for the allegations contained in these two documents are substantially the same. In passing upon the demurrers of the defendants to plaintiff's second amended complaint the trial judge filed an opinion, which has been made a part of the record herein. As we think it correctly states the law with reference to the questions presented on this appeal, we hereby adopt it as the opinion of this court. It is as follows:

"This case is before the court upon the demurrers of the defendants to plaintiff's second amended complaint. The injury complained of by plaintiff is that defendants have secured from him property worth $1,403,060 for the sum of $100,000 'and other considerations,' including the assumption of debts of plaintiff, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $1,310,560. The complaint is in three counts.

[1] "It is conceded by defendants that the facts stated in each count sufficiently allege undue influence, but it is claimed that the remedy therefor is rescission and not damages. It was so held by our Supreme Court in Bancroft v. Bancroft, 110 Cal. 379, 42 Pac. 896. Prompt rescission and offer of restitution are essential to a recovery on the ground of undue influence. Neither is alleged in the complaint, and hence the complaint fails to state a cause of action for undue influence. Plaintiff argues that this restitution is unnecessary, citing More v. More, 133 Cal. 489, 65 Pac. 1044, 66 Pac. 76. This case is discussed in Henry v. Phillips, 163 Cal. 135, 143, 124 Pac. 837, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 39, and does not apply to the case at bar.

[2] "Plaintiff claims, however, that the complaint states a cause of action for fraudulent representations. Omitting certain allegations in the complaint as to what the defendants conspired to do, and assuming that the alleged representations are statements of fact, it is not alleged that the said statements were in fact untrue, or that they were known to defendants to be untrue. In the first count the alleged misrepresentation is 'that if he (the plaintiff) did not sell all of his stock to the defendants he would be subjected to a criminal prosecution' 'upon a criminal charge in the United States District Court of the Southern District of California.' It is not alleged that this statement was untrue, and, treating it as an actionable misrepresentation, rather than a mere expression of opinion (for which no action would lie) it is essential to a plea of false representation that it be alleged to be untrue.

[3] "In the second count the alleged misrepresentation is that defendants 'did * * * represent that it was to plaintiff's best interest that plaintiff at once dispose of all his real property,' etc. It is claimed that while ordinarily such a statement as this would be but an expression of opinion, in this case, where such statement is made to plaintiff by his attorney, he had a right to rely thereon and to treat the same as a statement of fact (citing Phelps v. Grady, 168 Cal. 73, 141 Pac. 926; Henry v. Continental, etc., 156 Cal. 667, 105 Pac. 960). Assuming that this statement comes within the principle of these cases, it is nowhere alleged that this statement or advice was untrue. Inferentially it may be so alleged as growing out of the vast disproportion between the value received and given, but an inference is not a sufficient allegation of falsity.

[4] "It is alleged in another count that the 'plaintiff was engaged in a large amount of litigation connected with his interest in the said Conservative Investment Company (the corporation whose stock was transferred by plaintiff to defendants), and had been subjected to many business cares and worries of a vexing and harassing nature growing out of such litigation, and because thereof he was not physically or mentally capable of devoting to the affairs of his said business or to the management of his interests and real property or his said stock in said Conservative Investment Company, ordinary care or attention.' While this allegation is for the purpose of showing plaintiff's susceptibility to undue influence or fraud, it nevertheless serves to show that the defendant attorney might have stated the truth when he said that it was for the best interest of a man who was losing his mind and health over litigation to sell his interest in the property involved therein. The quotation is made here merely to enforce the principle that the untruth of the alleged representation must be alleged in order to effectively allege fraud. However, I think the allegation is one of a mere opinion so general in its nature as to be insufficient to constitute a misrepresentation as distinguished from a mere opinion.

[5] "The third count alleges a representation 'that plaintiff was about to be indicted by the said grand jury; * * * that defendants had great influence with said United States district attorney, and could, through him, either cause or prevent an indictment being found against plaintiff,' and that if plaintiff did not sign the papers involved herein he would be indicted by said grand jury, and if he did he would not be so indicted. This could be but the expression of an opinion, except as to the statement 'that he was about to be indicted,' and that one of the defendants had great influence with the said United States district attorney. It is not alleged that these statements were untrue; and, while undue influence may be predicated thereon, the falsity of the statements or opinions must, as has already been said, be alleged in order to base thereon an action at law for fraud.

"These three counts therefore fail to state a cause of action.

"It is claimed by the plaintiff that he has stated a cause of action because of the alleged misconduct of plaintiff's attorney and the active participation of the other defendants therein. That such conduct would justify an action for rescission is admitted; that it would justify an action to recover secret profits is admitted also, or cannot be denied. But, as has been said, the complaint fails to allege restoration or an offer to restore, and hence fails as an action for rescission; and, while alleging that the attorney has a one-tenth interest in the purchasing syndicate, it fails to allege any profit therefrom, and does not purport to ask for an accounting of profits realized. It is worthy of observation, too, that the contract set up by the plaintiff affirmatively shows on its face that the said attorney had an interest in the subject-matter of $26,500 separate and distinct from his interest as an attorney for plaintiff; and, while the plaintiff alleges that he was ignorant that his attorney would be one of the purchasing syndicate, he was not ignorant that said attorney had an interest in the contract adverse to him. For the reason stated, the complaint fails to state a cause of action against said defendant.

[6] "As to defendant Roberts, the plaintiff claims special injury because he demanded and received a commission of $2,500. Aside from the allegations of plaintiff's mental weakness (not amounting to incompetency) there seems to be no basis for the recovery of this amount. The defendant demanded the compensation, and the plaintiff, knowing all the facts, paid him. He cannot recover.

"* * * In the event that no application is made for leave to amend as herein provided, or if said leave be denied, judgment will go for defendants."

Respondents insist that the record as presented does not entitle appellant to a review of the judgment. Considering the conclusion we have reached, this point becomes unimportant.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

43 Cal. App. 579

MURPHY v. HELLMAN COMMERCIAL TRUST & SAVINGS BANK et al.

(Civ. 3026.)

1. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃411—RIGHT TO FORECLOSE NOT LOST BY OBTAINING JUDGMENT AGAINST PRIMARY DEBTOR.

Notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing that there can be but one action for enforcement of any right secured by mortgage, where mortgage was taken as collateral security for payment by another, as primary debtor, of the purchase price for live stock specified in a lease note, mortgagee did not lose his right to foreclose by first obtaining judgment against the primary debtor on the contract of purchase, in view of Civ. Code, § 2845, providing that a surety may require his creditor to proceed against the principal; for section 726 applies to the primary debtor, for whose benefit it was enacted, and not to an individual guarantor or surety, or to a subsequent indorser upon a note, nor to any case where there is no privity of contract existing between the two obligations; that is, where the primary debt and mortgage debt are separate and distinct obligations.

2. GUARANTY ⊂⊃27—NO LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR BEYOND EXPRESS TERMS.

A guarantor cannot be liable beyond the express terms of the contract of guaranty.

3. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟸59—NO LIABILITY BEYOND EXPRESS TERMS OF CONTRACT.

Under Civ. Code, § 2844, a surety has all the rights of a guarantor, and, under section 2836, cannot be held beyond the express terms of his contract.

4. MORTGAGES ⟸118—EXTENT OF LIABILITY UNDER MORTGAGE TO SECURE PURCHASE PRICE PAYABLE BY ANOTHER.

Mortgagors, to secure payment of a stipulated price by the purchaser of live stock, being limited in their liability to such purchase price, their liability could not be extended to cover rentals accruing under the terms of a so-called "lease note" from the purchaser to the seller, or damages for any breach of contract by the purchaser.

5. SALES ⟸340—INCONSISTENT REMEDIES OF SELLER.

The seller having treated the contract of sale of live stock as at an end by taking back the stock after breach by the buyer, his election precluded him from thereafter suing for the purchase price.

6. MORTGAGES ⟸308—LOSS OF RIGHT OF ACTION TO ENFORCE MORTGAGE TAKEN AS SECURITY.

Since, if the seller of live stock elected by taking back the stock to treat the contract of sale as terminated, he could not subsequently sue for the purchase price of the stock, if the liability of mortgagors, who had given the mortgage as security for payment of the purchase price, was limited to payment of the price, seemingly the seller by terminating his contract lost his right to enforce the security of the mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by J. F. Murphy against the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, Samuel F. Randall, and another. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

A. D. Laughlin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John Dennison and Franklin F. Johnson, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action to subject certain real property to the payment of an indebtedness. The facts of the case are that on February 25, 1914, one J. F. Goggins executed what has been called by the parties a "lease note," which estimate acknowledged receipt of eight mules, eight horses, harness, etc., received by Goggins from the plaintiff, which he agreed to return within one year, and also contained an agreement on the part of Goggins to pay $3,375 for the use of said stock. It also reserved to Goggins the privilege of purchasing said property within the year for the sum of $3,375, said sum to be paid in monthly payments of $250 or more per month, beginning April 1, 1914. At the same time the defendants Samuel F. Randall and Amanda M. Randall, his wife, executed to the defendant Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank a deed to the real property in controversy in this action. Said deed was an unconditional grant, and stated the consideration to be $10. At the same time the plaintiff executed a bill of sale of the horses and mules in favor of Goggins. All of these instruments were deposited with the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank in escrow, with instructions from the plaintiff that the title to the real property was to be reconveyed to the defendant Randall, and the deed to the personal property was to be delivered to Goggins only upon the payment by Goggins of the full amount called for by the agreement.

Nothing was paid on the so-called lease note, and on February 25, 1915, the same was extended for one year by indorsement on the back thereof. On the same date the defendants Samuel F. Randall and his wife sent to said bank a letter agreeing to the extension of the note and consenting that the property deeded to the bank should be held as security "until such time as said lease note is paid, together with all accrued interest thereon." This letter also recited that the deed to the bank conveying the property had been made in accordance with the oral understanding of the parties that it was given as collateral security for the payment of the said note. Mr. Goggins never made any payments upon his obligation. He took the stock to San Diego, and rented some of the horses and mules to contractors, and placed the others in pasture, where they were being held for feed bills in July, 1915, when the plaintiff went to San Diego. The extended lease note had not expired at that time, but Goggins, being unable to make any payments upon the same or to pay the feed bills for which the animals were being held, voluntarily surrendered possession to Murphy of the stock which he had, and Murphy paid the feed bills and secured possession of eight of the horses and eight of the mules, two horses and two mules having been lost.

Plaintiff then commenced an action against Goggins to recover the rentals specified and for damages for the breach of the contract, and recovered a judgment by default for $6,521.89, which included the rental value of the stock, the value of the two horses and two mules which were not returned, the amount of the feed bills paid by plaintiff, and the amount of depreciation in the value of the stock returned to him by reason of improper care, feeding, etc. This default judgment was rendered on the 16th day of October, 1915, which was before the time for payment of the extended lease note had expired. Later, and after such time had expired, the plaintiff began the present action, in which he sought to compel the sale of the property deeded to the bank by Randall and have the proceeds applied to the satisfaction of the judgment against Goggins.

The trial court held that this action was barred by the provisions of section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real or personal property. The contention of appellant is that the deed and the trust agreement signed by the Randalls together constitute a deed of trust, and that said deed of trust is not within the provisions of section 726, Code of Civil Procedure. This is not the theory upon which the case was tried. In the trial court the plaintiff sought to have the instrument treated as a mortgage and foreclosed as such, and he alleges in his complaint that the bank "accepted said deed solely as collateral security" for the performance of all the covenants and agreements contained in the contract between Murphy and Goggins. Plaintiff also sets out in his complaint the letter from the defendant Randall in which the purpose of the deed to the bank is set forth, and where it is stated to be collateral security for the payment of the lease note. The prayer of the complaint is for foreclosure, that the usual decree may be made for the sale of said premises, and that all persons may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim, or equity of redemption in said premises. This relief cannot be asked under the terms of any trust agreement of the parties, but only under the power of the court to foreclose mortgages. In the case of Felton v. Le Breton, 92 Cal. 457, 28 Pac. 490, it is said that wherever the grantee treats a trust deed as a mortgage and goes into a court of equity asking for a foreclosure and sale under its decree, his relation to the trust property is the same as that of a mortgage in the foreclosure of an ordinary mortgage. In the case of Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348, 22 Pac. 200, § 726, Code of Civil Procedure, was held to apply to the foreclosure of a mortgage which was in form a deed absolute where it was admitted by the pleadings that such deed was given as security for an indebtedness. The decisions are numerous to the effect that a deed absolute on its face may be treated as a mortgage and foreclosed as such if that was the intention of the parties thereto. Hall v. Arnott, supra; Prefumo v. Russell, 148 Cal. 451, 83 Pac. 810.

But it makes little difference whether the deed is treated as a mortgage or as a deed of trust. Treating it in the light most favorable to respondent, that is, as a mortgage, then the question is put squarely in issue whether, the mortgage having been taken as collateral security for the payment of the purchase price specified in the lease note, the plaintiff has lost his right to foreclose because of the judgment against the primary debtor on the contract.

Section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, provides in part:

"There can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real or personal property."

This section was enacted for the benefit of the principal debtor and to relieve him from a multiplicity of actions. As stated in the opinion of the Supreme Court in Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 304, 146 Pac. 665, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171, the section followed the statutory change in the common-law rule regarding the character of a mortgage, wherein it was provided that a mortgage conveyed no title, but gave security of a lien only upon the property, whereas under the common law the mortgage was a conveyance of the title upon a condition subsequent without right of redemption. The recourse under the common law was a suit in equity for relief against the forfeiture, but the mortgagee might go to law to recover the amount of the debt secured by the mortgage. Thus, under our statute, the mortgage security must first be exhausted before any deficiency judgment can be had against the primary debtor. But the rule is one which was clearly designed for the benefit of the primary debtor, and is therefore one which he can waive. Furthermore, as has been said in the case above cited, at page 305 of 169 Cal., at page 667 of 146 Pac. (Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171):

"The law never contemplated that because a man had taken a mortgage he could not take other independent security for his debt, and, if the contract for such security permitted it, enforce such contract without reference to the mortgage debt."

The court then held that a materialman who took a mortgage from a contractor on his property for the materials sold and used in the construction of a building by the contractor on the property of another did not lose his right to claim and foreclose a mechanic's lien on the property upon which the materials were used.

In Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 40 Pac. 1047, the Supreme Court held that an action would lie against the stockholders of a corporation for a liability of the corporation, though the corporate liability was evidenced by its note secured by mortgage. Therein the court say:

"The mortgage only affects the remedy against the mortgagor—the corporation."

In Adams v. Wallace, 119 Cal. 67, 51 Pac. 14, the action was against an independent guarantor of a debt secured by mortgage. The court held that section 726 had no application to such an action because it was on an independent contract to pay the debt upon the default of the principal debtor. To the same effect are Carver v. Steele, 116 Cal. 116, 47 Pac. 1007, 58 Am. St. Rep. 156; Kinsel v. Ballou, 151 Cal. 754, 91 Pac. 620. In Commercial Bank of Santa Ana v. Kershner, 120 Cal. 495, 498, 52 Pac. 848, 849, the Supreme Court say:

"A debt may be secured by pledge, mechanic's lien, judgment lien, attachment, or otherwise, and yet the security may be reinforced by a mortgage on the same or other property."

In Schehr v. Berkey, 166 Cal. 157, 135 Pac. 41, the lessor of realty had taken as collateral security for the payment of the lease a chattel mortgage on personal property. Default having been made in the payment of the rents, an action was instituted against the assignee of the lessees in unlawful detainer, and judgment recovered for restitution of the premises and three installments of rent, which the court trebled. Thereafter plaintiffs instituted suit to foreclose the mortgage, and section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, was pleaded in bar. But the Supreme Court held that it was perfectly proper to sue the lessee for rent and thereafter to foreclose the mortgage to obtain the amount of the damage, saying:

"Clearly section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot be applied to such a case as this. The liability of the lessees was one thing; the liability of their assignee a different and distinct thing."

To the same effect is Ashcroft Estate Co. v. Nelson, 26 Cal. App. 400, 147 Pac. 101. The same interpretation has been given in an action of replevin. Harper v. Gordon, 128 Cal. 489, 61 Pac. 84. There the defense was made that an action in replevin would not lie because, under the provisions of section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, the debt being secured by a mortgage, an action to foreclose the mortgage lien alone could be maintained. In answer to this the Supreme Court say (128 Cal. 491, 61 Pac. 85):

"The action here is clearly not to recover the debt, nor do we think it an action 'for the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage,' in the sense intended by the clause restricting the action, upon a debt secured by mortgage, to foreclosure. The action of replevin determines only the right of possession. * * * The object of foreclosure under section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to enforce the lien by subjecting the property to sale."

[1] In the amended answer of Samuel F. Randall it is alleged that the deed was originally given to the bank, at the request of Goggins, as collateral security for the payment of the purchase price of the lease note of Goggins, and this was found to be the fact by the trial court. Is was then alleged that at the time of the extension of the lease note the plaintiff requested defendants Samuel F. and Amanda M. Randall to extend their security for a like period, and that the written agreement was then executed by said defendants at the special request of the plaintiff. If their liability was based upon the first allegation referred to and the finding of the court, then they were sureties. If their liability was based upon the latter allegation referred to, then they were guarantors. If the defendants' liability was that of sureties, then they might demand that the plaintiff first seek recovery against the principal debtor, Goggins. Section 2845, Civ. Code. If, on the other hand, their liability was that of guarantors, the plaintiff might elect either to sue them first or to sue the principal debtor without going into equity to foreclose the mortgage. If he first sued the principal debtor he was not subsequently barred from bringing suit in foreclosure. Adams v. Wallace, 119 Cal. 67, 70, 51 Pac. 14; Withers v. Bousfield, 183 Pac. 855; Pierce v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 464, 470, 61 Pac. 64, 79 Am. St. Rep. 56; San Francisco Theological Seminary v. Monterey County Gas & Electric Co., 175 Pac. 693. Thus the rule in this state as to section 726 clearly is that this section applies to the primary debtor and was enacted for his benefit; that it does not apply to an individual guarantor or surety, or to a subsequent indorser upon a promissory note, nor in fact to any case where there is no privity of contract existing between the two obligation—that is, where the primary debt and the obligation under the mortgage are separate and distinct obligations. The trial court, therefore, was in error when it gave judgment for defendants upon this special defense.

For the reasons given the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. It should not be implied from this, however, as fairly it might be, that plaintiff should have judgment on the issues framed by the pleadings. The complaint alleges that suit was instituted against Goggins and prosecuted to judgment in the sum of $6,521.89, and the amended answer alleges that prior to the institution of said suit Goggins voluntarily surrendered to plaintiff all of the personal property covered by the lease note. The judgment roll in the suit referred to was admitted in evidence without objection, and therefrom it appears that plaintiff sued Goggins for the rentals accruing under the note and for damages arising out of the breach of the contract.

The allegations of the amended answer are that the deed was given as collateral security for the payment of the purchase price of the stock. The written undertaking executed by the defendants recites that the deed is given as collateral security for that certain lease note for $3,375 and accrued interest. The court found that the deed was executed "as security for the payment of the note," and that at the time of its execution the defendants understood that it was to be held as security "for the payment of the purchase price of the personal property purchased by F. J. Goggins."

[2-6] It is elementary that a guarantor cannot be liable beyond the express terms of the contract of guaranty. San Francisco Theological Seminary v. Monterey County Gas & Electric Co., 175 Pac. 693. A surety has all the rights of a guarantor (section 2844, Civ. Code), and cannot be held beyond the express terms of his contract (section 2836, Civ. Code). Thus, whether the Randalls were guarantors or sureties, the limit of their liability, as shown by the findings of the trial court, was the purchase price of the property, and this could not be extended to cover rentals accruing under the terms of the lease or damages for the breach of the contract. In taking back the stock the plaintiff treated the contract of sale at an end. He was then required to make his election as to which remedy he would pursue—to stand upon his contract and sue for the breach, or to treat the contract as ended and sue for the rescission. He could not pursue both remedies. House v. Piercy, 183 Pac. 807. Having elected to treat the contract of sale at an end, he could not thereafter sue for the purchase price of the stock, and, if the liability of the defendants in this case was limited to the payment of the purchase price, it would seem that the plaintiff by terminating his contract has lost his right of action to enforce the security of the mortgage. Though the character of the prior action was properly put in issue, this point was not urged before the trial court, and it is not argued upon this appeal. What is said herein regarding it is said merely by way of suggestion for the assistance of the parties and the trial court upon the retrial of the action, and not as determinative of the rights of the parties upon such new trial.

The judgment is reversed.

43 Cal. App. 516

BOURNE v. BOURNE et al. (Civ. 2920.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 10, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 8, 1919.)

1. TRIAL ⟸207—LIMITING EFFECT OF ADMISSIBLE HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

In a wife's action against her husband's father and mother for alienation of husband's affections, hearsay evidence of the wife as to what her husband told her the defendants said and did, while competent and material to show the husband's attitude of mind, was competent for no other purpose, and it was proper to so limit consideration of it by instructions.

2. TRIAL ⟸337 — JURY'S DISREGARD OF INSTRUCTIONS.

In a wife's alienation action against the husband's parents, where there was no direct evidence of defendants' ill will or malign influence and both defendants and the husband denied that there was any such occurrence as related by plaintiff as having been told her by her husband, it is difficult to escape the conviction that the jury was prejudicially influenced by such statements in disregard of instructions to consider them only as evidence of the state of the husband's mind.

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸325—ALIENATION OF HUSBAND'S AFFECTIONS BY HIS PARENTS.

If the husband's determination to abandon his wife was the result of his own volition and not influenced by any willful or malicious act of his parents, the defendants, they cannot be held responsible in the wife's alienation action because they assisted him in carrying out his purpose by furnishing him money for car fare, since they had a perfect legal right to side with their son in his separation if done in belief of his story of the cause of his leaving and in sympathy for him, and not because of malice or ill will towards the wife.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸325—ALIENATION OF HUSBAND'S AFFECTIONS BY HIS PARENTS.

In a wife's action against her husband's parents for alienation of the husband's affections, no presumption of malicious interference arises because the parents side with their child, unless it affirmatively appears that it is done in bad faith and from ill will towards the wife, and, while permitting the husband to abandon the wife without offering her aid or comfort may have been reprehensible, it was not violation of legal duty.

5. TRIAL ⟸337 — DISREGARDING INSTRUCTIONS.

While the jurors are the sole judges of the weight and sufficiency of the evidence, their province in receiving or rejecting evidence, as instructed by the court, is not arbitrary, but is to be exercised with legal discretion and in subordination of the rules of evidence.

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸333(1) — ALIENATION OF HUSBAND'S AFFECTIONS BY HIS PARENTS; EVIDENCE.

In a wife's action against her husband's father and mother for alienation of affections, she must prove that defendants knowingly and willfully influenced their son to withdraw his affection and companionship from her, and that this was done in a spirit of malice and ill will toward plaintiff, and evidence of defendants' quarrels with and criticism of plaintiff and assistance given to husband after he had announced his abandonment would raise no inference of an effort to alienate his affections from her, but might, if such effort were proved, support a finding of malicious purpose.

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂333(1)—ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS; PRESUMPTIONS AS TO ACTS OF PARENTS.

The law places the parents of a married child on a much more favorable basis than that of a stranger to the family relations, in actions for alienation of affections, and all presumptions must be that the parents will act only for the best interests of the child.

8. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂333(9) — ALIENATION OF HUSBAND'S AFFECTIONS BY HIS PARENTS; EVIDENCE.

In a wife's action for alienation of her husband's affections brought against his father and mother, evidence held insufficient to justify any holding that the father was a joint tort-feasor with the mother.

9. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂333(7) — ACTION FOR ALIENATION OF HUSBAND'S AFFECTIONS; ADMISSIBILITY OF HEARSAY EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANTS' PROPERTY.

In a wife's action against her husband's parents for alienation of husband's affections, it was error to admit plaintiff's testimony of declarations of her husband as to his father being worth $75,000, it being of no value in proving the state of the husband's feelings, and probably influencing the jury as to amount of damages.

Thomas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Marie M. Bourne against Hope Bourne and husband. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

J. W. McKinley, Nat B. Browne, and A. W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff, Marie Bourne, brought this action against Harry S. Bourne and Hope Bourne, the parents of her husband, Ralph Bourne, to recover damages for the alleged alienation of her husband's affections. The case was tried before a jury, and there was a verdict and judgment for $12,500 in plaintiff's favor. The defendants appeal, basing their claim for reversal on insufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict, and error of the court in giving and refusing instructions and in the admission of evidence.

The weak point in plaintiff's case is insufficiency of the evidence that the desertion of plaintiff by her husband was caused or influenced by the fault of the defendants or that the conduct of defendants was influenced by malice. Eliminating the hearsay evidence of all that the plaintiff and her witnesses said that the husband, Ralph Bourne, said that his parents said—and there is not a scintilla of evidence worthy of serious consideration that either the father or mother ever by word or deed tried to bring about a separation between the plaintiff and their son—there is no evidence, up to the day that Ralph Bourne deserted the plaintiff and left his home and wife, outside of this hearsay testimony, other than one isolated instance, that the father, Harry S. Bourne, ever displayed in any manner any ill will toward his daughter-in-law, or evinced any disposition that would suggest a desire to alienate from her the affections of her husband. And there are only infrequent expressions of criticism and ill feeling toward her on the part of the mother on which to base any inference of adverse or hostile feeling on the mother's part, and these gain most of their significance when considered against the background of the hearsay testimony referred to.

This hearsay, testimony, as has been indicated, consisted of the testimony of the plaintiff, supplemented by that of some of her witnesses, as to declarations which they claimed the husband, Ralph Bourne, made in their presence, of criticism and unkind remarks, and attempts to influence him against his wife, made by his parents, chiefly his mother. The following excerpts from the transcript of the evidence will serve to illustrate the character of this testimony as to alleged declarations of Ralph Bourne:

"He told me that they spoke to him about coming back, and that he could not possibly get along over in Glendale because he couldn't earn his living; * * * and they said they would do anything he wanted if he would come back to Eagle Rock, and Ralph was very indignant about it, and he told me about it, and said for me not to mind what they said because they could never get him away from me. * * * Well, Ralph was very angry with his folks because he always told me never to mind what his folks said about me, because he didn't believe them; that he would never leave me for any reason in the world; * * * that he would never leave me to go back to his folks. * * * Sometimes he wouldn't tell me all that was said until later. He used to say that he didn't like to tell me everything that they said, because he said it would make me feel bad if I knew that they were talking about me. * * * Well, at first he was very indignant about it; he didn't like to talk about it at all, because he thought it would make me feel bad, and he would always tell me that he cared more for me than anything in the world, and he would usually be very much more affectionate after he had had a talk with his folks about it. And one instance toward the last, about two weeks before he went away, he sort of sided in with his folks; he sort of drifted to their side as the time went on. * * * I told him several times that if they talked to him so much that perhaps he would leave me and go back to them. He said he never would. He said nothing in the world could ever make him leave me. * * * Ralph told me several times that they had offered him inducements; they told him that they would send him to college and pay all his bills if he would leave me—put him on his feet. * * * They always said he would never get along while he was married to me. * * * Well, at first he was very indignant with his folks, and then toward the last he sort of seemed to be drifting toward them—told me I ought to see things the way they saw them. And that was about the last that we were living together. * * * Mrs. Bourne talked to Ralph and called me every name that she could think of, and told Ralph that I was absolutely no good, and he would be better off if he had never seen me."

[1] There was a good deal more hearsay testimony of this character. It all went in over the objections of defendants' counsel that it was incompetent and hearsay, and under a ruling of the court that it was admitted only for the purpose of showing the state of the husband's feelings during this period; and the court expressly instructed the jury that they were to receive it for no other purpose, and that it was not competent evidence to prove any of the conduct or statements therein attributed to the defendants.

It is probable that the court was correct in its ruling, although there were some of these hearsay narratives attributed to the husband, which gave purported damaging statements of his parents, that were not accompanied by any evidence of his own feelings in the matter. A fair consideration of the rulings on the extent to which such declarations may be used in evidence, in Cripe v. Cripe, 170 Cal. 91, 148 Pac. 520, Humphrey v. Pope, 1 Cal. App. 375, 82 Pac. 223, Barlow v. Barnes, 172 Cal. 98, 155 Pac. 457, and Jameson v. Tully (Sup.) 173 Pac. 577, are in accord with the ruling of the trial court on this question. It is undoubtedly the law that, where testimony is competent and material for any purpose under the issues on trial, it is admissible for that purpose, although it may be inadmissible and prejudicial when applied to other issues to which it is pertinent. 14 R. C. L. 52; Trenton, etc., Ry. Co. v. Cooper, 60 N. J. Law, 219, 37 Atl. 730, 38 L. R. A. 637, 64 Am. St. Rep. 592; MacDougall v. Maguire, 35 Cal. 274, 95 Am. Dec. 98; Birmingham Trust & Sav. Co. v. Currey, 175 Ala. 373, 57 South. 962, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 81; Diamond Rubber Co. v. Harryman, 41 Colo. 415, 92 Pac. 922, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775; Baustian v. Young, 152 Mo. 317, 53 S. W. 921, 75 Am. St. Rep. 462; Illinois, etc., R. R. Co. v. Houchins, 121 Ky. 526, 89 S. W. 530, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 375, 123 Am. St. Rep. 205. In this case the court did the best it could in safeguarding the defendants from prejudicial consequences of this testimony by instructing the jury to disregard it for any purpose other than that of showing the state of the husband's feelings.

[2] There was abundant other evidence of Ralph Bourne's affection for and loyalty to his wife during all the period covered by these hearsay declarations; and, indeed, there was no dispute on that point. In view of the seriously prejudicial nature of these statements on the main issue in the case, as to the conduct and motives of defendants, plaintiff's counsel were taking unnecessary chances of error in insisting upon the introduction of these hearsay declarations. The introduction of this testimony presents a feature of the case which at least invites a careful scrutiny of the other evidence directed to this issue, in determining whether the jury was justified in finding the defendants guilty of separating this young married couple. In view of the absence of any direct evidence of ill will or malign influence on the part of defendants, and the testimony of the husband and both the defendants that no such occurrences took place as were referred to in the hearsay declarations, it is difficult to escape the conviction that the jury was prejudicially influenced by considering the hearsay statements in disregard of the instructions of the court. In the argument by their brief on this appeal, respondent's counsel, speaking of these declarations, suggest their force as a determinative influence in the mind of the jury as to the fact of inducements being offered by the defendants to alienate Ralph's affection from his wife. They say:

"The nature of these declarations, and the accompanying manifestations of affection for the wife and indignation against the parents, throw light upon the nature, extent, and force of the inducements or threats which must have been held out or made to Ralph Bourne in order to impel him to treat his wife so cruelly and desert her with an intention never to return."

Again, it is said:

"They point to the degree, amount, and kind of persuasion and inducements that must have been held out to Ralph Bourne in order to induce him to desert his wife."

It is apparent, from the undisputed evidence, that the marriage of this young couple took place with the full consent and approval of the defendants. The plaintiff, before the marriage, was a frequent guest at defendants' home, and sometimes spent the night with them. They were present at the marriage ceremony, and provided a home for the young couple with the declared purpose of ultimately deeding it to them. The mother-in-law spoke in high terms of approval of the new daughter-in-law, stating to one of plaintiff's witnesses that Ralph had married her "because he knew she was a good, pure girl." Both the parents wanted the young couple in their company, and the mother was particularly solicitous to have the companionship and affection of her son's wife. If any criticism can be made of the attitude of the defendants toward their daughter-in-law during the first few months of the marriage, it was for overzealousness and officiousness for her welfare. They probably were not always wise or discreet, and, according to plaintiff's testimony, were inclined to impose upon the young couple too dictatorial a supervision of their conduct and affairs; but that anything was said or done by these defendants which was not meant in kindness and for the good of both their son and his wife during the first months of their marriage, is not seriously contended.

The plaintiff was 18 years of age and her husband was 21 when they were married in May, 1913. He was the only child of the defendants. There was nothing worthy of serious consideration that occurred in the family to disturb the harmony of any of their relations, particularly as relates to the conduct of defendants, for several months. There had been some criticism, which was neither unkindly nor perhaps unmerited, regarding the plaintiff's disposition to "gad," as the witness termed it; and the plaintiff had, on two or three occasions, been unreasonably resentful of what she considered officious solicitude of her husband's parents in her domestic affairs. But nothing serious occurred until about the first of March, 1914, nearly a year after the marriage. The plaintiff was away fom her home in Eagle Rock on one of her frequent visits to her friends in Glendale, when her husband, who was working for his father in Eagle Rock, met with an automobile accident. The Ford car which he was driving overturned, and he was quite badly strained and bruised. He telephoned his wife, and she, instead of coming home to him, had him come to her friend's home in Glendale, where she was staying to dinner. While he was there, his parents heard of the accident, and were very much concerned, not knowing how badly he was hurt. They telephoned to Glendale, and afterwards met the young couple at the street car when they returned home in the evening. By this time, Ralph, the husband of plaintiff, was suffering a good deal from his injuries, and could walk only with difficulty. The party went together to defendants' home, which was near that of the young people, and there defendants urged them to come in and stay all night, where they had better accommodations, could telephone for a doctor, if needed, and where the parents could assist in caring for their son. This the young people refused to do, and a quarrel ensued. The testimony is very conflicting as to what occurred, as narrated by the plaintiff on the one side, and her husband and defendants on the other. But, accepting plaintiff's version of the event against the three other witnesses, everybody was wrought up and excited. The father insisted on the son remaining, and commanded the daughter-in-law to come along into the house, and, as she claims, caught hold of her wrists and tried to draw her in. She also testified that the mother-in-law called her a snake and a rat, and said that she was not even human. Plaintiff, in turn, used some rough language, and, it is admitted, invited her father-in-law to "go to hell." Plaintiff and her husband eventually went to their own home, and a few days thereafter, influenced by this quarrel, moved from there to Glendale, where the husband obtained employment away from his parents.

This unfortunate episode, which was evidently the result of the nervous strain under which all of them were laboring, and the natural anxiety of the parents over the accident to their son, they not knowing how serious his injuries might be, ought never to have made a breach in the family relations, irrespective of who was the greater offender. That the parents tried to avoid any such result is evident from the fact that they at once commenced to make overtures to the young people, and showed a desire to conciliate them and to heal the breach. This effort continued throughout the several months that plaintiff and her husband remained at Glendale. During all this time plaintiff maintained a hostile attitude toward the defendants, and evidently resented her husband's inclination to a reconciliation. Ultimately, through the repeated advances of the parents, plaintiff and her husband accepted the olive branch, and, after an exchange of visits, an arrangement was agreed on whereby plaintiff and her husband went back to Eagle Rock to live with defendants until their cottage, which had been rented, would be available for their occupancy; the son again taking employment with his father. This was in January, 1915. The parties continued to live together in this way until some time in March, apparently in unusually amicable relations, for two families occupying the same house. About the only criticism plaintiff has to make of the defendants during this period is that the parents were too insistent on being in her company and desiring her society.

Then came the second, and final serious episode in the relations of these two families —the result of an evident misunderstanding, for which the plaintiff was apparently as much to blame as any one else. Mrs. Bourne, the elder, had a woman friend—a Mrs. Visel—who frequently visited at her home, and with whom she was talking one day about her daughter-in-law's skill in sewing. She made a remark about her sewing which all parties agree was perfectly harmless, and more in the nature of praise than of criticism. Mrs. Visel repeated this to plaintiff in a way to leave the impression that the mother-in-law was finding fault. Plaintiff then gave her version of the matter to her husband. He, in turn, repeated it to his father; and the father took his wife to task for having made an unkindly criticism of the daughter-in-law. By the time the story got back to the mother, she received the impression that Mrs. Visel had misrepresented the incident and was trying to make trouble in the family. Returning to her home, she found Mrs. Visel there, and, in the presence of all the parties to this action, called Mrs. Visel to account, and accused her of misrepresentation and mischief-making. The plaintiff took Mrs. Visel's part, and all the women evidently became much excited, and a good deal of harsh language was indulged in; and the elder Mrs. Bourne ordered Mrs. Visel to leave the house. Plaintiff decided to go with her, and the young husband followed his wife. It is entirely obvious that the conduct of the elder Mrs. Bourne in this matter was influenced by her anxiety to keep on good terms with her daughter-in-law. In fact, throughout this period, while the two families were together, there seemed to be an almost feverish solicitude on the part of the parents to cultivate the good will of the plaintiff; and that it was not entirely on the son's account is shown by the efforts of the mother to have the plaintiff in her company, and to elicit some sentiment of daughterly regard.

This second separation of the families occurred about two years after the marriage of the young people, and about four months before the plaintiff was deserted. During all this time the young husband sided with his wife in whatever differences occurred, and was admittedly deeply in love with her, and, according to the wife's testimony, expressed great indignation at anything like a hostile attitude toward her on the part of his parents. If there had been any attempt on the part of the parents to alienate him from his wife, it had, up to this time, been a signal failure.

After this second episode, the young people again moved into apartments of their own, but the son continued in the employment of his father. Friendly relations were not resumed with the plaintiff, although the parents made overtures in that direction by taking the young people products of their home garden, and inviting them to join in auto trips. The plaintiff repulsed these advances, and displayed a spirit of unrelenting hostility to the husband's parents. She evidently, as her husband testifies, resented any approaches to social intimacy with them on the part of their son, and virtually admitted that she insisted upon his giving up all family relations with them. Reading between the lines of plaintiff's own testimony, it is evident that this matter became one of some tension and bitterness between them, she insisting and he refusing to entirely give up friendly relations with his parents. The following questions and answers from plaintiff's testimony point to these conclusions:

"Q. Haven't you told your husband many times that if he did not side with you and give up his parents you would leave him? A. No, sir; not until about a month before he left. Q. Now, you say that it was not until the last month that you lived together that you did tell your husband that he could take a choice between you and the parents? A. I don't know that I ever used those words to him. Q. Well, what was said during the last month about your leaving him unless he would side with you and give up his parents? A. I think one evening Ralph came home, * * * and I asked him where he had been, and he said that he had worked late; and I asked him if he hadn't been with his folks, and he finally owned up and said that he had; and I told Ralph that I didn't think he was doing the right thing by me to see his folks and not telling me about it; and I told Ralph that I thought he ought to have some consideration for me. I don't think that I said, 'I will leave you if you don't give up your folks for me.' I am sure I didn't, not in those words."

And again:

"Q. When was the first time you told Ralph you thought he ought to give up his folks because they were talking about you? A. During the last month or month and a half that we were together. Q. Do you mean to say that you didn't say that to him long before that? A. We talked it over in a general way. I never used those words; just sort of general talk. Q. Well, now; you supposed, did you not, after this scene in the house with Mrs. Visel present, that he had given up his folks entirely, didn't you? A. Not entirely, because he was going to work there, continue work. Q. And you knew, of course, he was going to continue to work with his father, but you didn't think there was going to be a continuation of the social relations between him and his parents? A. I knew there would be no relations between the four of us."

The testimony of the plaintiff's husband was that there was, during the last three or four months, bitter and repeated quarrels between them because he refused to give up all affectionate relations with his parents; and the above admissions of plaintiff, and other circumstances shown in evidence, tend strongly to corroborate this.

It is quite evident that, for reasons good or bad, the plaintiff had assumed an attitude of implacable enmity toward her parents-in-law. Indeed, it seems to be on this attitude on her part that plaintiff's counsel largely based their inference that the parents sought to alienate her husband from her. She did not like them. She refused to be reconciled with them. Therefore they must have resented it and tried to take her husband from her. That is not a fair legal inference, and it finds no support in the evidence. As has been suggested, there is some evidence of isolated criticisms and unfriendly comment by the mother. Mrs. Visel was the principal witness to these incidents, and, as she and the elder Bournes were not on speaking terms after the final break between the families in March, whatever she may have heard must have occurred prior to that time, and was, as one might say, condoned by the subsequent reconciliation and era of good feeling between the parties. Mrs. Visel testified that at one time the elder Mrs. Bourne said of the plaintiff that she was a snake, and that she was not human. This is the same language that the plaintiff herself testified that her mother-in-law used at the time of the trouble over the automobile accident, and Mrs. Visel locates her conversation at about the same time; so the words used on both occasions probably arose out of the same grievance. Mrs. Visel also testifies that after the quarrel, and while the young folks were living in Glendale, the mother often expressed regret that her son was away from her, and told how unhappy she was; "that it was ridiculous that he was away; that he belonged with them, and that he would come if it wasn't for Marie; that it was her ambition to get him back; that he belonged at home, and that was where she was going to have him if it was the last thing she ever did." She seems to have accomplished this purpose, and succeeded in getting both Ralph and Marie at home, where all of them lived very amicably together for some time; and the means she used to secure the return of her son and his wife were friendliness and conciliation toward both. Mrs. Visel further testified that at the time of the second separation of the families, in the quarrel in which she was involved, the elder Mrs. Bourne accused her of telling lies to cause trouble and accused Marie of telling lies, too, in order to keep her husband's affection, and that Ralph came in during the quarrel "and tried to bring about peace; he tried to quiet his mother down, and also his wife."

Mrs. McDonald, the plaintiff's mother, testified that on one occasion the elder Mrs. Bourne spent the evening with her and talked about Marie all the time. This was in the winter of 1914, evidently while the young people were living at Glendale. She testifies that Mrs. Bourne said that Marie was not a good housekeeper, that it would have been better for Ralph if he had never married her, and that he would never get along. Mrs. McDonald also testified that she saw the defendant Harry Bourne the day after the trouble over the automobile accident, and that he said:

> "Ralph was going with another girl at the same time as with Marie, and that he wished Ralph had married the other girl. He said she was not a good housekeeper, and was extravagant, and that Ralph would have been better off if he had not married her."

There may have been some other statements of like nature; but the foregoing is substantially the sum total of any expression, by act or word, prior to the date of the separation of plaintiff and her husband, tending to show malice or ill will on the part of the defendants toward the plaintiff. This and the two quarrels they had, and the fact that the plaintiff herself had given them little cause to feel kindly toward her, is the sole basis for the inference that the defendants had willfully and maliciously alienated their son's affections from his wife or influenced him to desert her. There is no direct evidence whatever that they ever, by any word or conduct directed to or in the presence of their son, attempted to influence his relations with his wife.

[3] There is only one other circumstance in this unfortunate family tragedy tending to connect the defendants with the separation of their son from his wife. On the 10th of July, 1915, the desertion took place. Ralph Bourne, in the absence of his wife from home on that day, went to their apartment, packed up his belongings and some of the wedding presents he and his wife had received at their marriage, and departed. He took an east-bound train for New York, and did not return to Los Angeles until about the time of this trial. It is admitted that on the 7th or 8th of July he disclosed to his parents his intention to leave, and asked for money for his trip. He and both the defendants testify that the parents objected to his separation from his wife, and urged upon him his duty to his marriage relations. There is no evidence to the contrary, unless such inference may arise from the fact that they assisted him in leaving. As a matter of admitted fact, the father furnished him the money for his railroad fare and expenses, and on the day that he left took him in his automobile to a point near where Ralph and his wife lived and waited there for him to get his belongings from the apartment. The desertion, if the plaintiff's story is true, was cruel and indefensible. Even in the light of the husband's explanation, it was cowardly. But if the determination to abandon his wife was the result of the husband's own volition, and not influenced by any willul or malicious act of the defendants, they cannot be held responsible because they assisted him in carrying out his purpose. They had a perfect legal right to side with their son in this separation, if it was done in belief of his story of the cause of his leaving and in sympathy for him, and not because of malice and ill will toward his wife. The New York Court of Appeals, in the case of Servis v. Servis, 172 N. Y. 438, 65 N. E. 270, says:

> "Of the absolute right of a father to furnish money for the support of a son who has, for reasons good or bad, determined to abandon his wife, there is of course no doubt—a right that he may exercise without being subjected to respond in damages, * * * provided its exercise be not part of a general scheme having for its object the alienation of the husband's affections for his wife, and her abandonment by him."

The plaintiff's cause of action is for alienation of her husband's affections and inducing the desertion. If the state of mind which induced this desertion was caused by the willful and malicious influence of the parents, they would be liable, irrespective of whether or not they assisted him in his plans to go away. If his loss of affection for and determination to leave his wife arose from their own domestic troubles, whether over the wife's implacable purpose to break up his relations with his father and mother or otherwise, and without malicious interference of the defendants, they are not legally responsible, no matter what assistance they gave him in carrying out his purpose; and no presumption of a bad motive arises from the mere fact that they gave him such assistance. Reed v. Reed, 6 Ind. App. 317, 33 N. E. 638, 51 Am. St. Rep. 310; Trumbull v. Trumbull, 71 Neb. 186, 98 N. W. 683, 8 Ann. Cas. 812; Cripe v. Cripe, supra. The marriage of a child does not terminate the right of the parents to interest themselves in his or her happiness and welfare, and they do not stand on the footing of a stranger to the domestic relations when such a charge as is here involved is brought against them. So long as they, in good faith, act for what they believe is their child's welfare, no matter how mistakenly, and are not moved by malice or ill will toward the partner to the marriage, there is no liability, even where they use their influence to bring about a separation.

[4] The relations of a parent, particularly of a mother to her son, are scarcely less sacred than the relationship between husband and wife, and are usually more unselfish. The home of the parents is the natural sanctuary of the children in cases of marital infelicity. It is not the policy of the law to leave this door open only at the risk of involving the parents in litigation for alienation of affection. No presumption arises of malicious interference because the parents take sides with their child, unless it affirmatively appears that it is done in bad faith and from ill will toward the other party. A mother has a right to fight to retain the affection and society of her boy so long as she does not try to interfere with his duty to his own domestic relations; and any wife who, without serious cause, interposes a barrier to her husband's affectionate regard for his mother, deserves to lose his love. We find no evidence in this case of anything but a spirit of friendliness and a desire to conciliate the regard and affection of this plaintiff on the part of defendants, for the first two years of her marriage with their son, a spirit which, if interrupted, was not broken by the one or two unfortunate quarrels, incidents for which the plaintiff's suspicion and unfriendly attitude toward her parents-in-law were largely responsible. And after the quarrel in March, 1915, some three or four months before the desertion of plaintiff by her husband, there is no reason to believe there was a day when the defendants would not gladly have welcomed a reconciliation with their daughter-in-law. They made every attempt in that direction that self-respect would permit, and their advances were coldly repulsed. It is not unlikely in moments of resentment they said harsh and unkind things about her, but that fact alone does not justify an inference that they violated the laws of God and society by trying to break up the marriage relation of these young people.

[5, 6] It must be remembered that there is no direct evidence that they did try to influence their son in this regard, but, on the other hand, the son and both defendants explicitly deny that any such influence was ever attempted; and each of them testified that the defendants, when told of his intentions, advised him to remain with his wife. The husband's explanation of the estrangement from his wife is that it resulted from constant quarrels over the wife's insistence that he give up all social relations with his father and mother. There is at least no evidence to rebut the statement of the defendants that they were so informed, and so believed, when they finally consented to aid their son in the separation. It is a cruel and reprehensible circumstance that they permitted this thing to happen without offering any aid or comfort to the deserted wife. But, however unjustifiable this may seem, even in view of the plaintiff's hostility toward them, it was the violation of no legal duty, and in itself raises no inference that they instigated his desertion. It is sought to connect the mother with the preparation of the note left by the husband to inform the plaintiff of his desertion. Ralph Bourne and both defendants deny that she had anything to do with it. The only evidence tending to show that the mother had any part in this note is a single word written on its margin, which the plaintiff testified was in the handwriting of her husband's mother. A comparison of this with other exhibits showing the same word in the admitted handwriting of the mother, alone, seems to be a sufficient disproof of this testimony. But, in any event, it is an immaterial circumstance. The note was written after the determination of Ralph Bourne to leave his wife had been formed and declared, and at the most would indicate an acquiescence and co-operation in his avowed purpose, without being of the slightest value in showing that the defendants had influenced his determination in the matter, or in discrediting their testimony that they relied on the representations of their son as to the cause of his separation from his wife. The jury may have been justified in disbelieving the testimony of Ralph Bourne as to the cause of his leaving his wife, but there is no legal ground for rejecting the testimony of the defendants that they believed their son's account of the matter. Their testimony in this regard is not impeached, either by direct evidence or by any legitimate inference or presumption from the known relations of the parties, or the circumstances of the case. Maupin v. Solomon, 183 Pac. 198. While the jurors are the sole judges of the weight and sufficiency of the evidence, their province in receiving or rejecting evidence, as they were by the court instructed, is not arbitrary, but is to be exercised with legal discretion and in subordination to the rules of evidence. Two conclusions must be established by plaintiff in this case to support a verdict against the defendants: First, that they knowingly and willfully influenced their son to withdraw his affection and companionship from his wife, the plaintiff; and, second, that this was done in a spirit of malice and ill will toward the plaintiff. The circumstances proved and attempted to be proved, of quarrels with and criticism of the plaintiff, and assistance given to the son after he had announced his plans to abandon his wife, do not prove or even raise an inference of act or effort to alienate his affections from her. It may be conceded that, if this primary fact was proved, these unkindly acts and expressions might be sufficient to support a finding of malicious purpose; but, in the absence of any evidence of the primary fact, there is no foundation upon which any proof of malice or ill will can rest.

[7] Respondent's counsel argue that the acts of the parents disclose a hostile feeling toward their daughter-in-law, that this feeling evidences a motive prompting them to alienate the son's affections, and that therefore the existence of such motive is a circumstance that may justify the inference that the parents did use persuasion and inducement to alienate their son's affection from his young wife. Seeking to draw an analogy between a case such as this and a prosecution for crime, counsel say:

"Men are hung for less evidence than this. * * * Jones has a grudge against Smith, and Smith is found murdered; Jones is shown to have had the opportunity to commit the crime; his gun is found in the vicinity of the murder bearing evidence that one shot had been fired; at the trial he attempts to establish an alibi; the jury convicts him and the court upholds the conviction; and no reasonable man questions the fact that the evidence is sufficient to establish all the elements of the crime."

The analogy is entirely unsubstantial. In the supposititious criminal case instanced by counsel, a crime has been committed, the corpus delicti is established, and the question is: Who did it? Among other circumstances tending to point the accusing finger of suspicion toward the defendant is the fact that he had a motive for committing the crime. If the body of the dead man had been found under circumstances that pointed to suicide, the mere fact that the accused had a motive for the commission of murder would not show that the crime of murder had been committed, or established the corpus delicti. So here, the fact that the parents may have had a grudge against their daughter-in-law, or a motive for alienating their son's affections, would not suffice to prove that his love for his wife waned and flickered out as the result of his parents' conscious and willful influence or persuasion, and not as the result of some innate cause born within his breast unassisted by any acts on the part of his parents, done for the purpose and with the intent of bringing about that condition of heart within him.

Conceding its full probative force to all the evidence in behalf of the plaintiff, and disregarding, as we must, the denials and contrary testimony of the defendants, the evidence is insufficient for this purpose. The evidence here would not justify a verdict against strangers, much less as against parents. The law places the parents of a married child on a much more favorable basis than that of a stranger to the family relations, in actions for alienation of affection. All presumptions in such cases must be that the parents will act only for the best interests of the child. Trumbull v. Trumbull, supra; Oakman v. Belden, 94 Me. 280, 47 Atl. 553, 80 Am. St. Rep. 396; Multer v. Knibbs, 193 Mass. 556, 79 N. E. 762, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 322, 9 Ann. Cas. 958; Reed v. Reed, supra; Tucker v. Tucker, 74 Miss. 93, 19 South. 955, 32 L. R. A. 623; Hall v. Hall, 174 Cal. 718, 164 Pac. 390. In Hall v. Hall, supra, our Supreme Court states the rule as follows:

"Having in contemplation the natural solicitude of the parent for the child, and the wellnigh universal experience of mankind that parents in their conduct toward their children are actuated by high and disinterested motives, involving the sacrifice of their own interests for the welfare of the child, it is not to be lightly inferred that the language or conduct of such a parent toward a child is prompted by evil and malicious motives. Therefore, to establish such willful and malicious alienation, 'the measure of proof must be extremely high,'" and "every presumption is that the parent acted for the best interest of the child."

There is a striking parallel between the circumstances and relations of the parties as set forth in the opinion in the foregoing case and those of the present case; although the evidence of attempts by the parents of plaintiff's husband, in the case cited, to bring about a separation, was much stronger than that against the defendants here. The court, however, held the evidence insufficient to sustain the verdict for plaintiff. There were other elements entering into the decision in the Hall Case, and in the end it was the wife who left the husband; but the gist of her action was that her husband's affections had been previously alienated by the influence of her husband's parents. The decision in its entirety remains a convincing authority against the verdict of the jury in this case. The evidence in the case at bar is insufficient to support the conclusion either that any acts or representations of the parents alienated the affection of plaintiff's husband, or that such acts and representations as were shown in evidence were intended to alienate the husband's affections, or were done or made in a spirit of malice toward the plaintiff. It is difficult to escape the conviction that the jury, consciously or unconsciously, was influenced in its verdict by the hearsay declarations.

[8] Appellants further urged as ground for reversal that there is no evidence in this case to justify holding the defendant Harry S. Bourne as a joint tort-feasor with his wife, even if the evidence is sufficient to support a verdict against the latter. We think this point is well taken. As has been pointed out, not one hostile word or act tending to show malice or ill will on the part of the father against his son's wife, or any effort on his part to bring about a separation, appears in the record, excepting the circumstances as testified to by plaintiff's mother; that after the quarrel and removal of the young folks to Glendale, incident to the automobile accident, the father-in-law said that he was sorry his son had not married another girl with whom he had kept company, and that Marie, the plaintiff, was not a good housekeeper. It is true the father-in-law was a party to the quarrel the night of the automobile accident, and is alleged by plaintiff to have caught hold of her hands on that occasion in an attempt to compel her to come into the house. It would appear from his testimony that he was much concerned to get all the parties into the house to terminate a disgraceful scene on the street; but, in any event, this incident was entirely fortuitous and incidental, and it appears from the subsequent actions of all concerned, and particularly of the defendants, that it was fully condoned by subsequent reconciliation and good feeling between the two families. He had no connection whatever with the second quarrel, or with any subsequent events, excepting the assistance he gave his son at the time of his leaving his wife; and, as already pointed out, this was given under protest, and in the light of his son's representations that he had made up his mind to leave, and if his father did not help him he would get away as best he could. There is nothing to indicate that the father was in any way a party to, or countenanced or encouraged, the temperamental and at times apparently hysterical outbreaks of his wife.

[9] We are of the opinion, too, that there was error in the admission by the court, over defendants' objection, of plaintiff's testimony of declarations of her husband as to his father being worth $75,000. This was clearly hearsay, had no legitimate value in proving the state of the husband's feelings, was contrary to the testimony of the defendant parent—who swore that he was not worth over $15,000 or $20,000—and quite probably influenced the comparatively large amount of damages found by the jury.

Judgment reversed.

I concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.

THOMAS, J. (dissenting). I regret most sincerely my inability to secure the approval of my own conscience, which is absolutely necessary in order to agree with my sincere, able, and distinguished Associates in their conclusion as expressed in the foregoing opinion. I therefore dissent.

In view of what appears to me the importance of this case, coupled with the fact that this presents our first disagreement, I submit the case as I see it, rather than, as is customary, to discuss only the points upon which we disagree.

Plaintiff, in her amended complaint, alleges the activity of both defendants—her husband's father and mother—and their maliciousness in bringing about the alienation of affections and resultant desertion. Defendants, by their answer, deny "that they have had anything whatever to do with the depriving of plaintiff of the attention or support or comfort or society or the aid or assistance of her husband in any manner whatever."

The record here discloses, among other matters, the following facts: That plaintiff married Ralph Bourne on May 20, 1913, when she was 18 and Ralph 21 years of age; that Ralph loved her when he married her, and continued to so love her at all times up to a date approximately that of the desertion, to wit, July 10, 1915; and that she was a devoted and loving wife; that on the date last mentioned Ralph told his wife he was going to work, and directed her to go to Los Angeles, borrow enough money from her sister to purchase a pair of shoes and some theater tickets, and meet him at 6:30 p. m. at the Hayward Hotel, in Los Angeles; that plaintiff did as directed; that shortly after plaintiff left home to carry out the plan as above stated Ralph and his father, Harry S. Bourne, drove up in the defendants' automobile to within one block of the apartment house in which Ralph Bourne and his wife were living, stopping in the rear of the apartment house, and Ralph, alighting from the automobile, went into his apartment, carrying a valise which had been furnished for that occasion by his parents; that he there encountered his mother-in-law, to whom he misstated his errand, and then proceeded to change his clothes; that he at that time left for his wife a certain "note," which, in words and figures, is as follows:

"July 10th, 1915. I simple am sick and tired of this life, so am leaving for good. I am taking the silver, and consider this a fair division, as you have your ring, and a couple of hundred dollars' worth of furniture. Ralph. P. S. Don't blame my folks, as they are ignorant of my whereabouts."

On the back of this note appeared the following memorandum: "Silver, blue suit, shoes, collars, razor and strop, tooth brush, brushes, underclothes, jack bowl." The articles last enumerated, and which he took away with him, had been given to Ralph and his wife as wedding presents. Having effected his "fair division," he returned to his waiting automobile, had lunch with his parents, and later in the day left Los Angeles for New York; his parents having furnished him the necessary railroad and Pullman tickets, together with sufficient cash to pay expenses. The plan to thus desert his wife was known by his parents as early, at least, as the 7th or 8th of July; but, notwithstanding this fact, it was kept an absolute secret from the plaintiff and her mother until after the foregoing was consummated. At the appointed time plaintiff was at the Hayward Hotel, carrying out her part of the plan implicitly, as directed by her husband; but he did not meet her. Instead, he was aboard a fast-moving train, traveling away from her as fast as steam could take him. Neither defendants did anything to communicate the fact of his departure to his wife. The defendant Hope Bourne was asked:

"And did you notify her on the next morning after the desertion as to where Ralph had gone or why he had gone?"

To which question she made the following answer:

"Why should I? Why didn't Marie come to see me? I would have been glad to have seen her."

It will be observed that this was not an answer, but an evasion of the question. And again she was asked:

"And you never made any effort to see what was becoming of her after her husband left her in this manner?"

And the following was her answer thereto:

"I guess Marie is capable of taking care of herself."

One hundred and eighty pages of a 260-page opening brief is directed by appellants to the discussion of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. Many points are urged for a reversal. I shall discuss only those which I deem essential for my present purpose.

The verdict is attacked as unsupported by the evidence. I am satisfied from an examination of the record that there was sufficient evidence—although not as weighty as might be desired—to justify the verdict, and hence to support the judgment; and this even though we disregard the declarations of the husband to his wife, without the presence of the parents. In discussing the sufficiency of the evidence, appellants urge that the court erred in permitting plaintiff to state, over defendants' objection, declarations claimed by Ralph to have been made by his parents to him concerning his wife, etc., in an effort to induce him to leave her, and which declarations were made to the wife out of the presence of the defendants or either of them; the objection being general in its terms, and on the additional ground that it was hearsay as to these defendants. The learned trial judge, in referring to these declarations and in overruling the objection, said:

"Of course, it is undoubtedly the rule that they are incompetent for the purpose of proving the existence of any fact which is included in those declarations, and the jury should be so instructed; but I take it, from the authority quoted by Mr. Ashburn and from consideration, that the general rule that, where the state of mind of the husband of the plaintiff be one of the things in issue, any declarations of his are verbal acts in so far as they tend to show that state of mind, and it is admissible for that purpose, and that purpose only."

Right there and then the court admonished the jury accordingly, and with this view of the trial court I agree. Cripe v. Cripe, 170 Cal. 91, 148 Pac. 520. The same is true as to the evidence of Ralph as to what he told his wife he thought his father was worth. It was offered and received for the limited purpose of showing the state of Ralph's mind. It is the usual rule that, where testimony such as is now under discussion is sought to be introduced, to explain the purpose for which it is offered, and thus make it permissible for a limited purpose only; and, as we have already seen, this was done in the present case, and the trial judge, with great care and skill, and that no confusion might result therefrom, admonished the jury, as we have already seen. "It is a well-established rule that, if evidence is properly admissible upon the issues presented, it cannot be excluded because it may have ulterior or collateral effects detrimental to one of the parties." Vallejo, etc., R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 562, 147 Pac. 238, and cases there cited. In view of the fact that the evidence objected to was competent for the purpose for which it was received, I fail to bring myself to the place where I must conclude that the jury willfully disregarded the court's instructions and admonitions in this respect. If any construction which the jury might have placed upon such evidence, concededly properly received for the stated limited purpose, be inimical to defendants' interests, that fact is not due to the jury or to the court, but to the state of the rules of evidence as they existed at the time of the trial. So believing, I doubt the power of this court on appeal to disturb the verdict.

I believe the case of Cripe v. Cripe, supra, decisive of this phase of the case, notwithstanding that at first blush it would appear that the case of Barlow v. Barnes, 172 Cal. 98, 155 Pac. 457, a later case, would seem to be in conflict therewith. This, I think, is more apparent than real. Respondent's argument here appeals to me. When considered in all its aspects, I think it not in conflict with the Cripe Case, for a different point is decided. In the Cripe Case it was held that, "in an action for alienating the affections of a husband or wife, the state of the feelings of such husband or wife is material." In the Barnes Case the court held that the guilt of the defendant cannot be proved by declarations of the alienated spouse as to the acts or statements of defendant. From the language of the court, I cannot conclude that it intended to go any further than that or to announce a rule contrary to that applied in the Cripe Case. In the Barnes Case there were two alleged causes of action—one for alienation of the wife's affections and the other for damages for alleged criminal intercourse with the wife. When the letters in that case, objections to the introduction of which were sustained by the court, were sought to be introduced, there was no statement or explanation made to the court that they were offered for any limited purpose; and, so far as that case was concerned, such limited purpose would appear to have been to show a state of mind or feelings on the part of the alleged alienated spouse at the time the said letters were written, and thus to support the first cause of action, and in the absence of such explanation their reception might reasonably have led the jury to consider them in connection with the second alleged cause of action. In my opinion, the ruling of the trial court, under the facts as there presented, was absolutely correct. In the Cripe Case, as in the case at bar, the offer of the letters and the declarations was accompanied by such explanation; the court, in overruling the objections in this case, so stating, and at the same time admonishing the jury as already indicated. Indeed, in the Barnes Case, as one of the several propositions advanced, it was argued to the trial court by counsel for appellant:

"That they [the letters] were material to the issues under both causes alleged is apparent from the language of the letters, showing that her affections were alienated from her husband to and by the defendant beyond all question, and tend to show criminal conversation."

And again:

"We think that they are both competent to show that the poison is there and that the defendant and his wife were parties to the wrong and still burning in their lust."

Under this attitude, the correctness of the court's ruling in that case I think not debatable.

One other point in the Barnes Case needs consideration. The Supreme Court in that case used the following language: "They [the letters] were not admissible under section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure"—and cites, among others, the case of Humphrey v. Pope, 1 Cal. App. 374, 82 Pac. 223, decided July 25, 1905, and at a time when that section did not contain its present exception permitting a husband or wife to testify in such a case as the one at bar. The Barnes Case was decided by the Supreme Court on February 10, 1916. The section referred to was amended, as indicated, in 1911. It is apparent therefore that the Cripe decision, as well as the fact that section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure had been so amended, was not called to that court's attention, as the court uses the specific language last above quoted, and follows the Humphrey Case. In view therefore of the exact question which was presented to the court in the Barnes Case for its decision, and confronted, as we are, with the array of facts just referred to, there is, I think, no warrant for construing that decision as in conflict with the Cripe Case on the point involved and now under discussion in the case at bar. This construction is in line, in my opinion, not only with the doctrine laid down by our own Supreme Court, but with what seems to me the overwhelming weight of authority of this question.

Certain instructions given by the court to the jury are objected to by appellants here. "If all the instructions taken together, and not being inconsistent with each other or confusing, give to the jury a fair and just notion of the law upon the point to which they are addressed, it is sufficient." Weaver v. Carter, 28 Cal. App. 241, 152 Pac. 323; Hamlin v. P. E. Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 776, 89 Pac. 1109; Taylor v. P. E. Ry. Co., 172 Cal. 638, 158 Pac. 119; Parkin v. Grayson-Owen Co., 25 Cal. App. 269, 143 Pac. 257. Speaking generally, I think the instructions given by the court, and particularly including those to which appellants object, ample, and as favorable to appellants as they properly could be on the question presented. Especially is this true when the instructions objected to are considered in connection with and in the light of the other instructions given. For instance, appellants object to the following instruction given by the court to the jury:

"If you should find from the evidence that the defendants, or either of them, willfully and materially enticed or induced the husband to desert and abandon the plaintiff, then you will be justified in allowing damages to plaintiff for the sake of example and by way of punishment of said defendants, or either of them, in addition to her actual damages, as to which you have already been instructed, provided the total amount shall not exceed the sum of $50,000"

—on the ground that the complaint contains no prayer for punitive damages, and hence, because of absence of any specific mention of exemplary damages in the complaint, was unwarranted. An examination of the record here discloses no evidence that an instruction on punitive damages was requested by the appealing defendants. On the contrary, it affirmatively appears, in my judgment, that the contention which is now urged by appellants is that that species of malice which was defined by the court as malice in law will not warrant an award of exemplary damages. This seems to be the first time and place that this point is raised by them. The record shows that appellants insisted all through the trial that plaintiff could not establish a right to compensatory damages except by proof of the existence on the part of the defendants of a spiteful and rancorous disposition toward the plaintiff, and that no award of punitive damages could be made in any event. No distinction was pointed out between the two. The point urged here, therefore, as is now for the first time obvious, is that the court failed to recognize this distinction. This, I think, is now unavailing to them. The rule is that a party who desires instructions to be more specific, or to incorporate distinctions not contained therein, should request such instructions or be foreclosed from complaining if he fails so to do. Henderson v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 150 Cal. 689, 89 Pac. 976; Liebrandt v. Sorg, 133 Cal. 571. 65 Pac. 1098; Scott v. Wood, 81 Cal. 398, 22 Pac. 871; Viera v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 10 Cal. App. 267, 101 Pac. 690; Weaver v. Carter, supra; Hardy v. Schirmer, 163 Cal. 272, 124 Pac. 993.

Appellants call attention to the cases of Hall v. Hall, 174 Cal. 718, 164 Pac. 390, and Van Tassell v. Heidt, 33 Cal. App. 234, 164 Pac. 817, both having been decided since the opening brief herein was filed. In my opinion, neither of these is controlling, under the facts disclosed here. In the latter case the following is gathered from the opinion of the court: That the plaintiff brought an action against the parents of a young woman for having alienated from his wife, the plaintiff, her husband's affections. This husband had illicitly sought the regard of the young woman, but there was no sufficient evidence to support the findings and judgment against defendants. In the Hall Case, an examination of the opinion will, I think, disclose that there was in fact no evidence to show an attempt to alienate the husband's affections. Indeed, there is a positive showing that if any such attempts had been made by them, they had wholly failed. Further, the facts disclosed by the record show that the wife in that case was the malefactor, and that was the one who had herself abandoned her husband. She was strong on profession, but mighty short on redemption. She was very much concerned about attending "a meeting of the Young Women's Christian Association," but not much interested in applying to her daily walk and conversation the wonderful principles taught by that great, benevolent, and helpful institution. I think the court had ample basis for its statement when, in referring to the case, said that "its evidentiary foundation is airy nothingness, not even the baseless fabric of a vision."

In the case at bar the conditions, I think, are just as much the other way. The love and affection of the husband for his wife, as disclosed by the record, continued almost, if not quite, to the date of the desertion, and the record, disregarding the statements of the young husband entirely as hearsay, contains evidence of defendants' duplicity—as I read it—the details of which need not be recited here. There is no doubt but that the rule it that the decisions require a much stronger case to be made where the defendants are, as here, the parents of the alleged alienated spouse—as is held in Cripe v. Cripe, supra, and cases there cited. But in the case at bar, in my opinion, this requirement has been fully met.

The point is made that the verdict is excessive. With this view, also, I do not agree. If the defendants wanted the verdict to sever the punitive damages, if any were awarded—as may have been possible under the court's instructions—from the compensatory damages, they should have asked for such severance; but they are now estopped for having failed so to do. Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 116 Pac. 530. I am not able to conclude from the record here that the verdict is "so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at the first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury." Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 713, 106 Pac. 83; Nolen v. Engstrum Co., 175 Cal. 464, 166 Pac. 346. Damages for alienation of affections in such a case as the one at bar include the loss of aid, support, protection, comfort, and society of the husband, together with compensation for the humiliation and suffering inflicted upon the deserted wife. Sutherland on Damages, § 1285 (4th Ed.). It has been held that the recovery may include such elements as loss of support, and also mental anguish and disgrace. Nevins v. Nevins, 68 Kan. 410, 75 Pac. 493; Dunham v. McMichael, 214 Pa. 485, 63 Atl. 1007; Nichols v. Nichols, 147 Mo. 387, 48 S. W. 947; Stanley v. Stanley, 32 Wash. 489, 73 Pac. 596. On principle, I am unable to see why there is not a much wider field for legitimate expression in such a case as this than in an action for wrongful death of a husband, for the reason (1) that, in a case like the one at bar, the jury has the right to impose punitive damages, and

(2) to make awards by way of solicitation for injured feelings—which concededly cannot be done in case of death—while it does embrace the same elements as in death. Judgments as large, and even larger than the one here involved, have been sustained in cases similar to the case at bar. Gross v. Gross, 70 W. Va. 317, 73 S. E. 961 ($12,500); Lockwood v. Lockwood, 67 Minn. 476, 70 N. W. 784 ($15,000); Williams v. Williams, 20 Colo. 51, 37 Pac. 614 ($12,500); Hendrick v. Biggar, 151 App. Div. 522, 136 N. Y. Supp. 306 ($30,000); Speck v. Gray, 14 Wash. 589, 45 Pac. 143 ($15,000); Waldron v. Waldron (C. C.) 45 Fed. 317 ($17,500); Williamson v. Osenton, 220 Fed. 653, 136 C. C. A. 261 ($35,000). As a matter of fact, the injuries to a good wife, whose husband, theretofore loving, kind, and faithful has been alienated from her, is, in my opinion, more serious than that of a wife whose husband has been negligently killed. In case of death she has no humiliation, no feeling of disgrace, no injured feelings; while in a case like this, she not only has all these, but in addition thereto is sometimes subjected to suspicion and humiliation in the eyes of her friends, together with the added feeling of shame that her husband has sold her for "a mess of pottage," and has shown himself to be "yellow" through and through; all of which, to a woman who loves her husband, is far worse than to have him removed by death.

Appellants argue that, if this judgment is upheld and they are called upon to pay the same, it means the annihilation of their meager fortune at a time in life when a new start is fraught with unpromising prospects. It is to be regretted that due consideration was not given to this phase of the question by defendants before the perpetration by them of the acts disclosed by the evidence here. It is, indeed, too true that "the way of the transgressor is hard." Helen Bosanquet, in referring to "the family," said:

> "It is greater than love itself, for it includes, ennobles, makes permanent, all that is best in love. The pain of life is hallowed by it, the drudgery sweetened, its pleasures consecrated. It is the great trysting place of the generations, where past and future flash into the reality of the present. It is the great storehouse in which the hardly earned treasures of the past, the inheritance of spirit and character of our ancestors, are guarded and preserved for our descendants. And it is the great discipline through which each generation learns anew the lessons of citizenship, that no man can live for himself alone."

The record here discloses beyond question, I think, that by the saying and doing of those things said and done, these defendants transgressed even that great solicitude which the law entertains in behalf of parents when it requires a stronger case to be made against them than is necessary to be made against a stranger, and rendered highly improbable, if at all possible, the erection, not to say the maintenance, of such a home by the husband and wife here involved.

My Associates refer to the "note" left by Ralph. There was conflict in the evidence on that point. The jury resolved that conflict in favor of the plaintiff. Confronted by this fact, I fail to understand the authority of this court to interfere with the conclusion of the jury.

Reference is also made to the fact that respondent's counsel argues to this court—although not suggested in the court below—that the declarations of the husband of plaintiff to her, without the presence of the elder Mr. and Mrs. Bourne, emphasize their force as a determinative influence in the minds of the jury, etc. I think this argument of counsel unnecessary. If it be a fact, it is not so because of counsel, jury, or judge, as heretofore stated.

If it be a fact that the elder Mr. and Mrs. Bourne did in fact endeavor to get their son away from his wife, then those of us who have had experience in the trial of such cases know how stealthily the disintegrating work is done and what subterfuges are resorted to. It is not the usual thing to have the strongest kind of evidence. It is well known that the sulky mood, the insolent look, the gloomy manner, etc., of the person guilty of such conduct often means as much, and sometimes more, than the overt acts or statements. That such a condition existed in the case at bar is, I think, not an unfair inference from this record. I am not unmindful of the fact that the law is very solicitous for the parents in such a case as this, and that it encourages keeping "the light in the window" for the return of the erring son or daughter. Yet this solicitude does not go so far as to countenance the willful breaking of a lamp burning in another's window that the erring child may see the light in his or her parent's window more clearly. Nor am I unmindful of the fact that sometimes in such cases as the one at bar the plaintiff is an adventuress, pure and simple, seeking, as it were, whomsoever she might devour. In this case I see nothing that even points to such a conclusion. There is, in my opinion, no evidence in this record to impugn plaintiff's motives or good faith.

That the family, as such, is the basis and the unit of society, is, perhaps, no longer questioned; that it is the foundation upon which our civilization rests is no longer debatable. That whatever undermines the integrity of the home will eventually produce the downfall of that social and political institution which we call government is now quite generally conceded. That there is becoming more apparent each year evidences which point unerringly it would seem, to the growing instability of the family, I think, cannot be denied. That it is challenging the attention and the serious consideration of thinking men and women the world over is no longer a secret. The problem of the family, as I see it, is indeed the problem of the human race. The family is the most important fundamental institution of humanity. It is the great conserving agency in human society, preserving and transmitting from generation to generation both the material and spiritual possessions of the race. And yet our politicians, even our statesmen, so frequently occupied with questions of party interests, it would seem, have failed to proclaim, indeed, perhaps, to notice, the significance of the position. Shall the courts be also weighed in the balance and found wanting? God forbid! Probably no branch of our government comes into closer contact with this sacred institution—the family—than the courts. As such they have never yet failed in protecting the rights of the downtrodden and the oppressed. They insist upon the equal rights of all. They have been called, and they really are, the bulwarks of our liberties. Capital and labor both come to them; and they do not come in vain—unless with unclean hands. They will not fail to protect this greatest of all human institutions.

Marriage, by its nature, establishes social relations; hence, society is regarded as a third party thereto. This is the basis upon which the state erects its authority to define the qualifications of the persons who marry, the terms, rights, and obligations of the marriage contract, and for what causes and in what manner it may be terminated. The interest of corporate society in the institution of marriage increases in proportion as it is realized how deeply the welfare of the social organism is affected by the uniting of individuals in family relations. Whenever the fundamental importance of marriage to society as a whole is adequately recognized, there is no disposition to rail against the increasing tendency of the state to exercise the most careful surveillance over its procedure, and it becomes that our modern social development demands that in the absence of that paternal authority which characterized the colonial period of our history, the state itself should exercise a control as nearly approximating it as possible.

While this is not an action for divorce, still, while discussing the present instability of the family, and in this way supporting my argument here for the faith that I have in my conclusion in the case at bar, will it be out of place to suggest that probably nowhere is this instability so much in evidence as in the divorce courts? If I am correct in this, then whose duty is it to call to the attention of the people generally—whose servants the courts are—the terrible moral cancer gnawing at the vitals of this institution and eventually striking at its very base? Our government, in its 1910 census, disclosed the fact that for every twelve marriages solemnized one was dissolved by the surgery of divorce; while in its report on marriage and divorce for 1916, the ratio was one to nine—an increase of 25 per cent. in six years! According to the report last referred to, it is disclosed that the ratio of divorces to the marriages solemnized was one to every one and one-half for Nevada and one to every two and one-half for Oregon; while it is one for every five and one-half for our own state. For more than 50 years divorces have steadily increased three times as fast as the population. Between the years 1870 and 1916, both years inclusive, according to our own government reports the number of divorces per 100,000 of the population was as follows: 1870, 28; 1880, 39; 1890, 53; 1900, 73; 1906, 84; and for 1916 it had gone to 112. In less, therefore, than 50 years this evidence of the instability of the family and the existence of this moral cancer on the body of society has increased, per 100,000 of our population, from 28 to 112, or exactly 400 per cent. The relation of such facts in connection with a case like this may subject the author to the charge of being sensational; but he answers that the only sensational thing about it is the fact itself. It may subject him to the charge of having had something to do with turning on the light, but, under God, he is not responsible for what that light reveals.

Is not this condition destructive of the family and does it not strike at the very foundation upon which our government stands? Is it not true that the nation, whose family life decays, rots at the core and dries up the springs of all social and civic virtues? Is it not un-American and erroneous to suggest that courts should ignore such facts when considering such cases as the one at bar? Is it not a matter of common knowledge among mature men and women that there is no time in the world when young people should not be interfered with in their domestic affairs like the first two or three years while they are adjusting themselves to each other? If these questions are not impertinent or irrelevant, then it seems to me inevitable that, if there was any competent evidence to support the verdict, it should remain undisturbed, not only because of the interests of the parties directly involved, but also on the ground of public policy. I think there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict.

As I see it, anything that in any way—even though that be an overzealous father or mother, or both—injures, or even tends to injure or undermine the family, is inimical to the institutions of our country and the best traditions of our people. It requires no

"wise men from the East," nor those with prophetic vision, to see that, if persisted in, it is no long road that must be traveled until governments themselves fall and our vaunted civilization passes into history.

When therefore we are confronted with a condition of such vital public importance as disclosed by the statistics referred to, coupled with evidence such as disclosed by the record here, and the fact that awards larger than the one here involved have been sustained in this state for negligent death alone, as evidenced by the following cases, Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., supra, where the award was $12,000, and McGrory v. P. E. Ry. Co., 22 Cal. App. 671, 136 Pac. 303, where the award was $20,000, I do not feel, in the face of the record here, that we should disturb the verdict of the jury or the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, which was the conclusion of the learned trial judge, who appears to have been extremely careful and who has conducted himself on the trial of this case in such a way as to be worthy of emolument by every trial judge in the land.

I think the appeal from the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial should be dismissed, and the judgment appealed from affirmed.

PENCE v. MARTIN et al. (Civ. 2255.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(3)—PRESUMPTIONS AS TO FINDINGS ON APPEAL ON JUDGMENT ROLL.

On appeal taken on the judgment roll alone, the findings of the trial court must be presumed to be in accordance with the proof presented on the trial, and are not subject to impeachment for want of evidence.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸132(9)—NOTICE BY SUBCONTRACTOR NOT FILED IN TIME.

Notice of plaintiff subcontractor's lien, filed several months after expiration of 90 days from time contractor completely abandoned work by reason of his inability to raise funds, was not filed in time, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸132(1)—PERMITTING SUBCONTRACTOR TO SLEEP ON HIS RIGHTS DOES NOT WORK ESTOPPEL.

Though there was no privity of contract between plaintiff subcontractor and owner of property, or any of the defendants other than the contractor, defendants would, if they had by act or representation willfully led plaintiff to forego his rights of lien, be estopped from setting up failure to file notice of lien within the statutory time; but merely standing by and permitting plaintiff to sleep upon his rights does not estop defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by James H. Pence against Juliet N. Martin and others. Judgment refusing foreclosure of mechanic's lien, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. E. Joslin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Milton K. Young, of Los Angeles, and Byron Coleman, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff brought this action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The only question on the appeal from judgment in favor of defendants is as to whether or not plaintiff's claim of lien was filed within the time allowed by law. The appeal is taken on the judgment roll alone, and the findings must be presumed to be in accordance with proof presented on the trial.

[1] According to the findings, the defendant Juliet N. Martin, owner of the real property involved, entered into a contract with W. W. Paden, whereby Paden agreed to erect an apartment house on the land of defendant Martin for the agreed price of $43,500, and accepted from said defendant certain mortgages and securities on the premises in question, and on other property of said defendant, for the contract price. From the negotiation and sale of these securities he was to raise the money to build the house and receive his profits. The contract was not recorded. The plaintiff, Pence, entered into an agreement with Paden whereby, as subcontractor, he undertook to furnish the materials and labor for the carpenter work.

The work of construction was begun, and claims on behalf of the plaintiff accrued to the amount of $425. Thereafter Paden, being unable to find a market for his securities, discontinued work under his contract for want of funds, and there was a complete cessation of all work on the building from on or about the 30th of January, 1915. Work was never resumed upon the building by the contractor, Paden, or under this contract. About the middle of October, 1915, Paden, under some sort of a settlement which is not disclosed, returned the securities that had been delivered to him by the defendant Juliet N. Martin, and she thereupon entered into arrangements with the defendants Jones, Title Guarantee & Trust Company, and Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, whereby they furnished her with money to complete the building, and on the 25th of October work was resumed under entirely new and independent contracts. The plaintiff, Pence, was at no time, prior to shortly before the resumption of work, notified that he would not be permitted to carry out his subcontract with Paden; but he knew of the discontinuance of work during all this period, and was informed, between the 4th and 25th of October, that the defendant Martin had procured funds to complete her building, and that work would be resumed under a new contract, and that he, together with other subcontractors under Paden, would be given first chance to bid for the work under new contracts. The plaintiff did not avail himself of this offer. Within 30 days after the resumption of work on the building under the new contract, namely, the 16th of November, 1915, plaintiff, taking the execution of the new arrangement as a repudiation of his contract, filed his notice of lien. This was some 9 months after cessation of work under the Paden contracts, and after plaintiff's last work as subcontractor. The court declares in its findings that there was not a temporary suspension of the work on January 30, 1915, for the convenience of the owner, as claimed by appellant, but that there was a complete cessation and abandonment of such work, by reason of the fact that the contractor, Paden, was unable to continue the same because of inability to raise funds on his securities; and on this appeal this finding is not subject to impeachment for want of evidence.

[2] Under section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff had 30 days after he had ceased to labor or furnish materials, or 30 days after the completion of the original contract under which he was employed, in which to file his notice of lien. Under the provisions of the same section, cessation from labor for 30 days is deemed equivalent to a completion, for all purposes of the mechanic's lien law. Under the further provision of this section, by reason of the owner not having filed a notice of completion or cessation of labor, the time within which plaintiff's notice of lien might have been filed was extended not to exceed 90 days from the constructive statutory period of completion. Buell v. Brown, 131 Cal. 159, 63 Pac. 167. His claim of lien was not filed for several months after the expiration of the 90 days. There has been no change in the legal effect of the Code provision making 30 days' cessation from labor a constructive completion of the work contracted for, by the various amendments to the mechanic's lien law since 1887; and, so far as has been called to our attention, the courts have held such constructive completion of the contract as conclusive on the rights of laborers and subcontractors as an actual completion of the building. Kerckhoff-Cuzner M. & L. Co. v. Olmstead, 85 Cal. 80, 24 Pac. 648; Johnson v. La Grave, 102 Cal. 324, 36 Pac. 651; Robison v. Mitchel, 159 Cal. 581, 114 Pac. 984. The trial court had no alternative to finding that the plaintiff's claim of lien was not filed in time.

[3] There is no foundation in the record for appellant's contention that the plaintiff was misled or "tolled" into a false sense of security by the defendants, or that there was any collusion between Paden and the other defendants to deceive him. Neither the allegations of the complaint nor the findings of the court justify such a conclusion. There was no privity of contract between him and the owner of the property, or any of the defendants, other than Paden. The contract created no liability against the owner of the premises, other than such as might arise under a valid assertion of the lien. Defendants owed appellant no duty to protect his rights. His only claim against the property was his right to a lien, as incident to his employment under the Paden contract, and that was dependent upon his strict compliance with the requirements of the mechanic's lien law. If the defendants had by act or representation willfully and fraudulently led him to forego his rights of lien, they would doubtless be estopped from setting up as a defense his failure to file the notice within the statutory time; but by merely standing by and permitting him to sleep on his rights they are not estopped. It does not, however, appear by the record here that the defendants, or either of them, were even aware of the fact that Paden had not settled in full with his subcontractor.

The findings of the trial court fully support the judgment, and cover all the issues raised by the pleadings which could affect the rights of plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

43 Cal. App. 492

TELANDER v. TUJUNGA WATER & POWER CO. (Civ. 2321.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 9, 1919.)

1. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⊂=24(1)—ERASURES INSUFFICIENT TO MAKE CONTRACT INADMISSIBLE.

Where there was nothing to indicate that erasures of printed lines were made after execution of the contract and the parts stricken were not material to the question in dispute, and the striking out was to make the contract comply with the terms of the preliminary agreement, the contract was admissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 1982.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=232(2)—NECESSITY OF SPECIFIC OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE.

Where it is apparent that mistake in deed in referring to maker of contract was one of the scrivener, appellant, who did not point out the real objection to the deed, should not for the first time be heard to complain of the mistake in the court on appeal.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=253—DEED CONVEYING RIGHT OF GRANTOR TO SERVICES OF WATER COMPANY.

Where water company was originally the owner of both the land and water rights, and conveyed by a proper deed to M., and plaintiff by deed from M. succeeded to M.'s rights, plaintiff, as owner of the land and water rights, would be entitled to the services which the company had contracted to render M. in the absence of any transfer by the company.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=153—PURCHASER OF IRRIGATION PLANT TAKES SUBJECT TO GRANTOR'S CONTRACTS.

Defendant water and power company, which purchased water rights of irrigation plant and system, held to take the same impressed with the obligation of its grantor to furnish water to plaintiff, though there was no express provision in the grant to defendant as to the assumption of grantor's obligation to deliver water.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=263—MEASURE OF DAMAGES FOR FAILURE TO FURNISH WATER FOR IRRIGATION.

The measure of damages for loss of crops due to breach of contract for furnishing water is the probable yield and market value of the crop, less the cost of producing and marketing it.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=263—EVIDENCE OF DAMAGES FROM FAILURE TO FURNISH WATER FOR IRRIGATION.

In action for damages for breach of contract to furnish water for irrigation and domestic use, where the plaintiff's evidence showed the loss of crops and that the value of alfalfa hay in the loose state in the field was $15 a ton, the court was justified in accepting such figure as tending to establish the amount of damage sustained; defendant not having produced, either independently or upon cross-examination, evidence bearing thereon.

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=263—EVIDENCE OF DAMAGES FROM FAILURE TO SUPPLY FOR DOMESTIC USE.

In action for damages for breach of contract to furnish water for domestic use, testimony tending to show that the damage due to loss of water was $500 was sufficient to justify award of $75 on account of damage thus sustained.

8. EVIDENCE ⊂=588—IGNORING TESTIMONY.

Where it appeared from other testimony of witness that during the month when defendant company failed to furnish any water to plaintiff it was supplying water to other lands, contrary to the provisions of contract under which plaintiff was entitled to water, court was justified in ignoring testimony of such witness that a shortage of rainfall was the cause of defendant's failure to supply water.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1078(4) — ERRORS NOT ARGUED WILL NOT BE CONSIDERED.

Where alleged errors are not deemed worthy of argument, and are referred to in brief by number only, the court on appeal is justified in concluding that they are without merit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by T. M. Telander against the Tujunga Water & Power Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. E. Davis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John Beardsley and A. B. Shaw, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sought to recover from defendant damages in the sum of $1,025, alleged to have been sustained on account of defendant's breach of a contract, whereby it is alleged it was obligated to furnish him a supply of water for irrigation and domestic use upon a certain tract of land. The appeal is by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

As appears from the record, the material facts are: That a corporation known as Tujunga Company was the owner of a tract of land designated as Hansen Heights, for the irrigation of which, by means of pipe lines and a water system constructed by it, it claimed the right to divert the waters of the Tujunga river. As such owner of said tract of land and the waters of the Tujunga river, it, about February 1, 1910, sold and conveyed to one H. H. Miller lots 23 and 34 of said tract, and at the same time executed a contract to the grantee of said lots, whereby it agreed to sell and deliver to the purchaser thereof a supply of water for irrigation and domestic use thereon, which deed of conveyance and contract were duly recorded; that about October 30, 1910, Miller conveyed said lots 23 and 34 of Hansen Heights, together with all water rights conveyed to him by the Tujunga Company, to the plaintiff herein, and thereafter, to wit, on or about March 9, 1911, the Tujunga Company, by a deed duly executed and recorded, conveyed to the defendant herein, the Tujunga Water & Power Company, all of its water rights, pipe lines, conduits, and irrigation system so constructed by it for the diversion and conveying of water for the irrigation of the lands in the tract known as Hansen Heights, and through and by means of which said grantor had theretofore been supplying water to said plaintiff and his predecessor in interest for use upon said lands; that pursuant to said conveyance defendant took possession of said water system, and delivered a supply of water to plaintiff for use upon said lots 23 and 34 up to the summer of 1912, when during the summer of said year and the summer of 1913, it refused to deliver any water to plaintiff; that by reason of its failure so to do plaintiff was deprived of the use of water for irrigation and domestic use, as a result of which his crops were damaged, and he was compelled to obtain from other sources a supply of water for domestic use.

[1, 2] For the purpose of showing that plaintiff had succeeded to the ownership of the water right described in the contract made by the Tujunga Company with Miller, a deed from the latter to plaintiff, conveying said land and describing the water right thereby conveyed as that deeded to the property (lots 23 and 34, Hansen Heights), by the "Tujunga Water Company," was received in evidence over defendant's objection that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. This ruling was followed by another of which defendant complains, admitting in evidence the contract made by the "Tujunga Company" to furnish a supply of water to Miller for use upon the lots. The objection to the competency of the contract as evidence was based upon the fact that certain printed matter therein had been stricken out, and it is now claimed that under the provisions of section 1982, Code of Civil Procedure, it should not have been admitted in evidence. This section provides that—

"The party producing a writing as genuine which has been altered, or appears to have been altered, after its execution, in a part material to the question in dispute, must account for the appearance or alteration"; otherwise the writing cannot be received in evidence.

There is no merit in the contention, for several reasons: First, there was nothing to indicate that the erasures of the printed lines were made after execution of the instrument; second, the parts stricken out were not material to the question in dispute, namely, the conveyance of the water right; and, third, it did appear that the striking out of the matter was to make the contract comply with the terms of a preliminary contract entered into between the parties. The objection now urged for the first time to the deed from Miller to plaintiff is based upon the fact that the contract for the water right was made by the Tujunga Company to Miller, whereas the deed refers to a water right deeded to plaintiff's grantor by the Tujunga Water Company. That in referring to the maker of the contract as the Tujunga Water Company, instead of the Tujunga Company, was a mistake of the scrivener in drawing the deed is apparent, and the failure to explain the error was no doubt due to the fact that defendant at the time raised no objection based thereon. Under these circumstances, where the real ground of objection was not pointed out, appellant should not for the first time in this court be heard to complain thereof.

[3, 4] The Tujunga Company, as shown by the evidence, was originally the owner of both the land and water rights, both of which, by a proper deed, it conveyed to Miller. Plaintiff by the deed from Miller succeeded to his rights, and, in the absence of any transfer by the Tujunga Company, he, as owner of the land and water right, would be entitled to the service which the company had contracted to render to Miller. The defendant herein, in acquiring from the Tujunga Company the water rights, irrigation plant and system of the Tujunga Company, took the same impressed with its obligation to furnish water to Miller and his grantee, as to which obligation of its grantor it had full knowledge of the contract theretofore made, and, notwithstanding the fact that there was no express provision in the grant as to the the assumption of the grantor's obligation to deliver water, it was bound thereby. In 40 Cyc. p. 835, it is said that "a purchaser of the ditch or canal with knowledge of such a previous grant (as here made) will be bound by the grantor's covenants." See, also, Hunt v. Jones, 149 Cal. 297, 86 Pac. 686; Grand Valley Irrigation Co. v. Lesher, 28 Colo. 273, 65 Pac. 44. In 40 Cyc. p. 749, it is said:

"A corporation, whether private or public, purchasing water rights, ditches, and a canal system, takes subject to the duties and burdens of which it has notice. The rights of the grantee are generally available against all successors in the title of the grantor, except it may be bona fide purchasers without notice."

It would be a monstrous proposition to hold, as contended for by appellant, that, after its grantor had sold the entire tract of land, including lots 23 and 34, and conveyed therewith "water rights," together with an agreement to deliver a stipulated amount of water by means of a system of dams, reservoirs, pipe lines, and conduits constructed for the purpose of rendering such service, it might sell its water system to another company which, in the absence of express covenants to assume such obligations, would take it stripped and freed of all rights and obligations of its predecessor in interest, and thus use the plant in the perpetration of a like fraud.

[5, 6] The evidence introduced as to the damage sustained by plaintiff is meager and unsatisfactory. As claimed by appellant, the true measure of damage for loss of crops, due to a breach of contract for furnishing water, is to determine the probable yield and market value of the crop, and deduct therefrom the cost of producing and marketing the same. Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 90 Pac. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779. In the case at bar plaintiff's evidence shows the loss of crops, to wit, alfalfa hay, and that the value of this hay in a loose state in the field was $15 per ton. Assuming that some expense would have been incurred in producing the hay and cutting it, it was defendant's duty to have produced, either independently or upon cross-examination, evidence bearing thereon. In the absence of so doing, the court acted upon the only evidence before it, and, since it appeared that loose hay in the field which would have been produced was of the value of $15 per ton, the court, in the absence of any further showing, was justified in accepting it as tending to establish the amount of damage sustained.

[7] And likewise as to the complaint made upon the damage sustained by plaintiff for failure to obtain water for domestic use. His testimony tended to show that the damage due to the loss of water for such purpose was $500. It cannot be said that such evidence was insufficient to justify the award of $75 on account of the damage thus sustained.

[8] The water contract whereby the Tujunga Company agreed to furnish Miller with water contained a provision as follows: "Nothing herein contained shall be construed as binding the seller to furnish said water if prevented by earthquake or other natural causes beyond its control." While defendant did not allege that its breach of the contract was due to earthquake or natural causes beyond its control, it did produce Dr. Hansen, the manager of the company, who as a witness testified that the cause of the failure to furnish water to plaintiff was drought and lack of rainfall; but it further appeared from the testimony of this witness that during the months when the company failed to furnish any water to plaintiff it was supplying water to other lands and to other parties for irrigation, domestic use, and other purposes, contrary to the provisions of the contract under which plaintiff was entitled to water. In other words, its duty to plaintiff took precedence over other parties, whose rights under the contract to water were only when there was a surplus and after plaintiff had received his supply of water. Under these circumstances the court was justified in ignoring the testimony of Dr. Hansen that a shortage of rainfall was the cause of the company's failure to supply water to plaintiff.

[9] There are other alleged errors, the only reference to which in appellant's brief is by number as designated in the transcript as exceptions, and which counsel for appellant asserts are well founded. Since not deemed worthy of argument, we feel justified in concluding they are without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SCHROEDER. (Cr. 681.)

1. EMBEZZLEMENT ⟸26 — INFORMATION SUFFICIENT.

An information, charging that defendant as collector of another came into possession of a sum of money belonging to his employer, that he fraudulently converted, embezzled, and appropriated the same to his own use, etc., sufficiently charged the offense of embezzlement by an agent or trustee, in violation of Pen. Code, § 508.

2. EMBEZZLEMENT ⟸26 — INFORMATION SUFFICIENT.

An information charging embezzlement is sufficient, if it alleges in plain and concise language, as required by Pen. Code, § 959, that defendant was acting in the capacity of an agent that he obtained and held the money in trust capacity, that the money belonged to his principal, and that he converted it in violation of trust.

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ⟸154 — WAIVER OF INDEFINITENESS BY FAILURE TO DEMUR.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1012, 1185, failure of defendant to demur waives indefiniteness in the information.

4. EMBEZZLEMENT ⟸44(6) — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for embezzlement, evidence held sufficient to justify finding that defendant appropriated money for a purpose not in the lawful execution of his trust.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

C. L. Schroeder was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Coil and Fred W. Heatherly, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, and Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

SLOANE, J. The appellant was convicted of embezzlement.

[1] The opening brief is devoted largely to a discussion of the alleged insufficiency of the information to state the offense charged. The information, so far as its essential parts are concerned, is as follows:

"The said C. L. Schroeder is accused by the district attorney of and for the county of Los Angeles, state of California, by this information, of the crime of embezzlement, a felony, committed as follows: That the said C. L. Schroeder on or about the 15th day of November, 1917, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, was the agent, collector and trustee of one D. M. Ward, doing business under the name and style of Ward Iron Works, and then and there, by virtue of his said employment and trust as such agent, collector and trustee, came into the care, possession, custody and control of him, the said C. L. Schroeder, the sum of four hundred twenty and 82/100 dollars ($420.82) in gold coin of the United States, and of the personal property of the said D. M. Ward, doing business as aforesaid.

"And he, the said C. L. Schroeder, after the said sum of four hundred twenty and 82/100 dollars ($420.82) had come into his care, possession, custody and control, as aforesaid, did then and there, to wit, on or about the said 15th day of November, 1917, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, willfully, unlawfully, fraudulently and feloniously convert, embezzle and appropriate the said sum of money to his own use, and to uses and purposes not in the due and lawful execution of his said trust as such agent, collector and trustee, as aforesaid.

"Contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California."

We think this information substantially meets all the requirements to charge the offense of embezzlement by an agent or trustee, under the provisions of section 508 of the Penal Code.

[2, 3] The four essential allegations for such an information are: (1) That defendant was acting in the capacity of an agent; (2) that he obtained and held the money in this trust capacity; (3) that the money belonged to his principal; and (4) that he converted it to his own use in violation of his trust. People v. Hemple, 4 Cal. App. 120, 87 Pac. 227; Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 109. All that is required is that these essential facts be set forth in ordinary and concise language, in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. Pen. Code, § 959. There is very little ground to doubt that this defendant was sufficiently informed of all these material elements of the crime charged against him. There might be some room to question that there was a sufficient allegation that he was holding the money for the benefit of his principal at the time of its appropriation by him, if the point had been raised by demurrer. But, at most, the defect in the pleading is one of indefiniteness, which was waived by failure to demur. Pen. Code, §§ 1012, 1185.

Numerous alleged errors in the admission and exclusion of evidence are averred without particular specification, in most instances, of the grounds of the exceptions to the rulings. We will not attempt to review them separately, but have read the entire record in the case, and are satisfied that whatever errors or irregularities, if any, there may have been in the trial, none of these are of such a prejudicial character as to justify the conclusion that there has been a miscarriage of justice.

[4] The evidence clearly shows that the defendant received, for the purposes of collection only, an assignment of a claim against a business concern for an amount of several hundred dollars; that as the agent and representative of the assignor he collected the claim, deposited the money in bank to his own account, or in the name under which he was doing business; and that when called upon by his principal to deliver the money, failed to do so and admitted that he did not have it; and the evidence further disclosed that the amount was no longer to his credit in the bank. It was a trust fund that he had no right to use for any purpose without the consent of his principal. He subsequently repaid a portion of the amount, but some $420 was never paid. The jury was justified in finding that he had appropriated the money for a purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust. People v. McMahill, 4 Cal. App. 225, 87 Pac. 404.

It is unimportant to determine whether there had been an embezzlement from time to time of any of the partial payments as they were received by defendant on the collection of this assigned claim. It is sufficient that on and after the date alleged—the 15th of November—when all of the money had been collected and was payable to his principal, defendant had withdrawn it from the bank on his own account, and under circumstances which made the question of his felonious intent one for the jury to determine.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂⊃3(4) — CONSTRUCTION OF OPTION CONTRACT AFTER EXTENSION OF TIME.

Where one having the option to purchase land failed to make payment within the time fixed, whereupon on payment of a part of the consideration, the vendor extended the time and indorsed on the option contract the receipt of a part of the consideration, etc., the contract which had been unilateral became bilateral, and the purchaser was bound to consummate the contract.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂⊃335—RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS BY PURCHASER IN DEFAULT.

Where a purchaser, after paying part of the contract, defaulted, he cannot recover from the vendor payments made.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to aid in the construction of a written instrument, which is entirely plain and unambiguous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Donahue, Judge.

Action by Belle N. Petersen, executrix of the last will and testament of John M. Wright, deceased, against Fleda O. Bunting and others, as executors of the last will and testament of John A. Bunting, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Thomas C. Huxley, of Oakland, for appellants.

Robert L. Mann, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. Plaintiff's testator, John M. Wright, obtained from defendants' testator, John A. Bunting, a writing by which the latter agreed to convey to the former certain real estate upon certain conditions, one of which was a payment of $40,000, to be made upon a specified date. This was signed only by Bunting, and imposed no obligation upon Wright. It contained a provision as follows:

"* * * A failure on your part to make the aforesaid payment of $40,000 on or before the 15th day of March, 1919, shall cancel and make void all and singular the obligations established by this instrument."

When the date arrived for this payment, Wright was unable to make it, but by consent of Bunting paid on account of said first payment $10,000, whereupon Bunting extended the time 30 days to make payment of the balance thereof by signing a notation to that effect upon the face of the instrument, and also indorsing upon the back of it the following words:

"Received on this agreement on this 16th day of March, 1909, the sum of $10,000 as part of the first payment of $40,000 herein named"—and signing his name to both said notation and said indorsement.

Wright failed to pay this sum of $30,000 at the time named, and admitted to Bunting his inability to make further payments, and subsequently, and without having tendered full compliance with the terms of the agreement, demanded of Bunting that he return the $10,000 already paid. The latter refused to comply with this demand, and justifies such refusal upon the ground that under the terms of the writing Wright was in default, and was therefore not entitled to the return of the money so paid.

By the judgment the plaintiff, who is the executrix of the last will and testament of said Wright, was awarded the return of this $10,000, together with interest. The defendants appeal, and the question for decision is the construction of the writing above referred to as affected by the payment thereunder made by Wright.

[1] It is the respondent's contention that, by virtue of the provision of the writing hereinbefore quoted, the failure of Wright to make the payment of $40,000 on or before the 15th day of March, 1909, or on or before the expiration of the 30 days to which the permissible date of said payment was extended, terminated all obligations arising thereunder, and that Wright was entitled to the return of the money paid by him on account of said first payment of $40,000. We think it quite plain, however, that such a construction entirely ignores the change in the situation as it existed by the mere making and delivery of the instrument which was brought about by Wright's payment of $10,000 on account of the first payment of $40,000, and the extension by Bunting of the time in which the balance thereof might be paid. Until the making of this payment the agreement—if it can be so called—was strictly unilateral and constituted a mere option, to be exercised by Wright or not as he chose. Wright had assumed no obligation thereunder. The provision therein that a failure on Wright's part to make the first payment of $40,000 should cancel the obligations of the instrument referred evidently to the obligations of Bunting and was for his benefit. But when Wright paid to Bunting $10,000 and obtained Bunting's consent to wait 30 days for payment of the balance of the $40,000, the amount of the first payment called for by the writing, the situation changed. By said payment, in the absence of an express agreement that said payment should not be construed as having that effect, Wright accepted what was theretofore an offer on the part of Bunting to sell his property, and Bunting's acceptance of such payment bound him to comply with the terms of his offer. Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 54, 25 Pac. 249, 681; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Reed v. Hickey, 13 Cal. App. 136, 109 Pac. 38; Karahadian v. Lockett, 33 Cal. App. 413, 165 Pac. 552; Russ v. Tuttle, 158 Cal. 226, 110 Pac. 813; Scott v. Glenn, 98 Cal. 168, 32 Pac. 983; Copple v. Aigeltinger, 167 Cal. 706, 140 Pac. 1073; Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 93 Pac. 1007; McCowen v. Pew, 18 Cal. App. 302, 123 Pac. 191.

[2] This brings us to the question whether Wright, being in default, unexcused, in the payments due under Bunting's offer to sell, and having made no tender of complete performance, and Bunting acknowledging his obligations thereunder and standing upon its terms, the former was entitled to receive back from Bunting the money paid by him. That he was not so entitled is well established by the authorities. Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 93 Pac. 1007.

[3] One further question is presented on the appeal. The court admitted evidence offered by plaintiff for the purpose of explaining the construction which the parties themselves placed upon the written instrument. As to the admission of this evidence—which was over the objection of the defendants—two things may be said: First, that the writing was plain and unambiguous and needed no aid in its construction; second, the evidence thus submitted, so far from warranting the construction contended for by the plaintiff and which the court adopted, namely, that the payment of the $10,000 by Wright and its acceptance by Bunting, did not convert what was theretofore an option into an agreement binding upon Bunting, quite conclusively shows that the parties acted on the assumption that it did. Such evidence at most shows that Bunting was willing to give Wright a chance to get back his $10,000, which he was to have, however, only by carrying through another and different transaction. This also Wright failed to accomplish.

From what has been said it follows that the court erred in awarding judgment to the plaintiff.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

HELME v. GREAT WESTERN MILLING CO. (Civ. 2930; L. A. 4877.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 3, 1919. Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Hearing, Dec. 1, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸405(4) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; FINDING THAT SERVANT WAS ACTING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF HIS DUTIES SUSTAINED.

In an action under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance & Safety Act 1913, § 12, subd. "b," a finding that a bran packer was acting within the scope of his duties, when he undertook to put a belt on a pulley, held sustained by the evidence.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸394—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; REMEDY EXCLUSIVE.

The remedy of compensation extended by Workmen's Compensation, Insurance & Safety Act of 1913 is exclusive of all other statutory or common-law remedies, except as provided by section 12, subd. "b," giving a servant the option of maintaining an action at law in certain cases.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸401—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; PLEADING IN ACTION AT LAW.

In an action by a servant against a corporation under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance & Safety Act 1913, § 12, subd. "b," for injuries by failure to inclose gears, plaintiff must allege and prove that such failure was of itself "gross negligence" or "willful misconduct," that the failure was the personal failure to act on the part of an elective officer of defendant, and that such failure indicates a willful disregard of life, limb, and bodily safety of employés.

4. NEGLIGENCE ⟸13—"GROSS NEGLIGENCE" DEFINED.

"Gross negligence" is the entire failure to exercise care, or the exercise of so slight a degree of care as to justify the belief that there is an entire indifference to the interest and welfare of others.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Gross Negligence.]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸352—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; GROSS NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER.

Unless by failing to house gears a corporation employer thereby failed to comply with some order of the Industrial Accident Commission, or with some safety requirement of the act itself, the corporation was not guilty of gross negligence, within Workmen's Compensation, Insurance & Safety Act 1913, § 12, subd. "b."

6. NEGLIGENCE ⟸11 — "WILLFUL MISCONDUCT" DEFINED.

To constitute "willful misconduct," there must be actual knowledge, or that which is the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the peril to be apprehended from the failure to act, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury; but a mere failure to perform a statutory duty is not alone willful misconduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Willful Misconduct.]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸352—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; WILLFUL MISCONDUCT OF MASTER.

It cannot be said that a corporation employer was guilty of willful misconduct, within Workmen's Compensation, Insurance & Safety Act 1913, § 12, subd. "b," merely because it failed to house gears, unless the housing of gears was made a duty by some order of the Industrial Accident Commission, or by the act itself, and some one of the elective officers, with a willful disregard of the safety of employés, having actual knowledge of the peril, or having what is equivalent to such knowledge, consciously failed to house such gears, so as to avert the injury.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸121(2)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; RECOMMENDATIONS BY ENGINEER FOR GUARDING OF MACHINERY NOT ORDER BY COMMISSION.

Recommendations to house certain gears, made by a safety engineer representing the Industrial Accident Commission, while going through a plant, is not the equivalent of an order entered by the commission and served on the employer, as contemplated by Workmen's Compensation, Insurance & Safety Act 1913, §§ 51, 57–59, 61.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸121(2)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; SAFEGUARDS REQUIRED FOR MACHINERY IN THE ABSENCE OF ORDERS BY COMMISSION.

In the absence of any order by the Industrial Accident Commission in the manner provided by the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance & Safety Act of 1913, a master's duty under the general requirements of sections 51 and 52 of the act, in regard to dangerous machinery is to use such safeguards as are reasonably adequate to render the place of employment safe, and to have the place of employment as free from danger as the nature of the employment will reasonably permit.

10. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃121(2)—CARE AS TO GUARDING MACHINERY.

In an action under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance & Safety Act 1913, § 12, subd. "b," relating to injuries through willful misconduct and gross negligence, by one injured by being caught in unhoused gears, an instruction that, if such gears constituted a source of danger, the defendant owed the duty of providing and maintaining over the gears such safety devices or appliances as would tend to mitigate or prevent the danger to plaintiff from contact therewith, was erroneous, as exacting a higher degree of care than sections 51, 52, require.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Frank Helme against the Great Western Milling Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed in the District Court of Appeal, and rehearing denied in Supreme Court.

Albert M. Norton and Haas & Dunnigan, all of Los Angeles, and R. V. Bowden, of Washington, D. C., for appellant.

H. Eugene Wassell and Jas. E. Degnan, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. In this action for personal injuries, sustained while in defendant's employ, plaintiff, after a trial before a jury and a verdict in his favor, recovered a judgment for $3,500, from which defendant appeals.

The action was brought under subdivision "b" of section 12 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1913. Stats. 1913, p. 283. Appellant complains, inter alia, of certain instructions given to the jury.

A few days prior to April 14, 1915, plaintiff was employed by defendant as a bran packer. In operating the bran-packing machine, the bran packer discharges the various kinds of grain into four holes or hoppers in the floor. The grain passes thence to a mixing box in the floor beneath, from which it is discharged into an auger that grinds the whole mass into a mixture that is conveyed by elevator to a machine called the "bran packer," from which it is discharged into sacks. According to plaintiff's testimony, he was instructed to keep the feed going through the mixer, to keep the mixer running, and to keep the machinery going, so that the grain would not clog. On April 14, 1915, while operating the bran-packing machine, plaintiff discovered that the grain was not feeding into the hoppers. Upon going into the basement to discover the cause of the trouble, he found that the screw into which the hoppers fed was clogged, and that that had caused the belt that operates the screw to come off the pulley. In attempting to replace this belt, plaintiff's arm was caught in certain gears, and the injury of which he complains was thus inflicted. The gears which caused the injury were not housed, but were entirely exposed. They were about 5 feet 8 inches above the basement floor, and located within a few inches of the pulley that controls the belt which operates the auger in the mixer. The belt, when in operation, was about 5 feet 4 inches above the floor. The basement was poorly lighted, in consequence of which the presence of the gears could not readily be detected.

[1] Appellant urges that the evidence fails to show that respondent was acting within the scope of his employment when he undertook to replace the belt. Respondent's evidence on this branch of his case is none too satisfactory; but, on the whole case, we think that, in view of the testimony of other witnesses to the effect that it was not unusual for a bran packer to replace the belt when it slipped off, the jury was warranted in concluding that respondent was acting within the scope of his duties when he undertook to put the belt back onto the pulley. The most serious question in the case arises out of certain instructions given to the jury.

[2] The remedy of compensation afforded by the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act is exclusive of all other statutory or common-law remedies, except in the one case provided by subdivision "b" of section 12. By that subdivision it is provided that an injured employé, instead of presenting to the commission his claim for compensation as provided by the act, may, at his option, maintain in the courts an action at law against his employer to recover damages where all the three following elements co-exist: (1) When the injury is caused by the employer's gross negligence or willful misconduct; (2) when the act or failure to act which is the cause of the injury is the personal act or failure to act on the part of the employer himself, or, if the employer be a corporation, on the part of an elective officer or officers thereof; and (3) when the act or failure to act which is the cause of the injury indicates a willful disregard of the life, limb, or bodily safety of the employés.

[3] Here the failure to act, which is charged as the cause of the injury, was the failure to inclose the gears in a housing, or otherwise to keep them from being exposed. Therefore to entitle plaintiff to recover in this action he must allege, and by a preponderance of the evidence prove: (1) That defendant's failure to house the gears was of itself "gross negligence" or "willful misconduct"; (2) that the failure to house the gears was the personal failure to act on the part of an elective officer or officers of the defendant corporation, as, for example, a director or directors; and (3) that such failure to house the gears indicates a willful disregard of the life, limb, and bodily safety of defendant's employés. Unless, by failing to house the gears, one of the elective officers of defendant thereby failed to comply with a general or special order of the Industrial Accident Commission, or with some safety requirement expressly defined and provided for by the act itself, it cannot successfully be claimed that defendant was guilty of either "gross negligence" or "willful misconduct."

[4] "Gross negligence" is the entire failure to exercise care, or the exercise of so slight a degree of care as to justify the belief that there is an entire indifference to the interest and welfare of others. It is that entire want of care that raises a presumption of conscious indifference to consequences. It implies a total disregard of consequence, without the exertion of effort to avoid it. Redington v. Pacific P. T. C. Co., 107 Cal. 324, 40 Pac. 432, 48 Am. St. Rep. 132; Coit v. Western Union Tel. Co., 130 Cal. 664, 63 Pac. 83, 53 L. R. A. 678, 80 Am. St. Rep. 153; Watermolen v. Fox River, etc., Co., 110 Wis. 153, 85 N. W. 663; Astin v. Chicago, etc., Co., 143 Wis. 477, 128 N. W. 265, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 158; 20 R. C. L. 23. While, in a case of gross negligence, various terms have been used to express the mental state of the actor, the idea attempted to be conveyed seems to be that the act done or omitted to be done was done or omitted willfully and intentionally. 20 R. C. L. 23. In Astin v. Chicago, etc., Co., supra, the Wisconsin Supreme Court says that "gross" negligence is not characterized by inadvertence, but "by an absence of any care on the part of a person having a duty to perform to avoid inflicting an injury to the personal or property rights of another, by recklessly or wantonly acting or failing to act to avoid doing such injury, evincing such an utter disregard of consequences as to suggest some degree of intent to cause such injury."

[5] Without undertaking to state the evidence at length or to discuss it at large, let it suffice to say that unless it appears that defendant consciously violated some order of the commission or some particular safety provision of the act itself, it was not guilty of "gross" negligence, simply because it failed to house the gears with which plaintiff brought his arm in contact when attempting to replace the belt. The mere failure to keep the gears in a housing, apart from any willful disregard of some order of the commission, or of some particular safety provision of the act itself, does not evince such an utter disregard of consequences as to suggest some degree of intent to cause the injury, or to justify the belief that there was a conscious indifference to consequences.

[6] "Willful misconduct" means something different from and more than negligence, however gross. The term "serious and willful misconduct" is described by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts as being something "much more than mere negligence, or even gross or culpable negligence," and as involving "conduct of a quasi criminal nature, the intentional doing of something either with the knowledge that it is likely to result in serious injury or with a wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequences." In re Burns, 218 Mass. 8, 105 N. E. 601, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 787. The mere failure to perform a statutory duty is not, alone, willful misconduct. It amounts only to simple negligence. To constitute "willful misconduct" there must be actual knowledge, or that which in the law is esteemed to be the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the peril to be apprehended from the failure to act, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury. Smith v. Central, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Ala. 407, 51 South. 792.

[7] Measured by the foregoing standard, it cannot be said that defendant was guilty of "willful" misconduct merely because it failed to house the gears, unless the housing of the gears was made a duty by some general or special order of the Industrial Accident Commission, or by the act itself, and some one of the defendant's elective officers, with a willful disregard of the life, limb, or bodily safety of defendant's employés, having actual knowledge of the peril incident to the unhoused gears, or having what in law is equivalent to such actual knowledge, consciously failed to house the gears, so as to avert injury.

Thus, then, we are brought to the question: Did the commission, by general or special order, direct the gears to be housed? Or, if it did not, what was defendant's statutory duty in that regard? The act empowers the commission to make "general" safety orders and "special" safety orders, after a hearing upon notice. Sections 57–59, Stats. 1913, pp. 307–308. A "general" safety order is defined as an order of the commission that applies generally throughout the state to all persons, employments, or places of employment; all other safety orders of the commission are declared to be "special" orders. Subdivision 6, § 51, Stats. 1913, p. 306. The commission, without a hearing on notice, may summarily investigate any place of employment which it has reason to believe is not safe, and, after a hearing, upon such notice as it may prescribe, may enter such order as may be necessary. The order, so made and entered, must be served upon the employer. Section 61, Stats. 1913, p. 308.

[8] The evidence fails to show that any general order was ever made by the commission requiring gears, such as those that caused the injury to respondent, to be housed. Nor has our attention been called to any evidence in the record showing or tending to show that the commission ever made, entered, or served any special order requiring the gears to be incased. It is true, a safety engineer, representing the commission, went through the plant, in August, 1914, and made certain recommendations, and the same engineer, six months later, again visited the plant and checked up the things that had been done by defendant relative to a compliance with the recommendations he had made on his previous visit, with the result that he found defendant had done about one-half to two-thirds of the things that he had recommended in August, 1914. Such recommendations, however, cannot be deemed the equivalent of an order made and entered by the commission itself and served on the employer, as contemplated by the act. It follows, therefore, that the evidence fails to show that the commission ever made or served any order requiring the gears to be housed or incased, or any other order with which defendant has neglected to comply.

[9] In the absence of any such general or special order by the commission with respect to the gears, defendant's duty must be measured by the general requirements of the act itself. The act requires every employer to furnish a place of employment which shall be "safe," and to furnish "such safety devices and safeguards * * * as are reasonably adequate to render * * * such * * * place of employment safe." Section 52, Stats. 1913, p. 306. It also is provided by the act that the terms "safety devices" and "safe guards" shall "be given a broad interpretation so as to include any practicable method of mitigating or preventing a specific danger." Subdivision 9, § 51, Stats. 1913, p. 306. The terms "safe" and "safety," as applied to any place of employment, are defined to mean "such freedom from danger to the life or safety of employés as the nature of the employment will reasonably permit." Subdivision 8, § 51, Stats. 1913, p. 306. From these provisions and definitions it will be seen that, in the absence of any general or special order given and made by the commission in the mode and manner provided by the act, defendant's statutory duty, under the general requirements of the act itself, was to use such devices and safeguards as are "reasonably adequate" to render the place of employment safe, and to have its place of employment as free from danger to the life or safety of its employés "as the nature of the employment will reasonably permit."

[10] Tested by the foregoing, we are constrained to hold that certain of the court's instructions were erroneous and misleading. For example, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"If you find from a preponderance of the evidence in this case that the plaintiff at the time of the injury was acting in the course of his employment, then, if such gears constituted a source of danger to the life or safety of the plaintiff, the defendant owed to the plaintiff the duty of providing and maintaining over the gears in question such safety devices or appliances as would tend to mitigate or prevent the danger to plaintiff from contact therewith."

This instruction exacted of defendant a greater degree of care than is required by the act. Doubtless it is safe to say that the gears in question were a source of danger, just as all machinery, and, indeed, almost everything with which mankind is daily environed, is, in some degree, a potential source of danger. But the act does not require defendant to provide or maintain a place of employment that does not involve any element of danger whatever. All that is required is that the employer shall furnish a place of employment which is as free from danger to the life or safety of the employés "as the nature of the employment will reasonably permit." Subdivision 8, § 51. Nor does the act require defendant to provide or maintain over the gears "such safety devices or appliances as would tend to mitigate or prevent the danger to plaintiff from contact therewith," irrespective of any other element or consideration. All that the act requires of defendant is that it provide and maintain over the gears such safety devices and appliances as are "reasonably" adequate to render the place of employment safe, and such as provide a "practicable" method of mitigating or preventing danger, and to do what is "reasonably" necessary to protect the life and safety of its employés. Subdivision 9, §§ 51 and 52.

After an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, we cannot say that this misdirection of the jury did not result in a miscarriage of justice. Indeed, it is more than probable that the instructions, considered in their entirety, influenced the jury to defendant's prejudice. In the main, the instructions are too abstract. Considered as a whole, they were calculated to impress upon the minds of the jurors that, irrespective of reasonableness or practicability, it was defendant's bounden duty to incase the gears in housing, and that its mere failure to do so constituted gross negligence or willful misconduct.

Judgment reversed.

Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. In denying a hearing in this court we are not to be understood as intimating an opinion to the effect that there was sufficient evidence to support a conclusion of gross negligence or willful misconduct on the part of defendant, or on the question whether every failure to comply with a requirement of the Industrial Accident Commission or the statute is necessarily gross negligence or willful misconduct. On these questions we reserve expression of opinion.

The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, Division 2, is denied.

All concur except MELVIN, J., absent, and LAWLOR, J., who concurs in the denial of the hearing.

O'BRIEN v. L. E. WHITE LUMBER CO.

(Civ. 2931.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸70(1)—CONSENT TO REDUCTION IN SALARY BINDING.

Where plaintiff, on being advised that his employer would have to put him on half time, replied that he was willing to help by going on half time during the financial stringency and thereafter accepted as his monthly salary one-half of prior salary, he could not recover full pay where times never got any better until the company sold out.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸72½ — EMPLOYÉ NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION FOR USE OF AUTOMOBILE.

Use of automobile by employé in the business of his employer without any intention of making a charge, except to the extent that use might be compensated by the value of gasoline, oil, and tires furnished by employer, cannot be made the basis of a claim for compensation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by C. F. O'Brien against the L. E. White Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Metson, Drew & MacKenzie, of San Francisco, and H. L. Preston and Preston & Preston, all of Ukiah (R. G. Hudson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

W. D. L. Held, of Ukiah, and J. W. Kingren, of Point Arena, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff brought this action against the defendant to recover the sum of $2,189 as the reasonable value of work and labor and compensation for the use of his automobile in the service of the defendant, which sum the complaint alleges is the balance due upon an open and current account between the plaintiff and defendant. The latter answered, denying any liability whatever. A trial had before a jury resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, for $1,875, for which amount judgment was rendered. The defendant appeals, specifying various alleged errors of law and particularly that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence.

The facts giving rise to the dispute may be briefly summarized as follows: The plaintiff was an employé of the defendant, having sustained that relation to it for some 30 years. In the month of October, 1914, he was defendant's superintendent, his duties as such relating to that part of defendant's business carried on in and around Point Arena, and which consisted of lumbering, the manufacture and shipping of railroad ties, the conduct of a mercantile store, and a limited amount of simple farming, and received for his services a salary of $200 per month. On the 29th of that month the president of the company addressed to him a letter, the terms of which are as follows:

"Dear Frank: As ties and everything have gone to the 'bow-wows' we will have to put you for the present on half time, beginning November 1, 1914. I dislike to do this but cannot help it. As soon as things brighten you will be given full time again. Please advise me if this is satisfactory. We have made cuts in salaries all over and are letting off some men.

"Cut Emery's salary to $75.00; cut McCallum to $75.00. If they are not satisfied we will get somebody else who will be because we cannot continue as things are.

"Very truly yours, F. C. Drew."

Testifying to the receipt of this letter, O'Brien said:

"I think I answered on receipt of it, probably the same day or the next day. I cannot remember the exact wording of my letter, but as near as I can remember I told him I had shown this letter to McCallum and Emery and they had accepted the cut, and for myself I was willing to help my employer out by going on half time during the financial stringency. I then went ahead with my work the same as I had been."

Thereafter and until the defendant sold its business nearly two years later, the reduced salary was paid to the two employés named in the letter, and the plaintiff received and accepted as his monthly salary the sum of $100, performing, however, practically the same duties as before, and devoting the same amount of the time to the defendant's business. He had access at all times to his account carried on the books of the defendant, wherein he was credited monthly with the sum of $100 as salary and charged with merchandise purchased by him in the company's store, and with sums of money drawn by him, and was familiar with the contents of this account. From the letter set forth above O'Brien understood "that they (the company) were just short of funds, and that was about all that they could afford to pay at that time until times got better or they sold out, and that I was to receive half pay until times got better."

He further testified:

"Q. Well, you understood, didn't you, Mr. O'Brien, that you was just to get a hundred dollars a month until times got better? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. For your full time, that's right, isn't it? A. I understood that he was to pay me a hundred dollars a month until times got better, and from the past dealings I had with him he would pay me the balance when times got better or he sold.

"Q. Well, and times never got any better until they sold out, as you say, never got any better, did they? A. No.

"Q. Got worse, didn't they? A. Yes, I think they did, if anything."

In April, 1916, the defendant sold its business and property. Shortly thereafter O'Brien wrote to the president of the company a letter in which he said:

"Having knowledge of your fairness in all my past dealings with you I am asking if you will not pay me full salary for the past 19 months" —meaning, of course, by full salary the sum of $200 per month instead of the $100 per month that had been paid to him.

O'Brien also called on and had some conversation with the president of the defendant in reference to this request, but it was finally refused, and on November 18, 1916, O'Brien rendered a bill to the defendant for the sum of $1,750, being the difference between $100 and $200 per month for the period of 17½ months. This bill the defendant declined to pay; and shortly thereafter O'Brien brought this action for the sum of $2,189, the difference between that amount and the $1,750 previously demanded, being claimed as compensation for the use in defendant's service of plaintiff's automobile. It appears that O'Brien had from a time dating back to about six months before the reduction of his salary owned an automobile which he occasionally used while attending to the business of the defendant, the latter furnishing to O'Brien without charge the gasoline, oil, and tires used in its operation. No previous demand for compensation for this service had ever been made on defendant by O'Brien, not even upon the occasion when in November, 1916, he rendered his bill for back salary.

[1, 2] We think it is quite clear from the foregoing statement of facts that O'Brien had no legal claim upon the defendant either for salary or for the use of his automobile. It is apparent that the letter of the president of the company of November 29, 1914, was understood both by the defendant and O'Brien to mean that from that time forward his salary was to be at the rate of $100 per month without other change in the conditions of his employment, and that he accepted the reduction of salary. There is some evidence in the record to the effect that the expression "half time" refers to the proportion of the day an employé works; but while it may be conceded that such is the literal meaning of the expression, and that it is frequently used in that sense, it is equally true that in the present case it was used by the defendant and understood by O'Brien as referring to the amount of his monthly salary. It is also abundantly clear from the evidence that the use of O'Brien's automobile in the defendant's business was made by O'Brien without any intention of making a charge therefor other than the value of the supplies which he drew from the defendant, and was therefore gratuitously given, except to the extent it might be compensated by the value of such supplies. Such use, therefore, cannot form a legal basis for the plaintiff's demand.

The claim of plaintiff for back pay was one that might well have been addressed to the generosity of the defendant as was done, but we can find no legal foundation for it in the evidence which, we are convinced, affords no basis for the verdict of the jury in the plaintiff's favor.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

WILLIAMS v. REED. (Civ. 2923.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 3, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸80(5), 82(1) — APPEALABILITY OF INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS.

A judgment in an action for an accounting after dissolution of a partnership, authorizing sale of property, held a final appealable judgment, making special orders following such judgment also appealable, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 963.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸714(4)—CONSIDERATION OF STATEMENT OF ACCOUNT IN REVIEWING DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

On appeal from interlocutory judgment by default taken on the judgment roll alone, a statement of account filed by plaintiff with the judge before judgment was entered cannot be considered in determining whether judgment is authorized though the judgment is in exact accord with the statement.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸934(1)—PRESUMPTIONS DEFEATING JUDGMENT.

An appellate court will never indulge in presumptions to defeat a judgment.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(3) — PRESUMPTIONS AS TO SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT.

Where an appeal is taken on the judgment roll alone, the court on appeal will presume that the evidence offered was sufficient to support the judgment.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1011(1)—REVIEW OF QUESTIONS OF FACT.

The conclusion of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal, when based upon conflicting affidavits involving the decision of a question of fact.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1074(1)—HARMLESS ERROR IN FAILING TO FILE AFFIDAVITS OF MERITS TO SET ASIDE DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

Where an appeal from refusal to vacate default judgment is taken on the judgment roll alone, and it appears that the decision of the court was based on conflicting affidavits, it is immaterial whether or not there was an affidavit of merits complying with the legal requirements.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=957(1)—DISCRETION AS TO OPENING DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

A motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to open a default and vacate an interlocutory judgment, being addressed to the discretion of the court, its decision will not be disturbed on appeal, in the absence of a showing of abuse.

8. JUDGMENT ⊂=143(3) — OPENING DEFAULT FOR MISTAKE OR INADVERTENCE OF COURT.

Where summons and complaint have been served upon defendant, who has paid no attention thereto, his default cannot be opened on the ground of inadvertence, mistake, surprise or excusable neglect on the part of the court, within Code Civ. Proc. § 473; such section applying to the mistakes or inadvertence of a party and not of the court.

9. JUDGMENT ⊂=373—POWER OF COURT TO SET ASIDE JUDGMENT FOR FRAUD.

A court has inherent power to set aside a judgment for fraud upon the court, and such right is not derived from Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

10. JUDGMENT ⊂=376 — FRAUD AUTHORIZING VACATION.

That a judgment be irregularly obtained upon a fraudulent claim or false testimony does not authorize the court to set it aside as fraudulent.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=821 — SEPARATE CONSIDERATION OF SEPARATE APPEALS PRESENTED BY ONE TRANSCRIPT.

Where a defendant has taken four separate appeals on different grounds, that all such appeals are in the same transcript, and that the record presents the entire transaction by means of which respondent sought to reap an unfair advantage, does not authorize the court to consider all of such steps as presented by the transcript, but each appeal must be separately considered without relation to the others.

12. JUDICIAL SALES ⊂=3—JUDGMENT OF SALE; NECESSITY OF DIRECTIONS TO SHERIFF AS TO SERVICE OF NOTICE.

An interlocutory judgment, in an action for an accounting after a partnership dissolution in ordering a sale of the property, need not direct the sheriff how and where to give the notice of sale provided by Code Civ. Proc. §692; and, where judgment is full, complete, and enforceable without that provision, it will be considered as surplusage.

13. JUDICIAL SALES ⊂=53—EFFECT OF FAILURE TO GIVE NOTICE REQUIRED.

Neglect of an officer making a sale directed by a judgment to give notice required by law does not affect the validity of the sale, but the party aggrieved has his remedy against the officer for any injury sustained by reason of such neglect.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Noah Williams, Jr., against George H. Reed, for an accounting after dissolution of a partnership. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Valentine & Newby, G. H. P. Shaw, and John H. Foley, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Irwin, Smith & Rosecrans and Davis & Rush, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action for an accounting after dissolution of a partnership. Plaintiff's complaint herein was filed December 31, 1915, and, with the summons thereafter issued, was served on defendant on January 11, 1916. Default of defendant was entered on January 24, 1916. On March 15, 1916, an interlocutory judgment was entered. Appellant contends that the judgment was based upon a statement theretofore filed in said cause by respondent. This contention is opposed by respondent, who argues that, there being no findings of fact, and none of the evidence adduced upon the hearing of the matter being preserved in either a bill of exceptions or a statement of the case, only matters shown by the judgment roll, consisting in this case only of the complaint and judgment, can be considered. On March 28, 1916, an amendment to said interlocutory judgment was made by the court, without any notice to appellant. Appellant appeals from this judgment and the amendment thereto. This will be referred to here as the first appeal.

On April 26, 1916, appellant duly served and filed his motion to open said default and set aside said interlocutory judgment, together with affidavits in support thereof, and his answer to the complaint. On April 28, 1916, and just prior to the hearing of said motion, respondent served on appellant counter affidavits. On April 29, 1916, this motion was denied. From the order denying this motion appellant has appealed. This is the second appeal.

May 2, 1916, respondent served upon appellant a notice of motion to confirm the sale of the property of the partnership made by the sheriff. Objections to the confirmation of said sale were filed by appellant, and, after hearing evidence both for and against such confirmation, the court, on May 6, 1916, overruled said objections and entered an order confirming the sale. Appellant thereupon applied to the court to fix the amount of the bond to stay execution pending appeal, under sections 943, 945, Code of Civil Procedure. Said application was granted, the court fixing the bond at the sum of $10,000, and such appeal was then taken and the bond given according to law. We shall refer to this as the third appeal.

June 24, 1916, respondent served upon appellant's attorneys a notice of motion, supported by affidavits, to enter final judgment in said cause. Appellant did not appear at this hearing, and, on June 30, 1916, the court granted this motion and entered final judgment accordingly. This is the fourth appeal herein.

By proper stipulation the records in all four appeals have been, for the convenience of court and counsel, included in one transcript. The appeals will be considered in the order presented.

In reference to the first appeal, it may enlighten the matter some if it is understood that the complaint alleges that respondent had "paid into said copartnership business, both as capital and for the conduct and maintenance of said business, the sum of $31,309.42, and has received from and on account of said copartnership the sum of $6,554.83 in money," leaving a net investment, as we gather from the said allegation, of $24,854.60. The statement of the account submitted to the court by respondent, and upon which the interlocutory judgment was rendered, shows the amount invested by respondent to be the sum of $43,151.22, and the amount withdrawn the same as alleged in the complaint, to wit, $6,554.83, leaving his net investment at $36,596.39—or the sum of $11,741.79 more in favor of respondent, apparently, than the allegations of the complaint authorize. Respondent contends that there is no warrant in the record for such conclusion, as already hereinbefore set forth.

[1, 2] We are confronted at the outset with the query as to whether the interlocutory judgment, so called, entered herein is a "final judgment." If it is not, then no appeal from it is legally permissible, and the special orders, entered by the court subsequently to the entry thereof, and before the entry of the so-called judgment, are not appealable orders. Under the authority of Zappettini v. Buckles, 167 Cal. 27, 138 Pac. 696, we hold the judgment now under consideration to be a final judgment; that consequently an appeal lies therefrom, and hence that each of the special orders following said judgment was also appealable. Section 963, Code Civ. Proc.

The transcript discloses, as a part of appellant's bill of exceptions, the following:

"That before interlocutory judgment was entered, the plaintiff filed a statement with the judge of said court, at his request, and represented that it was a correct statement of the copartnership account between plaintiff and defendant, which said statement was and is in words and figures as follows, to wit."

Then follows a copy of the statement. An examination of the interlocutory judgment discloses the fact that it is in exact accord with the said "statement." How can one escape the conclusion, it is asked, that the judgment was based thereon?

[3] It is urged by respondent that on an appeal from a default judgment only matters shown by the judgment roll—consisting in this case only of the complaint and judgment—can be considered. If no other point were urged by appellant than the one now under consideration it might be conceded that respondent's position would be invulnerable. Tomlinson v. Ayres, 117 Cal. 568, 49 Pac. 717; Nevada Bank v. Dresbach, 63 Cal. 324. But other points are urged, and presently we shall see the force of appellant's position here. For our present purpose we call attention to the fact that, limited to the judgment roll, we are confronted with the query: "Was the interlocutory judgment warranted under the allegations of of the complaint?" If not, is it error apparent on the face of the judgment roll? It is true, as was said in Ohleyer v. Bunce, 65 Cal. 544, 4 Pac. 549, that an appellate court will never indulge in presumptions to defeat a judgment. What have we in this case, outside of an assumption based upon no evidence to which our attention has been called, to support appellant's claim that the judgment here was based upon the "statement" referred to? "The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint; but in any other case the court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue" (Section 580, Code Civ. Proc.), and "a default admits the material allegations of the complaint, and no more." Ellis v. Rademacher, 125 Cal. 556, 58 Pac. 178; Balfour, etc., v. Sawday, 133 Cal. 228, 65 Pac. 400.

It is urged by appellant that the complaint contains no allegation which justifies the following—appearing as a portion of the interlocutory judgment:

"That the sheriff of said county of Imperial, state of California, is hereby appointed to take possession of all said property belonging to said copartnership," etc.

We think this was not in excess of the relief demanded. In other words, the language just quoted simply specifies one of the steps in a series to be taken by the said sheriff in carrying out the terms of the judgment and decree. It is true that in a "matter of purely special or exceptional recovery, * * * the defendant" is "entitled to look solely to the prayer in determining whether he will defend against the relief sought in the action," and that "if such special relief is not therein specifically demanded, it is to be deemed waived." Brooks v. Forington, 117 Cal. 219, 48 Pac. 1073. But the present is, we think, not such a case.

The difficulty with which we are here confronted is not as just indicated, but is centered around the query as to whether on the consideration of this appeal from the interlocutory judgment we can take cognizance of the statement referred to. If we can do so legally, then the contention of appellant may be sustained. Concededly, so far as this first appeal is concerned, it is one on the judgment roll alone. There are no findings. We have wholly failed to find anything "on the face of the record," or contained within the judgment roll, that justifies the assertion that the judgment was based on the said statement. This court cannot take notice of alleged facts which rest solely upon the mere assertion of counsel in their brief, even although where, as in this case, such counsel has the confidence of the court. Horton v. City of Los Angeles, 119 Cal. 602, 51 Pac. 956; Dore v. Southern Pacific Co., 163 Cal. 182, 124 Pac. 817.

[4] The record is entirely silent as to what evidence was introduced or considered at this hearing. This so-called "statement" is not authenticated in any bill of exceptions as such evidence. This court, for the present is mightily concerned, in passing upon the question, with what transpired at the trial; what evidence was there and then introduced, and what portion thereof the court accepted as true; but there is absolutely nothing legally before us that can be considered which will help in arriving at a conclusion as to whether or not the evidence offered was sufficient or insufficient to support the judgment. This being true, we are bound to presume that the evidence offered, whatever it was, was sufficient for such purpose. The following cases, out of a multitude that might be cited, will, we think, support our conclusion. Crane v. Brannan, 3 Cal. 192; Siebe v. Joshua, etc., 86 Cal. 390, 25 Pac. 14; Hyde v. Boyle, 89 Cal. 590, 26 Pac. 1092; Johnston v. Callahan, 146 Cal. 212, 79 Pac. 870. It follows, therefore, that the said "statement" cannot be considered on this phase of the case, and that the so-called "interlocutory judgment" must be affirmed.

Now, as to the second appeal—the appeal from the order denying defendant's motion to set aside his default. At the outset we gather from defendant's bill of exceptions, as disclosed in the transcript, that in support of the motion were read plaintiff's complaint herein, the statement heretofore referred to as having been filed by plaintiff before the entry of the said interlocutory judgment, the affidavits of this defendant, John H. Foley, and H. C. Chase. In opposing said motion, plaintiff served upon defendant's attorneys, filed and introduced in evidence the affidavit of himself and one Noah Williams, traversing in detail every averment of plaintiff's said affidavits. Thus, we see that a very sharp and decided conflict as to the questions presented was present.

[5, 6] Under these conditions, we are powerless to interfere with the conclusion of the trial court herein. The rule is, as it has been so frequently stated, both by the Supreme Court as well as by this court, that "in the consideration of an appeal from an order made upon affidavits, etc., involving the decision of a question of fact, this court is bound by the same rule that controls it where oral testimony is presented for review. If there is any conflict in the affidavits, those in favor of the prevailing party must be taken as true, and the facts stated therein must be taken as established." Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 91 Pac. 1001; Hyde v. Boyle, 105 Cal. 102, 38 Pac. 643; Bernou v. Bernou, 15 Cal. App. 341, 114 Pac. 1000. Under these circumstances, it is immaterial whether or not there was an affidavit of merits which complied with the legal requirements.

[7] Appellant urges that a motion under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to open a default and vacate an interlocutory judgment is addressed to the discretion of the court, and should be liberally exercised to promote justice and prevent fraud. In this we agree. And the presumption is that, in the absence of satisfactory showing to the contrary, the lower court so exercised its discretion. In this case our attention has not been called to anything which would show an abuse of discretion by the trial court, and since, as before stated, the deciding of the motion was a matter otherwise purely within the discretion of that court, we are now impotent to disturb the conclusion reached.

[8] In the present case, defendant was served with summons and complaint, but paid no attention thereto. Hence the contention cannot successfully be maintained, it would seem, that under these circumstances his default was because of inadvertence, mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect. Section 473, supra, reads:

> "The court may * * * relieve a party * * * from a judgment * * * taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect."

Obviously, it does not say that such relief may be granted because of the court's inadvertence, mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect. In the present case it seems to us that the error, if any, was "judicial error" which would be remedied only by appeal from the judgment. Byrne v. Hoag, 116 Cal. 1, 47 Pac. 775; Grannis v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 245, 79 Pac. 891, 106 Am. St. Rep. 23; Johnston v. Callahan, supra.

[9, 10] It may be observed, in passing, that a court has inherent power to set aside a judgment for fraud upon the court, and the right to so act or grant relief is not derived from section 473, supra, Stierlen v. Stierlen, 18 Cal. App. 609, 124 Pac. 226, 228. However, a fraud that will render such relief available does not include a judgment irregularly obtained upon a fraudulent claim or by false testimony. Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 77 Pac. 1007. Indeed, a judgment may be unjust, inequitable, and erroneous without being fraudulent or subject to be set aside by a court of equity. Davis v. Chalfant, 81 Cal. 627, 22 Pac. 972. By the order appealed from, the court, among other things, found:

"That there was no inadvertence of the court in entering judgment, adjudging that the plaintiff had contributed to the copartnership of Williams & Reed the sum of $18,250.30 in excess of the amount contributed to said copartnership by the defendant; that there was no excusable neglect of the defendant in failing to answer said complaint; that there was no fraud of plaintiff in representing to the court that he had contributed the sum of $18,250.30 to the copartnership in excess of the amount contributed to said copartnership by the defendant."

For these reasons, therefore, it follows that the order denying defendant's motion to open the default and set aside the interlocutory judgment must be, and it is, affirmed.

This brings us to the consideration of the third appeal—the appeal from the order confirming the sale. Appellant urges five reasons for the reversal of this order, viz.: (1) Insufficiency of the notice of sale; (2) gross inadequacy of price; (3) the sale was without right of redemption; (4) because the shares of water stock were sold as personalty, separate and apart from the land, and the real estate was sold separate and apart from the water stock, which was appurtenant thereto; and (5) because the sale imposes upon appellant a gross injustice. These points were urged in the court below as objections to the confirmation of the sale.

[11] Here again we are confronted with a condition almost exactly like the one we have just discussed in connection with the second appeal—that of the matter being presented by both sides on affidavits and other evidence. The evidence being in sharp conflict, and the court having decided that question, we are bound thereby, unless, of course, the evidence before us on its face discloses its insufficiency to support the court's conclusion therein. Appellant urges in his closing brief that, because all these appeals are in the same transcript and the record presents the entire transaction by means of which the respondent seeks to reap an unfair advantage, this court should consider all of the steps taken to accomplish this result, as the transcript presents it, rather than consider each appeal separately without any relation to the others; but our attention is not called to any rule of procedure, or to any law—and this court knows of none—which would authorize it to comply with this suggestion. It may be suggested here, too, that we have looked—and in vain—for something that would authorize us so to do. With the exception of the one question of the insufficiency of the evidence, just suggested in connection with the third appeal, our discussion of the points involved on the second appeal apply here.

[12] Of the five points urged for a reversal of the order appealed from, we are of the opinion that only one need be considered, viz. the first, which relates to the insufficiency of the notice of sale given by the sheriff. Section 692 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides how notice of such sale should be given, while section 693 of the same Code specifies the penalty which attaches to an officer selling without giving the notice as prescribed. In neither of these sections is there any thing that requires the court, or any judge thereof, to direct the giving of the notice. For this reason we think that portion of the interlocutory judgment which directed the sheriff how and when to give the notice referred to unnecessary, and that it therefore may be treated as surplusage. The judgment is full, complete, and enforceable without such provision. Indeed, these two sections, taken together, "enjoin upon the sheriff both the duty and the responsibility of posting and publishing notices of sale as prescribed, which injunction necessarily implies the duty and the responsibility of selecting the places where the notices are to be posted, and the newspapers in which they are to be published, since they are not specified." Northern C. I. Trust Co. v. Cadman, 101 Cal. 200, 35 Pac. 557.

[13] It would seem that "the penalty and responsibility [of the sheriff] are inconsistent with the alleged authority of the plaintiff to dictate the places or papers in which notices are to be published, and consistent only with his duty and power to select the places and newspapers in which to publish the required notices." Northern C. I. Trust Co. v. Cadman, supra. "Questions * * * appertaining to the notice, as well as all others which merely relate to irregularities, are between the officer selling and the parties to the execution." Kelley v. Desmond, 63 Cal. 517. Therefore the portion directing the manner of posting and the places where the notice of sale was to be posted and published may be disregarded. "Neglect of the officer making a sale to give the notice required by law did not affect the validity of such sale, but * * * the party aggrieved had his remedy against the officer for any injury sustained by reason of his neglect." Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47, 65 Am. Dec. 475; Harvey v. Fisk, 9 Cal. 94.

It would seem useless to discuss this phase of the question further, for under both of the sections mentioned, as we construe them, and the cases decided by our own Supreme Court, as we understand them, it has been repeatedly held that such a sale as the one under discussion was a valid sale, even when the statute had not been complied with in any way—no notice of any kind having been given. Under these circumstances it becomes apparent that this court is without power or jurisdiction to set aside the order confirming the sale for this or any of the reasons urged as aforesaid.

It follows that the order of the trial court overruling the objections of defendant and confirming the sale must be, and it is affirmed.

From all that has been said hereinbefore, we think it follows that the fourth appeal, the appeal from the final judgment, is not well taken, and that for each of the reasons advanced—while assuming, without so holding, that the judgment in this case is "unjust, inequitable, erroneous or irregularly obtained by false testimony"—under the law, as we have shown above, we are powerless, in the face of the record before us, to do anything but affirm the judgment. The remedy under these circumstances is against the officer, unless, indeed, the defendant has slept upon his rights.

The judgment is affirmed.

STONE et al. v. DAILY. (S. F. 8604, 8605.)

1. DEEDS ⟸60—DELIVERY ON CONDITION OF SURVIVORSHIP.

Where deed is handed to a third person instructed to keep it till death of either grantor or grantee, and then to deliver it to the survivor, the delivery is not effectual, not being absolute, but conditional upon grantee's surviving grantor.

2. DEEDS ⟸56(2)—DELIVERY BY HANDING TO GRANTEE DEPENDENT ON INTENT.

Handing of deed by grantor to grantee with statement, "Here is the deed, and now the property is yours," while a valid delivery, if done as a final act and with intent then and there irrevocably to vest in grantee the title, was not a valid delivery if such handing over of the deed was with intent that it should not constitute a final delivery, but that the deed should then be deposited with a bank to be held by it and given, on the death of grantor or grantee, to the survivor; the question being one of intent.

3. DEEDS ⟸194(1) — INFERENCE FROM LATER ACTS AGAINST HANDING OF DEED TO GRANTEE BEING DELIVERY.

From the fact that immediately after grantor handed the deed to grantee with statement, "Now the property is yours," the parties deposited it with a bank to deliver, on the death of one of them, to the survivor, a strong inference arises that such handing to the grantee was not intended as an absolute delivery.

4. DEEDS ⟸194(1)—INFERENCE AS TO DELIVERY FROM ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF RECEIPT.

No inference of absolute delivery of deed arises from fact that the grantee signed an acknowledgment of receipt indorsed on the deed by grantor's attorney, for there would have been no occasion for the indorsement if it had been intended that the deed should remain in the grantee's hands.

5. DEEDS ⟸60 — DELIVERY WITH REQUEST THAT DEED BE NOT RECORDED DURING GRANTOR'S LIFE CONDITIONAL DELIVERY.

If when grantor handed the deed to grantee, with request that it be not recorded during grantor's life, it was the belief of the parties that the deed would not be effective unless recorded, the delivery was not valid, though the parties intended it, at the moment, as the final consummation of the matter; the intention being that delivery should not be absolute, but, upon condition that the deed be not recorded until grantor's death, and in case grantee die first, that it be not recorded or effective at all.

6. DEEDS ⟸56(7) — EFFECT OF RETURN TO GRANTOR FOR SAFE-KEEPING AND KEEPING FROM RECORD.

Where grantor delivered deed to third person for grantees with intention to irrevocably vest title in grantees, the absolute and effective character of the delivery was not affected by the fact that the grantor, in accordance with her previous intention, immediately retook possession of the deed and kept it, where she definitely understood and intended that her retaking and possession should be merely for purposes of safe-keeping and to insure that the deed be not recorded, and thereby to keep it from her husband's knowledge, and that she had no right or power to recall the instrument or change its character as an immediately effective instrument of conveyance.

C. M. Crawford, of Lakeport, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. This is a suit to quiet title to certain real property formerly belonging to one Mrs. Rebecca J. Daily, now deceased. The defendant is the surviving husband of Mrs. Daily, and claims the property by reason of a deed of gift by her to him which for convenience we may call the Daily deed. The plaintiff, Mrs. Cora L. A. G. Stone, is a daughter of Mrs. Daily by a former husband, and is her only child, and the other plaintiffs are Mrs. Stone's children, Mrs. Daily's grandchildren. The plaintiffs claim under a deed of gift by Mrs. Daily to them, made subsequent to the Daily deed, and which for convenience we may call the Stone deed. The plaintiffs contend that the Daily deed, while signed and acknowledged by Mrs. Daily, was not, in fact, delivered by her so as to become an effective instrument of conveyance. The defendant makes a similar contention with reference to the Stone deed, and the sole questions in the case are as to the respective deliveries of these two deeds. The trial court found that neither deed was delivered, with the result that neither the plaintiffs nor the defendant were the owners of the property, except as they might be the heirs at law of Mrs. Daily, and gave judgment to that effect. From this judgment both sides appeal.

There is little, if any, conflict in the evidence. The dispute turns on the conclusions, both of law and of fact, to be drawn from the facts which appear in evidence. The land in question is a ranch in Lake county, which Mrs. Daily owned at the time of her marriage to Daily, and upon which she lived at that time, and continued to live until her death. The deed to Daily was made in January, 1900, a year after the marriage. Daily was 47 years of age at the time, and his wife some years older. Daily had no property, and, according to his testimony, the deed to him was made because he felt and represented to his wife that he needed some protection in his old age in case his wife should die first. Mrs. Daily thereupon consulted her attorney about making a deed to Daily, reserving a life estate in herself. Her attorney advised her to make a will, saying that if she made a deed she could not take it back, but that if she made a will she could change it. She replied that she did not wish to change it, but wished to give it (presumably the property) to Daily. Her attorney told her to think the matter over, and a short time later she returned and requested him to prepare a deed. He thereupon prepared the deed in question here, purporting to convey the property to Mr. Daily, but reserving to Mrs. Daily the right to use and occupy it during her lifetime. Mr. Daily was called in, and the deed signed and acknowledged by Mrs. Daily. Upon this being done, Mrs. Daily, according to the testimony of the attorney and Daily himself, handed the deed to Daily, saying, "Here, George, is the deed, and now the property is yours." Mrs. Daily requested that the deed be not recorded, and Daily asked the attorney to keep it. The latter did not wish to do so and suggested leaving it with the bank. He prepared an envelope for the purpose of inclosing the deed and indorsed upon it the following:

"We George L. Daily and Rebecca J. Daily, husband and wife, do hereby deposit this sealed envelope and its contents in the Bank of Lake at Lakeport, Cal., and we and each of us do hereby instruct the said Bank of Lake to hold the said envelope and its contents so long as we may live; and during such time not to deliver the same to either of us nor to any other person, nor suffer the seals to be broken; upon the death of either of us to deliver the same to the survivor on demand. Dated January 11, 1900."

This indorsement was signed by both Mrs. Daily and her husband, and the envelope with the deed inclosed was thereupon deposited with the bank designated, where it remained until Mrs. Daily's death, when it was delivered to the defendant. As a part of the transaction, and apparently looking to the deposit of the deed with the bank, the attorney indorsed on the back of the deed, "Received January 11, 1899," and had Daily sign it. The year 1899 was written by mistake instead of 1900, but the difference is immaterial.

[1-3] Upon the foregoing facts it is plain that if the delivery which must be relied on in order to make the deed effective was the final delivery to the bank under the instructions indorsed upon the envelope, there was no such absolute delivery as must exist in order to give the instrument life. The instructions on the envelope determine the character of the delivery, and make it one conditional upon Daily surviving his wife. If he did not survive her, the deed was to be returned to her, and the purpose for which this provision for a return to the grantor was made was very evidently that the deed should not take effect in the event of the grantee dying before the grantor. Exactly this situation was presented in Kenney v. Parks, 125 Cal. 146, 57 Pac. 772, and it was held that there was no effective delivery, the court saying:

"The all-controlling fact in this case, which defeats plaintiff's claim, is that when the deeds were made and delivered to the cashier of the bank the respective grantors did not absolutely part with all future dominion and control over them, but, upon the contrary, the actual intention and understanding of each grantor was that upon the death of the other the survivor should take back his own deed, and that no title should vest under it."

See, also, Canale v. Copello, 137 Cal. 22, 69 Pac. 698; Keyes v. Meyers, 147 Cal. 702, 82 Pac. 304; Long v. Ryan, 166 Cal. 442, 137 Pac. 29.

Other than the depositing of the instrument with the bank under the instructions mentioned, there is no act appearing in evidence which could be said to constitute a valid delivery of the Daily deed, unless the act of Mrs. Daily in handing the deed to her husband in her lawyer's office just prior to its inclosure in the envelope and deposit with the bank, and saying to him: "Here, George, is the deed, and now the property is yours," constituted such a delivery. A valid delivery might have been so made. If there had been in fact a handing over of the deed by Mrs. Daily to her husband as a final act and with the intent then and there irrevocably to vest in him the title to the property, there was a valid delivery. That afterwards, no matter how shortly afterwards, the parties changed their minds and sought to make another arrangement, as evidenced by the deposit with the bank, would make no difference. The transfer of title would have occurred, would have been a fait accompli, and could be undone only by a retransfer by Daily. The question is, Did Mrs. Daily hand the deed to her husband as a final act, intended irrevocably to vest title in him, regardless of whether he survived her or not?

The trial court by its finding that there was no delivery of the deed impliedly found that this was not done, and in view of the fact that the only evidence upon the point was the testimony of two witnesses at to the details of an occurrence of many years before, the legal effect of which might be changed by a very slight and wholly unintentional inaccuracy of recollection, it would be difficult in any case for us to hold that the testimony was sufficient to overthrow the adverse finding. It is not necessary, however, to put the decision upon this ground. We can assume, what we believe to be the case, that the testimony in question is wholly truthful and at least fairly accurate, and yet it does not show, taken as a whole and in the light of all the circumstances, that the handing over of the deed by Mrs. Daily to Mr. Daily in the lawyer's office was a final and absolute delivery.

The question is one of intent; Was the delivery in the lawyer's office intended to be final and absolute? In the first place, while it is possible to have had such a delivery in spite of the fact that immediately thereafter a very different arrangement was made by depositing the deed with the bank, the inference to the contrary arising from such deposit is very strong. The handing over of the deed to Mr. Daily and the agreeing upon its deposit with the bank were both parts of one continuous occurrence, of which the deposit in the bank is the final result. Such deposit is certainly what the parties finally intended; in fact, Mr. Daily so testifies; and the inference is very strong that anything done previously was merely preliminary and not final. There is no evidence to overcome this inference. In addition is the strongly confirmatory circumstance that the deposit with the bank accords with what the parties intended to do when Mrs. Daily went to her lawyer's office, and the absolute delivery of the deed to Daily does not. Mr. Daily himself testifies that the understanding between him and his wife before the deed was drawn was that the property was to be his only in case his wife died before him. If the deposit with the bank were effective, it would have accomplished just this, while the absolute delivery of the deed to him would not.

[4] We attach no significance favorable to delivery to the indorsement upon the deed signed by Daily acknowledging its receipt, but rather the contrary. There would have been no occasion for the indorsement if the deed were to remain in Daily's hands. The only reason apparent for making it is that the deed was not to remain in his hands, i. e., it was contemplated when the indorsement was made that the deed was to be deposited with the bank as was actually done immediately afterwards. If this be so and the receipt were given as a part of the formality of Mrs. Daily handing over the deed to Daily, it would indicate that at that very time the parties were contemplating the deposit with the bank, and the handing over was but a preliminary to this final result.

[5] In the second place, Mr. Daily testifies that at the time the deed was handed to him Mrs. Daily requested that it be not recorded, and there is a strong inference at least from much that appears in evidence that Daily and his wife both had the not uncommon belief that the deed would not be effective unless recorded. If this was so, then the delivery to Daily was not valid, even assuming that the parties intended it at the moment as the final consummation of the matter, and the deposit with the bank represents a subsequent change of mind. Under such circumstances the delivery, while final in one sense, was not intended as absolute, but was upon the condition that it was not to be recorded until Mrs. Daily's death, and, in case Daily died first, was not to be recorded or be effective at all. If this were the character of the delivery, and we believe that this is the utmost that can be said for it, it comes directly within the authority of Kenney v. Parks, 137 Cal. 527, 70 Pac. 556. The facts there were that a wife gave her husband a deed under the belief that it would not be valid until recorded and upon her husband's promise that he would not record it unless he survived her. He recorded it nevertheless, and in a suit by the wife to recover the property it was held that there had not been a valid delivery. As we have said, we think that the utmost that can be said for the handing over of the deed by Mrs. Daily to her husband is that it was upon the same understanding as that in Kenney v. Parks. Our conclusion, therefore, is that not merely is there evidence to justify the finding that the Daily deed was not delivered, but it would be very difficult to justify any finding to the contrary.

[6] The Stone deed was made in 1916, some 16 years after the Daily deed, and purported to convey all of the property of the grantor, both real and personal, to Mrs. Stone for life, with remainder over to her children, reserving, however, a life estate to Mrs. Daily. A year or so before Mrs. Daily had arranged to sell a portion of her ranch, and found herself unable to make title because of a declaration of homestead on the property by her husband. She was able to secure his relinquishment of the homestead only upon the payment of $4,000, and she then declared that she had given him all she intended to give, and purposed to give the rest of her property to her daughter and the latter's children. Shortly before executing the deed she called upon a Mr. Neal, a searcher of records and notary public, and who occasionally drew conveyances, and informed him that she wished to leave her property to her daughter and her children. Neal suggested that she make a will, but she rejected the suggestion, and requested him to draw a deed, whereby Mrs. Stone would have the property during her life and her children afterwards. She asked if she could place the deed in her box at the bank when executed to be delivered after her death. Neal informed her that she could not do this, and that the deed must be delivered when executed either to Mrs. Stone or to some one for her. She objected to this, as she was afraid the deed might be recorded, and she did not wish her husband to know of it. She finally concluded that she was willing to make delivery to one Fred Greene, the cashier of the local bank where she had her box, but wished after delivery to retake possession of the paper. Mr. Neal was uncertain as to whether this could be done, and said he would look into it. What occurred between them on her return is so material that we quote Mr. Neal's testimony verbatim:

"And in the meantime I did study the question up, and as a result of my study I told her that if she truly understood it in her own mind it was all right, that when she signed the deed and delivered it to a third person, that if she got possession of it again (the deed) that it was not her property in any respect—she could merely hold it for preservation and safe-keeping—not only that, but she didn't own the land, except what reservations she embodied in the deed, and that could be done."

Mrs. Daily thereupon told Neal to draw the deed, which he did. On her return to his office for the purpose of executing it and immediately prior to its execution, Neal told her that the deed meant an absolute conveyance, and left nothing in herself except what was reserved by it, and repeated what he had previously told her. She then signed the deed, and Neal acknowledged its execution, and he instructed her as to the formality of delivering the instrument and as to what she should say. The two then went to the bank, where Mrs. Daily handed the deed to Mr. Greene, saying in accordance with her instructions from Neal that she delivered it to him for Mrs. Stone and her children, and wished him to give it to Mrs. Stone after her, Mrs. Daily's, death. Mr. Greene received the deed, looked it over briefly, and Mrs. Daily then requested it back to put in her box. It was given her, and placed in the box inclosed in an envelope indorsed: "To be handed to Fred A. Greene on my death. [Signed] Rebecca H. Daily." The box was one which remained in the bank, but was Mrs. Daily's private box, to which she alone had the key. The deed remained in the box until Mrs. Daily's death.

There is no dispute as to the above facts. The position of defendant's counsel, and apparently from the record the view of the trial judge, are that they do not amount to a valid delivery because of the final retention of possession of the instrument by Mrs. Daily, and in this connection it should be noted that such possession was in accord with the intention of Mrs. Daily before and at the time of her handing the deed to Greene. If her retaking the deed had been purely an afterthought, there could be no reasonable question as to the validity of the delivery, but it was not an afterthought, and the matter must be judged with this fact in mind. Nevertheless, we think there was unmistakably a final and absolute delivery. It is a question purely of Mrs. Daily's intent.

The final result of the transaction was, of course, the deposit of the deed in her private box in an envelope bearing an indorsement that it was to be handed to Mr. Greene upon her death. If there were nothing more, the conclusion would be irresistible that the instrument was not to become effective in any way until her death, and that there was no real delivery. Furthermore, the inference would be strong that anything which occurred previously in the course of the transaction which had this as its final result was but preliminary and tentative and not final, and the transaction would have to be judged by the final result. In this respect the situation is the same as that presented by the deposit with the bank of the Daily deed. But, as was said in the discussion respecting the Daily deed, it would be possible that there was a previous and absolute delivery intended to be then and there final and vest in the grantees the rights purported to be conveyed to them. In the case of the Daily deed there was no evidence sufficient to show this and overcome the inference to the contrary. But in the case of the Stone deed, the evidence leaves no doubt as to the fact. Mrs. Daily had been told by her adviser most explicitly and carefully that if the deed were to be effective it had to be delivered to Greene as a final and absolute conveyance then and there vesting the property in the grantees subject only to such reservations as the deed itself might make. She proceeded upon this understanding and with the intention of accomplishing it. There can be no doubt as to her intent. This was not controverted at the trial, and the record indicates plainly that the finding of nondelivery by the trial court was not predicated upon any doubt as to the necessary intent on Mrs. Daily's part in making the delivery to Greene, but upon her retaking possession of the deed from him and retaining such possession thereafter, and the conclusion of the trial judge as to the legal effect of her so doing, regardless of the fact that her intent was clear.

But the retaking of possession and subsequent retention of the instrument by Mrs. Daily is not conclusive even though it appear that it was not an afterthought, but contemplated by her from the beginning. It is a very strong circumstance, indicating that she did not intend such delivery as would put the deed beyond her control and power of recall, and would ordinarily be controlling. But the final question always is, What was the intent with which the formality of a delivery was gone through with? And if it appear indubitably that it was gone through with for the purpose of conveying the property then and there, and that the grantor desired thereafter to retain, and did retain, the instrument, not that she might control or suspend its taking effect, but for the purposes of custody and safe-keeping merely, as, for instance, to insure its not being recorded because she did not wish her husband to know of it, any contrary inference as to her intent arising from her continued possession of the instrument is of necessity overcome, and the fact of such continued possession becomes immaterial. Such is the situation here. Mrs. Daily had been told in almost so many words that she could not make a valid conveyance to her daughter and grandchildren and retain possession of the deed unless she were willing to vest the property in them at the time and to have possession of the deed thereafter merely for purposes of safe-keeping. She was willing to do this, and wished to do it, and proceeded with the matter with the intent of doing it.

The case, then, is one where the formality of a delivery is gone through with, with the intent of making an immediately effective conveyance, but after delivery the grantor retains possession of the deed for purposes of safe-keeping. That such a delivery is valid and is not affected by the fact that the instrument subsequently remains in the possession of the grantor is well established. Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries (vol. 4, pp. 455 and 456), says:

"So, if a deed be duly delivered in the first instance, it will operate though the grantee suffer it to remain in the custody of the grantor. If both parties be present, and the usual formalities of execution take place, and the contract is to all appearance consummated without any conditions or qualifications annexed, it is a complete and valid deed, notwithstanding it be left in the custody of the grantor."

In Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) § 278a, it is said:

"Where a deed has been duly delivered, the fact that the grantee allows it to remain in the custody of the grantor will not invalidate it. A deed may be returned, after delivery to the grantor, so as to insure that it would not be placed on record without affecting the delivery."

In a number of these cases the facts are very similar to those of the case at bar.

Counsel for defendant refer to the language of a number of cases such as Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186, Kenney v. Parks, 125 Cal. 146, 57 Pac. 772, Keyes v. Meyers, 147 Cal. 702, 82 Pac. 304, Moore v. Trott, 162 Cal. 268, 122 Pac. 462, and Long v. Ryan, 166 Cal. 442, 137 Pac. 29, to the effect that—

"The essential requisite to the validity of a deed transferred under circumstances as indicated in this case is that when it is placed in the hands of the third party it has passed beyond the control of the grantor for all time."

But an examination of these cases shows at once that when they speak of the necessity of the control of the instrument passing from the grantor for all time, they mean control in the sense of power to recall it, control over it as an effective instrument of conveyance, not control in the sense of having the mere physical custody of it. This is strikingly shown by Moore v. Trott, supra, where, on page 274 of the report (162 Cal.), on page 465 of 122 Pac., it is said:

"It has long, if not always, been the rule that the delivery of an instrument is a question of intent, and that to a complete delivery no precise form of words and no particular character of act is necessary. The delivery is sufficient and complete if from any or all of the circumstances the grantor has made known his intention irrevocably to part with his dominion and control over the instrument, to the end that it may presently vest title in another."

And yet, on the next page, the following quotation from Ruckman v. Ruckman, supra, is made with approval:

"Whenever it appears that the contract or arrangement between the parties has been so far executed or completed that they must have understood that the grantor had divested himself of title, and that the grantee was invested with it, delivery will be considered complete, though the instrument itself still remains in the hands of the grantor."

To sum the discussion up, it appears as to the Stone deed that it was formally delivered by the grantor to a third person for the grantees; that it was the intention of the grantor in making such delivery that the instrument should be immediately effective and vest in the grantees irrevocably the interests purported to be conveyed to them, and that while the grantor intended throughout the transaction to retake possession of the instrument and herself keep it, and this was done, yet she definitely understood and intended that such possession should be merely for purposes of safe-keeping and to insure that the instrument be not recorded and thereby come to the knowledge of her husband, and that she had no right or power to recall the instrument or change its character as an immediately effective instrument of conveyance. It follows, since the full intent to make an absolute and unqualified delivery was present, that such delivery was made, and the finding that the deed was not delivered cannot be sustained.

Judgment reversed for a new trial upon the issue as to the delivery or nondelivery of the Stone deed, the finding as to the nondelivery of the Daily deed to stand.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LENNON, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. (concurring). I am not satisfied that a finding of the trial court to the effect that the Daily deed was delivered could properly be held to be without sufficient support in the evidence. The finding actually made, however, was that such deed was not delivered, and, as shown in the opinion, this finding has ample support in the evidence. In all respects other that the intimation that a finding to the contrary could not have been sustained by an appellate court, I concur in the opinion and in the judgment.

GIFTS ⟸18(1)—WRITING WITHOUT DELIVERY OF ARTICLE.

A deed of gift of personalty without delivery of the article is enough to effectuate the gift.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action by Cora L. A. G. Stone and others against Fred A. Greene and another, George L. Daily, administrator of Rebecca J. Daily, deceased, intervening. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants and intervener appeal. Affirmed.

C. M. Crawford, of Lakeport, for appellants.

Robert Duncan, of Ukiah, for respondents.

OLNEY, J. This is a companion case to Stone v. Daily (S. F. Nos. 8604 and 8605) 185 Pac. 665, this day decided, and the material facts in both cases are there quite fully stated and need not be repeated. The deed designated in the opinion referred to as the Stone deed purported to convey to Mrs. Stone and her children all of her mother's, Mrs. Daily's, estate, both real and personal. Upon Mrs. Daily's death Fred A. Greene and the Bank of Lake, in whose custody was Mrs. Daily's private box containing the deed and also certain money and other personal property, refused to turn the box with its contents over to Mrs. Stone. Mrs. Stone and her children thereupon brought two suits, one against Mrs. Daily's surviving husband to quiet title to the real property involved, and the other against Greene and the bank to recover the contents of the box. In the latter case, Mr. Daily intervened as a defendant and claimed the personal property involved as administrator of Mrs. Daily's estate.

The plaintiff's right to recover depended in both cases upon the validity of the Stone deed, and in both cases it was claimed by the defendants that the deed was invalid because not delivered. The trial in the suit involving the real property resulted in a finding that the deed had not been delivered and a consequent judgment against the plaintiffs. This judgment was appealed from, and it was this appeal which has just been determined. It was held that the finding that the deed had not been delivered was contrary to the evidence, and the judgment was reversed.

In the suit for recovery of the personal property it was found, contrary to the result in the other case, that the deed had been delivered, and judgment was given for the plaintiffs. The defendants appealed, and it is this appeal which is now under consideration. The sole reason of importance urged for a reversal is that the finding of delivery is not supported by the evidence. The evidence in the present case is practically identical with that in the other as to the question of delivery or nondelivery of the Stone deed, with the exception that in this case it was expressly admitted by defendants' counsel at the trial that Mrs. Daily, when she handed the deed to Greene, intended a complete and effective delivery and a present conveyance of the property, subject only to the reservation contained in the instrument. But regardless of this admission, the evidence clearly shows this to have been the fact. This is fully discussed in the other case, and that discussion need not be repeated here. Such intent determined the character of the delivery, and sustains the finding that the deed was delivered.

Defendants' counsel also urge that the deed, even if delivered, was not effective to transfer the personal property because the gift intended to be made by the deed was not accompanied or followed by a transfer of possession of the property. This contention is completely answered by Burkett v. Doty, 176 Cal. 89, 167 Pac. 518.

SPENCER et al. v. DEEMS. (Civ. 2978.)

1. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY ⟸5—OFFER TO RESTORE ON RESCISSION.

In view of Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 2, as to restoration or offer to restore by one desiring to rescind contract, claim by defendant, in action for rescission for fraud of exchange of plaintiff's home for the lease of an apartment house, that plaintiff made no tender of the amount of his arrears in rent is unavailing, defendant having made no objection to the form or particulars of the tender, but having absolutely refused to acquiesce in the rescission, besides having known at the time of the exchange, that the apartment house would give no profits for payment of rents, and that plaintiff had no funds.

2. CONTRACTS ⟸265—PLACING IN STATU QUO ON RESCISSION.

Rescission of an executed contract for fraud will not be denied because plaintiff cannot place defendant in statu quo, if equity can still be done between the parties.

3. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY ⟸5—RESCISSION WITHOUT CONSENT OF THIRD PERSON.

Exchange of plaintiff's home for defendant's lease of an apartment house, accomplished by defendant having his lease canceled and another lease executed to plaintiff, can be rescinded without consent of the lessor; the lease containing no provision against assignment.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1071(5) — FINDINGS OUTSIDE ISSUES HARMLESS.

That the court made findings outside the issues is immaterial; the judgment being amply supported by the unobjectionable findings.

5. CONTRACTS ⟸94(1)—RESCISSION FOR SINGLE MATERIAL MISSTATEMENT.

A single material misstatement, knowingly made with intent to influence another to enter into a contract, being believed and relied on by the other, is as much ground for rescission of the contract as if it had been accompanied by a multitude of other false representations.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by James F. Spencer and others against Stephen F. Deems. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John E. Daly and James H. Daly, both of Long Beach, for appellant.

Percy Hight, of Long Beach, for respondents.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. The appeal is from the judgment. The record before us for review consists of the judgment roll alone. Plaintiffs had judgment for the cancellation of a deed and a promissory note, together with other equitable relief, upon the alleged fraud of the defendant.

The facts, as they appear in the pleadings and findings, may be stated to be substantially as follows: In November, 1914, James F. Spencer, and his wife, Minnie, were the owners of a residence lot and dwelling thereon situate in the city of Pomona, Cal., of the value of $4,300, which property was subject to a mortgage in the sum of $300. The defendant, at the same time, was in the possession of and conducting an apartment house at Long Beach, Cal., held by him as lessee under a lease running for the term of five years from March 22, 1913, at the rental of $400 per month. The furniture in the apartment house belonged to the defendant, but had been mortgaged to defendant's lessor to secure the payment of rent for the full term of defendant's lease.

Under the condition of ownership stated, an exchange of properties of the respective parties was made, whereby a deed to the Pomona property passed to the defendant, subject to the outstanding mortgage and in addition thereto all of the plaintiffs executed and delivered to defendant their promissory note in the sum of $800 secured to be paid by a second mortgage on the furniture in the apartment house. The defendant caused his landlord to cancel defendant's lease referred to and to execute a new lease of the apartment house for the unexpired term of the lease held by defendant, wherein the plaintiffs Spencer were named as lessees, and which provided for the payment of the same monthly rent that the defendant had been obligated to pay, and which rent was secured to be paid by a first mortgage on the furniture in the apartment house, which furniture had been transferred as a part of the same transaction, to the plaintiffs Spencer.

In the course of a few weeks it was discovered that the plaintiffs Spencer had been induced to part with their property by reason of the fraudulent representations, inducements, and concealments of the defendant and under such circumstances as would warrant the exercise of every power a court of equity possesses to restore to the parties against whom the wrong had been committed, the property that had been taken from them, and to place them as near as may be in statu quo.

The plaintiffs Spencer made timely and expeditious offer of rescission upon discovery of the fraud that had been perpetrated against them, accompanying such offer with a tender of everything of value they had received from defendant.

Among the representations made by the defendant which the court found to be fraudulent and untrue, and made for the purpose of deceiving the plaintiffs and of inducing them to make the exchange of properties and enter into the obligations referred to, was that the monthly income from the apartment house for more than one year immediately preceding the time of the exchange of properties had each month exceeded the sum of $400, and that the defendant had realized a clear profit averaging $185 per month for the preceding year. The defendant knew before the exchange was consummated that he was taking in exchange for his unprofitable apartment house business all the property the plaintiffs Spencer possessed, and that they would be compelled to meet the accruing rents solely from moneys to be derived from the apartment house business they were embarking upon.

At the time the offer of rescission was made, these plaintiffs were in arrears in rent in the sum of $507, which had accrued after the inception of their tenancy and unpaid through no fault of any of the plaintiffs, but solely by reason of the insufficiency of the income from the apartments to produce the necessary funds for the payment of the monthly rent.

[1] The defendant makes the point that the judgment of rescission is not supported by the findings, for the reason that there was not tendered to him this $507 deficit in rent. But such claim is without merit. Not only did the defendant fail to make any objection as to the form or the particulars of the tender, "but absolutely refused to acquiesce in the rescinding of said transaction." Section 1691, Civ. Code, subd. 2. Furthermore, defendant knew, at the time of the exchange of properties, that the apartment house not only would not realize any profit to the Spencers, but on the contrary would be in their hands, as it had been in his, a losing venture. Defendant knew, too, that the old people whom he had so grossly imposed upon would be compelled to pay the monthly rent out of the rentals they were to receive. Had the defendant remained in possession he would have suffered a loss in all probability at least equal to the deficit recited.

[2] While it is true that a court of equity will not, as a general rule, decree a rescission of an executed contract unless the party desirous of effecting such rescission is able to place the defendant in statu quo, yet this rule is not without exception. And where such decree is sought upon the ground of fraud, and, because of peculiar complications or circumstances it would be manifestly unjust and inequitable or impossible to apply such a rule, the court in the exercise of its broad powers of a court of equity, and not having any special solicitude for the party enmeshed in the web he has spun for others, may decree rescission, notwithstanding such party may not be placed exactly in statu quo. 9 C. J. 1210; Richards v. Farmers, etc., Bank, 7 Cal. App. 387, 94 Pac. 393. In the case of Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 389, 80 Pac. 234, 238, the court said:

"It is not an invariable rule that the rescission of a contract obtained by fraud will be denied merely upon the ground that the parties cannot be placed in statu quo. If equity can still be done between the parties, courts will grant relief to the defrauded party."

[3] There is no merit in the contention that the respondents could not rescind the contract of exchange of properties without the consent of the owner of the apartment house, which consent is not shown in the findings. There is no showing that the lease contained a covenant against assignment. The finding of the court upon this subject is: "And the plaintiff did then and there tender and offer to the defendant, the said lease, together with an assignment thereof, executed by the plaintiffs, James F. Spencer and Minnie Spencer." The assignment of the lease would operate to restore the defendant to the same position, with regard to the use of the premises, he had previously occupied.

[4] Assuming that it is true as claimed by appellant that the court went outside the issues in its findings relative to the execution of the lease referred to from the owner of the apartment house, yet such is of no grave moment as far as the integrity of the resultant judgment is concerned, for we find the judgment to be amply supported by other findings against which such criticism may not be made.

[5] As stated in Davis v. Butler, 154 Cal. 623, 626, 98 Pac. 1047, 1048:

"A single material misstatement, knowingly made with intent to influence another into entering into a contract, will, if believed and relied on by that other, afford as complete ground for rescission as if it had been accompanied by a multitude of other false representations."

The judgment is affirmed.

NANNIZZI et al. v. CAPRILE et al.

(Civ. 2886.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 10, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 8, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⟸30(6) — SUBSCRIPTION FOR CORPORATE STOCK PRIOR TO PERMIT TO INCORPORATE INVALID.

Under the Investment Companies Act prior to the permit of commissioner of corporations, no valid subscription for corporate stock can be made, so that, regardless of incorporators' attempt to subscribe for stock in excess of the original qualifying shares, there could be no subscription for corporate stock prior to the commissioner's permit.

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸30(6) — AGREEMENT BY PARTNERSHIPS TO INCORPORATE VALID PROMOTERS' AGREEMENT.

An agreement between various partnerships to merge their companies in a corporation, the members to receive corporate stock in proportion to their interests, was valid as a promoters' agreement, binding upon them, and good as an offer to the corporation, to become binding on the corporation upon its lawful acceptance of benefits.

3. CONTRACTS ⟸309(1)—CORPORATIONS ⟸30(6)—VALIDITY OF CONTRACT FOR DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIPS AND FOR FORMING CORPORATION.

An agreement of partners for dissolution, and for the transmutation and distribution of assets, in contemplation of formation of a corporation, was valid, notwithstanding the corporation commissioner might never issue the permit and corporation might never be formed; for a contract, valid in its inception, may become voidable or impossible of performance by a subsequent contingency, yet, if the contingency is one that may happen, the parties are bound until it can be determined that it cannot be enforced.

4. PARTNERSHIP ⟸311(3) — AGREEMENT FOR DISSOLUTION AND FORMING OF CORPORATION; DECREE ENFORCING CONTRACT.

Partners cannot have the benefit of agreement for dissolution and formation of a corporation and evade those contract provisions by which their respective rights in the partnership assets are determined.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1169(8)—REVERSAL WILL NOT BE DECREED BECAUSE CONTINGENCY MAY MAKE JUDGMENT UNENFORCEABLE.

Judgment holding valid a contract for dissolution of partnership and formation of a corporation and determining proportion of stock respective partners should receive, although informal and rendered before permit to form corporation had been granted by commissioner of corporations, will not be reversed because refusal of permit may render judgment unenforceable as to allotment of stock.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Suit by Dante Nannizzi and others against Natale Caprile and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

James M. Thomas, of San Francisco, for appellants.

I. F. Chapman, of San Francisco, for respondents.

BRITTAIN, J. In a suit for partnership accounting, dissolution, sale, and distribution of the assets, it was adjudged there had been full accounting and dissolution. The appellants are satisfied with that portion of the judgment. Upon findings, supported by evidence, that the plaintiff partners had agreed with the defendant partners that the partnership should be dissolved and its property merged with that of other partnerships engaged in the same line of business, in a consolidation under a corporation to be formed, and that the partners should receive respectively stock in the corporation at par, equivalent to their respective interests in the partnership, the members of each partnership as a group to receive such stock of equivalent value to the respective partnership contributions of property to the corporation assets, and the further finding that application had been made in good faith to the commissioner of corporations for permission to issue the stock in accordance with this agreement, though the permit had not been granted at the time of the judgment, the court determined that, if the permit should be granted, the appellants would be entitled to their respective portions of the corporation stock. This part of the judgment only is attacked by the plaintiffs on this appeal.

[1, 2] On behalf of the appellants it is argued that, under the Investment Companies Act (St. 1913, p. 715), prior to the permit from the commissioner of corporations no valid subscription for the corporate stock can be made. This is true. It follows that, regardless of any attempt on the part of the incorporators to subscribe for stock in excess of the original qualifying shares, there was no subscription for stock of the corporation. The agreement between the various partnerships was a valid one. It was a promoters' agreement, binding upon them and good as an offer to the corporation, to become binding on the corporation upon its lawful acceptance of its benefits. Scadden Flat G. M. Co. v. Scadden, 121 Cal. 33, 53 Pac. 440; Garretson v. Pacific, etc., Co., 146 Cal. 184, 79 Pac. 838.

[3] The agreement of the partners for dissolution and for the transmutation and distribution of its assets was also valid. The fact that the commissioner of corporations might never grant his permission to the issuance of the corporate stock had no more effect upon the validity of the partnership agreement for dissolution than would the subsequent failure of the other promoters to organize the corporation. A contract valid in its inception may become voidable or impossible of performance by the failure of a subsequent contingency; but, if the contingency is one which may happen, the parties are bound by their contract until it can be determined it cannot be enforced. There are many familiar applications of this rule, one of the most common being where parties contract for a sale of real estate, contingent upon an attorney's approval of title. Such a contract is enforceable by either party until it is shown that the attorney will not or cannot approve title. Neither party may evade the obligations of the contract merely by showing that the attorney may refuse to approve the title. No showing of impossibility is made in this case, nor is there any showing which would have justified the court in this suit in disregarding the agreement of the partners concerning what they should have in lieu of their respective partnership interests.

[4, 5] The portion of the judgment appealed from simply determines that the plaintiffs shall receive stock in the corporation if the commissioner of corporations issues his permit. This was exactly what the appellants agreed they should have. It is contended that the judgment is informal in that it fails to determine what the appellants shall have in the event the commissioner of corporations shall refuse to issue the permit. There is no question in regard to the validity of the organization of the corporation. It cannot be presumed that the incorporators have been guilty of an overvaluation of the partnership assets transferred to the corporation, or of a violation of the law in any other respect. If they have obeyed the law, they will be entitled to the permit from the commissioner of corporations, and in that event the appellants will receive under the judgment what they agreed with their partners they should receive. Under these circumstances, the judgment, while informal, may be sustained upon either of two theories: First, that in a suit to decree the dissolution of a partnership, in the absence of its inherent invalidity or facts which might enable one of the contracting partners to rescind it, the court cannot disregard the agreement for dissolution, but by its decree must enforce it; and, secondly, that in such a suit none of the partners can have the benefit of the agreement for dissolution and evade those of its provisions by which their respective rights in the partnership assets are determined. If this decree in a suit in equity shall become impossible of enforcement by reason of the refusal of the commissioner of corporations to permit the carrying into effect the original agreement of the parties, there is no reason why their respective rights as they then exist may not be determined; but, until it shall be made to appear that the appellants have been injured by the judgment from which the appeal is taken, it will not be reversed. On this appeal, since the judgment simply bound them to their prior agreement, in contemplation of law, they cannot be aggrieved by it.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by W. J. Simpson against George H. Malter. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Short & Sutherland, of Fresno, for appellant.

Lewis H. Smith and Iener W. Nielsen, both of Fresno, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to recover for services in securing a purchaser for certain wines owned by the defendant under an alleged contract with the defendant whereby he was to receive as his remuneration for such services any amount in excess of 30 cents per gallon for which he should sell said wine. With relation to the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, and its fulfillment, the court found: That the parties had entered into a contract the terms of which were as alleged by the plaintiff, and that thereafter, while said contract was in full force and effect, the plaintiff obtained a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to purchase 60,000 gallons of wine at a price of 35 cents per gallon and upon the terms contained in the contract between the plaintiff and defendant, and said plaintiff immediately notified said defendant thereof and of the name of said purchaser and brought said defendant and said purchaser together at the city of Fresno, and that the defendant thereupon agreed to make said sale and deliver said wine on said terms to said purchaser; that said purchaser agreed to accept said wine and to pay for the same in cash, but that said defendant, thereafter, and without any cause or reason, and without any fault on the part of the plaintiff, or upon the part of the purchaser, declined to consummate the sale and declined to make delivery.

[1] In accordance with the rule recognized by the appellant, we may not review the conflicting evidence on the question of the making of the contract, its terms, etc.; nor the finding that the defendant agreed with the purchaser for the sale of his wine in accordance with the terms of this contract made by said defendant with the plaintiff. For the same reason we may not review the evidence upon which is based the further finding of the court that the time which elapsed between the making of the agreement and the performance of the same by the plaintiff was not an unreasonable time. The last finding is based upon logical deductions from numerous matters which appear in evidence, such as the conduct of the parties during the interval, the apparent understanding of the parties as evidenced by the negotiations when the purchaser was produced, etc. After a reading of the evidence, we think this finding also may not be disturbed by us.

This leaves for our consideration the further objection made by the appellant that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover because Mr. Baker, purporting to act for the Jesse Moore Hunt Company, the purchaser, was without authority to consummate the sale in accordance with the terms of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the defendant could not have enforced said agreement against the said Jesse Moore Hunt Company, for whom Baker was acting if he had so desired, and therefore he was not liable to the plaintiff for commissions. This contention arises under the following facts in evidence: It is conceded that Mr. Baker was the general manager of the Jesse Moore Hunt Company. He testified that he had bought and sold large quantities of wine for said company while acting as its manager. Appellant relies upon an alleged limitation upon the said manager's general authority to contract, by reason of the adoption of a resolution by the board of directors of said company, which resolution was in effect at the time of the transactions out of which this action grew. This resolution appointed Mr. Baker "manager of the company, to have charge of the handling of the business under the direction of the president." Mr. Baker testified that the plaintiff Simpson was present at a conversation between Baker and the president of said company, at which time it was stated that Mr. Simpson had offered to sell to said company 60,000 gallons of wine at 35 cents per gallon, less 4 per cent. for cash, and that the president of said company had told Baker that it was all right and he might go ahead and make the purchase and might go to Fresno to complete the transaction. Baker testified that he went to Fresno and was met by the plaintiff, who told him at that time that he was uncertain about the allowance of 4 per cent. discount for cash; that Baker thereafter discussed the matter with the defendant, telling said defendant that the wine had been sold to him by Simpson at 35 cents per gallon, less 4 per cent., but that Malter, the defendant, refused to allow the discount. Baker then stated to Malter that, nevertheless, he would take the wine at 35 cents per gallon and would pay cash for it if desired. Appellant argues that, by virtue of the resolution of the board of directors above referred to, the president of the company had the authority to direct the business activities of the manager in all particulars; that the president's consent to the purchase was based upon his understanding of the contract as one to purchase at 35 cents per gallon, less 4 per cent.; that his consent was given on such terms alone; and that Baker had no broader authority. Appellant argues that, if the Jesse Moore Hunt Company had sought to repudiate the contract sought to be made by Baker, the defendant would have been unable to enforce the same, because Baker's authority was limited and was not sufficient to make the contract attempted to be made. And it is pointed out that such limitation upon Baker's authority was known to Simpson who was present during the conversation with the president, and Simpson acted as the agent of Malter, and his knowledge was the knowledge of his principal.

[2-4] If the manager's authority was so limited that it was necessary for him to have express authority from the president in each instance before making a purchase of wine, the question of how little or how much he might vary from his instructions without releasing his company would become pertinent. But we think no such question confronts us here, because there is an implied finding of the trial court that there was no such limitation upon the authority of the agent as the appellant maintains. The court has found that the said purchaser agreed to and with said defendant to accept the wine and make payment therefor to the defendant at 35 cents per gallon in cash. The purchaser who agreed to this was the company. It is not contended that Baker acted or purported to act in his individual capacity. To find that the purchaser agreed to accept the wine and to make payment therefor implies a valid and binding agreement. If it was a binding and valid agreement by the company to so purchase the wine, it could only be such by reason of the fact that the agent was authorized to contract for the company as he did contract. Whenever from the facts found by the trial court, other facts may be inferred which will support the judgment, such inference will be deemed to have been made by the trial court, and upon an appeal from that judgment an appellate court will not draw from those facts any inference of fact contrary to that which may have been drawn by the trial court for the purpose of rendering its judgment. Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 77, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257. Such inferential finding of the trial court that the agent's authority was sufficient to enter into a valid and binding contract on behalf of the company we believe is warranted by the evidence. As stated, the manager testified that he had previously bought and sold large quantities of wine for his company; such power would be within the usual powers of a manager of a company engaged in the business of the Jesse Moore Hunt Company. The general limitation in the resolution of the directors that the powers of the manager should be exercised "under the direction of the president" is not to be construed to mean that the sanction of the president to every detail of every transaction is a condition precedent to the authority of the manager to contract. Stevens v. Selma Fruit Co., Inc., 18 Cal. App. 242, 252, 123 Pac. 212; Medbury v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 564, 567; Cotton States Life Ins. Co. v. Mallard, 57 Ga. 65. Furthermore, it appears from the evidence that the president did authorize Mr. Baker to make this particular purchase, and there is nothing in the record to show that he restricted the price at which the purchase was to be made. The price appears from the evidence to have been a reasonable price and, indeed, an advantageous one to the company.

[5] Upon appeal, we cannot but indulge in every presumption with regard to the evidence which will support the findings of the trial court upon which the judgment is based. Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257; Pac. States Corp. v. Arnold, 23 Cal. App. 672, 139 Pac. 239.

In the present case that course leads us to affirm the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. P. Price, Judge.

Action by Elgin R. Shepard against Laura S. Hunt. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fred M. Arnoldy, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. F. Holland and Charles E. Dow, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff sued to recover on a promissory note executed by Laura S. Hunt, in the state of Minnesota, on June 3, 1913, for $2,583, payable to Sereen L. Webb, on or before one year after date, and which plaintiff claims was indorsed and delivered to him prior to maturity, in due course of trade, and for a valuable consideration.

The action was dismissed as to Sereen L. Webb. The judgment was against the plaintiff, from which he prosecutes this appeal.

Responsive to the issues raised by the answer of defendant Hunt, hereinafter referred to as the defendant, the court found, among other facts, that on or about March 21, 1914, Sereen L. Webb, the payee named in the note, indorsed and delivered said note to plaintiff, and that said plaintiff gave for said note the sum of $50 in money, and his own promissory note in the principal sum of $2,500, payable one year after date to Sereen L. Webb, without interest; that no part of the principal or interest of the note sued upon has been paid; that said note was given in payment of a certain written contract, presently to be referred to, entered into between defendant and Domestic Utilities Manufacturing Company, a corporation, of which Sereen L. Webb was an agent, which contract was of no value whatever; and that there was no consideration for said note. The court also found that the plaintiff did not purchase said note in ordinary course of business, nor in good faith; that on or about June 3, 1914, Sereen L. Webb waived presentment, demand, and notice of protest of said note, at which time plaintiff knew that said note had been made without consideration and that defendant, prior to the maturity of said note, notified plaintiff that said note was without consideration and void and that she would not pay the same; and that said plaintiff had at said time paid but $50 in money for said note, and nothing on his own promissory note payable to Sereen L. Webb.

The principal grounds urged for the reversal of the judgment, and the only ones meriting discussion, are these: That the evidence does not sustain the findings of the court (1) that there was no consideration for the note sued upon; and (2) that plaintiff did not purchase the note in the ordinary course of business and in good faith.

[1, 2] Directing our attention to the evidence adduced at the trial on the question of the alleged lack of consideration for the execution of the notes sued upon, we believe that there is sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the court on that subject. The execution of the note grew out of a transaction wherein Sereen L. Webb, as the agent of Domestic Utilities Company, for the consideration of $5,000, sold to defendant 1,667 clothes washers (subsequently delivered) together with certain so-called rights relating to prospective sales of additional washers and of the prospective sales also of other like contracts when and if willing purchasers might be found, and which sales of clothes washers and contracts would, if consummated, yield remunerative return in commissions and profits to the defendant.

At the time the contract was entered into,

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Sereen L. Webb delivered to the defendant a receipt in the words and figures following:

"Minneapolis, Minn., June 3, 1913.

"Received of Mrs. Laura S. Hunt five hundred dollars cash on account of contract of Domestic Utilities Company, same to be used on account of 1,667 washers, also note for $1,167 for same purpose, also note for $2,583, also note for seven hundred fifty ($750) dollars in all, making $5,000.00 for said contract.

"[Signed] Sereen L. Webb."

The defendant claimed below, and she now claims, that the note sued upon was intended as payment for a contract which proved to be valueless, for reasons existing at the time the agreement was entered into, and also because of conditions that arose after that time. It is contended in plaintiff's behalf that the defendant is precluded from making any inquiry as to what the note sued upon was in fact given for, because of a recital in the contract between the defendant and the Domestic Utilities Manufacturing Company as follows:

"Now, therefore, to whom it may concern, be it known that for and in consideration of five thousand dollars ($5,000) this day paid to the 'company,' the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the said 'company' has sold unto the 'agent' 1,667 vacuum clothes washers."

Perusal of the entire contract discloses that it was not intended that the $5,000 payment referred to should be limited to the purchase price of 1,667 vacuum clothes washers. On the contrary, it very plainly appears that defendant was purchasing certain presumed rights and privileges separate and distinct from and beyond the 1,667 washers, and which she was led to believe might prove to be very valuable. These rights, in part, consisted of the power conferred upon the defendant to reserve territory in which to exploit the wares of the company, and to sell such wares in unreserved territory; the authority to appoint subagents, the right to sell wholesale lots of washers under prescribed conditions; and also the right to sell washers in lots of 1,667, and rights and privileges identical in terms with those sold to the defendant.

Not only was it necessary for the trial court to look to the other provisions of the contract in order to ascertain the true intent of the parties as expressed in the terms of their contract, but it was proper to look beyond the instrument itself in order to determine the real consideration for the payment made by the defendant (section 1962, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc.; Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 379, 63 Pac. 692), even though a consideration different than that stated in the written agreement might thereby be discovered. And for the same reason it was proper to determine the consideration paid for the 1,667 washers, found by the court to be $1,667, and represented by $500 in cash and a note for $1,167. It follows, then, that the promissory note sued upon was given as part payment for a contract which the court found to be without value, and the evidence supports such finding.

There was testimony to the effect that it was impossible to effect sales of the washers under the terms prescribed in the agreement. Also, the company engaged in the manufacture of these goods and their sale under the unusual plan shown by the contract referred to, was compelled, for reasons not clearly appearing in the record, to cease to operate under its contract with the defendant, several months before the maturity of the note in suit. Thus the defendant was prevented from reaping any part of the golden harvest purporting to be provided for her in the "contract."

We pass now to the consideration of the question of whether the record discloses sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the court that the plaintiff did not purchase the note in suit in course of ordinary business or in good faith.

[3, 4] The circumstances surrounding the transfer of the promissory note from Sereen L. Webb to plaintiff, which took place in the state of Minnesota, are substantially as follows: A day or two before March 21, 1914, the plaintiff, while dining at the home of Mrs. Webb in Minneapolis, was requested by his hostess to purchase this note. At that time he had been acquainted with her for several years. They had formerly been coworkers in attempting the resuscitation of a certain mining company which had met with serious difficulties of a financial nature. The plaintiff at the time in March referred to above was conducting a photographic business in Minneapolis. He testified that he could not recall ever before purchasing a promissory note. At the time referred to he was already indebted to Mrs. Webb in the sum of $3,000 for borrowed money evidenced by his promissory note to her dated February 28, 1914. He knew that Mrs. Webb had been interested in the Domestic Utilities Manufacturing Company and had been selling its "contracts" during the summer of 1913. At the time of the indorsement and delivery of the note in suit, he was not acquainted with the defendant, but was informed that she was a resident of Los Angeles, California. He made no inquiries concerning defendant's financial standing, contenting himself upon that subject with Mrs. Webb's statement that the note sued upon was good and that she would become an indorser thereon (which in fact she did), so that the plaintiff would not take any risk whatever in the matter.

The plaintiff further testified that he had not the slightest information as to what the note was given for, and made no inquiries in that respect; that Mrs. Webb had stated to him that the reason she requested the plaintiff to purchase the note was that it had been made by a friend who would ask for an extension of time for payment of the note. Plaintiff knew at the time that Mrs Webb was not desirous of selling the note because of need of money. He testified that he had read law to some extent and knew at the time of transfer "that a negotiable instrument in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value could be enforced, even though in fact not founded upon a consideration, provided the purchaser did not know it."

It may be here added that, subsequent to the maturity of the note sued upon, the plaintiff was informed by Mrs. Webb that she had negotiated the note so as to get it into the hands of an innocent purchaser that a fancied defect in the note might thereby be corrected.

In consideration of the transfer of the note in suit to the plaintiff, he paid to Mrs. Webb $50 in cash, apparently belonging to his wife, but furnished to him for the occasion, and handed Mrs. Webb his own unsecured promissory note for $2,500 payable one year after date without interest.

About the 15th of May, 1914, the plaintiff wrote to defendant that he would expect payment of the $2,583 note when due, to which letter Mrs. Hunt replied in effect that she would not pay the note and that it grew out of a fraudulent transaction. On May 31, 1914, the plaintiff answered defendant's communication, including in his reply the following sentence:

"Am also surprised to learn that if you bought into that Domestic Utilities scheme and lost thereby that you should ever complain of any result therefrom for of all the wild-cat schemes I ever investigated that beats them all."

And also the following:

"You have no legal defense to your note, which is a simple promissory note, when the same passes into the hands of an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration."

About June 6, 1914, the plaintiff called upon Mrs. Webb, at which time he claims he learned for the first time the full details of the execution of the note sued upon. There was then exhibited to him a letter previously sent to Mrs. Webb by the defendant, dated March 15, 1914, wherein the defendant disclaimed responsibility under the note sued upon, basing her denial of liability upon grounds which went to the integrity of the note in its inception. Mrs. Webb continued to hold the $2,500 note given her by plaintiff and which was apparently paid on March 15, 1915, by transferring to her certain lots of land. The present action was begun in April, 1915, and at the trial plaintiff's action was dismissed as to Mrs. Webb.

We believe that the foregoing rather extended summarization of the evidence serves to show that the findings of the trial court, to the effect that the plaintiff did not purchase the note sued upon in good faith and in the ordinary course of business, finds ample support in the evidence. It is not for us to determine where the preponderance of the proof is; we need not look further into the record than to discover evidence of a substantial nature which, to a rational mind, may be deemed to support the findings in the behalf stated.

The trial court was the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses at the trial of the action. While the plaintiff disclaimed any knowledge impeaching the integrity of the note in suit at the time it was indorsed and delivered to him, and his testimony was corroborated by the indorser of the note, yet the trial court was under no legal compulsion to accept such testimony as true and thus to exclude all inferences logically to be drawn from other admitted or proven facts. The question of the good faith of the plaintiff and the nature of the transfer as to whether it was made in the usual course of business were questions entirely within the province of the court for determination. We believe we would not be justified in holding, as a matter of law, that the evidence is insufficient to support the particular findings referred to. The court was not bound, under the circumstances shown by the evidence, to accept as true the testimony of the plaintiff merely because it was direct and was not directly contradicted. The trial court was duty-bound to consider both the direct and indirect evidence bearing upon the nature of the transfer and what was in the plaintiff's mind at the time, and we are satisfied that it was not amiss in the discharge of that duty. For us to say that the transactions such as passed between Mrs. Webb and the plaintiff must be accepted as related by the parties principal, because not contradicted by direct evidence, would be to put a premium upon perjury and to take from our trial courts means for the discovery of truth, now regarded as trustworthy and essential.

[5] After the plaintiff had established a prima facie case, the burden was cast upon the defendant to show that the note in suit was not founded upon a sufficient consideration. Such proof having been adduced by the defendant, the burden of showing that he was an innocent holder passed to the plaintiff. The California cases bearing upon this particular subject hold that a party situated as was the plaintiff may show that he is an innocent holder by proof that he purchased the note before maturity for value and in the usual course of business, unless the evidence shows that the note was taken under circumstances creating the presumption that he knew or should have known the facts impeaching its validity. Blochman Commercial, etc., Bank v. Moretti, 177 Cal. 256, 170 Pac. 419.

In the case at bar the plaintiff claims that he met the requirements of the law by showing that he had purchased the note before maturity and in the usual course of business, paying an adequate consideration therefor. The issue as to whether he had purchased the note in good faith and in the usual course of business was decided against him, and it is our conclusion that such finding is supported by the evidence.

The claim is made that, because of the state of the pleadings, the court committed error in receiving in evidence the printed reports of certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the state of Minnesota, in which state it will be recalled that the note in suit and its transfer was made to plaintiff. In view of the fact that it is our belief that the judgment should be affirmed under the laws of either of the states referred to, this objection becomes of no importance.

The judgment is affirmed.

DREW v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR MENDOCINO COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 2047.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 18, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 15, 1919.)

1. PROHIBITION ⟸17—TO PREVENT PROCEEDING IN CONTEMPT; ON OBJECTIONS TO JURISDICTION NOT RAISED BELOW.

Where after execution against a corporation of which petitioner was president had been returned unsatisfied, petitioner failed in response to order to appear and testify concerning property of the corporation, and superior court on a sufficient affidavit made order to show cause, the appellate court will not grant writ to prevent superior court from proceeding with contempt proceeding on the ground that there is an error in plaintiff's name in the first-mentioned order, and that the original judgment is void for matters dehors the record; matters which were not, but which should have been, called to the attention of the superior court.

2. PROHIBITION ⟸10(1)—GOES ONLY TO JURISDICTION.

The writ of prohibition goes only to the jurisdiction of the lower court.

3. CONTEMPT ⟸34 — SUPERIOR COURT HAS GENERAL JURISDICTION.

The superior court has general jurisdiction to initiate and decide contempt matters.

4. CONTEMPT ⟸54(4)—SUFFICIENCY OF PRELIMINARY AFFIDAVIT.

Affidavit, asking for order requiring petitioner to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt in disobeying order to submit to examination and make discovery concerning property of defendant corporation against which execution had been returned unsatisfied, held sufficient to authorize order to show cause.

5. PROHIBITION ⟸17—FAILURE TO SEEK RELIEF IN COURT BELOW.

Where there has been no effort made to obtain relief in the court which it is sought to prohibit, the superior courts will refuse to exercise their jurisdiction by prohibition.

6. PROHIBITION ⟸17—FAILURE TO SEEK RELIEF IN COURT BELOW.

Unless the attention of the court whose proceedings are sought to be stayed has been called to the alleged excess of jurisdiction, prohibition will not issue.

7. PROHIBITION ⟸11—WILL NOT LIE TO CORRECT ERRORS AND IRREGULARITIES.

Prohibition will not lie to correct errors and irregularities occurring in the progress of the cause in the inferior court.

Application by F. C. Drew for a writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Mendocino and J. Q. White, judge thereof. Alternative writ discharged.

See, also, 182 Pac. 417.

Metson, Drew & Mackenzie, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Robert Duncan, of Ukiah, for respondents.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. Petition for a writ of prohibition, asking that the superior court of Mendocino county be prevented from hearing or deciding a proceeding instituted in said court against said petitioner for an alleged contempt of court.

The record herein shows that on the 28th day of October, 1918, in an action pending in said superior court, wherein Phil Lobree was plaintiff and L. E. White Company, a corporation, and Goodyear Redwood Company, a corporation, were defendants, the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendants for the sum of $7,150.00, interest and costs.

On the 4th day of August, 1919, Robert Duncan, attorney for the plaintiff in said action, made and filed and presented to the judge of said court his affidavit, wherein he stated, in substance the fact of the rendition of said judgment; the issuance of execution thereon, and its return wholly unsatisfied; that F. C. Drew was then and at all times since the beginning of said action had been the president and general manager of said L. E. White Company; that said company owned property and had it in its possession or under its control, which it unjustly refused to apply to the satisfaction of said judgment, and that said Drew, as president and general manager, had property of said corporation in his possession or under his control, which he unjustly refuses to apply to the satisfaction of said judgment; that the corporation had books of account in the possession or under the control of said F. C. Drew, showing properties belonging to said corporation, and particularly of the receipt of money from the sale of its properties to the Goodyear Redwood Company and the amounts and disbursements thereof—and prayed that a referee be appointed in San Francisco, and that an order be made, directing said L. E. White Lumber Company, by its president and its general manager and other officers, to appear before said referee at a time and place to be named, and answer concerning the property of said corporation, and produce its books showing the property and moneys belonging to it.

Upon the presentation of this affidavit said court made an order appointing Casper A. Ornbaum referee, and directed and ordered said L. E. White Lumber Company, by its president and general manager, F. C. Drew, and F. C. Drew, to appear before said Ornbaum at a place designated, on the 14th day of August, 1919, at 2 o'clock p. m., and submit to examination and make discovery under oath concerning the property of said corporation and to bring its books, etc.

The amdavit of Mr. Duncan above referred to was entitled, "Phil Lobree v. L. E. White Lumber Co. et al." The order of the court above referred to was entitled, "Paul Lobree v. L. E. White Lumber Co. et al." To said affidavit and order was attached a certificate of the county clerk of Mendocino county, stating: "I have compared the foregoing copy of an order and affidavit in case of Phil Lobree v. L. E. White Lumber Co. et al., and the indorsements thereon, with the original records of the same in my office, and that same are correct transcripts thereof and of the whole of said original records."

The affidavit, order and certificate, attached together, were duly served upon F. C. Drew, petitioner herein. On the 16th day of August, 1919, Robert Duncan made and filed affidavit in said court in which he set forth the facts stated in his affidavit of August 4th, and the fact of the making of the order by the court therein on that day of the service of said affidavit, order, and clerk's certificate upon said defendant and said F. C. Drew, and that on the day named in said order neither said defendant corporation nor F. C. Drew appeared before said referee either in person or by attorney.

Upon the filing of this affidavit said court made an order, in due form, directing said L. E. White Lumber Company and said F. C. Drew to appear before said court on August 25, 1919, at 10 o'clock a. m., and show cause, if any they have, why they and each of them should not be punished for contempt of court in disobeying said order of August 4, 1919, commanding them to appear before said referee. On the 23d day of August, 1919, said F. C. Drew applied to this court for a writ prohibiting said superior court from hearing or deciding said contempt matter.

[1] The petitioner claims that the superior court of Mendocino county was without jurisdiction to cite him to appear and show cause why he should not be punished for contempt in disobeying the order, directing him to appear and submit to an examination, and is without jurisdiction to hear and decide said alleged contempt matter, because: (1) The order made by the court for him to so appear and testify was entitled Paul Lobree instead of Phil Lobree, and there had been no judgment rendered in favor of Paul Lobree against the defendant; (2) because, as claimed, the judgment in the case of Paul Lobree against the L. E. White Lumber Company was void. It is claimed it was void because before the suit was begun the charter of the defendant corporation had been forfeited for nonpayment of its franchise tax.

[2-4] The writ of prohibition goes only to the jurisdiction of the court. The court has general jurisdiction to initiate and decide contempt matters. The affidavit filed, asking for the order to show cause, was sufficient in form and substance to justify the court in making the order. No objection is made to the sufficiency of the order, and it was duly served upon the petitioner. The judgment roll in the original action is before us, and an inspection of it shows a judgment valid on the face of the record.

It does not appear that the error in the name of the plaintiff in the order for examination has ever been called to the attention of the superior court of Mendocino county, nor does it appear that the claimed forfeiture of the franchise of the defendant corporation was ever referred to, either by pleading or evidence, in the original action, nor that it, at any time since, has been called to the attention of said court.

The petitioner's position, in fact, is that he has two good defenses to the order to show cause, one, the error in the name of the plaintiff in an order filed heretofore in the case, and the other that the original judgment is void for matters dehors the record.

It is the opinion of the court that the existence of these claimed defenses do not oust the superior court of jurisdiction to hear the contempt proceedings. If they are valid defenses (as to which we deem it unnecessary to express any opinion, and do not) it is to be assumed that the superior court will so hold. Under the facts appearing in this record it is held that these matters should be presented to the superior court for consideration and decision.

[5] "Where there has been no effort made to obtain relief in the court which it is sought to prohibit, the superior courts will refuse to exercise their jurisdiction by this extraordinary remedy." High on Extraordinary Legal Remedies, § 733.

[6] "It has been repeatedly held here, however, that prohibition (a writ in the nature of a prerogative writ) will not go from this court unless the attention of the court whose proceedings are sought to be stayed has been called to the alleged excess of jurisdiction." S. P. R. R., Co. v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. 475.

[7] "Nor will the court in which relief is sought consider any error or irregularities occurring in the progress of the cause in the inferior court, since the writ of prohibition is not an appropriate remedy for the correction of errors." High on Extraordinary Legal Remedies, § 767b.

The alternative writ of prohibition is discharged.

ISRAEL v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY, DEPARTMENT 4, et al. (Civ. 3087.)

1. PLEADING ⟸339—PERMITTING WITHDRAWAL OF ANSWER IN DISCRETION OF COURT.

The superior court in the exercise of its discretion and acting within its jurisdiction may permit an answer to be withdrawn and to grant defendant time, not exceeding 30 days in addition to that allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, within which to file an answer.

2. PARTIES ⟸58—JURISDICTION TO SUBSTITUTE PARTIES DEFENDANT AFTER WITHDRAWAL OF ANSWER.

Where court permitted defendant to withdraw answer and at the same time granted leave to file another within five days, the court within such time had jurisdiction to grant a motion of defendant taken pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 386, under which defendant deposited money in controversy in court and asked the substitution of other parties as defendants.

3. MANDAMUS ⟸3(12)—REFUSED ON EXISTENCE OF REMEDY BY CERTIORARI.

Assuming that superior court exceeded its jurisdiction in allowing defendant to withdraw his answer and to deposit money in controversy in court and substitute other parties as defendants, plaintiff's remedy was a proceeding by certiorari wherein the original status of both parties would have been restored, and not by mandamus to compel the court to render judgment against the original defendant as though he were in default.

4. MANDAMUS ⟸187(3)—FAILURE TO RENDER JUDGMENT AGAINST THIRD PERSON HARMLESS.

In mandamus proceedings to render a certain judgment in an action to recover a fund, wherein the court rendered judgment that the plaintiff take nothing, plaintiff cannot complain that the court should have determined the right of defendants to the fund; such question not being of any concern to plaintiff.

Application by F. Israel for writ of mandate to compel the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of San Diego, Department 4 thereof, and to C. N. Andrews, Judge, to render a judgment in favor of applicant. Alternative writ discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

E. J. Henning and W. H. Wylie, both of San Diego, for petitioner.

Eugene Daney and Heskett & Sample, all of San Diego, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an original application for writ of mandate to compel the superior court of San Diego county to render a judgment for $3,000 in favor of petitioner in a certain action wherein she was plaintiff and Solon Bryan was defendant.

The controversy grows out of the following facts: On the 11th day of February, 1918, petitioner deposited with Solon Bryan, who was a justice of the peace, the sum of $3,000 to secure the appearance of F. M. Couden at a preliminary hearing upon a criminal charge. As a result of the hearing, held on February 21, 1918, Couden was discharged from custody and his bail released. On the same day, and after dismissal of the criminal complaint filed against him and prior to the return of said bail money so deposited with said justice of the peace, there was served upon him, the said Solon Bryan, by the sheriff of the county of San Diego, a writ of execution issued out of the superior court upon a judgment theretofore rendered against F. M. Couden in a certain action wherein the First National Bank was plaintiff and the former was defendant. Thereupon Bryan, upon demand made by petitioner for the return of the $3,000 so deposited by her as bail for the appearance of said Couden, refused to pay the same to petitioner, who, on April 8, 1918, brought suit against Bryan to recover the money in question. Within due time Bryan answered the complaint; whereupon petitioner as plaintiff in said action made a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which was heard on May 20, 1918, and an order made denying the same. Thereupon Solon Bryan, as defendant in said action, applied to the court for permission to withdraw the answer so filed and file another answer to the complaint. This application was granted and Bryan allowed five days to file another answer. Within the five days allowed for filing such answer Bryan filed an affidavit and notice of motion, under section 386 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to substitute the sheriff of San Diego county and the First National Bank in his place and stead as defendants in said action, which motion was heard on May 24, 1918, and an order made granting the same, pursuant to which Bryan deposited in court the $3,000, which action was followed by an order releasing him from further liability, and at the same time the sheriff and First National Bank, as substituted defendants, filed their answer. No further proceedings of any kind or character were had in said matter until a year thereafter, to wit, on May 31, 1919, at which time the case was tried upon the complaint and the answer of the substituted defendants, when findings were made upon which judgment was rendered by the court that petitioner as plaintiff in said action take nothing and the defendants recover $——— costs. Thereafter, on June 11, 1919, pursuant to notice served, and in the absence of any order made setting aside or otherwise affecting the judgment so rendered, petitioner moved the court to enter judgment in said action for the plaintiff therein and against Solon Bryan, upon the ground that said Bryan, having by leave of court withdrawn the answer filed, was in default, and hence plaintiff was entitled to judgment. The motion was denied. The contention of petitioner is that the order granting Bryan five days from May 20, 1918, to file an answer, was void, as were likewise the orders made releasing him from further liability upon depositing the said $3,000 in court and substituting as defendants in said action the sheriff and First National Bank.

[1, 2] That the court, in permitting the defendant Bryan to withdraw his answer was acting within its jurisdiction, is not, and, in our opinion cannot be, questioned in this proceeding. Miles et al. v. Danforth, 37 Ill. 157; Rowan v. Kirkpatrick, 14 Ill. 1; Bash v. Evans, 40 Ind. 256. The order permitting the withdrawal of the answer and granting leave to file another was made at the same time; hence the answer on file protected defendant from default to a time when the order granting five days within which to file another answer became operative and in effect, prior to the expiration of which time the fund was deposited in court and the order made releasing Bryan from liability. In effect the situation was the same as though defendant, instead of filing the answer so withdrawn, had asked and obtained from the court an extension of time, not exceeding 30 days, within which to answer, as provided in section 1054, Code of Civil Procedure. Hence we are of the opinion that the court in the exercise of its discretion, and acting within its jurisdiction, had power to permit the answer to be withdrawn and to grant defendant time, not exceeding 30 days in addition to that allowed by the Code (section 1054, supra), within which to file an answer. This being true, it must follow that the proceedings had and taken pursuant to the provisions of section 386, Code of Civil Procedure, under which Bryan deposited the fund in controversy in court and the substitution of the parties defendant was made, were within the power of the court.

[3] Conceding, however, the court in making the orders complained of acted in excess of jurisdiction, its action should have been annulled in a proceeding by certiorari, wherein the original status of both parties would have been restored and their rights protected. Upon the facts presented, this status and protection cannot be secured by a writ of mandate. Indeed, its issuance in this proceeding would not only lead to confusion but work a gross injustice to one of the parties. In Board of Education v. Common Council, 128 Cal. 369, 60 Pac. 976, it is said:

"The writ of mandate will not issue where it will work injustice, or introduce confusion and disorder, or operate harshly, or where it will not promote substantial justice."

And in Neto v. Conselho Amor, etc., 18 Cal. App. 234, 122 Pac. 973. the court, in discussing the right to such writ, says:

"It is not issued on mere technical grounds. Its design is to do substantial justice and prevent substantial injustice."

In the case at bar it appears that after the expiration of more than a year from the making of the order releasing Bryan from liability and under and pursuant to which he parted with the fund in controversy, and without any action on the part of petitioner to set aside the order under which he acted, and after substitution of defendants, who filed an answer putting in issue the allegations of the complaint in said action, a trial thereof was had, in which trial the court found that plaintiff was not entitled to the fund, and rendered judgment based upon said findings that plaintiff take nothing by her action. In thus rendering judgment the court was acting within its jurisdiction; and, conceding that it may have committed error, the judgment stands as a final determination until set aside in some proper proceeding for its review. Under the circumstances shown, to issue a writ requiring the court to render judgment against Bryan would not only lead to confusion and disorder, but it would operate harshly in that it would work an injustice upon Bryan, who, as stated, has as required by the order of the court, parted with and surrendered the fund to another depositary. Had petitioner as plaintiff in said action, the trial of which she entered upon without protest or objection here reviewable, been successful therein, she would have accepted the result.

[4] In this application we are not concerned with the alleged errors of the court in the trial of the case. It may be, as claimed by petitioner, that the findings made by the court are not supported by the evidence, or that the court failed to make findings upon material issues. However this may be, it appears that the court rendered judgment that plaintiff take nothing, and, conceding that the court should have determined the right of defendants to said fund, such question is one for the concern of defendants, and not the plaintiff, who the court adjudged should take nothing in the action.

The alternative writ heretofore issued is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

MOULTON IRRIGATED LANDS CO. v. JONES et al. (Civ. 1853.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸242—AGREEMENT RESPECTING RIGHT OF WAY BETWEEN IRRIGATION COMPANY AND LANDOWNER.

An agreement between a landowner and the assignor of plaintiff irrigation company, whereby the landowner granted a right of way for a canal over his premises, to the irrigation company, held not to contemplate that the irrigation company should elevate waters so as to irrigate the high part of the landowner's property, and hence, in an action for compensation for water furnished, the landowner is not entitled to deduct the expense of pumping water to that part of his property which was above the level of the canal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by the Moulton Irrigated Lands Company against M. T. Jones and J. P. Boggs. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Brown & Albery, of Colusa, for appellants.
Thomas Rutledge, of Colusa, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover the sum of $1,472.50 for water furnished by plaintiff to defendants for irrigation, and plaintiff had judgment as prayed for, from which the defendants have appealed. The contract, which is the basis of the action, was executed on December 17, 1912, by defendant Jones and one Wm. K. Brown, the assignor of plaintiff. By the terms of said contract Jones granted to Brown a right of way through lands of the former in and along a certain slough, known as Drumhiller slough, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a canal for irrigation purposes and for storing and conveying water therein over and across said land belonging to Jones, which was specifically described in said contract. A right of way was also conveyed for two certain canals connecting with said slough. One of the considerations moving from Brown was the covenant binding him and his successors or assigns to construct and maintain across said Drumhiller slough upon the land of Jones, as he might thereafter designate, two bridges at least 18 feet wide, each capable of sustaining a burden of not less than five tons in weight, and also to construct and maintain on each side of said canals suitable means of crossing the same and of sufficient strength to safely carry a combined harvester and kindred machinery. It was further covenanted and agreed that Jones should have "a free water right for the water necessary for the irrigation of his lands (described in said contract) as long as said proposed irrigation system should be used in any part thereof for such purposes, such water right to be appurtenant to said land." It was further provided:

"For the water actually used by the party of the first part (Jones) for irrigation in and upon said lands aforesaid, he shall pay therefor at the same rate and be subject to the same rules, terms, and conditions as all other water users along said proposed system, but shall only be required to pay each year for such water for irrigation purposes as shall apply only to such of his lands as are actually irrigated."

Said contract contains certain other important provisions, but they need not be quoted, as the foregoing involves the only question at issue in the present case. Appellant admits that—

There is "virtually but one question in this case: Was the defendant Jones justified, as a matter of law, in incurring the expense for pumping water from the canal or slough and charging that expense as an offset to the water rates?"

In explanation of this it may be said that no controversy appears to have arisen between the parties until the year 1915. It is also admitted that during the years 1915 and 1916, covering the entire period in controversy, water was used from said slough to irrigate the lands of defendant Jones. It is further conceded that the rate for said irrigation was established at $5 per acre, and that, applying said rate to the number of acres irrigated by said water, the amount would be the sum claimed by plaintiff. It appears, however, that about 75 or 80 acres of Jones' land was at such a level that, in order to distribute the water over it, it was necessary to use pumps or other mechanical contrivance to raise the water above the level of said slough. It appears further that a demand was made by Jones upon plaintiff to so raise the water that it might by the force of gravity be distributed over said land. Plaintiff neglected and refused to comply with this demand, and thereupon Jones put in the necessary pumps for said purpose, and thereby incurred an expense of something over $1,000, and it is for this expense that he claims an offset against the claim of plaintiff. The question, therefore, involves the proper construction of said provision of the contract of December, 1912. It is to be observed that there is nothing in the express terms of the contract that required plaintiff to incur any additional expense besides the construction of said canal and bridges and crossings and the pumping of the water out of Sacramento river into said slough. There was no promise or agreement to distribute the water over the land of Jones or to raise it by any artificial means above the level of the water in said slough. The easy and natural construction of the language used leads us to the conclusion that for the right of way granted by Jones the water from the river would be pumped into said slough, and that he should have a right to divert what was necessary of said water for the irrigation of his land, paying therefor the amount that was charged to other parties using the same, and being subject to the same rules, terms, and conditions. The claim of appellant, however is based upon the fact that in 1915 and 1916 respondent introduced water wheels for the purpose of irrigating some high land belonging to itself and to some others, which it had sold to said parties under special agreement to distribute the water over said lands. We are satisfied, however, that the contract made by the parties did not contemplate that plaintiff's assignor or his successors in interest should be bound to incur this additional expense for the purpose of irrigating the lands of Jones. The expression, "rules, terms and conditions," was doubtless intended to include the rate, and the rules and regulations which might thereafter be adopted for the use of water, such as the hours for its distribution, or the order or proportion in which various property owners should use it at certain seasons of the year, or the distribution of it according to the quantity of water that might be available. The very expression used, "subject to," would indicate a burden to be imposed upon appellant rather than an additional privilege to be enjoyed by him. The contention of appellant really amounts to the claim that respondent is bound to distribute the water over his land. With equal propriety he might claim that respondent is under obligation to grade his land, to construct checks, and to do whatever else is necessary to properly and evenly distribute the water over it. The unreasonableness of appellant's claim is aptly illustrated in the instance before us. The expense of raising the water by pumping for the 75 or 80 acres in controversy was, as we have seen, something over $1,000. The charge for water used in said irrigation at $5 per acre could not be over $400; therefore, according to the theory of appellant, respondent must pay him $600 for the privilege of furnishing him water for the purpose of irrigating his land. Such construction, we think, was never contemplated by the parties, and is not within the fair import of the terms used in the contract. We are satisfied that the judgment of the lower court was eminently sound. It is therefore affirmed.

A. L. Abrahams and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Wm. T. Blakely, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action to recover upon a promissory note executed by the defendants and passing by mesne transfers to the plaintiff. Several amendments were made to the original complaint, which are not material to the points presented upon this appeal. The defendants' answer pleaded as a special defense that, while one D. B. Brunson was the owner and holder of the note sued upon, the defendant Bryson had made, executed, and delivered to said Brunson a grant deed to certain real estate, which was intended to be and was received by said Brunson as security for the payment of said note.

Upon the trial of the cause the defendants offered and there was received in evidence said alleged deed, and also an agreement between said Bryson and Brunson, of even date with said deed, wherein it was recited that Bryson was indebted to Brunson in the amount evidenced by said promissory note, and that said note was past due and unpaid, and that said Bryson desired Brunson to refrain from taking legal proceedings for the collection of the amount due upon said note, and that therefore and as a consideration therefor the said Bryson was causing said deed to be executed to said Brunson upon the understanding and agreement that, if his said indebtedness to said Brunson was not paid within five days thereafter, the said Brunson was authorized to sell the property covered by said deed at either public or private sale without notice, and credit the amount received therefor upon said indebtedness. No other explanation appears to have been offered at the trial as to the understanding of the parties to said deed and agreement beyond that contained in the latter instrument itself, and the trial court, in deciding the case, found that the consideration for said deed was that the grantee therein would refrain from suing upon said note for the period of five days from the date of said conveyance, and further found that the said deed was not given as, nor intended to be, a mortgage or other security for the payment of said note. The evidence in the case further showed, and the court found, that the lands described in the said deed had been sold pursuant to the terms of said agreement, and the amount received therefor credited upon said note. The judgment of the court was in the plaintiff's favor for the balance found to be due upon the note.

The sole contention made by the appellants upon this appeal is that the conveyance above referred to was given as security for the payment of the note in question, and was in effect a mortgage, and hence that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain this action, but should have brought an action under the terms of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the foreclosure of said mortgage.

There is not the slightest merit in this contention, since there was no evidence before the trial court showing any intent upon the part of those giving and receiving said deed that it should have any such effect; but, on the other hand, the written agreement between said parties expresses its purpose, and negatives such an intent.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SHWARTZ. (Cr. 677.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES ⊂=1—LARCENY ⊂=1—LARCENY AND FALSE PRETENSE DISTINGUISHED.

The distinction between "larceny" and "false pretenses" is that in larceny the owner of a thing has no intention to part with his property to the person taking it, although he may intend to part with possession, while in false pretenses the owner does intend to part with the property but it is obtained from him by fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, False Pretense; Larceny.]

2. LARCENY ⊂=14(1)—LARCENY BY TRICK OR DEVICE.

Obtaining from complainants money wherewith to bribe a public official to issue a license for bath and massage parlors under a pretense that defendant could obtain such license, with intent to fraudulently appropriate the money title to which remained in complainants, held to constitute larceny.

3. LARCENY ⊂=70(2)—INSTRUCTION AS TO DISTINCTION BETWEEN LARCENY AND FALSE PRETENSE.

In a prosecution for larceny committed by tricking complaining witness into giving defendant money wherewith to obtain a municipal license, other counts charging defendant with obtaining money by false representations having been dismissed, an instruction pointing out the distinction between larceny and obtaining money by false pretenses held not erroneous as constituting an invitation to the jurors to convict defendant of the crime of larceny if they believe him guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses.

4. LARCENY ⊂=55—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for larceny committed by tricking complaining witness into giving defendant money wherewith to obtain a license to operate a bath and massage parlor, evidence held insufficient to sustain a verdict of conviction.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=878(1), 984—SEPARATE JUDGMENT AND VERDICT ON SEPARATE COUNTS.

Where a defendant is charged with larceny in several counts, it is proper procedure and a sufficient compliance with Pen. Code, § 954, as amended by St. 1915, p. 744, providing that every offense upon which a defendant is convicted must be stated in the verdict, to return a separate verdict on each of the counts and to enter judgment on each of them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Edward Shwartz was convicted of grand larceny, a new trial was denied, and he appeals. Affirmed except as to one count.

Warren L. Williams, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn and Arthur Keetch, Deputy Attys. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant, who was convicted of the crime of grand larceny, appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The grand jury of Los Angeles county returned an indictment against defendant containing twenty-eight counts. In fourteen counts defendant is charged with the crime of grand larceny; in the remaining counts he is charged with the crime of obtaining money by false representations and pretenses. Before the submission of the cause to the jury, the court, for insufficiency of the evidence, withdrew from the jury's consideration all the counts wherein defendant is charged with the crime of obtaining money by false representations and pretenses, and, for the same reason, withdrew from the jury's consideration four of the counts wherein larceny is charged. Defendant was convicted of grand larceny, as charged in each of the remaining ten counts.

In each of the counts upon which defendant was convicted it is charged that he willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously took, stole, and carried away a certain sum of money; the amount being specifically stated in each instance. There was a number of complaining witnesses. The theory of the prosecution was that each complaining witness was engaged in the business of conducting a bath and massage parlor in the city of Los Angeles, for the conduct of which a license from the city's police commission is required by law (a license that must be renewed every six months); that prior to obtaining each license or its renewal, defendant visited each complaining witness and falsely represented to her that he had influence with the police commission, and, for a certain designated sum of money, he could and would obtain the desired license or its renewal; and that, in each instance, the complaining witness, believing such false representation, delivered the stipulated sum of money to defendant, who thereupon unlawfully and feloniously converted it to his own use. In short, the theory of the prosecution was that defendant was guilty of grand larceny in that he obtained possession of the sums of money by fraud and trickery.

[1] It is claimed by appellant that, if the evidence shows him to be guilty of any crime, it is that of obtaining money by false pretenses, and not grand larceny—the crime of which he was convicted. In support of this claim it is contended that the evidence shows indubitably that each of the complaining witnesses intended to part with the title to her money as well as its possession. The distinction between larceny and false pretenses is substantially this: In larceny the owner of a thing has no intention to part with his property therein to the person taking it, although he may intend to part with possession. In false pretenses the owner does intend to part with his property in the money or chattel, but it is obtained from him by fraud. People v. Delbos, 146 Cal. 734, 81 Pac. 131. There would be merit in appellant's contention if, when the complaining witnesses delivered the several sums to him, they had intended that the moneys should then and there become his property. So far from such being the case, it appears from the evidence that each complaining witness, at the time when she delivered her money to appellant, intended that it should be received by him for the purpose of carrying it and paying it to some person, unknown to the witness, whom, however, she supposed to be an actually existing person, but who, as a matter of fact, was a spurious and mythical individual, invented by appellant for the fraudulent purpose of tricking the witness into parting with the possession of her money. Thus, in support of the first count, Marie Savage—from whom appellant was charged in count 1 with taking, stealing and carrying away $130—testified as follows:

"I told him I would like to get a place, and he asked me if I had any money, and I told him yes, I had, and he asked me how much, and I told him I thought I had enough; that I understood it would be $100 to get the license; and I gave him $100 to get me a license. * * * He told me that he could fix it all right. * * * He told me I was to give him $100 and after I got the license I was to give him $25. * * * He told me he could not get it unless I did give him the money. Q. Well, was it to fix somebody? A. Understood to be. * * * Q. Did he say at any time that he would use that money for the police commission to get you a permit? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. That money, as far as you were concerned, was for the intention or purpose of corruptly bribing a public official, was it? A. Well, I suppose so. * * * Q. You understood this money, did you not, was to be given to some public official? A. Yes, but I didn't know who."

[2] Had the money been used by defendant, as Marie Savage supposed it would, when she delivered it to him for the purpose of being paid to an unidentified but supposedly existing corrupt public official, it would have remained her property until its final delivery to that person. She did not intend to part with the title to the money until it should be delivered to the public officer whom she supposed defendant had or would corruptly influence to issue or procure the issuance of the license. Defendant, as the complaining witness understood the transaction, was her agent to carry her money to the supposedly perfidious official. The title thus remaining in Marie Savage, it was subject to larceny as her property, and the fraudulent appropriation of it by the defendant to his own use, he having had the intention from the beginning to obtain possession of it for that purpose, constituted, in law, the crime of larceny. People v. Delbos, supra.

With one exception, presently to be noticed, what has just been said with respect to count 1 applies with equal force to each of the other counts upon which defendant was convicted. The evidence, in every instance where money was paid to defendant, justified the inference that, with the exception of certain smaller sums agreed to be paid to him as a reward for his nefarious services in his assumed character as a corrupter of men, defendant received the sums delivered to him for the purpose of carrying and delivering them to some supposedly corrupt public official, who, as the evidence shows, did not exist.

[3] It is further contended by appellant that the court erred in that it gave an instruction which, according to appellant, misled the jury to his prejudice. It seems that, notwithstanding it had dismissed every count that charged defendant with obtaining money by fraudulent representations and pretenses, the court, nevertheless, gave an instruction wherein it pointed out the distinction between larceny and the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. Appellant, conceding that the instruction itself embodies a correct statement of the law, argues that it prejudiced his case in that it was an invitation to the jurors to convict him of the crime of larceny if they believed him guilty of obtaining the moneys by false pretenses. We fail to see any force in the objection. Where, as here, possession of money is obtained by fraud, trick, or device, the question whether the crime, if any there be, was larceny or false pretenses, often depends upon the nice analysis of facts and legal principles. For this reason it is allowable, in such a case, to give an instruction pointing out the distinction between these two classes of crime, in order that, if the jurors believe the money was obtained by fraud or trickery, they may acquit the defendant of the charge of larceny if they also believe that the complaining witness intended parting with the title to defendant. It was proper therefore for the court to explain to the jury what constitutes larceny by trick or device, and the difference between such larceny and the crime of obtaining money by false and fraudulent pretenses. It is, indeed, the duty of the court "in charging the jury," to state therein "all matters of law necessary for their information." Section 1127, Pen. Code.

[4] The thirteenth count—one of the counts upon which appellant was convicted—charges that defendant, on or about November 1, 1917, feloniously took, stole, and carried away $150, the personal property of one Lyllian Hoffman. It is contended, and, as we think, correctly, that the verdict of conviction on this count is contrary to the evidence. The thirteenth count was based upon an alleged payment of $150 to defendant by Lyllian Hoffman to secure the renewal of her license on November 1, 1917. On direct examination, when asked if she had paid defendant any money to get this renewal, the Hoffman woman replied: "If I did I gave him $150 when I got it [the renewal license] for myself." On cross-examination, in reply to a question asking her if she gave defendant any money for the renewal, she said: "I do not know whether it was in November then or—no; I did not pay for that; no, sir." This evidence directly negatives any claim that defendant ever received any part of the $150 which, in the thirteenth count, he is charged with having stolen. Our attention has not been called to any other evidence tending to show that defendant was ever paid any money to procure this particular renewal of Lyllian Hoffman's license, and our own independent search of the record has failed to disclose any evidence to support defendant's conviction upon this count of the indictment.

[5] The jury brought in a separate verdict on each of the ten counts upon which defendant was convicted. This was doubtless a sufficient compliance with section 954 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 744), whereby it is provided that "each offense upon which the defendant is convicted must be stated in the verdict." Upon each of the ten verdicts of conviction the court, at the time appointed for sentence, pronounced, and the clerk entered, a separate judgment; each judgment being in the form of an indeterminate sentence as provided by the indeterminate sentence law. Section 1168, Pen. Code, as added March 18, 1917 (St. 1917, p. 665). Appellant makes no objection to the form of the judgment, nor to the fact that, in form, there was a separate judgment upon each of the ten verdicts of conviction; and, under the circumstances, we see no impropriety in the procedure thus adopted by the trial court. As we have said, appellant makes no point respecting the form of the judgment, or that, in form, it appears to consist of ten separate judgments, each based upon a separate verdict of conviction, and we advert to the matter solely because of the form that our judgment must take, owing to the situation presented to us by the record here.

A careful examination of the entire record convinces us that, with the single exception that the evidence fails to support the verdict of conviction of the crime charged against him in the thirteenth count, defendant had a fair and impartial trial, free from any prejudicial error.

The judgment wherein it is recited that defendant was found guilty of the crime of grand larceny as charged in count 13 of the indictment and adjudging that he be punished for the crime so charged in said count by imprisonment for an indeterminate period, and likewise so much of the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial as denies him a new trial of the issues presented by the thirteenth count, are reversed. In all other respects the judgment or judgments and the order or orders appealed from are affirmed.

YOSHIZUMI v. PLATT PRODUCE CO.

(Civ. 2020.)

1. CUSTOMS AND USAGES ⟸15(1, 2)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE OF CUSTOM IN CONTRACT FOR DELIVERY OF POTATOES "F. O. B. BOAT."

In an action for breach of contract to buy potatoes to be delivered f. o. b. boat at a certain camp, evidence showing that it was customary for the purchaser of potatoes along a certain river to provide boats for the transportation of potatoes bought, and that delivery was ordinarily made by bringing the potatoes to the banks of the river, held admissible to show on whom the burden of providing boats was imposed, and to show that "f. o. b. boat" meant on the wharf ready for the boat.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series f. o. b.]

2. EVIDENCE ⟸99—RELEVANCY.

In an action for damages for breach of contract to purchase potatoes to be delivered f. o. b. boat at a certain camp, where plaintiff testified that the captain of the boat refused to accept the shipment, orders from his employer to the captain were incompetent to prove what the captain said or did at the landing.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Action by H. Yoshizumi against the Platt Produce Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Snyder & Snyder, of San Andreas, for appellant.

Shelton & Levy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge, pro tem. The complaint alleges that on August 11, 1917, plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract in writing, whereby plaintiff agreed to sell and defendant agreed to buy 540 sacks of potatoes, at the agreed price of $3 per sack, of 116 pounds each, and that said product should be delivered, starting at the last of the ensuing week, f. o. b. boat, at McDowell Camp, No. 23½, San Joaquin county.

It was further agreed that delivery of said product on board of boat would constitute full and complete acceptance thereof; that plaintiff duly performed all the conditions of said contract and started to deliver said product on the last of the ensuing week, and on August 27, 1917, 540 sacks of said product were on the river bank at said camp, ready for inspection and transportation by the defendant by means of water craft; that it is the definite, well-known, and uniform custom and usage of the purchasers of potatoes in the vicinity of Stockton and on points located on the San Joaquin river and its tributaries to inspect the product while on the bank, and to send water craft to such point to take delivery thereof; that plaintiff notified defendant on August 27, 1917, that said product was on the bank, and defendant thereupon, and again on August 31, 1917, assured plaintiff it would send a barge to obtain delivery thereof; that defendant failed to do so prior to September 3, 1917, and on that day plaintiff demanded that defendant take delivery of said produce, and notified defendant that in default thereof plaintiff would sell the same to defendant's account to the best advantage; that on September 3, 1917, a barge belonging to one R. H. Vehmeyer called at said camp, and the agent thereof took possession of said product, loaded it on said barge, and transported it to a warehouse at Stockton; that said Vehmeyer thereupon notified defendant thereof, and defendant instructed him not to enter said product in said warehouse in its name; that thereupon plaintiff sold said product for $1.90 per sack, or for the sum of $1,026, to his damage in the sum of $594, for which amount he prayed judgment.

The court found that plaintiff had performed all of the conditions of said contract on his part to be performed, and started to deliver said product at the last of the ensuing week, as therein provided, and on August 22, 1917, said 540 sacks of potatoes were on the river bank at said camp, ready for transportation by the defendant.

The court also found that—

"It is the definite, well-known, and uniform custom and usage of the purchasers of potatoes in the vicinity of Stockton and on points on the San Joaquin river and its tributaries to send water craft to points on said river bank to take delivery of such product," and, "in previous transactions with plaintiff, defendant had sent such means of transportation, and in respect of the transaction here in controversy made an effort to procure the same."

Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff for the amount stated in the prayer of the complaint. The defendant appeals.

[1] Over the objection of the defendant evidence was introduced to support the allegations as to the custom and usage in the matter of getting boats to move produce, and it is appellant's contention that such evidence was inadmissible and that it tended to vary the terms of a written contract, one in no wise uncertain. The decisions seem to be quite uniform to the effect that proof of custom and usage is admissible to determine upon whom, in a case like this, the burden was imposed of providing a boat upon which the produce could be loaded, and admissible to prove that f. o. b. means on the wharf, ready for the boat. It is to be observed that the contract is silent concerning who was to provide the boat. In this particular it is uncertain and indefinite. In Meyer v. Sullivan, 181 Pac. 847, it is said:

"In order to determine whether or not delivery was to be made on the deck of the Kosmos steamer, as contended for by defendants, or merely on the Arlington dock, in Seattle, as claimed by plaintiffs, the trial court admitted evidence of the nature of the transaction, and the usages and custom of the trade in such matters. Appellants vigorously attacked the findings and conclusions of the court, and particularly its action in admitting testimony in proof of the custom of the trade.

"We are satisfied of the correctness of the trial court's findings in these matters. The fact that the parties to this action have come to such a vigorous disagreement over the meaning of the terms of the contracts is some indication that the court might be compelled to look to other sources of information than the contracts themselves in order to arrive at a proper interpretation of the disputed point. That the evidence of usage and custom was properly considered by the trial court in determining the place of delivery of the wheat contemplated by the parties under the f. o. b. clauses of the contracts is borne out by the authorities. Cowas-Jee v. Thompson, 5 Moore P. C. 165; 13 Eng. Reps. 454; Stock v. Inglis, 5 Asp. M. C. 294; George v. Glass, 14 U. Can. Q. B. 514; Marshall v. Jamieson, 42 U. Can. Q. B. 115.

"The admitted evidence fully supports the court's finding that it was and is a general custom, among buyers, sellers, and shippers of wheat in the city of Seattle, and in the city of San Francisco, and generally, in Pacific Coast ports, 'under contracts for the sale of wheat f. o. b. steamer, or f. o. b. designated steamer, for the seller to deliver and for the buyer to receive and accept the wheat upon the dock alongside of ship's tackle.' " 181 Pac. 849.

In Consolidated Coal Co. v. Schneider, 163 Ill. 393, 397, 45 N. E. 126, 128, the court said:

"The fact that appellees were required by the contract to deliver the coal free on board of the cars at the mine can have no bearing on the question in regard to whose duty it was to furnish cars. The furnishing cars at the mine, to be filled with coal, was an independent matter, in no manner connected with the duty of filling the cars. When the cars were furnished, then it devolved on appellees to fill them free of any expense to appellant; but, until the cars were furnished, they were required to do nothing, except to have the coal ready. It being the duty of appellant to furnish the cars, under the contract, its failure to discharge this duty was a clear breach of the contract, for which appellees, who were ready and willing to furnish the coal, were entitled to recover."

See, also, Evanston, etc., Co. v. Castner (C. C.) 133 Fed. 409.

[2] There was no error in admitting this testimony.

The plaintiff testified that barge No. 11 was at Camp McDowell after the potatoes had been placed on the landing; that he asked the captain to take them on the barge, and he refused, saying he had no orders to do so. The captain, in rebuttal, testified he did not remember whether he made the statement or not. He was then asked if he did not have orders on each trip to bring in all potatoes for the Platt Produce Company that were ready to be loaded. An objection to this and similar questions was sustained, and the ruling is assigned as error. When the witness Lenning was testifying, the defendant, as part of the examination, offered in evidence the order made by the transportation company and given by it to Mr. Lenning, the captain of the barge, directing him where to go on the trip and what products to load. An objection to the evidence was sustained, the court remarking that the witness could use the order that he took with him to refresh his memory. This ruling of the court is assigned as error. The witness, following the remark of the court, stated: "Here is my logbook; just exactly what I did at the landing." The defendant, instead of acting upon the suggestion of the court that the witness might use the order he had with him to refresh his memory, and instead of taking advantage of the statement of the witness that his logbook showed exactly what he did, and asking him what he did at the landing, reverted to his original question of what his orders were. The court correctly ruled that his orders from a third party were not competent to prove either what he said or did at the landing. For the purpose for which the orders were offered they were neither relevant nor competent. People v. Mitchell, 94 Cal. 550, 29 Pac. 1106; Butler v. Estrella Raisin Co., 124 Cal. 239, 56 Pac. 1040.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

AMBROSE v. HAMMOND LUMBER CO.

(Civ. 2990.)

1. SALES ⟸413—NECESSITY OF PLEADING FRAUD IN NOTE AS DEFENSE.

In an action against a lumber company for its refusal to deliver lumber to which plaintiff claimed to be entitled by virtue of an assignment of a credit for lumber given to plaintiff's assignor, who had indorsed over to the lumber company a note received by the assignor from a third person, the defense of fraud in the inception of note, etc., is not available where not pleaded.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸171—INDORSEMENT WITHOUT RECOURSE HELD NOT TO AFFECT NEGOTIABILITY.

That a note negotiable in form is indorsed without recourse does not destroy its negotiability.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸170—NEGOTIABILITY NOT DESTROYED BY GUARANTY OF PAYMENT.

The negotiability of a note is not impaired because the payee and indorser on transferring the same guarantees payment.

4. ASSIGNMENTS ⟸103 — ASSIGNMENT OF AGREEMENT TO DELIVER LUMBER; ESTOPPEL OF PARTY FURNISHING LUMBER.

Where a corporation induced a third person to execute a note to plaintiff's assignor, the corporation giving the maker its own notes and plaintiff's assignor indorsed over the note to the defendant lumber company in consideration of its agreement to furnish him with lumber, held, that the contracts were supported by sufficient consideration, and, where the credit in favor of plaintiff's assignor was assigned to plaintiff, the lumber company could not justify its refusal to furnish plaintiff with the lumber on the ground that the consideration for the original note which had been assigned to the lumber company remained executory.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by W. V. Ambrose against the Hammond Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Horton and Gurney E. Newlin, both of Los Angeles (A. W. Ashburn, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Scarborough & Bowen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The action was brought to recover damages because of the refusal of the defendant to furnish to plaintiff a quantity of lumber which plaintiff claims he was entitled to receive.

The controversy between plaintiff and defendant is the outgrowth of the execution and delivery of a promissory note of one Henry E. Bothin to Southern California Utilities Company, for $5,000, dated December 3, 1913, payable one year after date. Simultaneously with the delivery of this note there was executed in favor of and delivered to Mr. Bothin, five $1,000 notes of said company. Pursuant to the resolution of Southern California Utilities Company, the Bothin note was indorsed without recourse and placed in the hands of one Franklin Helm, the promoter of the Southern Utilities Development Company, for negotiation. It was the understanding of Mr. Bothin at the time he executed this note that it would be negotiated in order to raise funds to be disbursed in the development of an irrigation project, which, if consummated, would result in his own financial gain. Helm employed one Vigus, a broker, to sell the note, and a sale thereof was made to Hammond Lumber Company, a corporation, the defendant herein, by the terms of which, as found by the court, it was agreed by the defendant to pay to said Helm the sum of $4,500, which was to be credited upon defendant's books in the name of Franklin Helm, and that the same would be paid by the defendant in lumber at market prices whenever demanded by Helm. Such credit was accordingly entered upon the books of the defendant in favor of said Helm. For his services as broker, Vigus received a like credit for $500. Previous to the delivery of the Bothin note to the defendant, and in addition to the indorsement already stated, the following was written upon it:

"I hereby guarantee payment of this note, waiving protest, notice of nonpayment and demand. Franklin Helm."

The manager of the defendant testified that but for this guaranty of the payment of the note by Helm the defendant would not have purchased the note.

During the month of December, 1913, Helm applied to plaintiff for a loan of $3,250, offering as security the said "credit memorandum" for $4,500, payable in lumber, standing on the books of defendant. Before making the loan to Helm, the plaintiff, with Helm and the broker, Vigus, went to the office of the defendant and, as Ambrose testified, "asked the bookkeeper if they owed Franklin Helm $4,500 which was to be paid in lumber, and he turned to his ledger sheet, and said 'Yes, he has a credit here of $4,500 on the book.' Mr. Helm says, 'Transfer this to Mr. Ambrose name,' which was done in the presence of Mr. Helm, Mr. Vigus, and myself. I saw that transfer made to my name on the books of the Hammond Lumber Company in my presence."

Following the transaction at the office of defendant, the plaintiff loaned Helm the sum of $3,250, taking the note of Helm payable in three months. Upon nonpayment of Helm's note at maturity, Ambrose and Helm made a supplemental oral agreement, the effect of which was that the credit standing upon the books of defendant was to be considered the property of plaintiff without condition and Helm's indebtedness to Ambrose to be deemed paid.

Deliveries of lumber aggregating in amount and value $1,004.95 were made to plaintiff as requested, until August 10, 1914, when defendant refused to deliver any more lumber on the credit referred to, basing its refusal so to do in effect upon the ground that the Bothin note had been issued without consideration.

On December 16, 1914, Mr. Bothin entered into an agreement with the defendant indemnifying it against any loss that might be sustained by it, because of nondelivery of any additional lumber under the aforesaid credit standing on its books, and the defendant, in consideration of such agreement to save it harmless, agreed to furnish no additional lumber upon said credit.

The present action was instituted on June 12, 1915, to recover as damages the balance claimed to be unpaid upon the credit referred to, with interest.

[1] It is the contention of the defendant:

"That plaintiff was the owner of a nonnegotiable instrument subject to all equities and defenses existing against his assignor, Helm; that the Bothin note was valueless, and subject to many infirmities in the hands of the defendant due to the fact that defendant gave only an executory consideration for the same. * * *"

It is also claimed in the briefs of the appellant that the Bothin note is valueless and subject to infirmities in the hands of defendant because of fraud alleged to have been committed by Helm at the inception of the note, and stated to consist of fraudulent representations going to the intended use of the proceeds of the note when negotiated. But the pleadings do not tender such an issue. Fraud not having been pleaded, we do not see how such a defense is available to the defendant (San Francisco Mercantile Union v. Muller, 18 Cal. App. 174, 122 Pac. 828), even though there were no other legal obstacles in the way of the consideration of such defense.

[2-4] The Bothin note is in form a negotiable note. It was made expressly to be negotiated. It was indorsed without recourse by the original payee, which did not destroy its negotiability. 8 C. J. 370. And neither did the fact that Helm guaranteed its payment affect its negotiability. It seems to have been purchased by defendant in good faith in due course of business, before maturity and, in view of all the circumstances of the case, for a valuable consideration. We cannot agree with counsel for the appellant that the consideration for the Bothin note continued to be executory after the transfer of the credit in lumber to the plaintiff. Such transfer, under the circumstances already noted, operated as the creation of a new contract which the defendant should not be permitted to disregard. The promise of the defendant to make deliveries of lumber to plaintiff was supported as to consideration, by the detriment suffered by the plaintiff in loaning $3,250, which would not have otherwise been made, and which loan was never repaid. The delivery of the five promisory notes of the Southern California Utilities Development Company to Bothin was, of itself, sufficient consideration for the support of the Bothin note. 8 C. J. 227.

At the time of the refusal of the defendant to deliver lumber to the plaintiff, the Bothin note had not matured. How could the defendant then know that it could not realize upon Helm's guarantee of the payment of that note at maturity?

Counsel for the respective parties have been very industrious in the preparation of their respective briefs, and have favored the court with every assistance at hand for the proper solution of the controversy. After a careful consideration of all the arguments pro and con, we perceive no reason why the judgment in favor of the plaintiff should not be affirmed. If Mr. Bothin executed his note because of fraudulent representations of Southern California Utilities Company, or of its agent, or if he is entitled to redress of some nature, he must seek it in some proper action. The defendant may not adjudicate those matters for him in this action.

Judgment affirmed.

PASQUALETTI v. HILSON et al.
(Civ. 2967.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊜78—STRICT COMPLIANCE WITH PROVISIONS FOR NOTICE OF NONLIABILITY NECESSARY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1313, providing that the owner of premises may relieve himself from liability for work, labor, or materials furnished upon the same by posting notice in writing to that effect in a conspicuous place on the property and filing a verified copy in the office of the county clerk, must be strictly complied with to relieve an owner from responsibility for labor done or materials furnished, etc.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊜78—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF COPY OF NOTICE OF NONLIABILITY NOT EQUIVALENT TO VERIFICATION.

Where the owner of premises posted a written notice that he would not be liable for work, labor, or materials furnished thereon, and filed for record a copy of such notice containing his acknowledgment thereof before a notary public, there was not a sufficient compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1313, requiring copy of such notice to be verified, to free the owner from liability, for an acknowledgment before a notary is not equivalent to a verification.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊜78—LIABILITY NOTWITHSTANDING KNOWLEDGE THAT OWNER HAD POSTED NOTICE OF NONRESPONSIBILITY.

Where the owner of premises had posted a written notice in compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1313, that he would not be responsible for work, labor, or materials furnished upon the premises, but failed to comply with the exact requirements of the section, as to recording of verified copy of such notice, he is liable to persons furnishing labor and materials at the request of lessees of the premises, though such persons had actual knowledge of the posting of the notice of nonliability.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Joseph Pasqualetti against Abraham Hilson, Gee Wo Company, and another, to foreclose a mechanic's lien. From a judgment denying foreclosure against the first-named defendant, the owner of the premises, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

N. A. Dorn, and C. D. Dorn, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jos. E. Bien, Abram M. Marks, and Roche & Ibos, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action brought by plaintiff to foreclose a mechanic's lien for labor and material alleged to have been supplied upon certain premises of which the defendant Abraham Hilson was the owner, and Gee Wo Company and Won Hink were lessees.

The labor was performed and the material supplied in pursuance of a written contract between plaintiff and the said lessees of the property. Upon the trial of the cause the court rendered its judgment in favor of the plaintiff as against said lessees, but adjudged that as against the defendant Abraham Hilson the plaintiff was entitled to take nothing, and judgment was accordingly rendered in Hilson's favor.

The sole question presented on this appeal is as to whether the said defendant and respondent Hilson had given such notice of nonliability under the provisions of section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to be relieved of responsibility for the labor and materials furnished by the plaintiff upon his premises.

[1, 2] It appears from the findings of the court that the respondent Hilson posted notice of nonliability upon the premises in question, and also that he undertook to file for record a copy of such posted notice in attempted compliance with the requirements of said section of the Code. The language of the Code which prescribes that the owner of the premises may relieve himself from liability for work, labor, or materials furnished upon his premises, requires that—

He "give notice that he will not be responsible for the same by posting a notice in writing to that effect in some conspicuous place upon the property, and shall also * * * file for record a verified copy of said notice in the office of the county recorder of the said county in which said property * * * is situated."

It is a conceded fact in the record before us that the copy of the notice of nonliability which the respondent Hilson attempted to file, and did in fact file for record under the provisions of this section of the Code, contained his acknowledgment thereof before a notary public in conformity to the general form of acknowledgments provided by law, but that it did not contain any other or further verification than said acknowledgment. It is the contention of the appellant herein that such acknowledgment of said notice did not amount to a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the section of the Code above quoted, and did not constitute a verification of said notice within the meaning of said section so as to relieve the said respondent from responsibility to the appellant herein.

We are constrained to agree with the contention of the appellant in this regard. Section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as the same was amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p.

1313), was evidently intended to require a strict compliance with its provisions on the part of owners of property upon which work or labor was to be done or materials furnished in order to relieve themselves from responsibility for the value of the same under the provisions of chapter 2 of title 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the liens of mechanics, materialmen, and laborers. The language of said section of the Code requires the filing for record of "a verified copy of said notice in the office of the county recorder." The term "verified," wherever used in the Code of Civil Procedure of this state, requires the oath or affidavit of the party executing the instrument in order to amount to a sufficient verification thereof; and we are entirely satisfied that the use of the term "verified" in the particular section of the Code under review carried this meaning. This view is strengthened by the further and concluding clauses of said section which, after providing what the notice in question should contain, expressly requires that the copy thereof to be recorded shall be "verified by any one having knowedge of the facts." It would seem to be quite clear that a mere acknowledgment of the execution of such a notice by the person signing the same would not amount to a verification thereof and would not suffice to satisfy the requirements of these clauses of the section of the Code in question in that regard. And it follows necessarily that the copy of the notice of nonresponsibility which was filed for record by said respondent Hilson was insufficient to constitute a compliance with said section of the Code so as to relieve him from responsibility to the plaintiff.

[3] It is, however, contended by said respondent that since the notice in question was posted upon the property upon which the plaintiff performed his labor and furnished his supplies, and the court found as a fact that the plaintiff had actual notice of the respondent's claim of nonliability, the failure of the respondent to file said notice in the form required by the statute becomes thereby immaterial. In support of such contention the respondent directs our attention to the case of Street v. Hazard, 27 Cal. App. 263, 149 Pac. 770, which seems to sustain said contention. An examination of that case, however, discloses that the notice which was therein held sufficient was given prior to the date of the amendment to said section of the Code requiring the recordation of a copy of the posted notice of nonliability on the part of the owner of premises, and hence the ruling of the court in said case is not pertinent to the case at bar.

The respondent further contends that the claim of lien filed by the plaintiff herein was insufficient in form, and for that reason he was not entitled to recover in this action as against the respondent Hilson. This contention we find to be without merit, since an examination of the plaintiff's claim of lien discloses that it contains all of the statutory requirements for such an instrument, and that there is no variance between the form and contents of said claim of lien and the averments of the plaintiff's amended complaint; nor is there any material variance between the contents of said claim and the proofs proffered by the plaintiff upon the trial of the cause.

It follows that the trial court was in error in its conclusions of law and judgment that the plaintiff was entitled to take nothing as against the respondent Hilson.

Judgment reversed.

FIGONE et ux. v. GUISTI. (Civ. 2904.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⊜144 — EMPLOYMENT OF INFANT IN SALOON ILLEGAL.

A saloon keeper violated Pen. Code, § 273f, providing that a parent or employer shall not send a minor to any saloon, when he sent his minor son into the saloon conducted by him to assist in work there.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⊜6—VIOLATION OF STATUTE NEGLIGENCE PER SE.

Where a defendant violates the express provisions of a statute, that violation itself, when proven, establishes his negligence per se, but it is negligence per se only in favor of one sought to be benefited by the violated statute.

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⊜315—VIOLATION OF STATUTE NOT NEGLIGENCE PER SE.

A saloon keeper who violated Pen. Code, § 273f, by permitting his son, a minor, to work in his saloon, was not guilty of negligence per se as to a third person killed in the saloon by the boy; the statute being passed only for the protection and benefit of minor employés.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊜302(1)—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT COMMITTING TORT.

A master is responsible for the torts of his servant only when they are committed within the scope of the employment.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊜300—MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR DEATH BY REVOLVER IN HANDS OF MINOR SERVANT.

A saloon keeper was not liable in damages for the death of a patron of the saloon, who was killed by a minor employed to work in the saloon with a revolver kept in the saloon, on the ground that the revolver was a dangerous instrumentality, and that it was by reason of his employment that the minor was enabled to get possession of the weapon.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸302(6)—MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF SERVANT IN PRIVATE QUARREL.

Where an employé working in a saloon killed a patron thereof with a revolver kept in the saloon by his master, the difficulty arising out of a private quarrel, and having nothing to do with keeping order in the saloon or furthering the master's business, employer was not responsible in damages.

7. PARENT AND CHILD ⟸13(1)—PARENT'S LIABILITY FOR INJURY FROM PISTOL.

A father is not responsible in damages for the death of one killed by his minor son, even though he negligently, carelessly, and willfully countenanced his child in having a loaded pistol.

8. TRIAL ⟸139(1)—DISMISSAL FOR INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE SUSTAINED.

A court is justified in granting defendant's motion for nonsuit after the evidence on both sides has been heard in the case, where, if the motion had been denied and a verdict found for plaintiff, it would have been set aside as not supported by the evidence.

Brittain, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Luigi Figone and Maria Figone, his wife, against Grisostomo Guisti. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Harry I. Stafford and W. F. Stafford, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment against them, entered upon the granting of defendant's motion for a nonsuit. The action was one brought by the parents of John Figone, a minor, to recover damages for the death of said John Figone, who was shot by the minor son of the defendant, while said minor son (George Guisti) was in the employ of the defendant. On March 14, 1917, the defendant owned and conducted a saloon and restaurant business at 218 Washington street, San Francisco. He employed a regular barkeeper, and his son George assisted him in the restaurant and also at the bar when the rush of business made his help necessary. Defendant had a loaded revolver in the drawer under the bar counter which was placed there as a protection against robbers. On March 14, 1917, John Figone entered the saloon. No one was present at this time except the two boys. What happened thereafter appears only from the testimony of George Guisti, who testified that the deceased threatened to "shanghai" him, and he, without being aware of the meaning of this language—and with a general impression that it meant something offensive—pulled out the revolver from the drawer and shot deceased.

[1-3] It is clear that the action of the boy which caused the death of plaintiffs' son was not within the course of the employment, but arose out of the personal quarrel of George Guisti with deceased. However, it is contended that the defendant, in employing in his saloon a boy who was a minor, violated the provisions of section 273f of the Penal Code; that under the decisions of our Supreme Court such violation of a penal statute constitutes negligence per se, and that the only other question remaining to be determined is whether or not such violation was the proximate cause of the injury sustained by the plaintiffs. Section 273f, Penal Code, provides:

"Any person, whether as parent, guardian, employer or otherwise * * * who * * * shall send, direct, or cause to be sent or directed to any saloon, gambling house, house of prostitution, or other immoral place, any minor under the age of eighteen years, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Plainly, the defendant was violating the foregoing section when he sent his minor son into the saloon conducted by him to assist in any work there. It has been held by the Supreme Court of this state that where a defendant violates the express provisions of a statute, that violation itself, when proven, establishes his negligence per se. Williams v. S. P. Co., 173 Cal. 525, 540, 160 Pac. 660; Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418; McKune v. Santa Clara V. M. &. L. Co., 110 Cal. 480, 485, 42 Pac. 980; Stein v. United R. R., 159 Cal. 368, 372, 113 Pac. 663; Driscoll v. Cable Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 553, 565, 32 Pac. 591, 33 Am. St. Rep. 203; Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 139, 85 Pac. 152, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059; Fenn v. Clark, 11 Cal. App. 79, 81, 103 Pac. 944. In all of the foregoing cases, however, and in all others which we have been able to find, the violation of a statute has been held to establish negligence per se only in favor of one sought to be benefited by the violated statute. In other words, under the statute, a duty is owing to the persons coming within its protection, and as to such persons a violation thereof is negligence per se. The statute being considered here is plainly for the protection and benefit of the minor employé. It is a statute similar to those prohibiting the employment of children in certain dangerous occupations or for more than a stated number of hours each day. Such laws are enacted in the exercise of the police power for the protection and well-being of minors. Williams v. S. P. Co., supra, 173 Cal. at page 538, 160 Pac. 660. "It is a well-established principle that the violation of a statutory duty is the foundation of an action in favor of such persons only as belong to the class intended by the Legislature to be protected by such statute." Lepard v. Michigan Central R. Co., 166 Mich. 373, 130 N. W. 668, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1105. In the case of Platt v. Southern Photo Material Co., 4 Ga. App. 159, 164, 60 S. E. 1068, 1071, the court said:

"In determining whether the violation of a statute is negligence so as to support an alleged cause of action, the court is called upon to examine the law in respect to its objects; for, if it appears that notwithstanding the violation none of the consequences contemplated and sought to be guarded against have ensued, or that the plaintiff is not the person or does not belong to the class to whose benefit or for whose protection the statute was enacted, the court cannot declare that there is a case of negligence per se as to that cause of action or that plaintiff."

It may be said that there is practically no dissent from the proposition that the violation of a statute or municipal ordinance is actionable negligence only as to a person for whose benefit or protection it was enacted, and that where the plaintiff does not belong to the class that the law was designed to protect, it follows that it will not avail to supply the element of duty owing. Indiana, etc., Coal Co. v. Neal, 166 Ind. 458, 77 N. E. 850, 9 Ann. Cas. 424, and note. "In an action based upon a neglect of duty it is not enough for the plaintiff to show that the defendant neglected to perform a duty imposed by statute for the benefit of a third person, and that he would not have been injured if the duty had been performed; he must show that the duty was imposed for his benefit, or was one which the defendant owed to him for his protection." Kelly v. Henry Muhs Co., 71 N. J. Law, 358, 59 Atl. 23. See, also, note to Gilson v. Delaware Canal Co., 36 Am. St. Rep. 802, at page 817; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Holland, 164 Ala. 73, 51 South. 365, 366, 137 Am. St. Rep. 25; Southern Coal, etc., Co. v. Hopp, 133 Ill. App. 239; Menut v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 207 Mass. 12, 92 N. E. 1032, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1196, 20 Ann. Cas. 1213; Racine v. Morris, 201 N. Y. 240, 94 N. E. 864, 866; Everett v. Great Northern R. Co., 100 Minn. 309, 111 N. W. 281, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 703, 10 Ann. Cas. 294, 297.

[4-6] It appears, therefore, that the violation of the statute was a violation of a duty owing to the boy employed, but was not a violation of any duty owing to the plaintiffs, and therefore does not furnish a basis for a recovery in this action. Hence plaintiffs' rights must be examined in the light of very well-settled legal principles. There are two theories which are urged by appellants—one involves a liability by reason of the relationship of principal and agent; and the other a liability by reason of the relationship of father and son. The rule is entirely beyond question that a master is responsible for the torts of his servant only when they are committed within the scope of the employment. The fact, emphasized by the appellants, that the injury to plaintiffs involved the use of a revolver, which is a dangerous instrumentality, and that it was by reason of his employment that George Guisti was enabled to get possession of this weapon, does not alter the rule, in this state, at least. For it has been held in the case of of Stephenson v. Southern Pac. Co., 93 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 234, 15 L. R. A. 475, 27 Am. St. Rep. 223, that where a servant of the railroad company prevents the appliances of the company to wanton and malicious purposes to the injury of others, the company is not liable. In that case the servant was in charge of a steam engine (which has also been held to be a dangerous instrumentality), and he willfully and wantonly backed it toward a street car which was crossing the railroad tracks, with the intent to frighten the passengers in the street car without colliding therewith, and, as a result, some of the passengers became frightened and jumped from the street car and were injured. The evidence is clear in the present case, as we have stated before, that the shooting was entirely outside of the employment. It arose out of a private quarrel, and had nothing to do with keeping order in the saloon or furthering the master's business. Upon the theory of responsibility growing out of the relation of master and servant, we think the nonsuit was proper.

[7] The second theory of appellants is that the father is liable for the tort of his son because he negligently placed him within reach of a loaded revolver which the son used to the injury of the plaintiffs. It is true there are several authorities in other states which might indicate that, in such states, such liability exists, and that the question of negligence is one for the jury. We are able to find but one authority in this state upon the question involved here, but as that case stands unmodified and uncontradicted, we are bound by such authority, and must decide this case in harmony therewith. That case is the case of Hagerty v. Powers, 66 Cal. 368, 5 Pac. 622, 5 Am. Rep. 101, in which the complaint alleged that the father negligently, carelessly, and willfully countenanced his child in having a loaded pistol, which pistol the boy so carelessly used as to shoot the infant child of the plaintiff. A demurrer was interposed and sustained. The Supreme Court upheld the action of the trial court, stating in the opinion that the rule therein announced was in accordance with the common law. In view of this case, the second theory of the appellants is also without merit.

In considering the admission made by the pleadings upon which appellants rely, we meet the first objection of appellants that the trial court erred in allowing an amendment to the answer after the nonsuit order had been made. We may concede this point to the appellants, and we shall discuss the pleadings as they were at the time of the granting of the nonsuit and before the amendment to the answer. They then contained an admission that on an occasion previous to the shooting, out of which this action arose, the boy, George Guisti, had drawn a revolver on a person having occasion to enter the saloon, and that such fact was known to the father—the defendant. We call attention to the fact that the allegation of the amended complaint is that George Guisti drew the revolver in November without cause or provocation upon a person having occasion to enter the saloon. The answer, while admitting the drawing of the revolver at that time, denies that it was drawn without cause or provocation, and alleges that it was drawn with just cause and provocation, and denies that the father was aware that the boy would draw the revolver or discharge the same willfully, carelessly, and unnecessarily during his employment. These controverted allegations of the amended complaint are unsustained by the evidence. The only evidence offered upon the question of whether or not the defendant had reason to believe the boy would "draw the revolver or discharge the same willfully, carelessly, and unnecessarily during his employment" was the testimony of Robert Gotelli, as follows:

"Q. Did you see any pistol in George Guisti's hand some time before that [the time of the killing]? A. Yes. Q. How long before? A. I could not tell you. About four or five months. Q. Where did you see the pistol in his hands, in the saloon? A. He was right there. He was only fooling around with another fellow. Q. Did you see the pistol in his hands? Where did he get that pistol? A. I could not tell you. I was eating lunch. I just spotted it, that is all, and I went out. I did not stay there very much. * * * Q. Did you see where George Guisti got the pistol from? A. I saw him when he was fooling around there but I could not tell you where he got it from. Q. Where did he have the pistol? A. He had it in his hand. Q. I wish you would state how he held the pistol? A. He held it in his hand and showed it to the other fellow. I just spotted it there, and I went out. I know they are always fooling around there. I don't know where he put it or whether he pointed it at the other fellow. Q. What did the son say when he had the pistol in his hand? A. He said, 'Look out.' That is all I heard, and I went out. Q. Is that all he said, 'Look out'? A. Yes. Q. Where was Mr. Guisti at that time? Was he in the restaurant or in the saloon? A. He was right there, serving the people; he was over there by the free lunch counter, because I never saw him alone in there."

[8] There is nothing in this evidence to show that young Guisti showed any inclination to injure any one. We do not think the incident was such that a reasonable mind could say that because of it the employer had reason to believe the boy a dangerous person to have around the saloon, or that the employer was negligent thereafter, because of such incident, in retaining the boy in his employ. The details of the incident are indefinite and incomplete, but so far as the testimony goes there is no evidence of any malice or of any danger to any one. The witness stated that young Guisti showed the pistol "to the other fellow"; that he warned him at the same time to "Look out," and the witness does not know whether or not the pistol was pointed at any one. We are of the opinion that if the court had allowed the case to go to the jury upon the admission and evidence herein discussed, and the jury had returned a verdict for the plaintiffs, the court would have been compelled to have set the verdict aside as unsustained by the evidence. The rule is expressed in the case of Geary v. Simmons, 39 Cal. 224, that a court is justified in granting defendant's motion for nonsuit after the evidence on both sides has been heard in a case, where, if the motion had been denied and a verdict found for plaintiff it would have been set aside as not supported by the evidence.

We are therefore of the opinion that upon every theory of the case, the action of the trial court was proper.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: NOURSE, J.

BRITTAIN, J. (dissenting). It is with regret that for the first time since the organization of this division of the court I am compelled to dissent from the opinion and conclusions of my Associates in regard to the controlling facts of the case and the applicability to them of the rules of law which would be unquestionable in a case to which they might properly apply.

The appeal is from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for damages for death by wrongful act. The plaintiffs and appellants are the parents of John Figone, 20 years and 5 months old, who was killed by an employé of the defendant in the defendant's saloon, of which the employé was in sole charge. The shooting was done with a revolver, which the defendant kept within ready reach back of his bar, as the defendant stated, so that if any one tried to hold him up he would be ready for him. At the time of the shooting the defendant's employé, who was his own son, was 17 years old, and had been in the defendant's employ some 15 or 16 months. It was a place where patrons dropped in to get a drink, and, on being served with the drink, if they desired, they were served with a free lunch, the same as in any other saloon. There was a separate dining room. The boy who did the shooting was sometimes engaged in serving meals in the dining room, sometimes in serving free lunch and making change in the saloon, and sometimes in serving drinks over the bar in the saloon. Section 273f of the Penal Code provides that—

"Any person, whether as parent, * * * employer, or otherwise, * * * who, as employer or otherwise, shall send, direct, or cause to be sent or directed to any saloon, * * * or other immoral place, any minor under the age of eighteen years, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Figone was killed on March 14, 1917. In November, 1916, the boy who shot Figone drew the same revolver upon another person who entered the saloon for the purpose of patronizing it. A witness to that occurrence testified that at the time the boys were fooling, and that the defendant was present. In his answer the defendant admitted the revolver was drawn upon a patron of the saloon at that time, and asserted that it was for just cause and because of provocation. No facts were stated in the answer to support those legal conclusions. They amounted merely to an admission on the part of the employer that he knew his minor employé had drawn the deadly weapon, which he provided and kept in his place of business, upon a patron of his saloon, and that he, the employer, approved the act. The answer containing the admissions was regularly admitted in evidence without objection on the part of the defendant. In the saloon, at the end of the bar, was a small space, separated from the bar by curtains, to which patrons of the saloon retired for private conversation. This space was called "the office" in a statement made by the shooter to the police after his arrest. The only evidence of what occurred at the time of the killing was in this self-serving statement of young Guisti. He said:

"I was washing glasses, and I did not notice John Figone come into the office. And I was all finished washing glasses, I noticed him in the office. I said, 'Hello, John.' I said, 'How are you?' and he said some Sunday he was going to take me to San Jose and shanghai me. I did not know what the word means. I thought it had a vulgar meaning. I said, 'Oh, no; you are not.' He said: 'Oh, yes.' It was then I jumped behind the counter and took the revolver and held it pointed at him, and I said, 'You are going to stop now?' And all of a sudden I seen him laying on the floor, hollering for help. I am not sure I pulled the trigger, but I heard the gun explode. At the time I pointed the revolver he was halfway up in his chair, and then I seen him on the floor crying for help."

He further stated what he thought was meant by "shanghai," but it is impossible that he could have believed that Figone at that time and in that public place either could or would attempt the act which Guisti described.

The foregoing facts were before the court when the motion for nonsuit was made. They are stated most strongly for the plaintiffs. "Upon a motion for nonsuit, the evidence, and every inference that may be fairly drawn from it, must be viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff's claim." Rauer v. Hertweck, 175 Cal. 280, 165 Pac. 948; Goldstone v. Merchants', etc., Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 Pac. 776; Hanley v. California, etc., Co., 127 Cal. 232, 59 Pac. 577, 47 L. R. A. 597.

It has been held in this state that a father as such is not liable for the shooting of another child by his minor son, even though it was alleged that the father "willfully, carelessly, and negligently suffered, permitted, countenanced, and allowed his son to have possession of a loaded pistol." Hagerty v. Powers, 66 Cal. 368, 5 Pac. 622, 56 Am. Rep. 101. In the present case, therefore, there is no question concerning the liability of the defendant merely as the father of the boy who did the shooting. The defendant's liability, if he was negligent, resulted from his relationship with the boy as employer.

In support of the judgment it is strenuously contended that the shooting of Figone was not in the course of the employment of Guisti. The familiar rule that an employer is not liable for the tortious act of his employé done outside of the course of employment is invoked, and the long line of cases announcing this salutary rule is cited. The rule has well-defined limitations. The law charges every man with responsibilities he may not evade on the ground that he is an employer. If, for instance, he does not act with the care which an ordinarily prudent man exercises in the selection of his employés, and injury results thereby, the master may not evade responsibility under the "course of employment" rule. The defendant left in sole charge of his saloon his 17 year old employé, and as a part of the equipment of the saloon and within easy reach was a revolver, which the master repeatedly stated he kept so that, if any one attempted to hold him up, he would be ready for him. "Every person who acts through a representative is under obligation to discover the skill, experience, and diligence of his agent, and if he selects one who is incompetent to perform the duties of the service, he will be accountable to any person who may have sustained damage by such incompetency. Indeed proof of known incompetence has been held by excellent authority to be a foundation for the allowance of punitive damages." This statement of the law is supported by numerous authorities. 18 R. C. L., p. 791.

It is argued for the appellants that the employment of the boy in violation of section 273f of the Penal Code constituted negligence per se. Generally the violation of a penal statute which shows on its face that it was enacted for the protection of a particular class, may not be invoked as showing negligence as a matter of law, except by one within the protected class. This rule also is limited. In a case frequently cited as a leading one upon the rule, it was expressly recognized that a coemployé of a child improperly employed was within the protection of the child labor law. In that case it was further fully shown that there was no causal connection between the violation of the statute and the injury of which complaint was made. It does not support the contention that the violation of such a penal statute, closely connected with an injury to a third person, cannot be relied upon in an action for negligence against the master under the rule requiring him to exercise prudence in the selection of competent employés. Platt v. Southern Photo, etc., Co., 4 Ga. App. 159, 60 S. E. 1068. Section 273f of the Penal Code might properly be considered as one passed for the benefit of the entire community, and, so considered, its violation would amount to negligence per se. It is not necessary so to determine in this case. If it be considered as one primarily passed for the protection of young Guisti, its evident purpose was to protect him and other minors from the evil effects of being sent to a saloon or other immoral place. As a fact only it was an expression, on the part of the people of the state as ordinarily prudent men of their views concerning the competency of minors employed in a saloon. For 15 or 16 months the employer had daily imparted to his youthful employé the lesson that the law defining crimes was not worthy of consideration. Not alone did the morals of young Guisti suffer because he was daily sent to the saloon by his employer, but they were further sapped by the repeated lessons of the employer that the prohibitions of the criminal law were without force.

Again, the "course of employment" rule does not apply where, even though the employer may have exercised ordinary prudence in the selection of his servants, knowledge is brought home to him of habits of wrongdoing, or infirmities of temper or lack of discretion, in the performance of the duties placed upon them by the employer. One illustration of this rule is that "if a railroad company, for instance, knowingly and wantonly employs a drunken engineer, or switchman, or retains one after knowledge of his habits is clearly brought home to the company, * * * and injury occurs by reason of such habits, the company may and ought to be amenable to the severest rule of damages." Cleghorn v. New York Central, etc., R. Co., 56 N. Y. 44, 15 Am. Rep. 375. Recognizing the justice of this principle, it has sometimes been held that in permitting employés to indulge in vicious habits of work, the master is guilty of maintaining a nuisance. Hogle v. Franklin, etc., Co., 199 N. Y. 388, 92 N. E. 794, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1038; Fletcher v. Baltimore, etc., Co., 168 U. S. 135, 18 Sup. Ct. 35, 42 L. Ed. 411; Swinnarton v. Le Boutillier, 149 N. Y. 752, 43 N. E. 990. The reasoning on which these cases depend would apply equally to a case where a motorman, for instance, was retained after the master knew that on one occasion he had fallen in a fit while operating an electric car, or where a master retained a boy in charge of a loaded revolver, knowing he had on one occasion committed an unwarranted assault with it. While the fact of negligence in the final act may not be shown by proof of a similar act of negligence on another occasion, evidence of such an act is proper to show the employer's knowledge of the employé's unfitness for service. 18 R. C. L. p. 791. In the present case the master knew of the wrongful use of the revolver by his minor employé before the shooting in question. He retained him as his employé, and on the day of the shooting left him in charge of the same instrumentality. While it is argued that the shooting of Figone was not in the course of his employment, the master approved the first wrongful use of the instrumentality by his employé. The question of fact was therefore presented as to whether or not a reasonably prudent man would have left the 17 year old boy in sole charge of the saloon, of which the revolver was a part of the equipment.

It is argued that every man may own firearms, and there is nothing unlawful in leaving them loaded. This is true, but "firearms are extraordinarily dangerous. A person who handles such a weapon is bound to use extraordinary care to prevent injury to others, and is held to strict accountability for want of such care." Rudd v. Byrnes, 156 Cal. 640, 105 Pac. 959, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 20 Ann. Cas. 124. Might reasonable men differ in regard to the extraordinary care, or the lack of it, exercised by the master in leaving this loaded revolver within such handy reach of his minor employé, particularly when he knew of its former misuse?

The "scope of employment" rule is also limited by the impossibility of the master to avoid the consequences of an employé's use of dangerous agencies placed in his control by the master. In those cases, "responsibility is made to depend upon the fact that the wrong was made possible by the position of the employé and the instrumentalities furnished by the employer." 18 R. C. L. pp. 787, 788. "All courts agree that when the employer places in the hands and under the control of his employé an instrumentality of exceptionally dangerous character, he is bound to take exceptional precautions to prevent injury being done thereby. * * *

According to the expressions of some opinions, if the owner of an exceptionally dangerous agency places it in the hands of an employé, the negligence of the latter, either in failing properly to guard it, or in improperly using it, is the negligence of the owner, for which he is responsible. The employer is said to be answerable for the exercise of the employé's judgment in the use of the instrumentality." 18 R. C. L. p. 789. It is argued that this rule does not exist in this state by reason of the decision in a case where a locomotive engineer negligently backed his locomotive towards a street car on which the plaintiff was a passenger, and from which she jumped, believing herself to be in imminent danger of injury from an anticipated collision between the locomotive and the car. Stephenson v. Southern Pacific, 93 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 234, 15 L. R. A. 475, 27 Am. St. Rep. 223. All that was decided in that case was that under all the facts there under consideration the rule of nonliability of the master for the tortious act of its servant outside of the line of duty would be applied. Even though the opinion in that case might be construed as a definitive holding that under no circumstances would the wanton misuse of the locomotive by the engineer render the employer liable, that decision never has been, and ought not to be, construed as holding that in no case may the employer be held liable for the misuse of a deadly agency with which he has entrusted his employé. The text above quoted from Ruling Case Law is based upon the citation of authorities from Arkansas, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Mississippi, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Washington, and Wisconsin.

This court ought not to decide as a matter of law that in the particular case the defendant was guilty of negligence. Neither upon the facts before the trial court could it decide that the master was not guilty of negligence. Giving the Stephenson Case full weight as applying to all the facts in evidence there, and considering the rule which the writer of the article in Ruling Case Law said all courts recognized, the sole question presented on the motion for nonsuit was whether upon consideration of all the facts in this case—the employment of the minor in violation of the penal statute, the placing him in charge of the extraordinarily dangerous instrument, the approval of his former misuse of it by the master, the retention of him in the same capacity and alone in charge of the weapon—might reasonable men honestly reach different conclusions as to whether or not the defendant had exercised that degree of care which ordinarily prudent men would have exercised? If different conclusions upon these facts might be reached by reasonable men, then under the elementary rules stated at the outset of this opinion, nonsuit should have been denied. The plaintiffs had the constitutional right in such a case and upon such facts to have the question of negligence as a matter of fact determined by a jury. "It is elementary that a motion for nonsuit is not to be granted where there is any substantial evidence which, with the aid of all legitimate inferences favorable to the plaintiff, would support a verdict or finding that the material allegations of the complaint are true." Burr v. United R. R. Co., 163 Cal. 665, 126 Pac. 873. "Equally well settled is the rule that 'negligence is a question of fact for the jury, even when there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions upon the subject can be drawn from the evidence.'" Burr v. United R. R. Co., supra; Wahlgren v. Market St. R. Co., 132 Cal. 656, 62 Pac. 308, 64 Pac. 993; Kimic v. San Jose, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 379, 104 Pac. 986. "It is only where the evidence is such that but one conclusion in respect to negligence could be reached by a reasonable and impartial man that the question becomes one of law for the court." Burr v. United R. R. Co., 163 Cal. 665, 666, 126 Pac. 873, 874. "Negligence * * * is never absolute or intrinsic, but is always relative to some circumstance of time, place, or person, and is to be determined by reference to the situation and knowledge of the parties, and all the attendant circumstances; and what would be extreme care under one condition of knowledge and one state of circumstances would be gross negligence with different knowledge and in changed circumstances." Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 30 Pac. 529. In this case under all the circumstances the granting of the motion for nonsuit ought not be upheld.

It is argued that even though the employer were negligent, unless his negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, the nonsuit should have been granted. The question of proximate cause in such a case is also one of fact which should have been submitted to the jury. An injury that is the natural and probable consequence of an act of negligence is actionable, and such act is the proximate cause of the injury. It need not be the sole cause. If the acts constitute a continuous succession of events, so connected that they become a natural whole, liability will attach. There may be a succession of intermediate acts, each produced by the one preceding and producing the one following. Milwaukee, etc., v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256; Mack v. Southbound, etc., 52 S. C. 323, 29 S. E. 905, 40 L. R. A. 679, 68 Am. St. Rep. 913; Atkinson v. Goodrich, etc., Co., 60 Wis. 141, 18 N. W. 764, 50 Am. Rep. 352; Purcell v. St. Paul R. Co., 48 Minn. 134, 50 N. W. 1034, 16 L. R. A. 203; Bosqui v. Sutro R. Co., 131 Cal. 397, 63 Pac. 682. Courts have invariably declared their inability exactly to define the meaning of the words "Proximate cause." The Supreme Court of the United States has said that each case must be tested "largely on special facts belonging to it, and often on the very nicest discriminations." Mutual Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. 52, 19 L. Ed. 65. In regard to lack of that extraordinary care which the Supreme Court of this state has held to be necessary in the use of firearms, in a comparatively recent English case it was held the defendant was guilty of actionable negligence where the defendant left a gun loaded, at full cock, standing inside of a fence on his lands beside a gap from which a private path led over the defendant's lands from the public road to his house, and the defendant's son, aged between 15 and 16, coming from the road through the gap on his way home, found the gun, whereupon he returned with it to the public road, and, not knowing it was loaded, pointed it, in play, at the plaintiff, who was on the road, and who was injured by its discharge. Sullivan v. Creed, 2 English Ruling Cases, 131. In another case, the defendant, being possessed of a loaded gun, sent his servant, a young girl, for it, with instructions to take the priming out, which was accordingly done, and damage occurred to the plaintiff's son in consequence of the careless presenting of the gun at him and drawing the trigger, when the gun went off. The court held the defendant was liable in an action on the case. Dixon v. Bell, 19 English Ruling Cases, 26. The rule in regard to proximate cause is that if but for the negligence of the defendant, in a continuous chain of circumstances, whether coupled with acts of third persons or not, the injury would not have occurred, the defendant's negligence is a proximate cause of the injury. In the present case, upon the evidence of the plaintiffs, considered most strongly for them, but for the defendant's negligence young Figone would not have been killed by the defendant's reckless employé, and the plaintiffs would not have been deprived of the support of their son.

After the nonsuit was granted, upon motion the defendant was permitted to file an amendment to his answer in which, in place of the admission of the defendant of the drawing of the gun upon a patron of the saloon in 1916 and his attempted justification of the act, the defendant averred that he had no sufficient information or belief on the subject to permit him to answer the allegations in that regard, and he denied that the revolver was so drawn by his employé and further denied that he was ever aware that his employé drew his revolver at any time upon any person. While amendments should be liberally allowed, that liberality should only be exercised in furtherance of justice. C. C. P. 473. It has been declared to be a rule that a plaintiff will not be permitted on the trial to deny a fact admitted in the answer. Bliss on Code Pleading, § 430; Bank of Woodland v. Herron, 122 Cal. 107, 54 Pac. 537; Hanson v. Stinehoff, 139 Cal. 169, 72 Pac. 913; Rudd v. Byrnes, 156 Cal. 639, 105 Pac. 957, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 20 Ann. Cas. 124. "Speaking generally, it may be said that the test as to whether or not the court has abused its discretion will depend upon whether the amendment is a permissible amendment which will perfect a cause of action otherwise imperfectly pleaded. In this case the court had tried the action, had taken all of the evidence of all the parties, from which evidence it was satisfied that plaintiffs were not in possession of the land, and could not prove such fact upon a new trial without gross stultification of the evidence which they had formerly given." Norton v. Bassett, 158 Cal. 427, 111 Pac. 253. In the present case in view of the admission of the defendant and his attempted justification of the drawing of the weapon by his employé, and in view of the evidence of the witness who testified that the defendant was present upon that occasion, the denial of information concerning the fact of drawing the revolver and the denial of the fact amounted to such a stultification that the order permitting the amendment cannot be sustained. Spanagel v. Reay, 47 Cal. 608. The court could not by the order permitting the amendment to be filed nullify the evidence before the court on the motion for nonsuit. On retrial of the case, the defendant ought not to be permitted to introduce evidence or put the plaintiffs to the proof of facts upon a matter already admitted of record in the case.

The judgment should be reversed, and the amended answer stricken from the files.

ERICKSON v. RHEE et al. (Sac. 2918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸230(1)—COMPLAINT IN LESSOR'S ACTION FOR RENT.

In lessor's action for rent against original lessee and third persons with whom lessee had entered into a contract, complaint held to state cause of action on the lease against third persons as lessees, and not upon original lessee's contract with third persons as a contract made for lessor's benefit.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸230(8)—VARIANCE IN ACTION FOR RENT.

Where lessor's action for rent against lessee and third persons with whom lessee had entered into contract was based upon theory that third persons were liable on lease, and where there were no allegations putting in issue the contention that lessor might recover upon lessee's contract with third persons as a contract made for his benefit under Civ. Code, § 1559, lessor could not recover rent from third persons upon theory that such contract was made for his benefit, though third persons set up contract for purpose of showing there was no privity between third persons and lessee.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸79(1)—LESSEE'S AGREEMENT WITH THIRD PERSONS NOT ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE.

Where lessee's agreement with third persons provided that lessee should farm a portion of the leased land with money advanced by third persons that third persons should market sufficient crops for payment of rent, and that the parties should divide expenses and crops in specified proportion, and where term of such agreement was less than that of lease, with optional right in third persons to extend term as to a portion of the land, there was no assignment of the lease, the interest acquired by third persons being merely in the nature of a subletting, since it was only a portion of the estate granted by lessor.

4. PARTNERSHIP ⟸15 — PARTNERSHIP IN BUSINESS OF FARMING.

Where lessee's agreement with third persons provided that lessee should farm a portion of the leased land with money advanced by third persons, that third persons should market sufficient crops for payment of rent, and that the parties should divide expenses and crops, term of agreement being less than that of lease, with optional right in third persons to extend term as to a portion of the land, the partnership relation created was not in the ownership of the lease, but in the business of farming.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Martin Erickson against S. K. Rhee and J. L. Siller and L. G. Siller, partners doing business under the firm name and style of Siller Bros. From a judgment denying plaintiff relief as to defendants J. L. Siller and L. G. Siller, partners doing business under the firm name and style of Siller Bros., plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John C. Scott, of Oakland, for appellant.

Sheridan Downey and Downey, Pullen & Downey, all of Sacramento (Vincent Suhr, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff appeals from an adverse judgment in an action for certain rents. The substance of the judgment was that "plaintiff take nothing from said defendants L. G. Siller and J. L. Siller, partners doing business under the firm name and style of Siller Bros."

By his pleading plaintiff averred: That on November 17, 1915, he leased to defendant S. K. Rhee land in Yolo county, described as follows:

"For the first year, all that portion of land in the S. W. quarter of section 33, township No. 9 north, range 1 east, of Mt. Diablo meridian, not now sowed to barley by the first party, and after the first year, then for the remainder of the term of this lease the following lands: The S. E. quarter of section 32 and the southwest quarter of section 33, all in township No. 9 north, range 1 east, Mt. Diablo meridian."

That said Rhee agreed to plant said premises to rice, as far as possible, and to pay $7 as rental for each acre so planted, and to pay such rent on November 17, 1916, together with $335 on the rent for the year then commencing. That Rhee entered into possession of the premises. That, in relation to the farming and cultivation of the land, defendants, Rhee and Siller Bros. (the latter obtaining for that purpose a copy of the lease), entered into an agreement. That "pursuant to such agreement between Rhee and Siller Bros. the said Siller Bros. became partners with said Rhee in the farming of said leased premises under said lease and in pursuance of the terms thereof." That thereafter defendants planted 87 acres of the tract to rice, and there became due "as a rental from defendants" $609 and the further sum of $335, aggregating $944. That defendants, and in particular Siller Bros., did, in violation of the terms of the lease, take, remove, and carry away the crops without paying the rents. That the lease further provided for a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court in the event of an action by either party against the other; and that plaintiff was entitled to $150 as such fee.

Defendants Siller Bros. by their answer admitted the leasing of the premises by Rhee, as alleged in the complaint, but denied that they became partners with Rhee "in the farming of said leased premises, under said or any lease." They admitted, however, that they did enter into an agreement with Rhee in relation to farming the premises, and pleaded that contract as an exhibit. Siller Bros. also denied that they ever planted to rice 87 or any other number of the acres described in the lease, and denied liability for any amount of rental.

The agreement provides that Rhee shall farm about 90 acres of the land held by him under lease from Erickson for the term of one season ending December 31, 1917. There are elaborate provisions for the presentation of accounts to Siller Bros., for the insurance, at Rhee's expense, of the safety of the men employed, and the furnishing of the farming machinery and implements by him. Siller Bros. agree to furnish Rhee $10 per acre for all land actually planted to rice, and additional sums up to $5 per acre, if Rhee should be unable out of his own funds to provide money additional to the $10 sufficient to bring the rice to harvest. There are certain provisions in the contract for repayment of any additional sums so advanced with premiums. Rhee agrees to mortgage his interest in the crop to secure the repayment of all advances. By the terms of the agreement expense of harvesting and all expenses thereafter are to be borne in the proportion of two-thirds by the copartnership and one-third by Rhee. The contract also contains the following provision:

"Upon the harvesting of said crop it is to be divided as follows: Two-thirds of said crop shall go to the party of the first part (Siller Bros.), and one-third to the party of the second part (Rhee). It is agreed that sufficient of said first party's share of said crop shall be marketed by the first party to pay owner of said land the sum of three dollars and thirty-four cents ($3.34) per acre for each acre of land planted to rice and used in the cultivation thereof, said sum being the first party's share of said cash rental of said property. It is understood that sufficient of said second party's share of said crop shall be marketed by the party of the first part to pay the owner of said land the remainder of said cash rental as specified in that lease heretofore mentioned by and between Martin Erickson and S. K. Rhee."

The party of the first part (Siller Bros.) had the right of extending the agreement either one or two years, and there were minor provisions not necessary to be here noticed.

The court found, among other things, "that a partnership existed between the defendant S. K. Rhee and the defendants J. L. Siller and L. G. Siller, in relation to the farming of said premises, but not in the ownership of said lease"; that the lease from plaintiff to Rhee was for three years, but the agreement as to the farming of the property was to continue for two or three years at the option of the Sillers, and that there never was anything owing from Siller Bros. to plaintiff as rental. Among the conclusions of law the court determined that the Sillers were under no obligation to pay to plaintiff any part of the rent reserved in the lease from plaintiff to Rhee; and "that any interest in the real property described in said lease that may have been held by any partnership in relation to farming said real property, between the defendant S. K. Rhee and the defendants J. L. Siller and L. G. Siller, partners as aforesaid, was in the nature of a subletting of said property, and not of an assignment of said lease."

[1, 2] From the foregoing statement of the pleadings, the findings and conclusions, it is apparent that the cause was tried and determined upon the issues set forth in the complaint and met by the answer. The plaintiff sued the copartnership, Siller Bros., as a lessee, and not upon the farming contract, as one made for his benefit. An examination of the complaint shows that while reference is made to the contract between Rhee and Siller Bros., the terms of that agreement are not alleged, nor does Erickson seek to recover upon any provision contained in it. The suit was for rent, attorney's fee, and costs, and there was not even a prayer for general relief.

It is now contended by plaintiff, however, that by setting up the contract between Rhee and the other defendants in the answer they stood squarely upon its terms, and that if it be an agreement made for plaintiff's benefit, he is entitled to judgment against all of the parties to it. The obvious answer to this contention is that by their pleading defendants were bound to set up the contract as indicating that there was no privity between Siller Bros. and the original lessor. They did not seek to establish by it any claim against Erickson, nor to confess any obligation to him. If plaintiff, on being apprised of the full text of the agreement, believed that he was entitled to judgment under its terms according to the provisions of section 1559, Civil Code, as a third person for whose benefit it was expressly made, he should have put that matter in issue by a pleading distinctly demanding judgment based upon that contract interpreted according to said section. This he did not do. The cause was tried upon the theory of the liability of Siller Bros. under the original lease. There was no allegation that the contract between Rhee and the copartners, Siller Bros., was not rescinded by the parties thereto before the complaint in this action was filed. There was no allegation that the Sillers ever marketed any rice or converted any portion of it to their own use. In short, there was nothing to put in issue the contention that plaintiff might have recovered upon the farming agreement as one made for his benefit. It is therefore not necessary to discuss the very interesting question whether that agreement was in its essence such a contract as under section 1559 of the Civil Code permits a third person to take advantage of it, or was one in which the covenant as to rent in the agreement was merely incidentally for the benefit of plaintiff, and therefore not one which he might enforce because falling under the rule announced in such cases as Chung Kee v. Davidson, 73 Cal. 522, 15 Pac. 100, and Lake Ontario, etc., R. R. v. Curtiss, 80 N. Y. 219.

[3] Appellant contends that the transaction between Rhee and Siller Bros. amounted to an assignment of the lease. He attacks the court's conclusion that any interest of Siller Bros. in the real property described in the lease was in the nature of a subletting of said property, and not of an assignment of the lease. The conclusion of the court was correct. The contract between Rhee and the Sillers had relation to a portion only of the whole estate taken by Rhee. The latter parted with only a portion of the term conveyed by the lease to him. It is true that Siller Bros. were given an optional right to an extension of the term relating to the tract of 87 acres, but, as was well declared in the opinion of the learned District Court of Appeal when this cause was heard by that tribunal "this provision was a mere inchoate right, which was not coextensive with the entire estate in the leasehold acquired by Rhee." The facts of this case bring it clearly within the rule well stated by Prof. Tiffany in the first volume of his work on Landlord and Tenant at page 907 as follows:

"As regards the * * * transfer by the tenant * * * of an estate in the whole premises less than that which he has himself, leaving a reversion in him, the courts are in unison in considering it not an assignment but a sublease, making the transferee tenant of the transferor. The fact that the interest transferred is of a duration, but slightly less than the interest of the tenant is immaterial, and so the fact that there is a difference of a day or of a fraction of a day is sufficient to constitute the transfer a sublease and not an assignment."

This text is supported by many citations of authority.

[4] Further commenting upon the appellant's contention that the transaction was an assignment, Mr. Justice Hart, for the District Court, used the following language:

"Again, in Stewart v. Long Island R. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 607 [8 N. E. 201, 55 Am. Rep. 844], it is said: 'The rules relating to the effect of an assignment of a lease are so well settled that it is hardly necessary to do more than refer to them. Where a lessee assigns his whole estate, without reserving any reversion therein in himself, a privity of estate is at once created between his assignee and the original lessor, and the latter has a right of action directly against the assignee, on the covenant to pay, * * * but if the lessee sublets the premises, reserving or retaining any such reversion, however small, the privity of the estate is not established, and the original landlord has no right of action against the sublessee, there being neither privity of contract nor of estate between them.'

"In the present case there was no assumption of the lease by Siller Bros. As above stated, whatever interest they acquired in the lease was only a portion of the entire estate granted by the plaintiff, and if, therefore, there was any transfer of interest in the lease, it amounted only to a sublease.

"The case of Bedford v. Terhune, 30 N. Y. 453 [86 Am. Dec. 394], relied upon by the appellant here as in support of the position that the effect of the agreement between Siller Bros. and Rhee was the assignment of the lease, supports the above conclusion rather than the contention of appellant. * * * The court there said, quoting Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 345, that 'an assignment, as contradistinguished from an underlease, signifies a parting with the whole term,' and quoting 1 Hilliard's Abridgment, p. 126, § 55, that 'the ordinary distinction between an assignment and an underlease is that the former transfers the land for the whole term; the latter, for only part of it.' The court did say in that case, quoting from the syllabi: 'Where by the terms of a lease it is made a ground of forfeiture of the term if the lessees shall let or underlet without the written consent of the lessor, and parties other than the lessees are in possession without such consent, in the absence of any proof as to the agreement under which they entered, the presumption (if any presumption is to be indulged in) is that the transfer to the occupants was by assignment, and not by underletting.' In the present case, as we have shown, the agreement between Siller Bros. and Rhee covered but a small quantum of the term granted by the lease to Rhee, he reserving the remainder of the whole interest to himself, both as to the term and the quantity of the land conveyed by the lease.

"But that a partnership relation was created by the agreement between Siller Bros. and Rhee, not in the ownership of the lease, but in the business of farming the 87-acre tract, we think is plainly shown by the language of the said agreement."

With the foregoing discussion and conclusion we entirely agree.

But it is argued that by joining in a partnership arrangement to farm the land and by their conduct, particularly in view of that part of their agreement by which certain parts of the crop were to be marketed by Siller Bros. to provide a fund for the payment of the rent, Siller Bros. assumed a definite part of the debts of the copartnership, and must respond, therefore, to a demand for payment of the rent in that proportion. The difficulty about this contention is that neither was it alleged by pleading nor shown by proof that any of the crop had been sold. The contract was not one for the purchase of a part of the lease, but, as the court found, for farming the land. A fund was to be created for the payment of the rent by the sale of part of the crops, but this created no trust for the benefit of plaintiff. It was a provision for the benefit of the lessee, who alone was responsible for the rent. That provision did not convert the sublease into an assignment.

No other alleged errors require discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

ARTANA v. SAN JOSE SCAVENGER CO.

(S. F. 8610.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⊂=212—RIGHT TO PLEAD AS AN INDIVIDUAL IN ACTION AGAINST FIRM.

In action against a copartnership alone as a legal entity under Code Civ. Proc. § 388, for an accounting, a demurrer purporting to be the demurrer of D. alone as an individual, and not the demurrer of the defendant partnership, was not entitled to be considered on objection that D. was a stranger to the action.

2. PARTNERSHIP ⊂=204—DISMISSAL OF SUIT AGAINST FIRM ON APPEARANCE OF A MEMBER AS AN INDIVIDUAL.

In action against a copartnership alone as a legal entity under Code Civ. Proc. § 388, for an accounting, in the absence of any appearance by it, judgment of dismissal in its favor and for costs should not have been given.

3. PARTNERSHIP ⊂=264—PURCHASE OF INTEREST OF PARTNER DISSOLVES PARTNERSHIP.

If plaintiff succeeded in purchasing at execution sale the interest of one of the partners, such purchase dissolved the partnership (Civ. Code, § 2450, subsec. 4), leaving plaintiff with his action against the remaining partner or partners to obtain his interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by Henry Artana against the San Jose Scavenger Company. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

William H. Johnson, of San Jose, for appellant.

Chauncey Tramutolo, of San Francisco, and Maurice J. Rankin, of San Jose, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal given in favor of the San Jose Scavenger Company, a copartnership, upon sustaining a demurrer to a complaint.

The action was brought against the copartnership alone as a legal entity, under the provisions of section 388, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that—

"When two or more persons, associated in any business, transact such business under a common name, whether it comprises the names of such persons or not, the associates may be sued by such common name, the summons in such cases being served on one or more of the associates."

Concededly the provisions of this section authorize an action against a copartnership by its common name; the section recognizing the copartnership as a distinct legal entity for the purposes thereof. The action was one to have the interest of the plaintiff, claimed to have been acquired by purchase at an execution sale of the interest of one of the partners in the copartnership, ascertained, and for an accounting. The record does not show how summons was served on the partnership defendant, or, indeed, that it was ever served on any of the partners. However, a demurrer was interposed to the complaint by one Peter Devincenzi, who was not named in the complaint, describing himself as "sued as San Jose Scavenger Company, a copartnership." This demurrer purported to be the demurrer of said Devincenzi alone, as an individual, and did not purport to be the demurrer of the defendant partnership. Plaintiff thereupon made a motion for an order striking such demurrer from the files, on the ground that Devincenzi is "a stranger to the action, and not a party thereto, and upon the further ground that the said demurrer is sham." This motion was denied. The de-murrer was thereafter sustained, and judgment given "that plaintiff take nothing by his said complaint," and "that the said action be dismissed." This is the judgment appealed from.

[1] We see no good answer to the claim of appellant seasonably made, and ever since insisted on, that the attempted demurrer was not entitled to be considered. It did not purport to be the demurrer of any party to the action, for the only party defendant was the San Jose Scavenger Company, a partnership, which, for the purposes of the statute (section 388, Code Civ. Proc.) is regarded as a legal entity distinct from its members. Although, by virtue of the amendment of the section in 1907, the judgment in an action so brought binds, not only the joint property of the associates, but also the individual property of the party or parties served with process, it is still true that the action contemplated by the section is one against the associates as such to enforce a claim existing against the association, and is not an action against the individual members of the association; that is, unless they are, as individuals, made parties thereto. The association, whether it be a copartnership or other association of individuals transacting business under a common name, is, for the purposes of the section, a legal entity distinct from its members, and it is this legal entity which is in this action the sole party defendant. See, generally, Bollman Co. v. Bachman & Co., 16 Cal. App. 589, 591, 117 Pac. 690, 122 Pac. 835, and cases there cited. The record does not show that Devincenzi was one of the associates or partners, and the complaint does not purport to state any cause of action against him. So far as the record shows he is an absolute stranger to the action. Certainly his demurrer as an individual is not the demurrer of the sole defendant in the action, viz. the San Jose Scavenger Company, a copartnership.

[2, 3] It is furthermore clear that, in the absence of any appearance by the sole defendant, judgment in its favor of dismissal of the action against it, and for its costs, should not have been given. It seems improper, in the absence of competent objection to the complaint, to discuss the claims made in the brief of respondent relative to its insufficiency as a pleading. We may say, however, that it appears to us that plaintiff may have a good cause of action against an existing copartnership known as the San Jose Scavenger Company, if such there be, or against Devincenzi, doing business under that name, on the theory that such copartnership, as it now exists under that name, or Devincenzi, is holding property, belonging to him, a person not a member of the partnership, for which it refuses to account. If he did succeed in purchasing, at execution sale, the interest of one of the partners in the former San Jose Scavenger Company, such purchase dissolved the partnership (subd. 4, sec. 2450, Civ. Code), leaving him with his action against the remaining partner or partners to obtain his interest; but it is possible that a new partnership has been created under that name, of which he is not a member, which is withholding his property.

It is possible that Devincenzi was a member of such a copartnership, served with summons in this action, and authorized to appear for and in its name, and that the demurrer was inadvertently filed by him as an individual. In that event, we think the lower court should allow him to file an amended demurrer in the name of the copartnership.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

WOODHEAD v. WILKINSON. (L. A. 5326.)

1. TRIAL ⟸397(1) — FINDINGS RENDERING OTHERS UNNECESSARY.

There was no necessity of finding on defensive allegations, they being negatived by the facts found.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⟸1—RESPONSIBILITY UNAFFECTED BY PURPOSE.

Defendant's purpose in stopping his car after running into plaintiff was immaterial, as no purpose, however benevolent, excuses negligence.

3. TRIAL ⟸397(1)—FINDING COVERING CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Contributory negligence is covered by finding that defendant's negligent acts and omissions were the sole and proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries.

4. HIGHWAYS ⟸173(2)—DUTY OF AUTO DRIVERS TO PEDESTRIAN TO SOUND HORN.

Defendant, who ran his auto into plaintiff, walking on the right side of the highway outside the paved part, and who under St. 1915, p. 405, § 12, was under the necessity of sounding a warning "whenever necessary," and by section 20a was required to drive with due regard for safety of pedestrians, was not relieved of duty to sound his horn merely because plaintiff could see the glare of his headlight from behind; this not apprising her of the fact that he was leaving the paved way.

5. HIGHWAYS ⟸173(2)—DUTY OF AUTO DRIVERS TO PEDESTRIAN TO LOOK AROUND WIND SHIELD.

One driving his auto on a highway against a pedestrian was negligent in not looking around the end of his wind shield if under all the circumstances, because of glare of lights, etc., this was the only way in which he could safely proceed.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Florence M. Woodhead against J. H. Wilkinson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Vincent Hannon and Joseph E. Hannon, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stephens & Stephens and Frank Dougherty, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued for damages for personal injuries, charging defendant with negligently driving an automobile over her.

The action was tried by the court without a jury. Judgment was for damages in the sum of $1,500.

The facts as found were substantially as follows:

On the evening of November 14, 1915, plaintiff had been driving her motorcar on the state highway near Ontario, in the county of San Bernardino. Her attention, and the notice of her guests in the automobile, had been attracted by the shouts and actions of the defendant, who was in a car that had stopped at the side of the road, and after proceeding about a quarter of a mile she had stopped at the request of her father, who, believing that defendant and his companions were in trouble, wanted to go back to assist them. She had turned to the right and had stopped her car facing west, with the two southerly wheels on the paved portion of the road, and the two northerly wheels on the unpaved part. The highway was 60 feet in width, the paved portion being 18 feet wide. The rear light was burning, as were the headlights on the forward portion of the car. At the time of the accident plaintiff had alighted from her car and, having crossed and recrossed the road, was walking in a westerly direction on the northerly side of the road about 3 feet north of the paved portion thereof and about 15 feet from her automobile.

Defendant approached plaintiff from behind and, as the court found, so negligently drove his automobile as to run upon and over plaintiff, inflicting serious injuries.

Among other findings were those to the effect that defendant violated the laws of the state of California by failing to sound his horn and by failing to turn to the left to pass the plaintiff's car. There was a general finding of defendant's negligence and more specific findings:

"That said defendant carelessly and negligently failed to sound any horn or suitable signal upon approaching plaintiff's automobile standing on the highway.

"That the vision of the defendant through the wind shield of his machine was obscured by the reflection of the headlight of a machine approaching from his rear.

"That said defendant carelessly and negligently failed to look around or to the side of his wind shield, so as to observe the said plaintiff.

"That said defendant carelessly and negligently failed to observe the highway immediately in front of his automobile to avoid striking and injuring the plaintiff."

Appellant's first objection was that the court failed to pass upon his pleaded defense and to make findings thereon. His defense was that the glare upon his glass wind shield from the lights of a machine behind him interfered with his vision; that in order to let the machine pass he slackened his speed and turned to the right side of the road; that he then discovered plaintiff's motionless car in front of him; that he determined to stop, and did stop, for the double purpose of allowing the machine with the glaring headlights to get in front of him and to offer aid to the occupants of the standing machine, if they needed it; that he had almost stopped when he first saw plaintiff about 30 feet behind her car, too late, however, to avoid striking her; and that all this time he was making every effort that a prudent person could make to avoid accident by shading his eyes with his hat and peering through the lower part of the wind shield.

[1, 2] The court did find upon all of the essential matters pleaded in the answer. It was found:

"That the vision of the defendant through the wind shield of his machine was obscured by the reflection of the headlight of a machine approaching from his rear."

This finding is even stronger than defendant's allegation, for admittedly his vision was not entirely shut off, yet the court found that it was "obscured." There was no finding that he did not strike the plaintiff when she was 30 feet from her automobile. None was necessary, for it was found that the real distance was 15 feet. This negatives, also, the allegation that he was stopping 30 feet from plaintiff's car.

There was no necessity for a finding regarding his double purpose in stopping. None was necessary. His purpose was entirely immaterial to the issues involved. No purpose, however benevolent, excuses negligence. There was no necessity for a specific finding upon the matter of the defendant's failing to look or looking through the lower part of the wind shield while using his hat as a shade. The general finding of negligence covers this matter, and the court found, also, that under all the circumstances it was negligence for him not to look around the end of the wind shield. The other defensive allegations were completely negatived by the facts found.

[3] Defendant complains because, as he asserts, there was no finding on the issue of contributory negligence. There was an allegation that plaintiff's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. The court found, however, after enumerating defendant's acts of negligence:

"That each and every one of the foregoing negligent acts and omissions on the part of the defendant were the sole and proximate cause of the injuries sustained by the plaintiff as hereinafter set forth."

This covers the subject of plaintiff's alleged negligence.

[4] Attack is made upon the two findings that defendant was negligent in failing to sound his horn. Admittedly, plaintiff saw the glare from his headlight and knew that a car was coming up from behind; therefore (so defendant argues) there was no use for an alarm, and the laws of California do not require the sounding of a horn unless one means to pass another person or vehicle, and defendant, being about to stop, was not under the rule. The mere fact that plaintiff could see the glare of defendant's headlights was not enough. True, it apprised her of his approach, but not of the fact that he was leaving the paved portion of the road and running partly to the north thereof. She was justified in assuming (as she says she did) that he was following the usual custom of drivers. Lawyer v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 161 Cal. 53, 118 Pac. 237. He was under the necessity of sounding a warning "when ever necessary." Stats. 1915, p. 405, § 12. That plaintiff had a right to be there cannot be denied (Raymond v. Hill, 168 Cal. 473, 143 Pac. 743), and defendant was not absolved from the duty of giving her fair warning of his approach, if the circumstances made such warning necessary, merely because she could see the glare of his headlights. He was under the rule of section 20 (a) of the law of 1915, then in effect, which declares that—

"The driver or operator of any vehicle in or upon any public highway shall drive or operate such vehicle in a careful manner with due regard for the safety and convenience of pedestrians."

The plaintiff, hearing no unusual sound and seeing radiance that might have been caused by a car about to pass to her left, did not look back until the noise of the machinery became so loud as to frighten her. It was then, she said, too late, for at that moment the car was almost upon her.

[5] Appellant also complains of the finding that he was negligent because, when he found that his vision was obscured by the glare upon his wind shield from the lights of the approaching automobile, he failed to look around the side of the shield. Obviously, he would be bound as a careful driver to stop as soon as he could reach a place by the side of the road, or to place himself in a position from which he could see the road over which he was driving. He did not stop at once, and if, under all the circumstances, looking around the end of the wind shield was the only way in which he could safely proceed, then he was negligent in failing to adopt that plan. The same reason applies to the finding that he was negligent in failing to observe the highway immediately in front of the car which he was driving.

From the record it is evident that defendant was acting with carelessness of the most reprehensible sort.

Judgment affirmed.

LOS ANGELES INV. CO. v. WILSON et ux. (L. A. 5273.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1919. Rehearing Denied Dec. 29, 1919.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂=182—OVERPAYMENT ON INSTALLMENT APPLIES ON SUBSEQUENT INSTALLMENTS.

Under contract called a "lease with privilege of purchase" and providing for rental of $36.00 on or before the first of each month, purchaser or lessee was not in default so long as her credit if applied to debt showed an average of more than $36.00 for each month that agreement had been in existence.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Los Angeles Investment Company against Edward A. Wilson and wife. Judgment for plaintiff and defendants appeal. Reversed.

F. M. Shepard and H. E. Gleason, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Flint & Jutten, L. W. Jutten, H. S. Mackay, Jr., Ed. R. Brainerd, Jr., William R. Flint, and J. H. Schenck, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to terminate an agreement in writing by which Jennie B. Wilson entered into a contract with plaintiff to lease certain property with the privilege of purchase. Edward A. Wilson is made a party to the action because he is the husband of said Jennie B. Wilson.

The instrument on which the action was founded is called a "lease with privilege of purchase." It relates to lot 37, tract No. 1798, as per map recorded in book 21, page 40 of maps, records of the county of Los Angeles. The term is for 120 months, commencing on the 1st day of March, 1913. The rental is $36, payable in advance on or before the first day of each month. It was agreed that if any default should be made in payment of rent or any other covenant or covenants the landlord might reenter the premises, and that the rights of the tenant should thereupon cease and that the agreement of sale should immediately terminate. The tenant was given the right to purchase the lot for $3,550, plus taxes, insurance and assessments, and interest at 7 per cent. per annum. And it was further provided that—

"Any amounts paid as rent shall apply, first to the payment of interest due, second to the payment of taxes, insurance and assessments, and the balance shall be applied to the payment of the principal."

It was agreed that when the vendee should have paid 40 per cent. of the purchase price and interest the vendor would execute a deed to the property and take a mortgage.

Plaintiff's action was based upon alleged default in the payment of monthly installments. Defendants denied any such default, and in a cross-complaint alleged that on March 25, 1913, and during the faithful performance by her of the contract, Mrs. Wilson elected to and did purchase the premises by payment to plaintiff of $300, and the further sum of $36 per month until April 3, 1916, when, it is alleged, the Los Angeles Investment Company abandoned the agreement and refused further performance, after receipt of $1,446 under the contract.

The court found that $1,446 had been paid by defendant and cross-complainant, $300 in March, 1913, and various other sums each of $36 or double that amount, irregularly paid up to November 17, 1915; that the sum of $30 was received February 5, 1916, and that "no payments, pursuant to the terms of said agreement have been offered or received subsequent to January 1, 1916." It was also found that subsequent to that time and up to the commencement of the action $180 became due in installments of $36 per month, and that on January 1, 1917, there was due the further sum of $288 (or $468 altogether). The court found, also, that at all times since the date of the agreement plaintiff was ready and willing to perform all the covenants of the agreement by it to be performed, and that at all times since the date of said contract Jennie B. Wilson was ready and able and willing to keep and perform all the conditions and terms thereof. As conclusions of law, it was determined that plaintiff should have its title quieted, the premises restored, and that defendants should take nothing unless within 30 days of judgment they should pay $468 to plaintiff, whereupon Jennie B. Wilson should be restored to her former rights. The findings of fact and conclusions of law were dated January 30, 1917, and under date of March 5, 1917, a decree and judgment were given, quieting plaintiff's title to the premises and declaring the contract canceled and of no effect.

Appellants insist that Mrs. Wilson was not in default at the time of the commencement of the action. This is true if the contract did not require the payment of at least $36 every month beyond any sums that might have been credited on the purchase price because the sum of $300, made up of two payments during the first month of the life of the agreement (March, 1913), if added to the amounts paid at irregular intervals averaging $36 a month up to January 1, 1916, would bring the average up to $36 a month for a much longer period. In other words, Mrs. Wilson's counsel contend that: (1) The agreement, while termed a "lease with privilege of purchase," was really a conditional sale of the property for $3,550, payable in installments of $36 or more monthly; (2) that the vendee was not in default so long as her credit, if applied to the debt, showed an average of more than $36 for each month that the agreement had been in existence; and (3) since her credit at the date of the institution of the suit was sufficient to show an average of more than $36 a month, the suit was premature, as no breach of the contract had been made at that time. Stated in figures, the position of defendants is as follows:

Total amount paid by defendants, under terms of the contract, as shown by plaintiff's evidence, and admitted by the pleadings		$1,446
Total number of monthly payments, from May 1, 1913, the date of the agreement to May 18, 1916, the date of the commencement of the action, 37 months, at $36 per month	$1,332
Balance to credit of defendants on date of commencement of action	114
		$1,446

We see no escape from this conclusion. The agreement did not require the payment of any sum greater than $36 a month for 120 months. Payment of a greater sum was optional with Mrs. Wilson. If she chose to pay more than $36 at any one time (as she did), such payment must be considered as having been made "on or before" any date on which she failed to make payment of $36. The finding that Mrs. Wilson was in default at the commencement of this action was therefore without support. The action was prematurely commenced.

The judgment is reversed.

RILEY, Real Estate Com'r, v. CHAMBERS, State Controller. (Sac. 2985.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 29, 1919. Rehearing Denied Dec. 29, 1919.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂⊃88—REGULATION OF LAWFUL AND USEFUL OCCUPATIONS WITHIN POLICE POWER.

The right to engage in a lawful and useful occupation cannot be taken away under the guise of regulation, but such an occupation may be subjected to regulation in the public interest, even though such regulation involves in some degree a limitation on the exercise of the right regulated.

2. BROKERS ⊂⊃1 — STATUTE FOR LICENSING RIGHT TO DO BUSINESS AS BROKER VALID.

St. 1919, p. 1252, providing for the licensing of brokers and real estate salesmen and requiring persons desiring to engage in such business to furnish evidence of good moral character, etc., is valid in view of the peculiar nature of the employment.

3. BROKERS ⊂⊃1—LICENSING ACT NOT INVALID AS GIVING REAL ESTATE COMMISSIONER ARBITRARY POWERS.

St. 1919, p. 1252, forbidding any one from engaging in business as a broker or real estate salesman without having procured a license from the real estate commissioner is not invalid as giving the commissioner, to whom proofs of honesty, etc., are to be submitted, an arbitrary power to refuse to license.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂⊃46(3) — VALIDITY OF SEPARABLE PORTIONS NOT DETERMINED WHERE ATTACK IS ON ACT AS WHOLE.

Where the controller of the state declined to approve a warrant for the expenses of the real estate commissioner, whose office was created by St. 1919, p. 1252, on the theory that the act was invalid, the validity of separable portions of the act whose invalidity would not cause the whole act to fall will not be determined in proceedings to compel the controller to approve the warrant.

5. STATUTES ⊂⊃64(2)—INVALIDITY OF PARTS OF ACT REGULATING BROKERS NOT DEFEATING WHOLE ACT.

Those portions of St. 1919, p. 1252, creating real estate department and providing for the licensing of brokers and real estate salesmen, which relate to the power of the commissioner to rescind licenses and the burden of proof on review of commissioner's action by court are separable from the main purpose of the act, and their invalidity will not destroy the whole act.

6. STATUTES ⊂⊃102(1)—PERMISSION TO DEPARTMENT HEAD TO FIX SALARIES NOT SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

That the salaries of deputies and employés of the real estate commissioner whose office was created by St. 1919, p. 1252, were not fixed, but were left to the commissioner, does not make the act discriminatory and special legislation.

7. STATUTES ⊂⊃81 — COLLECTORS OF RENT CLASSIFIED AS BROKERS NOT UNREASONABLE CLASSIFICATION.

St. 1919, p. 1252, requiring brokers and real estate salesman to be licensed, is not unreasonably discriminatory because it classed collectors of rent with brokers.

8. STATUTES ⊂⊃81 — EXCEPTING PERSONS HOLDING POWER OF ATTORNEY FROM ACT LICENSING BROKERS NOT UNREASONABLE CLASSIFICATION.

St. 1919, p. 1252, providing for the licensing of brokers and real estate salesmen, but which excluded persons holding power of attorney, is not for that reason invalid as discriminatory; for it must be presumed that by persons holding power of attorney was meant persons authorized to complete negotiations for the lease or sale, and not merely persons holding written authority to bring parties together, etc.

9. STATUTES ⊂⊃81 — LICENSE FEES OF BROKERS AND REAL ESTATE SALESMEN NOT UNREASONABLY DISCRIMINATORY.

St. 1919, p. 1252, providing for the licensing of brokers and real estate salesmen, is not invalid as unreasonably discriminatory because it exacted a $10 license fee from brokers and only a $2 fee from real estate salesmen.

10. STATUTES ⊂⊃81—LICENSING BROKERS AND REAL ESTATE SALESMEN NOT UNREASONABLE CLASSIFICATION.

As trustees, whether renting or selling the property under deeds of trust, are not brokers or real estate salesmen, the fact that St. 1919, p. 1252, requiring brokers and real estate salesmen to be licensed, specifically omitted only trustees selling under a deed of trust, does not make the act unreasonable and discriminatory.

In Bank.

Application by Ray L. Riley, as Real Estate Commissioner of the State of California, for writ of mandate to be directed against John S. Chambers, as Controller of the State of California. Writ issued.

Max J. Kuhl, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Jos. L. Atteridge, of Sacramento, and Wesley E. Marten, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Fry & Wood, of Oakland, amici curiæ.

OLNEY, J. The Legislature of 1919 passed an act (Stats. 1919, p. 1252) purporting to regulate the business of acting as a real estate broker or salesman in California, creating a state real estate department with an official having the title of real estate commissioner at its head, and providing for the payment of the expenses of the department out of a certain fund in the state treasury. The petitioner, Ray L. Riley, was appointed real estate commissioner, incurred certain expenses on account of his department, and sought their payment out of the state treasury in the manner provided by the act. The respondent, the state controller, refused to authorize such payment, having apparently some doubt as to the constitutional validity of the act. Thereupon the commissioner sought to obtain a writ of mandate from this court to compel the controller to authorize the payment of the expenses in question. A demurrer was interposed to the petition for a writ, and the matter has been submitted to us upon this demurrer. The only points raised are as to the constitutionality of the act.

The act makes it unlawful for any person or corporation to act as a real estate broker or real estate salesman without first obtaining a license. A real estate broker is defined as any "person, copartnership or corporation who, for a compensation, sells, or offers for sale, buys, or offers to buy, or negotiates the purchase or sale or exchange of real estate, or who, for compensation, negotiates loans on real estate, leases, or offers to lease, rents, or places for rent, or collects rent from real estate, or improvements thereon, for others as a whole or partial vocation." A real estate salesman is defined as one who for compensation and as a whole or partial vocation is employed by a real estate broker to do any of the things specified in the definition of a broker.

The act provides that it shall not apply to any one acting in regard to his own property, to any one "holding a duly executed power of attorney from the owner," to any attorney at law acting in his professional capacity, or to any receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, or trustee selling under a deed of trust. It also provides that a single act of selling, etc., shall make the person a real estate broker.

The required license is to be issued by the real estate commissioner upon written application, accompanied in the case of a broker, by the recommendation of two real estate owners certifying that the applicant is "honest, truthful and of good reputation," and in the case of a salesman by a similar recommendation and certification by his employer. The act does not in so many words authorize the commissioner to refuse a license if he is not satisfied as to the honesty, truthfulness, and good reputation of the applicant, but such authority is necessarily implied. For the license a broker is required to pay an annual fee of $10 and a salesman one of $2.

The commissioner is given power to suspend or revoke any license for dishonest dealing by the licensee after the presentation of written charges against him and an opportunity afforded him to be heard. The decision of the commissioner suspending or revoking any license is made subject to review by the courts in accordance with the provisions of the Code for the issuance of writs of review; the action of the courts, however, being limited by the act to determining whether there has been "an abuse of discretion" on the part of the commissioner.

Any one acting as real estate broker or salesman in violation of the act is made liable to punishment, if an individual, by a fine not exceeding $2,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding two years, or by both fine and imprisonment, and, if a corporation, by a fine not exceeding $5,000.

A real estate department is, as we have said, created with the real estate commissioner as its head. The latter is authorized to employ such deputies and assistants as he may need and fix their compensation. No limit is placed on his discretion in this respect, other than the practical limit incident to the fact that all the expenses of the department, including the $5,000 salary of the commissioner himself, are payable only out of a certain fund in the state treasury, which, in turn, is made up solely of fees collected by the department.

[1] Such being the general scope and outline of the act, a number of objections are made to it. The most important of these is that the act is an unreasonable interference with the right of every citizen to engage in a legitimate and useful occupation. This objection is fundamental, and, if sound, the whole act falls, since its sole primary purpose is to hedge about the pursuit of the vocation of a real estate broker or salesman with certain restrictions. That such vocation is a legitimate and useful one cannot be controverted. Nor can it be controverted that the right to engage in a lawful and useful occupation cannot, in effect, be taken away under the guise of regulation. On the other hand, it is equally true that a lawful and useful occupation may be subjected to regulation in the public interest, and that all regulation involves in some degree a limitation upon the exercise of the right regulated. The test is whether or not the limitation imposed is really by way of regulation only; is one whose purpose and effect go no further than throwing reasonable safeguards in the public interest around the exercise of the right. If the limitation is of this character, its imposition is a proper exercise of the police power resident in the Legislature, and whose exercise is one of the latter's most important functions.

Now, the single primary purpose of the act is to require of real estate brokers and salesmen that they be "honest, truthful and of good reputation." All of its provisions, including the requirements of a license, are but incidental to this single purpose and designed to accomplish it. In the nature of things no amount of regulation can insure the possession of those qualities by every one engaged in the business, and it is easy to conceive of regulations which would have this as their sole object and yet be so extreme as practically to take away the general right of engaging in the business. Two questions, therefore, arise regarding such regulations as those here imposed: First, is the general limitation that only persons of good character may engage in the particular business a safeguard which may reasonably be required as to that business? and, second, are the specific limitations prescribed to accomplish the general purpose no more than reasonable therefor?

[2] As to the second question, there is no controversy in the present case, and in fact there could not well be any. It is clear that, if it is permissible to require some assurance of good character, the specific limitation imposed for that purpose by this act that every one seeking to engage in the business shall file a written application accompanied by a certificate of good character is no more than reasonable. The controversy is over the first question, whether or not the general limitation that only persons of good character should engage in the business is a permissible one. The position of counsel opposing the validity of the act is that—

"To prevent a person engaging in a lawful and innocuous business or occupation because of his moral character or reputation is in our opinion an arbitrary invasion of private rights and liberties."

This may be true of some businesses and vocations. It is certainly not true of all. Where the occupation is one of which it can be fairly said that those pursuing it should have certain particular qualifications it is within the power of the Legislature to exact reasonable assurances of those pursuing the occupation that they do possess these qualifications. The most familiar illustrations of this are the qualifications of preliminary training and learning required of professional men such as lawyers, physicians, dentists, pharmacists, and architects. Where the occupation is one wherein those following it act as the agents and representatives of others and in a more or less confidential and fiduciary capacity, it certainly can be fairly said that those pursuing it should have in a particular degree the qualifications of "honesty, truthfulness and good reputation." The occupation of a real estate agent is of just this sort. He acts for others and in a more or less confidential and fiduciary capacity. As a result there is particularly required of him for the proper discharge of his duties honesty and truthfulness, and the Legislature has the right to require some assurance of their possession by every one following the occupation. One strong assurance of their possession is a good reputation.

No extended discussion of this point is necessary. It is definitely settled by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., 242 U. S. 539, 37 Sup. Ct. 217, 61 L. Ed. 480, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 643. The state of Ohio had passed a law requiring every dealer in securities, such as a bond house, to obtain a license from the state superintendent of banks. As a condition of obtaining such a license the dealer was required to establish his good repute to the satisfaction of the state official. The same attack was made upon the law by reason of this provision as is now made upon the California law, but its validity was upheld. So far as this point is concerned, there is certainly no difference between the occupation of a dealer in securities and that of a real estate agent. In fact, the relation of the latter to his client is of a more fiduciary character than that of the security dealer to his customer.

[3] Another and cognate objection is that the act is invalid because it gives the commissioner arbitrary power to determine who may have a license, and therefore who may lawfully engage in the real estate business. If such arbitrary power were in fact conferred by the act, it may well be that the objection would be good. But such power is not conferred either in the granting of licenses or in their revocation. An applicant for a license is entitled to it if he presents the required recommendation and certificate, unless the commissioner is not satisfied that he has, in fact, the qualifications of honesty, truthfulness, and a good reputation; in other words, the commissioner has no discretion unless he doubts the possession by the applicant of those qualifications which it was the purpose of the act to assure.

But it may be said that the power of the commissioner to refuse a license if he is not satisfied as to the character of the applicant practically gives him arbitrary power, as he alone can determine whether he is satisfied or not. This, however, is not true. While the commissioner has the power to refuse a license if he is not satisfied as to the character of the applicant, his discretion is not arbitrary. There must exist facts which reasonably justify his conclusion that the applicant is not of good character and reputation. If such facts do not exist, it is his duty to issue the license, and this duty can be enforced by the courts.

No extended discussion of this objection is necessary, since here, also, the matter is definitely settled by Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., supra. With this such decisions as Los Angeles v. Hollywood Cemetery Association, 124 Cal. 344, 57 Pac. 153, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75, Schaezlein v. Cabaniss, 135 Cal. 466, 67 Pac. 755, 56 L. R. A. 733, 87 Am. St. Rep. 122, and La Junta v. Heath, 38 Colo. 372, 88 Pac. 459, are not in conflict, since the acts or ordinances involved in those cases conferred the power of granting or refusing the right requested without any specification of the conditions upon which it should be granted or refused.

The power conferred was both uncontrolled and unguided.

[4, 5] A third objection is that the act confers judicial powers upon the commissioner, a nonjudicial official. This objection is founded upon the fact that he is given the power after a hearing or opportunity for a hearing to suspend or revoke any license in case the licensee is guilty of any one of a number of acts, all of which come within the general designation of dishonest dealing. But whether the conferring of this power upon the commissioner is constitutionally valid or not we need not determine at this time, and we express no opinion. It is a sufficient answer to the objection, so far as this proceeding goes, that this portion of the act is not directly involved, and that it plainly is but a detail, and not an essential part, of the act, and is separable from the balance without affecting the substantial accomplishment of the purpose for which the act was passed, so that, even if invalid, it invalidity would not render the whole invalid, and in particular would not affect the question involved here, the right of the commissioner to have the expenses of his office paid in the manner provided.

The remaining objections to the act are that in a number of different respects it makes unreasonable discriminations, and is therefore special legislation. Two such alleged discriminations are pointed out by counsel for the respondent. The first is the provision that on a review by the Courts of the commissioner's action in suspending or revoking any license the burden of proof is upon the licensee to show an "abuse of discretion" on the part of the commissioner. This provision is but a part of the general provision giving the commissioner power to suspend or revoke licenses, and what we have just said in regard to the objection to this general provision applies with double force to this part of it. Even if invalid, as to which we express no opinion, the provision is plainly separable from the balance of the act, and does not affect its validity.

[6] The second alleged discrimination is that the salaries of the deputies and employés of the commissioner are not fixed, but their amount is left to the discretion of the commissioner. In many cases it is advisable, if not necessary, that the compensation of employés, even of public employés, be left to the discretion of the official in charge of the department where they are employed and who is responsible for the efficiency of that department. It cannot be said that conferring this power in one case and not in others is the making of an unreasonable distinction.

[7] The remaining objections—all because of alleged unreasonable discriminations—are made by counsel appearing as amici curiæ. The first of these is that the act makes a difference between collectors of rents and collectors of other obligations. Those engaged in collecting rents and not otherwise engaging in the real estate business might well have been omitted from the operation of the act. But the business of collecting rents is so closely connected with the real estate business generally, and it is so usual for the first to be carried on as a part of a general real estate business, that we cannot say the Legislature was not justified in classifying them together and thereby making a distinction between collectors of rent and other collectors.

[8] The second objection of amici curiæ along this line is that an unreasonable distinction is made when the act excepts "persons holding a duly executed power of attorney from the owner." The soundness of this objection depends upon what is meant by a "power of attorney." Power of attorney to do what? The act does not say. Any written authority by one man to act for another may be said to be a power of attorney, and the argument of amici curiæ is that as used in the act in question it must include authority to act as broker merely, to negotiate sales, leases, or other transactions in real property, as distinguished from authority to consummate the transaction. If this be so, they argue, in effect, and argue truly, any broker, while continuing to act solely as a broker, may yet escape from the restrictions of the act by always securing written authority, and there is no reason why any distinction should be made between brokers who always act under written authority and those who do not, so far as subjecting them to regulation is concerned.

Such a construction of the act, however, is not a reasonable one. It would not only render the act invalid, but, even if it did not do this, it would practically render it ineffective, since, as has been said, any broker could secure escape from its provisions merely by being careful to secure written authority in every case. A much more natural construction is that by power of attorney is meant written authority to act for and in place of the principal in consummating the transaction as distinguished from merely negotiating it. This construction removes the objection of unreasonable discrimination; for such an agent is much more than a broker, and there is nothing unreasonable in not applying to him the regulations applicable to brokers.

[9] A third distinction urged by amici curiæ as unreasonable is that between brokers and salesmen. The discriminations between the two made by the act are that brokers pay an annual license fee of $10 and salesmen of $2, and the former is required to furnish certificates of character by two landowners, while the latter furnish certificates by their employers. But certainly a larger fee and a different certificate may reasonably be exacted from a broker engaged in business for himself than are exacted from a salesman working for another.

[10] The fourth point of amici curiæ is that trustees selling under a deed of trust are excepted, and no exception is made of trustees doing anything else than selling, such as leasing or renting, or collecting rents. The reply is that trustees, whether selling or doing something else, do not come within the purview of the act. The express exception of trustees selling under a deed of trust adds nothing, and the act would be the same if it made no mention of trustees.

The fifth point made by amici curiæ is that officers of a corporation licensed to do business as a real estate broker may act as brokers or salesmen without being subject to the requirements of the act. Suffice it to say that we do not so read the act.

There are a number of other objections made, but, inasmuch as counsel themselves say that they are made not so much to impeach the validity of the act as to show its injustice, a consideration addressable to the Legislature, but not to us, no discussion of them is required.

It is ordered that the writ issue as prayed.

RICH v. MOSS BEACH REALTY CO.

(Civ. 2903.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 23, 1919. Rehearing Denied Nov. 22, 1919; Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1919.)

1. TRIAL ⟸396(1)—CONFINEMENT OF FINDINGS TO ISSUES.

Findings should be confined to the facts in issue; the province of the court being to determine, and not to raise, issues.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸714(5)—NO CONSIDERATION OF UNSUPPORTED STATEMENTS IN BRIEFS.

An appellate court will not consider statements in briefs which find no support in the record on appeal.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸846(6)—NO DISREGARD OF EITHER OF CONFLICTING FINDINGS.

In an action for commissions for making sales of land, where in the absence of any evidence on appeal it appears that the finding that plaintiff had a written contract entitling him to 35 per cent. of the price of lots conflicts with the finding that the reasonable value of his services was 25 per cent. of the price, not exceeding the amount paid by the purchasers, the appellate court cannot disregard either of the findings, and must reverse judgment rendered in accordance with the second finding.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by George O. Rich against the Moss Beach Realty Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, and J. J. Lermen, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. E. Pemberton, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The appeal is on the judgment roll alone. The suit is for the balance due on an open book account for commissions claimed by the plaintiff for making sales of land owned by the defendant. The answer was twice amended. In the answer on which the parties went to trial the debt was denied, and a counterclaim also alleged to have been on an open book account was set forth. The case was tried by the court without a jury on June 1, 1916, and it was found that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $2,672.35, which sum was about $100 less than the plaintiff claimed, and it was further found that none of the allegations of the answer or counterclaim was true except the allegation of corporate existence of the defendant. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for the amount found to be due with interest; the aggregate being $3,257.78.

Motion for new trial was granted on September 29, 1916, at which time no appeal from the order was permitted. Code Civ. Proc. § 963. The order limited the new trial to "the single issue as to the value of the services rendered by the plaintiff in his complaint alleged to have been performed, no evidence having been offered or introduced by either party as to the reasonable value of said services, but that as to all other issues said motion for new trial was denied."

According to the new findings, prior to July 1, 1909, the defendant entered into a written contract with the plaintiff employing him as agent to sell its subdivision of real property "for a commision of 35 per cent. of the selling price of the property so sold by him," and that, pursuant to said contract, the plaintiff secured various persons who offered to buy different parcels of land, and the defendant entered into a written contract of purchase and sale with each such person. Then follows in the findings a statement showing a list of names of 25 purchasers, the purchase price of the respective lots agreed to be paid by them in their written contracts with the defendant, the amounts respectively paid by them, and the amounts paid on account of commissions in each instance. The aggregate purchase price was $14,540.50. The amount of commissions at 35 per cent. would have been $5,190.17. The table showed the purchasers had paid on their contracts $5,145.88; the plaintiff had received $2,413.39; the difference between this amount and 35 per cent. of the purchase price is $2,776.78. The court further found that the reasonable value of the plaintiff's services "is 25 per cent. of the purchase price under each contract, not exceeding, however, the amount received by the defendant on account of the purchase price under the respective contracts of purchase," which amount was found to be $2,639.58 on account of which the plaintiff had received $2,413.39 therefore paid him, leaving a balance of $226.19. The court expressly repeated the findings concerning the untruthfulness of the defendant's answer and counterclaim. The judgment was for $226.19 and interest, making a total of $311.43. There was no express finding concerning the balance due on the alleged open book account. In support of the judgment it is argued that such a finding must necessarily be implied.

[1] The appellant argues that the finding in regard to the reasonable value of the services was outside of any issue raised by the pleadings, and that it should be disregarded. The rule is that findings should be confined to the facts in issue; the province of the court being to determine, but not to raise, issues. Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 468; Ortego v. Cordero, 88 Cal. 221, 26 Pac. 80; Rudel v. Los Angeles Co., 118 Cal. 286, 50 Pac. 400; Riverside, etc., Co. v. Gage, 108 Cal. 240, 41 Pac. 299. Under the order granting the motion for new trial upon the single issue of the value of the services, the plaintiff went to trial. The appeal being on the judgment roll alone, it does not appear what objection, if any, the plaintiff made at that time. In support of the judgment and in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it might be inferred that the plaintiff waived objection which might possibly have been made to the trial of that issue. Similarly from the findings it might be inferred that on the trial of that issue the written contract between the plaintiff and the defendant was introduced in evidence, and that other evidence was introduced. None of the evidence is before this court. It may be that there were matters presented for the determination of the trial court upon which, upon proper findings, the second judgment might have been supported.

[2, 3] On behalf of the respondent a brief has been filed in which are unsupported statements of fact concerning the relationship of the parties and the validity and construction of the contract which the trial court found was made. The rule that an appellate court will not consider statements in briefs which find no support in the record on appeal is too well established to require citation of authority. There are other unsupported statements in the respondent's brief which are denied in the closing brief of the appellant. There is nothing in the record by which this issue of fact can be determined by this court. Based on these unwarranted statements in the respondent's brief is the argument that the appellant has not made it to appear on this appeal that justice has miscarried, and that the judgment ought to be affirmed under the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. In the absence of any evidence, it appears the finding that the plaintiff had a written contract entitling him to 35 per cent. of the selling price of lots conflicts with the finding that the reasonable value of plaintiff's services was 25 per cent. of the selling price of the lots, but in no case in excess of the amount paid by the purchasers. This court cannot disregard either of these findings. In view of the conflict it cannot say that the appellant is entitled to a judgment in accordance with the first of the two findings, but if the first finding is correct, it would clearly appear that there was a miscarriage of justice in rendering judgment in accordance with the second finding.

The judgment is reversed.

MERCANTILE TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO v. STOCKTON TERMINAL & E. R. CO. et al. (Civ. 2009.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 10, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 8, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENT ⊂=139—DISCRETION OF COURT IN VACATING DEFAULT.

The granting of motions to set aside defaults is largely in the discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed unless there has been an abuse of such discretion.

2. JUDGMENT ⊂=138(1)—VACATION OF DEFAULT PROPERLY DENIED.

Where defendant failed to plead within the time required and default was entered, the court properly refused to vacate the default, though after entry thereof defendant filed a demurrer.

3. PLEADING ⊂=85(4)—EXTENSION OF TIME.

In suit against railway company, where secretary, on whom service was made but who was not named in complaint as party, procured an order giving him as a defendant further time to demur or answer, which made no mention of railway company, such order did not extend time of latter.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Action by the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, a corporation, against the Stockton Terminal & Eastern Railroad Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, and T. S. Louttit, of Stockton, for respondent.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. This suit was brought by plaintiff against the Stockton Terminal & Eastern Railroad Company to foreclose a mortgage made by it to plaintiff to secure an issue of bonds of the defendant company. When the suit was brought one C. M. Prater was secretary of the defendant corporation. His name did not appear in the complaint as a party to the suit. In the action summons was delivered to the sheriff of San Joaquin county for service and his return thereon was to the effect that he served the same upon the defendant corporation on the 11th day of June, 1917, by delivering to and leaving with C. M. Prater, as secretary of said Stockton Terminal & Eastern Railroad Company in San Joaquin county, a copy of said summons attached to a copy of the complaint therein.

On the 20th day of June, 1917, said court made the following order:

"For good cause shown, it is hereby ordered that C. M. Prater, served as one of the defendants in the above-entitled action, have until the 1st day of July, 1917, to appear and demur or file such other answer as he may desire."

On the 26th day of June, 1917, no answer or demurrer having been filed by the defendant company, the county clerk of said county, on application of the plaintiff, duly entered the default of said defendant. On the 30th day of June, 1917, said defendant company (after its default had been entered) served and filed with the clerk of said court a general demurrer to the complaint in said action.

On the 20th day of December, 1917, the defendant company gave notice of a motion to set aside its default on the ground (as stated in the notice) that it was entered "when defendant's time for appearing, demurring or answering as allowed by the judge of said court had not expired," and upon the ground that it was wrongfully and unlawfully entered by the plaintiff for the purpose of depriving the said defendant of its day in court.

The affidavit upon which said motion was heard, made by C. M. Prater, secretary of the corporation defendant, stated that on June 11th he was served with summons in the action; "that he was not informed by the serving officer and he did not know whether such service was upon him individually or as an officer of said railroad company"; that thereupon he obtained an order from the judge of said court "whereby affiant was granted until some time in July, 1917, to appear in said action; that after the said order was made, and while it was in full force and effect, the plaintiff wrongfully and unlawfully caused default to be entered against the defendant corporation whereby said defendant and the affiant were unlawfully deprived of their day in court and prevented from making its or his appearance in said case and in direct violation of the order of the court."

When said motion to set aside said default came on for hearing it was denied by the court, and thereafter judgment of foreclosure was given and made. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and the only point made is that, under the indicated circumstances, the clerk had no authority to enter the default and that the court erred in denying his motion to set it aside.

[1-3] The foregoing chronological statement shows: (1) That when the clerk entered the default of the defendant corporation its time to appear in the action had fully expired and it was his duty, upon application of the plaintiff, to make the entry he did. (2) That no order had ever been made, either by the court or judge, extending the defendant corporation's time to plead; the order giving further time to plead, made on June 20, 1917, was an order that C. M. Prater, served as one of the defendants, have until July 1st to plead. This was not an order extending the time of the corporation to plead, and it does not appear that said corporation ever asked for any extension of time. (3) After the defendant's default had been regularly entered it had no right to file a demurrer or any other pleading until the default had been set aside. There are some cases holding that, where defendant files a demurrer after his time to plead has expired but before his default has been entered, the court should dispose of it in some way before entering judgment, but this is not such a case. (4) The defendant's motion to set aside the default was properly denied. It is difficult to know on exactly what ground it was made. The affidavit in support of it does not allege mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect. The gist of it seems to be contained in the following:

"That after said order was so made granting further time to affiant to so appear, and while said order was in full force and effect, the plaintiff herein wrongfully and unlawfully caused a clerk's default to be entered against the defendant Stockton Terminal & Eastern Railroad Company whereby said defendant and affiant, as such officer and the person upon whom said summons has been served, were unlawfully deprived of their day in court," etc.

A sufficient answer to all this is found in the fact that no order was ever made extending the time for defendant corporation to plead, and as to affiant, personally, it does not appear that his default was ever entered or that he ever filed any pleading and, lastly, the granting of motions to set aside defaults is largely in the discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed unless there has been an abuse of such discretion. On the showing made in this case it would have been an abuse of discretion to have granted the motion.

The judgment is affirmed.

43 Cal. App. 722

CAMBRIDGE v. RAMSER. (Civ. 2014.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸314(1)—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT IN ACTION BY VERDICT FOR FRAUD.

A complaint by the owner of a sawmill and timber lands, setting up that because of defendant's representations that he could procure money to pay for the same within a reasonable time defendant was admitted into possession, that defendant operated the mill and used logs belonging to the vendor, but failed to pay the price named, though he had been in possession about six months, etc., is sufficient as against general demurrer to state a cause of action, for the court might well consider that the time elapsing was a reasonable time, as what is a reasonable time is a question of fact and depends upon the circumstances of each case.

2. FRAUD ⟸43—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT TO STATE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR FRAUD.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff, the owner of timber land and a sawmill, admitted defendant into possession by virtue of his representations that he could obtain funds to pay for the same, etc., that defendant operated the mill but had not paid for the same or the logs used, held, as against a general demurrer, to state a cause of action for fraud, upon which theory plaintiff would be entitled to treat the contract as void and recover possession of the property.

3. WASTE ⟸20—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT TO ENJOIN INJURY TO REAL PROPERTY.

A complaint by the owner of a sawmill and timber land, setting up that defendant had been admitted into possession of the mill under an agreement to pay therefor, and had used logs and timber but had not paid the price agreed, etc., held sufficient, as against general demurrer, to state a cause of action to prevent and enjoin a threatened injury to real property in the nature of waste.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence L. Raker, Judge.

Action by W. R. Cambridge against Benjamin C. Ramser. From a judgment for plaintiff, after defendant's demurrer was overruled and defendant declined to plead further, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Oscar Gibbons, of Alturas, for appellant.

Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The plaintiff in the action alleged:

That he is the owner of a certain sawmill and certain lands connected therewith, upon which there is a large quantity of timber suitable for manufacturing lumber; "that in the month of January or February, 1918, the said defendant represented to plaintiff that he could secure the necessary money to purchase the said mill from plaintiff, and agreed with plaintiff that if said plaintiff would place him in the possession of the said sawmill and furnish him with timber to run the said sawmill he could and would procure the money to pay plaintiff for the same within a reasonable time thereafter; that, relying upon the said representation of defendant that he could within a reasonable time secure the money to pay to plaintiff the purchase price of said mill, plaintiff put the said defendant in possession of the said sawmill and furnished him with a large amount of logs then lying in the yard of said mill, and gave him permission to use the said logs for manufacturing lumber with the said mill, and gave him permission to cut and use the said timber standing and being on plaintiff's said land for use in the said mill; that the said defendant has failed and neglected to pay to plaintiff any part or portion of the purchase price of said mill, and has used in running the said mill all of said logs lying in said yard, and has cut timber in said lands of plaintiff for the use of the said mill; that it was agreed that defendant would pay to plaintiff for the said sawmill the sum of $500; that said defendant also agreed with plaintiff that he would pay him at the rate of $1 per thousand feet for all logs and timber used by defendant in running the said sawmill, taken from the timber belonging to plaintiff as aforesaid; and that the said defendant has, since he took possession of the said sawmill, used therein about 150,000 feet of logs and timber in running the said sawmill, and has used the sums realized from the lumber produced from said logs and timber for his own uses and purposes and has paid nothing to plaintiff on account of said logs or timber; that all of the representations of defendant made to plaintiff to induce him to place the said defendant in possession of the said sawmill and furnish him with the said logs and lumber, to the effect that he could and would procure the money to pay for the same within a reasonable time, were and are false and fraudulent and were designedly, falsely, and fraudulently made by defendant to plaintiff, with the intention and for the purpose of inducing plaintiff, and did induce plaintiff, to place the defendant in the possession of said sawmill and permit the defendant to use the said logs and timber."

There is a further allegation that defendant is wholly insolvent and is threatening and intends to remain in possession of said sawmill, and to cut and use the plaintiff's said timber to plaintiff's great damage and loss, and that the defendant is now, wrongfully and unlawfully and without right, withholding the possession of said sawmill from the plaintiff. There was a demurrer to the complaint upon the ground "that said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute any cause of action against the defendant herein." The demurrer was overruled, and defendant declining to answer, judgment by default was entered for plaintiff, from which the appeal has been taken.

[1-3] While the complaint is somewhat inartificially drawn, it is quite manifest that it states a cause of action, and that the general demurrer was properly overruled. Viewing the complaint in one aspect, we find the allegation of an agreement to sell on the part of plaintiff and to purchase by defendant a certain sawmill belonging to the former for the sum of $500, and also certain logs and growing timber on the land of plaintiff for the consideration of $1 per thousand feet; that the purchase price was to be paid within a reasonable time; that in pursuance of said agreement defendant took possession of said property and has not paid any part of the purchase price. The only element of the agreement that is at all uncertain is as to the time when the purchase price was to become due. It appears, however, that the agreement was entered into in January or February of 1918, and the action was commenced on August 29th of the same year. This period might very properly be determined by the court to constitute a reasonable time; in other words, the facts were sufficient for the court to conclude that the obligation to pay the purchase price had matured. If there were any special considerations that would tend to rebut or to controvert this theory, it was incumbent upon the defendant to set them up in his answer. The question of "reasonable time" is generally a question of fact and depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. Luckart v. Ogden, 30 Cal. 547. Again, the pleader has attempted to set up fraud, which would avoid the entire contract of sale and purchase. The facts are hardly alleged according to the accepted rules of pleading, but they are probably sufficient as against a general demurrer. Upon this theory the contract could be treated as entirely void and plaintiff could recover the possession of the property thus fraudulently obtained by defendant. In another view of the complaint it may be regarded as an action to prevent and enjoin a threatened injury to real property in the nature of waste. Hatton v. Gregg, 4 Cal. App. 545, 88 Pac. 594.

At any rate, since there was no demurrer for uncertainty, we are satisfied that the ruling of the lower court was correct, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

WEBSTER v. WEBSTER. (Civ. 3071.)

1. DIVORCE ⟹235, 286 — ALIMONY DISCRETIONARY WITH TRIAL COURT; REVIEW OF DISCRETION.

The granting of alimony in actions for divorce is a matter which lies largely in the discretion of the trial court, and it must be made to clearly and affirmatively appear upon the face of the entire record in the case that this discretion has been abused before the appellate tribunal will be moved to interfere where alimony is denied.

2. DIVORCE ⟹235—DENIAL OF ALIMONY SUSTAINED.

Denial of alimony held not an abuse of discretion, although defendant husband had property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by Harriet White Webster against Daniel Webster for a divorce. From a judgment granting the divorce but denying alimony, the plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. B. Churchill, of Lakeport, and R. Clarence Ogden, of San Francisco, for appellant.

C. M. Crawford, of Lakeport, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff in an action for divorce wherein she was granted a divorce from the defendant on the ground of cruelty and failure to provide, but was denied alimony. The appeal is upon the judgment roll, and the sole contention of the appellant is that the findings of the trial court do not support that portion of the judgment which refuses to allow the plaintiff alimony.

The findings are to the effect that the defendant was guilty of the specific acts of cruelty set forth in the complaint as a ground of divorce, and also that the defendant, while able so to do has been guilty of failure to provide; that the plaintiff is without means of self-support; that the defendant is the owner of certain separate real property of the value of $4,000, upon which there is an indebtedness of $1,800, secured by a trust deed; that the defendant has also certain miscellaneous separate personal property in the way of farm produce, implements, and animals of the value of about $600, and is indebted in store accounts to the extent of about $1,500; that the plaintiff has no interest in any part of said property; that during the trial of the action the defendant paid to the plaintiff on motions for alimony the sum of $150; that the plaintiff has no means whatever and is physically unable to earn her own livelihood and maintenance, and has incurred obligations during the trial of the action for board and for counsel fees and costs which she is unable to pay. Notwithstanding these findings of fact the court refused to allow the plaintiff either permanent alimony or counsel fees or costs, and it is the appellant's contention herein that it was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court to so refuse the plaintiff this relief, while granting her a divorce on the grounds of the defendant's cruelty and failure to provide.

This appeal is before us on the judgment roll alone, and it is so by the plaintiff's choice. The evidence educed before the trial court is not before us, and it has been omitted from this record also by the plaintiff's choice. The defendant had no selection nor any way of adding to this record the evidence in the case, even had he desired so to do. We are therefore left entirely in the dark as to the causes as they might have been disclosed by the evidence which moved the trial court to refuse to allow the plaintiff either alimony, counsel fees, or costs, while granting her prayer for divorce.

[1] The granting of these incidental forms of relief in actions for divorce is a matter which lies largely in the discretion of the trial court, and it must be made to clearly and affirmatively appear upon the face of the entire record in the case that this discretion has been abused before the appellate tribunal will be moved to interfere. Such a record is not before us, but from the admissions in the pleadings and the findings in the case certain facts appear which may serve to indicate that a state of things might have been shown in the evidence which must have justified the trial court in severing the marriage relation between the parties hereto without further relief to either. The parties were married in the month of July, 1914; this action for divorce was commenced on August 10, 1917. Both of the parties had been married before and both had children by such prior marriages. The family troubles of the pair began shortly after their union, and were apparently stormy during the brief period of its continuance. Much of these troubles grew out of the bringing together of these two sets of children in the same household, if we are to accept the plaintiff's own recital of the causes of these family discords.

[2] These fleeting glimpses of the case may well serve to indicate a state of the evidence on its trial which would have fully justified the action of the trial court in refusing to the plaintiff any further relief than that of the temporary alimony awarded her and the bare decree of divorce. This being so, we are constrained to hold that a sufficient showing of abuse of discretion in this regard has not been made by this appeal upon the judgment roll alone.

SLATER v. RAUER et al. (Civ. 2936.)

1. BROKERS ⟸94—AUTHORIZATION TO SELL AND RECEIPT FOR DEPOSIT DOES NOT AUTHORIZE CONTRACT OF SALE.

An authorization of real estate broker, headed "Authority to Sell," addressed to the broker, stating, "You are hereby exclusively authorized to sell and receipt for a deposit on sale of the following described property," the sale price being fixed and signed by the owner who is to furnish a good and sufficient conveyance free from all incumbrances, held not sufficient to authorize the broker to execute a contract of sale binding the owner.

2. BROKERS ⟸94—AUTHORIZATION TO SELL AND RECEIPT FOR DEPOSIT DOES NOT AUTHORIZE CONTRACT OF SALE.

An authority to a broker to sell the lands of his principal does not constitute a sufficient authorization to execute a contract with purchaser binding on the owner, merely because the broker is entitled to receipt for a deposit on sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by J. L. Slater against J. J. Rauer and another. Judgment for defendants on demurrer, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Watt, Miller, Thornton & Watt, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harrison S. Robinson, of Oakland, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in the defendants' favor after an order sustaining their demurrer to the plaintiff's amended complaint, the latter having declined to amend.

The action is one for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate purporting to have been made with the plaintiff by a firm of real estate agents on behalf of the defendant Rauer, claiming to act as such agents and having the right to make said contract of sale under an alleged authorization so to do executed by Rauer. The complaint sets forth the contract of sale and the alleged authorization in hæc verba, and the only question for decision presented to the court upon appeal is as to whether said authorization was sufficient in its terms to empower the said agents to execute the contract of sale in question and to bind the defendants thereby to execute a conveyance to the plaintiff of the premises in question; the defendant Doyle having been given a conveyance of the property by Rauer after the execution and recordation of the aforesaid contract of sale.

The authorization upon which the plaintiff relies is headed "Authority to Sell" and is addressed to Pollard & Son, the firm of real estate agents who attempted to make the contract of sale by virtue of its terms. It states:

"You are hereby exclusively authorized to sell and receipt for a deposit on sale of the following described property."

Here follows the description. The authorization then proceeds to fix the price at which the property shall be sold at $20,000, "or such lower figure as I may agree to accept," and then provides that the undersigned, J. J. Rauer, is "to furnish a good and sufficient conveyance free from all incumbrances."

The appellant contends that this authorization was sufficient to empower the said firm of Pollard & Son to execute the contract of sale of the premises described herein to him for the purchase price of $20,000, and that he is entitled to have such contract of sale specifically performed by said Rauer and his subsequent transferee.

[1] We cannot give our assent to this contention. The courts of this state have uniformly held ever since the early case of Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 617, that the use of the words "authorized to sell" in a real estate agent's agreement does not authorize the agent holding the same to enter into a written contract of sale with a customer for the property described therein which would be binding upon the principal. Duffy v. Hobson, supra; Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 616, 18 Pac. 758; Stemler v. Bass, 153 Cal. 791, 96 Pac. 809; Church v. Collins, 18 Cal. App. 745, 124 Pac. 552; Salter v. Ives, 171 Cal. 790, 155 Pac. 84; Thompson v. Scholl, 32 Cal. App. 4, 161 Pac. 1006.

[2] It is, however, contended by the appellant herein that while the words "authorized to sell" might not of themselves convey power to the agents to execute a binding contract of sale, that these words may be aided by other phrases in the authorization so as to give this grant of power; and in this connection the appellant insists that the phrase in the document in question which entitled the real estate agents "to receipt for a deposit on sale" would work such extension of power. But certain of the cases deal with this precise question, holding that the inclusion of this clause in the authorization will not suffice to so extend its terms. In the cases of Armstrong v. Lowe, supra, Church v. Collins, supra, and Thompson v. Scholl, supra, this precise clause was incorporated in the several authorizations there under review, and in each of said cases it was held that the authority to execute a contract of sale binding upon the owner had not been conferred. In the case of Church v. Collins, supra, the court used the following language in regard to an agent's authorization fully as strong in its terms as the one under review in the instant case:

"We are of opinion that the agreement between the defendant and the real estate brokers conferred no authority upon the latter to execute a contract for the sale of the property involved here to the plaintiff or to any other party, and that therefore the court properly sustained the demurrer to the complaint. * * * The rule deduced from the authorities with regard to the power or right of agents to execute contracts of sale of real property for the owners thereof is and ought to be that, if such authority is intended to be conferred, the language used in conferring it should be so clear, distinct, and certain in its meaning to that end as to leave no room for doubting that such is its purpose."

The appellant directs our attention to the case of Bacon v. Davis, 9 Cal. App. 83, 98 Pac. 71, as enunciating a rule applicable to the case at bar. In that case the agents were authorized by the owner "to sell for me, in my name," the property in question; and the court held these words sufficient to authorize the execution of a contract of sale. In the case of Church v. Collins, however, the ruling in the case of Bacon v. Davis was expressly called to the attention of the appellate tribunal, and that court therein distinguished that case from the case there at bar in the following words:

"A comparison of the agreement in the case at bar with the one in the Bacon Case will readily disclose a radical distinction between the two. Here there is no such authority given the brokers as is necessarily implied from the language in the Bacon agreement, 'to sell for me, in my name'—language that can import nothing short of an intention in the vendor to bestow upon his agent the right and the power to execute in his (the vendor's) name a contract to convey."

The same distinction was pointed out in the cases of Stemler v. Bass, supra, and Thompson v. Scholl, supra. In view of what seems to be a settled line of authority as set forth in the foregoing cases, we are constrained to hold that the agents' authorization upon which the appellant relies in the instant case was not sufficiently ample in its grant of power to justify the agents holding the same in their attempt to execute a contract of sale with the plaintiff and appellant herein which would be binding upon their principal or his transferee.

It follows that the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

VAN DEMARK v. CALIFORNIA HOME EXTENSION ASS'N et al. (Civ. 3019.)

1. CONTRACTS ⟸250 — DISSATISFACTION CLAUSES; REASONABLENESS OF RESCISSION.

Where a party to a contract is given the option to return property, or refuse to perform, if dissatisfied, he may exercise his option without any practical or utilitarian reason where the right involved is one which is submitted to his taste, or fancies, feelings, or judgment; but, when it is apparent that the question of satisfaction relates to the commercial value or quality of the subject-matter of the contract, it must be shown that it is deficient or defective in these respects, and that the dissatisfaction is reasonable and well founded.

2. CONTRACTS ⟸250, 282—RIGHT TO REJECT OR RESCIND IF DISSATISFIED.

Where there is nothing to justify the contrary construction, the general rule in regard to contracts wherein one party has the right to rescind or reject if dissatisfied is that the party to be satisfied is the judge of his own satisfaction, subject only to the limitation that he must act in good faith, and, if he does so act and is really dissatisfied, he may reject the work or the article on the ground that it is not satisfactory to him.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸84—CONSTRUCTIVE RIGHT TO RESCIND IF DISSATISFIED.

A clause in a contract of sale of land that, "if after completion of payments the buyer should be dissatisfied with the investment, the association stands ready * * * to buy back the land by paying the buyer the amount of the purchase price," permitted the buyer to exercise his option to require the seller to repurchase if he became dissatisfied with his investment, and such right was not dependent upon a failure in value of the property or a breach of any conditions of the contract.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸84—RIGHT TO EXERCISE OPTION TO RESCIND BASED ON GOOD FAITH.

In an action to require a vendor of land to repurchase under a dissatisfaction clause in the contract of sale, an allegation by purchaser that he became dissatisfied, which was pleaded and testified to, was sufficient, although it was incumbent on plaintiff to show good faith.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸84—OPTION TO RESCIND "BETWEEN THE FIFTH AND SIXTH YEAR FROM DATE."

Under a clause in a contract of sale of land to the effect that the purchaser could require the vendor to repurchase "between the fifth and sixth year from date" of planting, a demand that vendor repurchase, made on July 17, 1915, was made between the fifth and sixth year after planting, date of planting being July 28, 1910, a reasonable construction of such contract requiring that the clause be construed to mean during the sixth year.

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸84—OPTION TO RESCIND DURING "SIXTH YEAR."

The term "sixth year" in a contract of sale of land providing that the purchaser could require the vendor to repurchase any time during the sixth year following the date of the contract, which was dated February 7, 1910, meant the year starting February 7, 1915, and ending February 7, 1916.

7. CONTRACTS ⟸154 — REASONABLE CONSTRUCTION FOLLOWED.

Where one construction of a contract would make the contract unreasonable, unfair, unusual, and extraordinary, and another construction, equally consistent with the language, would make it reasonable, fair, and just, the latter construction will be adopted.

8. CONTRACTS ⟸169—SURROUNDING CIRCUMSTANCES CONSIDERED IN CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

Where a contract is ambiguous, the circumstances surrounding and known to both parties at the time of the execution of the contract may be taken into consideration in determining the meaning intended to be conveyed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Harry S. Van Demark against the California Home Extension Association and M. V. Hartranft. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. T. Quinn, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bowen & Bailie, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The only questions on this appeal arise on the construction and application of provisions in a contract for the sale of land, whereby it is agreed that in the event of the purchaser becoming dissatisfied with the investment the seller shall buy back the land.

The complaint contained two causes of action, based on agreements to repurchase, under separate contracts for the sale of separate tracts, and judgment was against the defendants, appellants here. The repurchase clause in the first contract is as follows:

"Art. 10. If after completion of payments the buyer should be dissatisfied with the investment, the association stands ready at any time between the fifth and sixth year from date of planting to buy back the land by paying the buyer the amount of the purchase price."

The second provides:

"Art. 6. If after completion of purchase the buyer should be dissatisfied with the investment, the association guarantees at any time during the sixth year following date of this contract * * * to buy back the land."

It will only be necessary to incidentally refer to any other subject-matter of these contracts, as no dispute exists on any other of the conditions pleaded.

The complaint also contains an allegation that within the period specified in the contracts plaintiff became dissatisfied with his investments, and so notified the defendant corporation, and demanded that the agreement to repurchase be fulfilled. No facts are stated as to reasons or grounds for dissatisfaction with the investment. Defendants urged on demurrer that without some showing of reasonable grounds for dissatisfaction the complaint does not state a cause of action, and the overruling of this demurrer is one of the alleged errors on appeal. It is claimed by respondent that certain facts set up in the answer gave substantial reasons for dissatisfaction with the investment, thus supplementing the complaint, and there was evidence introduced on this point; but the court found that the matters pleaded in the answer were not true, and, as no error is claimed as to such finding, the question is purely one of law as to whether under the terms of this agreement it was incumbent on the plaintiff to plead and prove facts constituting reasonable grounds for dissatisfaction with his investment.

[1, 2] The distinction is well recognized, though the line cannot always be very clearly drawn, in actions arising on these "dissatisfaction clauses," that where the right involved is one which is submitted to the taste or fancy, feelings, or judgment of the party in whose favor the option is given, it may be exercised without any practical or utilitarian reason; but, when it is apparent that the question of satisfaction relates to the commercial value or quality of the subject-matter of the contract, it must be shown that it is deficient or defective in these respects, and that the dissatisfaction is reasonable and well founded. "But where there is nothing to justify the contrary construction, the general rule is that the party to be satisfied is the judge of his own satisfaction, subject only to the limitation in most jurisdictions that he must act in good faith, and, if he does so act and is really dissatisfied, he may reject the work or the article on the ground that it is not satisfactory to him." Tiffany v. Pacific Sewer Pipe Co., 182 Pac. 428. Such construction of the rule has been applied to contracts for a suit of clothes, a portrait, a musical instrument, a carriage, a steam heater, a literary article for a magazine, horses, employment of a servant, dissatisfaction with a home furnished, and with security for performance of an obligation. 9 Cyc. 618, and citations; Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. 291, 2 Atl. 230, 56 Am. Rep. 207; McCarren v. McNulty, 7 Gray (Mass.) 139; Brown v. Foster, 113 Mass. 136, 18 Am. Rep. 463; Zaliski v. Clark, 44 Conn. 218, 26 Am. Rep. 446; Moore v. Robinson, 92 Ill. 491. It has been held in California that an agreement to furnish title satisfactory to the purchaser was not met by a merely good and marketable title, if the purchaser himself was not satisfied. Parkside Realty Co. v. MacDonald, 166 Cal. 426, 137 Pac. 21; Allen v. Pockwitz, 103 Cal. 85, 36 Pac. 1039, 42 Am. St. Rep. 99; Church v. Shanklin, 95 Cal. 626, 30 Pac. 789, 17 L. R. A. 207.

[3, 4] The contract considered under the decisions cited by appellant are for the most part clearly distinguishable from the contract under consideration here. They involve the quality or value of things in common use which have a fixed and recognized standard of fitness and worth, and concerning which it is fair and equitable to require a purchaser to be satisfied with the commonly accepted standard of excellence. And sometimes, too, the courts have been controlled in their rulings on this question by the equities involved in cases where the exercise of a captious and unreasonable feeling of dissatisfaction would involve the other party to the contract in serious loss or damage. Hawkins v. Graham, 149 Mass. 284, 21 N. E. 312, 14 Am. St. Rep. 422. We think it is clear in this case that the purpose of the agreement to repurchase in the event the buyer should become dissatisfied with his investment was to submit the matter to the personal option and judgment of the purchaser. The exercise of this right is not dependent upon a failure in value of the property, or a breach of any conditions of the contract. It was made a question alone of his dissatisfaction with the "investment"—with that particular disposition of his capital which tied it up in this California land—a matter which might develop into a condition of personal dissatisfaction entirely independent of values or quality. The fulfillment of the terms of the agreement, moreover, does not involve the loss of the vendor's property. It amounts only to a rescission. He gets his property back and refunds the purchase money with interest. It was probably incumbent on the plaintiff to show good faith, and that he was really dissatisfied; but an allegation that he did become dissatisfied, which was pleaded and testified to, was sufficient. Incidentally it appears by the plaintiff's evidence not only that he was dissatisfied, but that he had grounds for his dissatisfaction, in that by reason of unseasonable frosts the growing eucalyptus trees on his land had been injured. The defendants pleaded by their answer that the injury to the premises resulting from the freeze was the fault of plaintiff, but the court found against this defense, and there was evidence to the contrary; but in any event the finding is not made an issue on this appeal.

[5] Appellants further contend that the exercise of the right to demand a repurchase under the "dissatisfied" clauses of the contracts came too late in the first instance, and too early in the second. It is argued that the obligation to buy back the land under the first contract "at any time between the fifth and sixth year from the date of planting" was limited to the infinitesimal period between the close of the last day of the fifth year and the beginning of the first day of the sixth year. It is agreed that the date of planting referred to was the 28th of July, 1910. The declaration of dissatisfaction and demand that defendant repurchase was made on July 17, 1915—about the middle of the sixth year after the date of planting. A literal and exact interpretation of the language used would sustain appellants' contention. But such an interpretation would be absurd and unreasonable. Inapt though the language may be, it means, in the common acceptance, the period between the last of the fifth and the last of the sixth year, or during the sixth year. As counsel for appellants admits in his brief, the contracts were doubtless drawn by and on forms prepared by the defendant corporation; and to permit the defeat of this contract by the refinement of construction here demanded would be a travesty on justice.

[6] The contention that the demand on the second contract was premature is even more untenable. It was there provided that the defendant corporation "guarantees at any time during the sixth year following the date of this contract to buy back the land." The date of the contract was February 7, 1910. It is not the sixth year after 1910, but the sixth year after February 7, 1910, that was specified. The first year after or following the date of the contract expired February 7, 1911; and the fifth year expired February 7, 1915. The declaration and demand by plaintiff was made on the 12th of August, 1915, which was during the sixth year.

[7, 8] Appellants' own guns may properly be turned against them in this connection by quoting their argument and citation on another point of construction, from another part of their brief:

"There is no better rule of construction than that laid down by this [Supreme] court in the case of Stein v. Archibald, 151 Cal. 220, [90 Pac. 536] where it is said: 'It is a well-settled principle applicable to the construction of contracts that where one construction would make the contract unreasonable, unfair, or unusual and extraordinary, and another construction, equally consistent with the language, would make it reasonable, fair, and just, that the latter construction is the one which must be adopted. It is also a principle of construction with respect to ambiguous contracts that the circumstances surrounding and known to both the parties at the time of the execution of the contract may be taken into consideration in determining the meaning intended to be conveyed.'"

It is apparent that it was the intention of the parties that if, for any reason not growing out of the wrong or fraud of the purchaser, he became dissatisfied with his investment under the first contract, the vendor would repurchase at any time during the sixth year after July 17, 1915, and, if he was dissatisfied after the completion of his purchase under the second contract, that the vendor would repurchase at any time during the sixth year after date of the contract. That he did become dissatisfied with these contracts and was entitled to exercise the option given him against the defendant corporation is sufficiently pleaded and proved.

The rulings and judgment of the court are supported by the pleadings, evidence, and findings.

The judgment is affirmed.

STEWART v. BOWIE. (Civ. 2861.)

1. BROKERS ⟸64(1)—COMPENSATION NOT AFFECTED BY SUBSEQUENT DEFAULT OF PURCHASER.

Unless there is a provision in the contract to the contrary, a real estate broker earns his commission and it is payable when he produces a purchaser, and the broker cannot be deprived of the agreed compensation because deferred payments are not made by the purchaser, or other terms of the contract not carried out.

2. BROKERS ⟸64(1) — AGREEMENT TO PAY COMPENSATION ENFORCEABLE THOUGH SALE NOT CONSUMMATED.

A contract containing a report signed by real estate brokers that they have sold certain property on certain terms, followed by a statement signed by the purchaser that he agrees to buy the property upon the terms specified, adding, however, that the sale is to be consummated in the office of the brokers, underneath which appears the words, "I hereby approve sale of the within described property and agree to pay L. & H. (the brokers) on demand the sum of $1,500 for their services," held an agreement between the owner, the prospective purchaser and brokers, and that the owner's promise was addressed to the brokers, as well as to the purchaser, and the brokers were entitled to such compensation, although the sale was not finally consummated by a transfer of the property.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by F. L. Stewart against Henry P. Bowie. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Randolph V. Whiting, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arthur H. Redington, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to recover a commission on the sale of real estate. Judgment went for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Briefly the facts of the case are these: On November 26, 1916, the defendant in writing appointed plaintiff's assignor, Lyon & Hoag, a corporation, his exclusive agent for the period of 20 days, to sell his home, situate in San Mateo county, for $80,000, said agent to receive a commission of 5 per cent. in the event that it effected a sale under said authorization. On the following day the agent secured from one Ralston Wilbur an offer in writing to purchase said property for the sum of $60,000, payable $6,000 cash in hand, and the balance in 60 days, or upon completion of the examination of title, the sale to be consummated in the office of the agent. This written offer was accepted by defendant by indorsing thereon the words:

"I hereby approve the sale of the within described property, and agree to pay Lyon & Hoag on demand the sum of $1,500 for their services."

The defendant performed his part of the agreement, and also extended the purchaser's time a period of 60 days in which to make payment of said balance; the title to the property was good; a deed conveying it was duly prepared, and was ready for tender and delivery to the vendee at the time and place appointed for the consummation of the transaction, but the vendee failed to perform his part of the agreement, and paid nothing further than the amount accompanying his offer to purchase.

[1] Unless there is a provision in the contract to the contrary, a real estate broker, employed to negotiate a sale of land, earns his commission, and it is payable when he produces, within the time allowed, a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to take the property on the terms prescribed, or with whom the owner enters into a contract upon those or other terms satisfactory to him, and the broker cannot be deprived of the agreed compensation because deferred payments are not made by the purchaser, or other terms of the contract not carried out. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 352, 33 Pac. 1105; Jauman v. McCusick, 166 Cal. 522, 137 Pac. 254. That such is the general rule in this state is not disputed by the respondent, but he urges that the appellant's assignor has not brought himself within it for the reason that the promise of the defendant to pay the amount sued for, namely, $1,500, was not made to the broker, but to the proposed purchaser; and, as the purchaser did not in fact complete his contract by taking and paying for the property, the defendant's promise to pay the commission cannot be enforced. In making this contention the respondent relies upon a line of cases in which this court has held that where there has been no previous contract of employment with the broker, and the owner's promise to pay him a commission is found only in a contract entered into between the owner and a prospective purchaser of the property, if the latter should fail to carry out his undertaking to purchase, the owner is released from his promise to pay the broker's commission. Jennings v. Jordan, 31 Cal. App. 335, 160 Pac. 576; Brion v. Cahill, 34 Cal. App. 258, 165 Pac. 704. In such cases the broker, not having the protection of the ordinary broker's contract for compensation for services to be performed, must stand or fall by the contract actually entered into; and, if he has seen fit to allow the payment of his compensation to be dependent upon the performance of a contract made between other parties than himself, he cannot complain if through the nonperformance of that contract his own contingent rights be lost.

[2] The facts of the present case, however, bring it within the general rule above announced as to the right of a broker to his commission. There was a valid employment of the broker with an agreement for his compensation; the production by the broker of a prospective purchaser within the time limit of his employment, although at a lower price than specified, and an acceptance by the owner of such prospective purchaser on modified terms by a valid contract in writing. This contract as to its form is somewhat ambiguous. It contains, first, a statement or report signed by the broker that it has sold the defendant's property on certain terms, detailing them, to Ralston Wilbur. This is followed by a statement signed by Wilbur that he agrees to buy the property upon the terms specified in said statement or report, adding, however, that the sale is to be consummated in the office of the broker. Underneath this appears the following, signed by the defendant:

"I hereby approve sale of the within described property, and agree to pay Lyon & Hoag on demand the sum of $1,500 for their services."

We think it very questionable whether this writing can be construed as an agreement exclusively between the defendant and Wilbur. The major part of it is contained over the signature of the broker; and if the promise of the defendant therein contained, "I * * * agree to pay Lyon & Hoag on demand the sum of $1,500 for their services," is to be construed merely as a promise made to Wilbur, and not as being also addressed to the broker, it leaves the defendant in this dilemma: That his original agreement with the broker is unmodified, and, instead of being liable to pay him $1,500, his liability is measured by his original authorization, under which it would amount to the sum of $3,000, being 5 per cent. on $60,000. We think that the reasonable construction of the writing in question is that the owner, the prospective purchaser, and the broker were all parties to it, their respective obligations and rights being easily discoverable therefrom. The defendant's promise to pay the broker $1,500 was addressed to Lyon & Hoag, and his approval of the sale constituted an acceptance of the offer made by Wilbur. Thus construed, the defendant acknowledges his liability to pay the broker the sum of $1,500; and the fact that the sale was not finally consummated by a transfer of the defendant's property cannot be held to affect the broker's rights.

It follows from what we have said that the court was in error in denying the plaintiff's motion for a new trial and in rendering judgment in favor of the defendant.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

LAUZIER v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.

(Civ. 3107.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=361—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; RENTING HOUSES NOT A "BUSINESS" WITHIN THE ACT.

The provision of the Workmen's Compensation Act, as amended by St. 1917, p. 831, that "the words 'trade, business, profession or occupation of his employé,' shall be taken to include any undertaking actually engaged in by him with some degree of regularity," must be interpreted as though the word "business" immediately preceded the word "undertaking"; the amendment being intended to clarify the original terms of the enactment.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=361—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT; OWNING AND RENTING OF HOUSES NOT A "BUSINESS."

The mere owning and renting of a house or houses for the purpose of investment, conceding that such owner has no particular or principal business, is not a "business" within the Workmen's Compensation Act as amended by St. 1917, p. 831.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Business.]

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by J. B. Wilson, opposed by Clotilde Lauzier, employer. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation for injuries, and employer applied for certiorari. Award annulled.

Walter F. Dunn, of Monrovia, and John P. Dunn, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Petitioner was the housekeeper, living with her son-in-law and daughter, where she performed some service and for which she received, as expressed in her own language, her "board and upkeep." In addition to this she was given by a son the sum of $25 per month to assist in her support. At the same time she owned four small frame houses, which she rented to tenants, the net income from which, offsetting expenses, appears to have been, during the period immediately preceding the event concerned herein, no amount whatsoever. An agent attended to the renting of these houses and collected the rental thereof. This agent employed a carpenter to repair the roof of one of the houses; the time consumed was about one hour, and the charge made for the service 30 cents. While descending from the roof the carpenter fell and was injured. He afterwards prosecuted a claim against the petitioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The commissioners, by a majority decision, made an award against petitioner, requiring the payment of a considerable sum of money for hospital bills, physicians' charges and expenses, together with a weekly allowance to continue during disability. It is the contention of the petitioner that the award made to the applicant was without authority of law and should be annulled. The particular finding made by the commission the conclusions contained in which the petitioner contends are not justified by the evidence, was the following:

"The general and usual occupation of the defendant was that of housekeeper. She owned four houses which she rented for residence purposes, upon one of which houses the applicant was employed as aforesaid, to make certain repairs upon the roof. Such repairs could have been made within one day, and at a cost less than $100, and said employment was therefore casual. But the maintaining and renting of said houses was a trade, business, profession, or occupation of the employer, and the repair of said houses was a service tending toward the preservation, maintenance, or operation of the business premises or property of the employer, and therefore that at the time of said injury the employé was not engaged in any of the occupations or employments excluded by section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 from the provisions of said act, and the employé and the employer were subject to the compensation provisions of said act and to the jurisdiction of this commission."

The case here turns altogether upon the question as to whether the owning and renting of the four small houses constituted a "business" within the meaning of the Compensation Act. That act, as amended in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 831, at 836), provides in part as follows:

"The phrase 'course of the trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer' shall be taken to include all services tending toward the preservation, maintenance or operation of the business, business premises or business property of the employer. The words 'trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer' shall be taken to include any undertaking actually engaged in by him with some degree of regularity, the trade-name, articles of incorporation or principal business of the employer to the contrary notwithstanding."

As we understood the argument of respondent, it is not contended that under the ordinary definition to be given to the terms "trade or business," the owning and renting of a house or houses by a person would bring such person within the terms of the Compensation Act. If the conclusion were otherwise, then it would be immaterial whether the individual owned 1 or 20 houses, so long as they were rented to other persons and an income derived therefrom. Under the English act, which has furnished the model and substance for many of the state enactments covering this subject, including our own (Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Cal. 614, 171 Pac. 429, L. R. A. 1918F, 856), it has been directly held that a landlord owning several houses and having an interest in others, all of which were let to tenants, was not engaged in "a trade or business" within the meaning of the law. Petitioner has cited to this point a pertinent decision, that being Bargewell v. Daniel, 98 Law Times Repts. 257, cited in Re Gaynor, 217 Mass. 86, 104 N. E. 339, L. R. A. 1916A, 363. Our own Supreme Court, in Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Industrial Accident Commission, 178 Pac. 960, made this observation:

"We should keep in mind the fact that the Compensation Act is held constitutional only because it imposes a charge not upon the individual employer, but upon the branch of industry in which he is engaged, and gives the employer opportunity of protecting himself by proper insurance."

[1, 2] It is argued, however, by respondent, in justification of the award made that the amendment to the act made in 1917 worked an extension of the ordinary definition to be applied to the terms "trade or business," and made appropriate the inclusion of conditions which the facts of this case disclose. Particular emphasis is placed upon the amendatory phrases that the words, "trade, business, profession or occupation of the employer," "shall be taken to include any undertaking actually engaged in by him with some degree of regularity." As we interpret that amendment, it is designed to have a clarifying effect only upon the original terms of the enactment. The use of the word "undertaking" we think of itself does not make less applicable the ordinary definition of the word "business," and we believe that that phrase should be read as though the word "business" immediately preceded the word "undertaking." Such seems to us to be the evident and plain meaning. It was no doubt the intention by the amendment to make it clear that the act should cover a business undertaking, whether the same was continually carried on or only engaged in at intervals. We do not intend to intimate it as our opinion that because the principal business of the petitioner was that of housekeeper, she might not, still within the meaning of the Compensation Act, be engaged in other business enterprises. We hold simply that the mere owning and renting of a house or houses by an individual for purposes of investment, conceding that such owner has no particular or principal business, does not come within the purview of the act.

The findings and award of the respondent commission are annulled.

GREENLEAF v. PACIFIC TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. (Civ. 3015.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⟸136(17) — CAUSE OF FIRE JURY QUESTION.

In action for damages from burning of plaintiff's building by fire set by negligent act of defendant's servant in depositing ashes in close proximity to building, question of cause of fire held, under the evidence, for the jury.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸882(12), 1064(1)—INSTRUCTION PREJUDICIAL ERROR AS REQUIRING TOO HIGH DEGREE OF PROOF.

In action for damages from fire negligently set by defendant's servant, instruction that "If the preponderance of the evidence fails to satisfy you that the fire was so caused, or leaves in your mind any doubt, confusion, or uncertainty as to the origin of the fire, your verdict should be for the defendant," held prejudicial error requiring too high a degree of proof, notwithstanding use of words "preponderance of the evidence," and notwithstanding plaintiff's requested instruction that facts must be established "by the preponderance of the probabilities" to the jurors' "satisfaction as reasonable men."

3. WITNESSES ⟸402—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE CONTRADICTING OWN WITNESS.

In an action for the burning of a building by reason of the negligence of defendant's janitor in depositing ashes in a can near the building, where the janitor, called as plaintiff's witness, testified that he knew he had poured water on the ashes because he invariably wet them, it was error to exclude testimony of another witness showing that the janitor had sometimes omitted to wet the ashes, offered by plaintiff to rebut the janitor's testimony as to his custom.

4. WITNESSES ⟸388(4) — CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS OF OWN WITNESS ON SHOWING OF SURPRISE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2049, a party can introduce evidence of contradictory statements of its own witness, generally, only by showing as a foundation that it was taken by surprise by such testimony.

5. WITNESSES ⟸398(2) — CONTRADICTION OF OWN WITNESS ON SHOWING OF SURPRISE.

A party may introduce evidence in contradiction of the testimony of its own witness without a showing of surprise as a foundation therefor, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2049.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by T. A. Greenleaf against the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

S. V. Wright and Lamy & Putnam, all of San Luis Obispo, for appellant.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, and Paul M. Gregg, of San Luis Obispo, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. Plaintiff, the appellant here from a judgment against him in the superior court of San Luis Obispo county, charged in his complaint the burning of his warehouse and its contents by reason of the negligent act of defendant's servant in placing and leaving a can of hot ashes and coals against the rear end of the building.

[1] It is alleged that the rear wall of the structure, which was of boards standing up and down, was ignited by the hot and burning coals. The undisputed testimony established the fact that defendant's janitor was accustomed to depositing ashes from a heating stove in defendant's building in a can or container in close proximity to plaintiff's building, and that on the evening of the night of the fire the container was freshly filled with ashes from this stove, which had been burning throughout the day. Some time in the night the warehouse was discovered on fire. The evidence fairly indicates that the fire had originated at or near the point where the ash container was placed, and no other explanation of the fire than from these ashes is suggested. The wareroom contained cans and receptacles of gasoline, oils, and other inflammable liquid. The circumstances shown in evidence were such as to justify the submission of the cause of the fire to the jury, and we do not see how a verdict, either for or against the plaintiff, would be open to attack for insufficiency of the evidence.

The ground relied on by plaintiff on this appeal is alleged error of the court in giving and refusing instructions, and in its rulings excluding certain testimony in behalf of the plaintiff. There are only two specifications which we need to consider.

[2] After the jury was correctly informed that they could determine their verdict by a preponderance of the evidence, and were instructed as to what constituted preponderance of the evidence, the following instruction was given:

"Before you can find a verdict for the plaintiff the evidence must satisfy you that the fire was caused by the acts of the agent or employé of the defendant in placing hot ashes containing fire near or against plaintiff's warehouse; and if the preponderance of the evidence fails to satisfy you that the fire was so caused, or leaves in your mind any doubt, confusion, or uncertainty as to the origin of the fire, your verdict should be for the defendant." (Italics ours.)

To what avail are the instructions as to the sufficiency of a preponderance of the evidence to support a verdict and as to its efficacy if it produces unprejudiced conviction in their minds, when followed by the explicit direction that the degree of certainty indicated must not only be beyond a reasonable doubt, but must not admit of any doubt at all? Even in a criminal case, requiring the minds of the jurors to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, this instruction would be erroneous.

That it must be considered prejudicial, under the state of the evidence here, there can be no question. The learned trial judge evidently recognized the vice of this instruction as submitted to him, and attempted to remedy it by inserting the words "preponderance of the evidence"; but the mere knowledge of the jurors that they might be governed by a preponderance of the evidence was not enough, when they were told that the effect of such preponderance must be such as to remove any doubt as to the origin of the fire. Respondent argues that the error, if any, in this instruction, was not prejudicial, for the reason that plaintiff had offered an instruction which was given by the court, and which laid down the same rule as that objected to as to the required weight of the evidence. We do not find it so. In plaintiff's instruction it was declared that in order to find for the plaintiff facts must be established "by the preponderance of the probabilities" to their "satisfaction as reasonable men," or, in effect, to their reasonable satisfaction. That is very different from an instruction that they cannot find for the plaintiff if a preponderance of the evidence "fails to satisfy you that the fire was so caused, or leaves in your mind any doubt, confusion, or uncertainty as to the origin of the fire."

[3] The second point of error which requires consideration is the ruling of the court excluding evidence bearing upon the custom of the janitor, Williams, in pouring water on the hot ashes before placing them in the container adjacent to plaintiff's building. The janitor testified that he knew that he had poured water on the ashes taken up on the evening preceding the fire, and gave as a reason for his certainty that he had wet them down on this particular night that he did it every night; in other words, that it was his invariable custom. The witness Walters, a former employé of the defendant and who had been subpœnaed on behalf of the defendant, being called to the stand by the plaintiff, stated that it was the habit of the janitor to wet down the ashes every evening. The question was asked by plaintiff's counsel:

"Was the habit a uniform habit, one strictly adhered to by him? A. Almost invariably. Q. Was it always?"

To this question the court sustained the objection that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and not proper direct examination.

"Q. Did you observe how frequently he didn't wet the ashes during the period, say a month next preceding the Greenleaf fire? A. He might have omitted once or twice in the course of a month to wet them. Q. You say he might have omitted once or twice; do you know whether he did or not?"

Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and objection sustained. There were other similar questions, objections, and rulings. We think the action of the court excluding this evidence was error.

The evidence sought to be elicited was not offered to prove an omission to wet down the ashes on the night of the fire by showing that such omission had occurred on previous occasions, but to rebut the janitor's statement that it was his invariable custom to pour water on them before depositing them in the container. He had given his "habit" in this matter as a reason for his certainty that the ashes were wet down on the night in question. Every instance of the failure of that habit to work would weaken by that much the ground of the witness's certainty as to the night of the fire. If there is any doubt as to the admissibility of this evidence, it arises on the objection that no foundation for its introduction was shown. The janitor, Williams, who had testified that he was satisfied that he had poured water on the ashes the evening preceding the fire because it was his invariable custom—that he did it every night—was plaintiff's witness. The attempt to show by the witness Walters that sometimes the janitor neglected to put water on the hot ashes before emptying them in the container was in contradiction of plaintiff's own witness.

[4] It is contended that while section 2049 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits a party calling a witness to contradict him by other evidence, or by showing that he had made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony, this cannot be done until it has been made to appear that the party calling the witness has been taken by surprise by the testimony he seeks to contradict or discredit. That surprise must be shown as a foundation for introducing evidence of contradictory statements of a witness is the general rule, and it is so held in construing section 2049 of the Code of Civil Procedure in People v. Johnson, 131 Cal. 511, 63 Pac. 842; People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 Pac. 101; and Zipperlen v. Southern Pacific Co., 7 Cal. App. 206, 93 Pac. 1049. But in the numerous cases holding under the common law that one may contradict his own witness by other testimony showing the facts to be different from those stated by the witness, we have failed to find one which suggests that such contradiction can only be made where surprise at the adverse testimony is shown. Greenleaf on Evidence, while recognizing the rule that surprise must be shown as a condition of introducing contradictory statements of the witness, says (section 443), with regard to contradicting one's own witness:

"It is exceedingly clear that the party calling a witness is not precluded from proving the truth of any particular fact by any other competent testimony, in direct contradiction to what such witness may have testified, and this not only where it appears that the witness was innocently mistaken, but even when the evidence may collaterally have the effect of showing that he was generally unworthy of belief."

The same rule is stated in substantially the same way in 40 Cyc. 2766, with a multitude of citations from the federal courts and the courts of upwards of 30 states. The above quotation from Greenleaf on Evidence is cited and approved in Norwood v. Kenfield, 30 Cal. 394. Commenting upon this precise point, the Supreme Court of Maine, in Brown v. Osgood, 25 Me. 505, says:

"But, as to the matter of surprise, it is believed to be referable, legitimately, only to the question whether, when a party has produced a witness who testifies adversely, he shall be allowed to show that the witness had on a former occasion made a different statement."

[5] We believe that the excluded testimony was admissible under section 2049 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But, in any event, the palpably erroneous and misleading instructions justify the granting of a new trial.

The judgment is reversed.

ARMSTRONG v. SACRAMENTO VALLEY REALTY CO. et al. (Civ. 2057.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=477—APPLICATION FOR SUPERSEDEAS TO BE MADE TO SUPREME COURT.

An application for writ of supersedeas to prevent plaintiff from enforcing a judgment should be made to the Supreme Court in which an appeal from the judgment is pending, and not to the District Court of Appeals.

Application for writ of supersedeas to prevent plaintiff from enforcing a judgment, in an action by W. S. Armstrong against the Sacramento Valley Realty Company and others. Application dismissed.

See, also, 178 Pac. 516.

George R. Freeman, of Corona, for plaintiff.

Claude Purkitt and W. T. Belieu, both of Willow, for petitioners.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of supersedeas to prevent plaintiff from taking any proceeding in the superior court of Glenn county in execution of a certain judgment rendered therein in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants.

The record shows that on the 14th day of July, 1919, a certain paper in said action, signed by the judge, was filed; the defendants presuming it to be a final judgment in the case, took an appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court of the state, and filed a bond in an amount sufficient to stay proceedings; thereafter, on the 22d day of September, 1919, the judge who tried said case signed and filed another paper purporting to be a final judgment in said action; from this action the defendants have also appealed and given a bond in the sum of $300, but no bond to stay execution.

The petitioners for the writ herein allege that the plaintiff is threatening to, and will, unless restrained, proceed by execution to enforce the alleged judgment filed on September 22, 1919. They also allege that the first judgment filed in said action was a final judgment and that the second document was a nullity, that the only judgment in the case that has any validity is the first document filed in said action, and that plaintiff should not be permitted to enforce said purported final judgment filed in said action on the ground that the same is a nullity.

We are of the opinion that the petitioners' application for a writ should be made to the court wherein such appeal is pending and not to this court. For this reason, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the merits of the application or determine the effect of the paper filed on September 22, 1919, as being a judgment in the case.

In the case of Southern Pacific Co. v. Superior Court, 167 Cal. 252, 139 Pac. 70, the Supreme Court said:

"The power to issue a writ of supersedeas is one of the powers incidental to a court of last resort. It exists in cases where the writ is necessary to preserve the status quo so that the rights involved in an appeal, when determined by the appellate court, may not be lost or prejudiced by reason of the intervening execution of the judgment or order appealed from, in cases where the statute regulating a stay of proceedings on appeal makes no provisions for such stay in the particular case. [Quoting cases.] Such writ may also be issued when it is necessary to stay or vacate proceedings below taken or attempted in defiance of a stay secured under the statute. [Quoting cases.] Under the practice in this state, in the rare cases where such a writ is issuable, it must be obtained, where cause exists and upon proper terms, by a motion or application to the court in which the appeal is pending. McAneny v. Superior Court. [150 Cal. 6, 87 Pac. 1020]."

The proper forum in which petitioners should make their application for the writ is the court in which the appeals are pending, namely, the Supreme Court of the state of California.

For these reasons, the application for a writ of supersedeas is dismissed.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 20, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 18, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸301(4) — TRUCK OWNER NOT LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE OF CHAUFFEUR UNDER CONTROL OF ANOTHER.

An owner of truck hired to another given exclusive control and management of truck and chauffeur are not liable for injuries caused by negligent operation.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸301(1)—PASSENGER ON AUTOMOBILE TRUCK NOT LIABLE FOR CHAUFFEUR'S NEGLIGENCE.

One riding on a truck as a passenger, neither exercising control nor giving any direction as to its movements, is not liable for injuries to a third person caused by chauffeur's negligence.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸356 — FELLOW SERVANT LAW NOT REPEALED BY WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT IN CASE OF FARM LABORERS.

A farm employé who was injured by negligence of fellow servant is not precluded from recovering by Civ. Code, § 1970, making such negligence a good defense, but may recover under Roseberry Act 1911, § 1, specification No. 2, Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913 and amendments, excluding such defense, not having repealed Roseberry Act as to farm employés in view of Workmen's Compensation Act 1913, § 12, subd. c, and sections 14 and 90.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by W. F. Burns against the Southern Pacific Company, George H. Jackson, Jackson M. Diggs, W. G. McRoberts, and F. G. Prinderville. From judgment of nonsuit as to defendants Jackson, Diggs, and McRoberts, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed as to defendants Diggs and McRoberts, and reversed and remanded as to defendant Jackson.

L. T. Hatfield, Martin I. Welsh, and W. H. Hatfield, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

A. H. Hewitt, of Yuba City, and W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondents.

PLUMMER, Presiding Judge, pro tem. On and prior to the 27th day of June, 1917, Emmans Franklin Burns, a son of the plaintiff, was in the employ of the defendant Jackson, picking fruit on his ranch in Sutter county. Defendant McRoberts was acting as superintendent for defendant Jackson in the management of the farm and orchard on which plaintiff's son was working. The defendant Prinderville was a chauffeur engaged in the driving of a truck belonging to the defendant Diggs, and was in the general employ of said defendant, but at the time in question both chauffeur and truck had been hired by defendant Diggs to defendant Jackson, and were under the exclusive control and direction of the latter.

In the afternoon of the day above mentioned, the defendant Prinderville was directed to take a load of apricots to a station named Oswald, on the line of the Southern Pacific Railway, and Emmans Burns, a son of the plaintiff, as aforesaid, was directed to accompany the defendant Prinderville and assist in unloading the apricots and in loading empty boxes on the truck, to be brought back on the return trip. The defendant McRoberts accompanied the truck to Oswald station, but does not appear to have had or exercised any control or direction over the chauffeur, defendant Prinderville. The trip to Oswald station was made safely, the apricots unloaded, and the truck reloaded with empty fruit boxes and started back toward the orchard. On the return trip, the defendant Prinderville had charge of the truck as its driver, the defendant McRoberts sat upon the same seat and to the right of the chauffeur, and Emmans Burns occupied a position on top of the boxes about three feet above the seat where the other two persons were sitting. In what direction Emmans Burns was facing, the evidence does not disclose. As the truck was proceeding in an easterly direction, and at a time when it was crossing the railroad tracks belonging to defendant Southern Pacific Company, a collision occurred between the truck and a gasoline motorcar then being operated on the tracks of the defendant company. In this collision Emmans Franklin Burns was killed, and the plaintiff prosecutes this action against all of the defendants above named to recover for the loss of his son so incurred.

At the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony, the court granted a nonsuit as to the defendants Jackson, Diggs, and McRoberts. As to the other defendants, the cause proceeded to verdict and judgment, and plaintiff prevailed as against the defendant Prinderville.

From the judgment of the trial court granting a nonsuit as to the defendants Jackson, Diggs, and McRoberts, the plaintiff urges this appeal.

[1] The fact that Diggs was the owner of the truck, and that the defendant Prinderville was in his general employ as a chauffeur, appears to be the only cause for having joined him in this action; but, as the testimony shows without contradiction that at the time of the collision referred to both truck and chauffeur were under the control and management of the defendant Jackson, the correctness of the ruling of the court as to the defendant Diggs requires no further mention.

[2] It also appears from the testimony that the chauffeur had exclusive control and management of the truck at the time of the collision, was acting upon his own initiative, with full power to manage the same as to him might seem wise or expedient as the driver of a gasoline engine, and that McRoberts was only accompanying the truck as a passenger, neither exercising control nor giving any direction as to its movements. The correctness of the ruling of the court, in so far as it relates to the defendant McRoberts, would appear to be fully established.

While several questions have been discussed in the briefs submitted by counsel, the correctness of the ruling of the court as to the defendant Jackson depends upon one question, to wit: Has or has not the act of the Legislature approved April 8, 1911, commonly known as the "Roseberry Act," been repealed in so far as it relates to the cause of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint?

The judgment of nonsuit in favor of the defendant Jackson was entered on the theory that section 1970 of the Civil Code applies to and exclusively controls the determination of the issues tendered in this cause, and that the Roseberry Act (St. 1911, p. 796) has been entirely repealed. Two cases decided by this court are cited as authority, as follows: Brown v. Lemon Cove Ditch Co., 36 Cal. App. 94, 171 Pac. 705, and Reynolds v. Horst Co., 35 Cal. App. 711, 170 Pac. 1082.

In deciding the Brown Case, the court apparently sustains the contention of respondents, in using the following language: The contention of appellant is that it ignores the doctrine of comparative negligence, as provided in what is known as the Roseberry Act of 1911, but that law was repealed by the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913, p. 279, and the accident herein occurred after the latter statute became operative.

In that action, as further appears, the plaintiff relied upon the gross negligence of the defendant. Upon this issue the verdict of the jury was against him, and the judgment was upheld on appeal.

An examination of the facts of that case will show that the language of the court in its application thereto, and in its holding that the Roseberry Act was repealed, was correct in so far as it applied to the issues then being determined.

In the Reynolds Case, supra, the court does not hold that the Roseberry Act is repealed, it being merely stated that—

"The point is made that [the Roseberry Act and section 1970, Civil Code] were repealed by the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913, which went into effect before the commencement of this action. There is no question, though, that the accident happened before said act of 1913 became operative, and without following the argument of appellant in detail, we deem it apparent that section 91 of the act—'the compensation provisions of this act shall not apply to any injury sustained prior to the taking effect thereof'—constitutes a saving clause and continued in force, as far as this case is concerned, the said Roseberry law and said section of the Code."

The facts of the Brown Case and of the case now at bar are clearly distinguishable. One falls within, the other is excluded from, the act of 1913. Here the question is the applicability of specification No. 2 of section 1 of the Roseberry Act, which reads:

"It shall not be a defense that the injury or death was caused in whole or in part, by the want of ordinary or reasonable care of a fellow servant."

The actual repeal or nonrepeal of the Roseberry Act, or any part thereof, was not really involved in the decision of the Brown Case. The saving clause, found in section 91, and upon which the decision was based, eliminated such question.

The cause at bar is one specially exempted from the Compensation Act approved May 29, 1913, and the subsequent amendments thereto.

It must be borne in mind that the act of April 8, 1911, provided two methods for making compensation for injuries occurring to employés; one set forth in section 1 of the act; a second under the subsequent provisions thereof, which became the foundation of, and since incorporated into, the Workmen's Compensation Act. Section 12 of this act sets forth the circumstances and conditions under which it is applicable and to which its terms apply. Then, in subdivision C of the same section, it is specifically provided that—

"In all other cases where the conditions of compensation do not concur, the liability of the employer shall be the same as if this act had not been passed."

Following this, section 14 expressly excludes all persons engaged in farm, dairy, agricultural, viticultural, or horticultural labor, etc. After setting forth the manner and procedure for applying the provisions of said Compensation Act, section 90 is inserted, which reads as follows: "All acts, or parts of acts, inconsistent with this act, are hereby repealed." There is no mistaking the language of this section. It relates only to acts, and parts of acts, inconsistent with the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law, and extends no further. It does not repeal, modify, or change any act, or part of act, of the Legislature which is outside of and excluded from the terms and provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law.

By direct language the parties in the cause at bar, and all the law relating to them, are excluded from the act of May 26, 1913. The amendment to section 14, by act approved May 27, 1915, does not change the law in so far as it relates to farmers, horticulturists, etc.

In the case of Hackelberry v. Sherlock Land & Cattle Co., 180 Pac. 37, this court draws the distinction which is here being made, and held that the Employers' Liability Act of 1911 was not repealed by the act of 1913, save and except in so far as an inconsistency existed between the two acts; and further held that the act of 1911 was in full force and effect in so far as the Hackelberry Case was concerned. In that case, as in this case, the conditions of compensation referred to in the act of 1913 and the amendatory act of 1915 (page 1079), do not concur or affect the plaintiff or any of the defendants. Hence it follows that the liability shall be the same as if the act of 1913 had not been passed. This court also there held that the Roseberry Act lays down rules of substantive law governing the classes of employés excluded by the express terms of the Employers' Liability Act of 1913.

[3] From what appears from the foregoing examination of the Roseberry Act and the act of 1913, we conclude that the former has not been repealed in its provisions so far as they relate to the cause at bar. Without setting forth the evidence in detail, it is only necessary to say there was sufficient evidence to take the case to the jury as to the defendant Prinderville being an employé of the defendant Jackson, and also as to the negligence of the defendant Prinderville in his operation and management of the auto truck at the time of the collision.

For the reasons herein given, the judgment of nonsuit in favor of the defendants Diggs and McRoberts is hereby affirmed, and the judgment of nonsuit in favor of the defendant Jackson reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial as to the defendant Jackson.

COOMBS et al. v. REYNOLDS et al.

(Civ. 3016.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=119(1) — NO LIABILITY FOR FLOODING LOWER LANDOWNER BY DIVISION OF SURFACE WATER.

An upper landowner was not liable for damages to a lower landowner, caused by diversion of surface stormwaters from the course of their natural discharge and flow, so that they were concentrated upon the land of the lower landowner in an unnatural manner and quantity, where such flow of water was caused by plowing and back-furrowing, without any intention to damage the lower landowner, and not in a negligent manner.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by J. Ellsworth Coombs and another against B. L. Reynolds and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

H. N. Wells, R. P. Jennings, Frank Belcher, and J. A. Visel, all of Los Angeles, Cal., for respondents.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. The action was brought to recover damages claimed to have been suffered by the plaintiffs by reason of the alleged diversion by the defendants of certain surface stormwaters from the course of their natural discharge and flow, so that they were concentrated upon the land of the plaintiffs in an unnatural manner and quantity. In support of this appeal, it is the claim of the appellants that the court committed error in its charge to the jury: (1) In respect to the law as to the liability of an upper proprietor of lands for injuries suffered by a lower proprietor in respect to the discharge of surface stormwaters upon the lands of the latter; and (2) in respect to the charge of the court in definition of an act of God as applied to the special defense pleaded by the defendants in bar of recovery.

Counsel for the respective parties are in substantial agreement as to the facts of the case. The defendants Reynolds and Leisure were the upper owners of separate portions of a large tract of land lying eastward from the top of a bluff along the east side of what is known as San Dimas Wash, in the county of Los Angeles, Cal. The plaintiffs at the same time were the owners of a smaller tract of land, of considerably less elevation, planted to orange and lemon trees, the easterly boundary of which extended along the top of the bluff referred to, and contiguous to the lands of one Bright and of defendant Damerel (as to the latter of whom a motion for nonsuit was granted, of which no complaint is here made), but not contiguous to the lands of Leisure and Reynolds; the land of one Bright intervening.

From the evidence adduced at the trial it appears that the natural drainage of stormwaters passing from the lands of Reynolds and Leisure would not ordinarily be discharged upon the lands of the defendants, but would pass through natural depressions easterly from defendant's lands, and eventually pass into fixed water courses. The surface of defendants' lands is practically in a plane so far as could be readily discovered by the eye, with a gentle slope to the southwest. These lands were also planted to fruit trees, and were worked as one tract of land, notwithstanding they were in separate ownership. A short time before the plaintiffs suffered the injuries complained of, the defendant Reynolds had been engaged in plowing these lands, the furrows running from east to west. About February 20, 1914, a storm of great and unprecedented violence visited the locality referred to, attended by an extremely heavy precipitation of rain. The accumulated stormwaters gathered in great volume upon the lands of defendants, and in seeking lower levels seem to have followed, to a considerable extent, certain dead furrows caused by the cultivation referred to, so that a large amount of this surface stormwater was diverted westerly across the lands of defendants Reynolds and Leisure, thereby contributing to the volume of other stormwaters which passed over the lands of Bright and eventually broke over the bluff above plaintiffs' lands, resulting in the injuries complained of.

In response to one of the special issues submitted to the jury, it was found that the conduct of the defendants in the method used by them for the cultivation and improvement of their lands was not negligent. The general verdict was also for the defendants. The case seems not to have been tried upon the theory that there was a willful diversion or interference with the surface waters referred to, in the sense that any act of the defendants in the cultivation of their soil was done with the object of causing any stormwater which might thereafter accumulate to depart from the course of its usual flow, and particularly to be deflected in such a manner as to likely pass in unusual or unnatural manner upon the lands of the plaintiffs. Appellants' fundamental contention finds apt expression in the following quotation from their briefs:

"It is true, of course, that the defendants had a right to cultivate and use their land, and also had a right to plow their land; but they must see to it at their peril that the use and cultivation and plowing of the land results in no injury to another."

The respondents' claim, very briefly stated, is that the admitted right of the defendants to till and cultivate their lands is qualified only by the right to exercise such acts of husbandry in a careful and prudent manner. The learned trial judge in his charge to the jury prepared lengthy and very well considered instructions covering the question of the liability of an upper owner to a lower owner, where injury is suffered by the lower owner by reason of the unnatural flow of surface stormwaters brought about without negligence and in the course of usual methods of farming or other agricultural operations, and unattended by any acts amounting to willful diversion, concentration, or interference with the course of the flow of such waters. These instructions are claimed by the appellants to constitute error and to justify a reversal of the case. We cannot agree with counsel in the behalf claimed.

Among the instructions complained of, but which concisely express the principle which seems to us proper to apply to this controversy, are the following:

"It is also true that one has a right to utilize the land which he owns, and if an increased flow of water, or of surface water, from his land to a lower piece of land, comes from a proper use of his own land, from the cultivation of the same in a proper and useful manner, the lower landowner cannot complain of the increased flow caused by such use and ordinary cultivation or improvement of his land. It will be observed that any use of the land which is owned by the defendants herein, which might tend to increase the flow of water upon the land of the plaintiff, the mere fact that it does in some degree increase the flow does not of itself give the plaintiff the right to recover in this case; but you will have then to consider the nature of the improvements, the character of the cultivation and determine after consideration thereof the question of damage under the general instructions as given you by the court.

"The right to cultivate and improve his land carries with it the right to plow the land, so that the mere fact that the defendants in this case plowed their land would not give any right of recovery to the plaintiff. I shall submit to you, however, in this case, this question, whether or not in such cultivation the defendants were guilty of such negligence, or negligent conduct, that is to say, so negligently improved their land that they caused damage by stormwater, which a man of ordinary prudence might have anticipated would have been caused by such conduct. The court instructs you that, while a man has a right to improve and cultivate his land, this does not give the right to intentionally damage his neighbor. For illustration in this case, assuming an extreme condition that dead furrows were plowed all over defendants' land, and all pointing to the break in question, so that the inevitable effect of such plowing would be to concentrate the water at the point in question; if this sort of course was followed, done with the express intention or for the express purpose of damage to the plaintiff's land, then he would have a right to recover.

"Returning, then, to the proposition, the court again states to you that every owner of land has a right to cultivate it, to make use of it for the purposes for which it is best adapted, and in the course of such use to plow and cultivate such land. Such owner would only be responsible for injuries falling from such cultivation in the event that such cultivation was performed in a negligent manner."

The courts of this state are committed to the rule of the civil law respecting the law of surface or stormwaters. McDaniel v. Cummings, 83 Cal. 515, 23 Pac. 795, 8 L. R. A. 575; Los Angeles C. Assn. v. Los Angeles, 103 Cal. 461, 37 Pac. 375; Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 80 Pac. 92. While the civil law protected a lower proprietor against an upper owner from the injuries resulting from sending surface waters down to the lower owner in a manner different from their natural flow, yet "there was, however, one act of man excepted, * * * and that was the tilling of the fields in the natural way." Kinney on Irr. and Water Rights (2d Ed.) § 560; Martin v. Jett, 12 La. 501, 32 Am. Dec. 120, and case note. In Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, 89 Am. Dec. 563, the court, in discussing a question akin to the present one, said:

"The very case now before the court was, as it appears to us, met and provided for by the laws of Justinian. The distinction seems to be between injuries occasioned by strictly agricultural operations, and those occasioned by works designed to reclaim or improve the land. In favor of agriculture, injuries by flowing water done to a neighbor, as the result of ordinary farming operations (as with the plow in raising crops), were not actionable. But if one, with the design and purpose of reclaiming and improving his land, makes ditches upon it, and thus, by an increased flow of water, or otherwise, causes an actual injury to the lower owner, he is liable therefor."

That there are exceptions to the general rule that the upper proprietor may not increase or change the burden of the lower proprietor relative to the duty of receiving surface stormwater, is recognized, although stated by way of dictum in Board of Trustees, etc., v. Rodley, 177 Pac. 175, where it is said:

"The principle does not apply to a gradual increase in drainage that may be caused by the cultivation of the soil according to the usual method."

To fail to approve the instructions complained of upon this particular subject would be to condemn to sterility vast acreages of agricultural lands situate in the state, where storms of violence occasionally attend, and where, because of the varying elevations of neighboring tracts, the run-off of stormwater is often torrential in character, causing temporary channels to be rapidly developed in unusual places and manner, and bringing about unexpected washes, and consequent deposits of both water and débris, and which the most careful and prudent husbandman could neither anticipate nor make adequate provision for.

Several California cases have been called to our attention, which it is claimed establish the inflexible rule that the upper owner is liable in damages for any unnatural diversion or concentration of stormwaters which result in injury to the lower owner. The cases cited do not meet the situation presented by the record now before us, but relate to or contemplate cases where the injury complained of has been produced by affirmative acts of the party at fault, brought about by a deliberate interference with the natural flow of surface waters, usually by the construction of drainage systems, dams, dykes, ditches, and kindred obstructions and works. The fundamental question involved in this case seems not to have before been directly passed on by any of the appellate courts of this state.

The instructions adverted to were not believed by the trial judge to be hostile to the line of decisions which finds concise expression in the case of Heier v. Krull, 160 Cal. 441, 117 Pac. 530; and we share in that belief. Considered with the other harmonious instructions given upon the same subject, they form a lucid exposition of just and equitable principles for the determination of the issues before the lower court.

The views we have expressed upon this subject render it unnecessary to determine whether or not the court erred in its charge to the jury upon the subject of the special defense that the alleged injury complained of was brought about by the act of God.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROSSBACH v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3103.)

1. DEPOSITIONS ⟸7—RIGHT OF PLAINTIFF TO TAKE AFTER SUSTAINING OF GENERAL DEMURRER TO COMPLAINT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2021, providing for the taking of depositions at any time after service of summons, etc., plaintiff is entitled to take defendant's deposition after a general demurrer had been sustained to the complaint, and before an amended complaint had been filed, for there is no provision that a deposition may not be taken before an issue of fact has been raised.

2. ACTION ⟸64—FILING OF COMPLAINT COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 405, the filing of a complaint constitutes the bringing of an action, though a general demurrer is thereafter sustained.

Petition by Victor A. Rossbach for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and Grant Jackson, Judge thereof, to prevent a proceeding for contempt. Alternative writ discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

Byran D. Seaver and George L. Greer, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edward Winterer, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Prohibition. Has the superior court jurisdiction to adjudge a defendant in an action guilty of contempt for his refusal to answer interrogatories in a proceeding regularly instituted by the plaintiff to take his deposition under the provisions of section 2021, Code Civ. Proc., after the sustaining of a general demurrer to the complaint, with leave to file an amended complaint, the time within which to file the same not having expired and prior to the exercise by plaintiff of such right?

As appears from the petition, a general demurrer was sustained to the complaint, with leave to amend, after which, and before plaintiff had exercised her right under an order of court granting her leave to file an amended complaint, the proceedings for the taking of the deposition of defendant were instituted. Defendant appeared, was duly sworn, and upon the advice of his attorney refused to answer certain questions propounded to him. Whereupon he was cited to appear before the court and show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt for such refusal. Upon the hearing of the matter it was ordered that he appear before the notary and give answers to the questions so propounded; otherwise, the court would adjudge him guilty of contempt and punish him therefor.

[1] The contention of petitioner is that the court had upon general demurrer held the complaint insufficient, and in the absence of any sufficient complaint on file there was no pleading under which the defendant could be required to give his deposition. We are not in accord with this contention. Section 2021, Code of Civil Procedure, is broad and comprehensive. It provides:

"The testimony of a witness in this state may be taken by deposition in an action at any time after the service of the summons or the appearance of the defendant, and in a special proceeding after a question of fact has arisen therein, in the following cases"

—when he is a party to the action. It conclusively appears that the witness whose deposition was sought to be taken was a party to an action as distinguished from a special proceeding, and that he had appeared therein, and the statute in plain and explicit terms provides that the testimony of such witness may be taken by deposition in an action at any time after his appearance. In the case of San Francisco Gas, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 30, 99 Pac. 359, 17 Ann. Cas. 933, it was claimed there was no issue as to which depositions could be taken, for the reason that the case had been tried and was then pending on appeal in the supreme court. In discussing the point, the court, speaking through the late Chief Justice Beatty, said:

"It may be answered to this objection that, in case of an action, it is not requisite that an issue of fact should have arisen in order to authorize the taking of depositions. As soon as the summons has been served, either party may commence the taking of depositions relevant to any possible issue that may arise upon a denial of the allegations of the complaint, or upon the allegation of new matter in the answer, and there is perhaps some significance in the distinction made by the statute in this particular between actions and special proceedings. Clearly, therefore, the existence of an actual, as distinguished from a potential, issue of fact, is not, by the terms of the statute, made a conclusive test of the right to take depositions de bene esse."

To like effect is Kibele v. Superior Court, 17 Cal. App. 720, 121 Pac. 412, upholding the right to take a deposition before issue joined by answer; and California, etc., Co. v. Schiappa-Pietra, 151 Cal. 732, 91 Pac. 593, where it is said:

"There is no provision or rule of law to the effect that a deposition may not be taken before an issue of fact has been raised."

[2] The filing of the complaint constituted the bringing of the action (section 405, Code Civ. Proc.), and plaintiff's right to have defendant's deposition depends not alone upon whether it is material to issues tendered thereby, but the right thereto is equally clear if it would be material to any possible issue raised by new allegations contained in an amended complaint which the court might properly permit plaintiff to file. San Francisco Gas, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, supra.

Moreover, the ruling of the court in sustaining the general demurrer to the complaint might, on an appeal by plaintiff, be reversed, thus bringing the case within the facts considered in the case last cited, upholding the right to have a deposition taken for use in a possible new trial granted on an appeal from an order denying a motion therefor.

To sustain petitioner's contention would not only nullify the plain provisions of section 2021, but destroy the right given by statute for the perpetuation of testimony, as in neither case could a witness be required to testify against his will.

The alternative writ heretofore granted is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

PEOPLE v. PECK. (Cr. 482.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 18, 1919.)

1. EXTORTION ⟸4—DEFINITION AT COMMON LAW.

At common law, "extortion" was confined to the unlawful taking by any officer, by color of his office, of any money or thing of value not due him, or more than his due, or before it was due, but, under the statute, may be committed by any person.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Extortion.]

2. THREATS ⟸1(1) — STATUTORY DEFINITION OF EXTORTION.

Under Pen. Code, § 518, "extortion," may be committed by any person, but it is essential that the property be taken with the consent of the person from whom it is obtained; such fact distinguishing the crime from robbery, defined by section 211.

3. THREATS ⟸7—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to justify finding that the crime of extortion had been committed by defendant through frightening the prosecuting witness into giving up his money in order to be left in peace, with the intention on defendant's part to retain such money.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸450—QUESTION CALLING FOR CONCLUSION.

In a prosecution for extortion, objection was properly sustained to defendant's question to the prosecuting witness whether the money was taken by defendant without the witness' consent; the question calling for the conclusion of the witness upon a question to be determined by the jury.

5. THREATS ⟸1(1) — GIVING MONEY WITH "CONSENT."

Money or property is obtained from a person by extortion with his "consent" if he gives it up with apparent willingness to the party obtaining it, with the understanding that he is thus to save himself from some personal calamity or injury, though within himself he may still protest against the circumstances requiring him to dispose of the money in such way.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Consent.]

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1170(3)—ERROR IN SUSTAINING OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE AFTER ADMISSION.

In a prosecution for extortion, contention that trial court erred in sustaining the district attorney's objection to the admission in evidence of the first complaint, charging robbery and sworn to by the prosecuting witness against defendant, after the document had gone into the record and before the jury, held to be without merit, since the defendant got the full benefit of the evidence.

7. WITNESSES ⟸387—CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS.

Cross-examination as to whether witness made a certain remark to the victim of alleged extortion, counteracting the effect of the witness' testimony that the whole transaction was a joke, held proper.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸417(2) — DECLARATIONS OF ANOTHER PERSON.

Declarations concerning a criminal or unlawful act, not made in the presence of the one charged with and on trial for the crime, cannot be used against or bind the latter.

9. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸824(8)—REQUEST NECESSARY FOR INSTRUCTIONS ON EFFECT OF IMPEACHING TESTIMONY.

The party against whose interests testimony impeaching witnesses is given should request the trial court to explain to the jury in its charge that such testimony is to be limited in its effect to the specific purpose of impeachment for which it is allowed, and that the jury are likewise to be restricted in their consideration of it.

10. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸824(1)—DUTY OF COURT TO GIVE AND DEFENDANT TO REQUEST INSTRUCTIONS.

It is the duty of a court in criminal cases to give of its own motion, where they are not proposed or presented in writing by the parties themselves, instructions on the general principles of law pertinent to the case; but it is not its duty to give instructions on specific points developed through the evidence introduced at the trial, such as the legal scope of impeaching testimony, unless such instructions are requested by the party desiring them.

11. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1044—OBJECTIONABLE QUESTION NOT REVIEWABLE ON FAILURE TO MOVE TO STRIKE OUT.

Counsel for defendant should have moved the trial court to strike out the district attorney's impeaching question to a witness claimed to be improper, also the answer thereto, and have specifically requested the court to instruct the jury not to consider such matters in determining defendant's guilt or innocence, and such failure of defendant's counsel leaves defendant in no position to complain on appeal.

12. WITNESSES ⟸390—IMPEACHING TESTIMONY IN PROSECUTION FOR EXTORTION.

In a prosecution for extortion, defendant claiming he had taken the money in course of a joke, answer of a witness, to a question as to why defendant asked for the money, that he (the witness) supposed that he (defendant) thought the prosecuting witness would tell on him, and perhaps defendant's holding the money would keep him from telling, held admissible to show that the witness' conception of the nature of the transaction was less favorable to defendant in reality than he attempted to make it appear on trial.

13. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸723(4)—ARGUMENT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY NOT THREATENING JURY.

In prosecution for extortion, defendant claiming he had taken the money in course of a joke, statement of the district attorney in argument that he would make the same kind of complaint against defendant or any other citizen that perpetrated the same kind of joke, and would keep on doing it until the county treasury was empty, held not improper as a threat to the jury in case they did not convict.

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

George W. Peck was convicted of extortion, and from the judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

M. C. Kerr, of Quincy, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant, jointly with one Elton Frazier, was charged with the crime of extortion. He demanded and received a separate trial, was found guilty by the jury, and was sentenced to state's prison, and now prosecutes this appeal from the judgment.

On January 27, 1919, the prosecuting witness, Louis Wing, was living on a farm near Crescent Mills, in Plumas county. He testified that he had known the defendant Peck for 15 or 20 years and the defendant Frazier for about 3 years; that, at about five minutes to 3, on the morning of January 27, 1919, the defendants came to his house, knocked at the door and asked to come in. Peck said he was cold and asked Wing to build a fire, which he did. As to what then occurred, Wing testified:

"Peck says, 'Take a chair and sit down and be sociable,' which I did in my underclothes, and he says to me, 'Will you dance to my fiddling?' I says, 'I have, George, and I guess I can again,' and he says, 'Well, you are going to, now.' I looked up, he had a gun stuck in my face. I asked him what he would do. He says he was going to kill me. I asked him what I had done. There was a rock put in some grain at the ranch when he was thrashing there and the grain didn't belong to me, but it didn't do any harm. The rock was found before it went into the machine. He said I knew how it got in there and I was going to tell him. I told him I was just as innocent as a newborn baby and I didn't know who put it in there. * * * And he kept on going to make me tell."

There was some further conversation in which Frazier said Wing had called him a slacker, which the latter denied. The witness testified that Peck said:

"You know very well if we go away and leave you here you will get me arrested."

Wing said:

"I promised him faithfully that I would not if he would let me go. At that time he ordered Elton Frazier to pull that gun, and he did; but he never pointed it at me. * * * George Peck wanted me to put up something to keep my mouth shut after I faithfully promised him I wouldn't get him arrested, which I did; I put up $62.25. It was $63.25, and I asked him for one dollar back, and he gave me a dollar and took the $62.25 away with them when they left the house."

It appeared that the money was in Wing's pants pocket in his bedroom. He testified:

"Peck ordered Frazier to go and get it, and Frazier went and got it and counted it out on the table, and I asked him for this dollar back, and he gave it to me, and he shut the purse up and handed it to Peck, and that is the last I see of the money until I went back from here and it was given to me by different parties."

Asked why he permitted the defendants to take the money, Wing said:

"Through fear, I had to give it up to them. I would give them anything I got for to get them to stop."

He said he told them where the money was and made no objection to their taking it. He was asked if defendants gave any reason for taking the money, and answered:

"It was put up as a forfeit so I wouldn't get them arrested for pulling those guns on me and threatening my life."

It further appears that on the afternoon of the 27th day of January, the defendant was at the home of his brother, Jos. Peck, residing a short distance from the house occupied by Wing and in which the trouble occurred. Mrs. Peck, the wife of Joseph, remarked to the defendant that she saw Wing and the "Stampfli bunch" (the Stampflis were residents of the Crescent Mills section and friends of Wing), going towards Quincy (the county seat of Plumas county), and, she said, "I wondered what they were going for," and the defendant replied, "I guess he was going over to have me arrested." Mrs. Peck asked defendant what reason Wing had for having him arrested, and the accused explained the episode occurring at Wing's house early that morning, but said it was all merely a joke or "done for fun." The defendant then left his brother's house and within a few minutes thereafter Glen Peck, son of Joseph and Mrs. Peck, appeared at the latter's home, gave his mother Wing's purse and the money taken from Wing by defendant and Frazier, and requested her to deliver the purse and its contents to Wing. Mrs. Peck took the purse and the money to Wing's house and placed them on a table in one of the rooms. Wing, on returning home, found the purse and the full amount of money taken from him as above explained.

It is first contended by appellant that the crime committed, if any, was robbery and not extortion. This question was first raised by a motion made by defendant that the court instruct the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty, after the district attorney, in his opening statement, had told the jury that the defendant had taken the money from Wing by putting him in fear of bodily injury because of the display of firearms.

[1] 1. At the common law, "extortion" was confined to the unlawful taking by any officer, by color of his office, of any money or thing of value that is not due to him, or more than is due or before it is due, and it is so defined. In most of the states the crime of extortion is defined by statutes which are substantially declaratory of the common-law offense. 8 R. C. L. p. 315. In some instances, however, the statutory definitions have extended the scope of the offense beyond that of the common law, and include the unlawful taking of money or thing of value of another, by any person, whether a public officer or a private individual, and this is so in California, as will be observed from the language of section 518 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows:

"Extortion is the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right."

[2, 3] Thus, it will be noted, in this state the crime may be committed by any person, but, to constitute the crime of extortion in any case, the taking of the property must be with the consent of the person from whom it is obtained; and it is the fact that the property taken must be with the consent of the person from whom it is obtained that distinguishes the crime of extortion from that of robbery, the latter crime being defined as "the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear." Pen. Code, § 211.

From the evidence, the jury were warranted in finding these facts, as impliedly they did: That the defendant assaulted and threatened to inflict bodily injury upon Wing upon the pretext that the latter had said some unkind things about the accused; that Wing was very much frightened and was possessed of a fear that the defendant and his companion, Frazier, had called at his house with the intention of injuring him and that they intended to do so; that, after Wing explained and protested that he had not made the statements about the defendant attributed to him by the latter, the accused asked Wing to promise him that he (Wing) would not institute a proceeding in the courts against him for assault; that Wing promised not to do so if the defendant would not injure him, and that thereupon the defendant asked Wing if he had any money in his possession, to which Wing replied affirmatively, stating the amount; that the defendant then demanded of Wing a delivery to him of the money, to be held by him (defendant) as an earnest of Wing's good faith in the agreement that he would not prosecute the accused; that Wing believed that that was the purpose for which the accused wanted the money and, being in fear that the defendant would inflict bodily injury upon him, if, indeed, not take his life, and to save himself from injury, willingly told Frazier where to get the money; and that Frazier obtained it and turned it over to the accused with the consent of Wing, who then believed that the money would be returned to him by the accused if he (Wing) should make no complaint against Peck for the assault. The jury were further warranted in finding that, as a matter of fact, it was the original intention of the defendant to retain, steal, and appropriate the money so obtained to his own use, and that he would have done so but for the fact that later in the day of the visit of himself and Frazier to Wing's house he had been informed by his sister-in-law that she had seen Wing and some of his friends going in the direction of the county seat of Plumas county, from which circumstance he surmised and expressed the conjecture that Wing's purpose in going to the county seat was to swear to a complaint against him, and that, actuated by the fear that he would be arrested and prosecuted for taking the money, he caused the money to be returned to Wing. Upon these facts, which we repeat are clearly deducible from the evidence, the jury were justified in concluding and finding that the crime of extortion had been committed. In brief, thus they were justified in finding, if they believed the evidence, as manifestly they did, that the money was obtained by the defendant from Wing with the latter's consent, "induced by a wrongful use of fear."

[4, 5] 2. Defendant's counsel asked the prosecuting witness upon cross-examination whether the money was taken by defendant "without his (the said witness') consent." To that question an objection by the district attorney on the usual grounds and on the special ground that it called for the conclusion of the witness was sustained by the court.

We can see no legal objection to the ruling. Whether the money was obtained from Wing with or without his consent was a question to be determined by the jury from the circumstances, as shown by the evidence, under which the transaction occurred. Besides, it would be a difficult question for a lay witness to answer so that a jury of laymen would understand the answer. Wing could under the circumstances have consented to the taking of the money by Peck, and yet protest in his own heart against his money being taken for that purpose. A man, under certain circumstances, may loan another a small sum of money, knowing to a moral certainty at the time he loaned it that he would never get it back and so mentally reserve a "kick" or a protest against disposing of his money in that way. Thus he would consent to parting with his money, but under protest with himself or not with that free consent or willingness that he would pay out money to satisfy an obligation or to subserve some charitable or useful public purpose. It is more than probable that such was Wing's attitude of mind with reference to the transaction; but, if he had attempted thus to explain it on the witness stand, he would most likely not only himself have become confused and given an unintelligible representation of the fact, but would have so beclouded the issue as to that element of the offense as to have made it difficult for laymen to decide. In a legal sense, in a case of this kind, money or property is obtained from a person with his consent if he with apparent willingness gives it to the party obtaining it with the understanding that thus he is to save himself from some personal calamity or injury, notwithstanding that within himself he may still protest against the circumstances requiring him to dispose of his money in that way or for such a purpose. Wing repeatedly testified that the money was delivered to the defendant as "a forfeit"—that is, as a guaranty that he would not institute criminal proceedings against Peck for the assault the latter made upon him with a deadly weapon—and that the money was to be returned to him; that, in other words, he put the money up as "a forfeit" for the purpose of averting injury to himself at the hands of the defendant, the same to be returned to him if he did not prosecute Peck. Indeed, he said that he would readily have done anything he could do to save himself from being injured. With this evidence before them and the enlightenment imparted to them by the court upon the law of the case, the jury themselves were abundantly able to decide the question intelligently and justly. Hence it was eminently proper in this case for the court to sustain the objection and so leave entirely to the jury the determination, under its instructions, of the question whether the money was obtained by the defendant with or without the consent of Wing. It may be suggested, however, that had counsel asked Wing whether he had given his consent to the defendant to take the money, the question would then have been in a form which would the more likely have elicited in the answer of the witness the statement of a fact.

[6] 3. For the purposes of impeachment, counsel for the defendant, having first elicited from Wing the admission that he had, prior to the filing of the charge of extortion against Peck, sworn to a complaint, based upon the transaction upon which the charge here was founded, charging the defendant with the crime of robbery, offered the complaint charging the latter crime in evidence. Counsel then read before the jury and into the record the robbery complaint. Thereupon an objection by the district attorney was interposed to the admission in evidence of said complaint. Before the court ruled on the objection, defendant's counsel again asked that the complaint be allowed to stand in the record, to be designated or marked as "defendant's Exhibit 1 for this case." The court then ordered that it "be marked as offered as defendant's Exhibit 1 in this case," but sustained the objection of the district attorney. Defendant's counsel then asked Wing if he swore to "that complaint in the justice's court," and to that question the court sustained the people's objection, saying to defendant's counsel:

"I think you have sufficient record now for that, Mr. Kerr, and we will not go into it further."

The witness Wing had previously, without objection, been allowed to say in response to a question by defendant's counsel that he swore to the complaint in the justice's court and that he recognized his signature to the document. No motion was made to strike the complaint from the record after defendant's counsel read it into the record, and from the court's language in ruling against further inquiry into the matter it is evident that the court considered and understood that the complaint was in the record. At any rate, it having been read to the jury and not stricken out and the jury not having been instructed to disregard it, it was in the record for all practical purposes. Hence the point sought to be maintained here that the court erred in sustaining the district attorney's objection to the admission of the complaint after that document had gone into the record and before the jury does not appear to us as possessing much force. The defendant got the full benefit of the evidence, and we cannot see what more he could have obtained had the court not sustained the objection.

[7] 4. Elton Frazier, who accompanied the defendant to Wing's house and was present when the occurrences above narrated took place, testifying for the defendant, said that, when he and defendant reached a point a short distance from the house of Wing, they stopped for a moment and the defendant then "said something about having a little fun with Wing." Frazier also said that Peck, while talking to Wing, was sometimes rather rough in his language and at other times "he was laughing and joking about it"—that is, about the entire transaction, both Frazier and defendant claiming that the money was obtained as a loan and that Wing so understood it. On cross-examination, the district attorney asked Frazier this question:

"While you were down at the corral talking to Wing after leaving the house and while Peck was still in the house, did you say anything to Wing, that you thought perhaps that it was a good thing that you came there and that you might have saved his life?"

Over an objection by defendant that the question was not pertinent cross-examination, irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and "not said in the presence of the defendant," and therefore not binding upon him, the court permitted an answer to be returned thereto. The witness answered:

"Wing said he thought I saved his life, and I told him I thought that it was a good thing that I came over there. That is the way I said it."

It is now argued that the ruling involved error highly prejudicial to the rights of the accused.

[8-10] The question was obviously for impeachment purposes and to lay the foundation for counteracting the effect of the testimony of the witness, Frazier, tending to indicate that the defendant had in mind no criminal purpose in going to Wing's house but went there merely to have "some fun" at Wing's expense, and we think that the question was proper cross-examination for that purpose. The general trend of Frazier's testimony was that the whole matter was intended by the defendant as a joke, while the statement which the district attorney undertook to make him admit that he made to Wing after the trouble had ended would show, if he made it, that he regarded the episode as more than a joke—as, indeed, so serious that, in his opinion, but for his presence in the house at the time the defendant might have taken the life of or seriously injured Wing. Of course, the testimony called for by the question could not be used as substantive proof of the defendant's guilt, for manifestly declarations of a party concerning a criminal or unlawful act not made in the presence of one charged with and on trial for the crime cannot be used against or bind the latter. But it frequently happens (and necessarily so when there is occasion for it) that testimony bearing upon the crime and the connection of the defendant with it, which would be incompetent and inadmissible as substantive proof of the crime, is nevertheless allowed under the rule authorizing the impeachment of the testimony of witnesses by thus showing that they had previously made statements contradictory to and inconsistent with their testimony. The proper practice in such a case is for the party against whose interests such impeaching testimony is given to request the court to explain to the jury in its charge that such testimony is to be limited in its effect to the specific purpose for which it is allowed, and that the jury are likewise to be restricted in their consideration of it. No such instruction was given in this case, nor did the defendant propose such an instruction, for which dereliction he appears on this appeal without a legal reason for complaining against a failure of the court so to instruct the jury. It is the duty of a court in criminal cases to give, sua sponte, where they are not proposed or presented in writing by the parties themselves, instructions on the general principles of law pertinent to such cases; but it is not its duty to give instructions on specific points developed through the evidence introduced at the trial, unless such instructions are requested by the party desiring them. This rule is so well settled that authorities need not be cited herein in support of the statement thereof.

[11, 12] 5. The district attorney called to the stand one Meyer, by whom he proposed to contradict or impeach certain portions of the testimony of the witness Frazier; said Meyer having been present and heard a conversation held on the day succeeding that of the episode in the Wing house, and which was taken down by a stenographer, between Frazier and the district attorney, as to what took place at Wing's house between the defendant and Wing. The district attorney's interrogation of Meyer was based upon the written report of such conversation, and, among other questions, Meyer was asked by the prosecutor (reading from the said report) if, in that conversation, Frazier was not asked this question by the district attorney and thereto returned the answer as here given:

"Q. Why did George ask for the money? A. I suppose he thought Wing would tell on him and perhaps that would keep him from telling."

The court sustained the objection of counsel for the defendant to the question. It is here contended that the question to and the answer of Frazier in said conversation, so brought before the jury, although not confirmed by the witness Meyer, were prejudicial to the defendant, and that the court should have instructed the jury to disregard them. The first answer to this proposition is that counsel should have moved the court to strike out the question and the answer thereto and have specifically requested the court to instruct or admonish the jury not to consider them in determining the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused, and that his failure to take that course leaves him in no position to complain here. There was no objection that a proper foundation was not laid for the testimony so sought to be brought into the record, and we may therefore assume that a proper foundation was laid for it. But the question as put during the course of the conversation did not call for the conclusion of the witness, as is the contention here, but, while the answer then and there given appears to have involved the opinion of the witness as to the reason the defendant asked Wing for the money, it was, in our opinion, perfectly proper to prove at the trial that Frazier extrajudicially made such a statement in reply to the question, not for the purpose of proving a substantive fact against the defendant, but to show that his conception of the nature of the transaction was different at the time of said conversation and less favorable to the accused than as he attempted to make it appear at the trial.

[13] 6. The defendant complains of the following language used by the district attorney in his address to the jury and declares that it was without justification in the record:

"I will make the same kind of a complaint against that defendant, or any other citizen of Plumas county, that perpetrates the same kind of a joke, and I will keep on doing it until the treasury of this county is empty."

Counsel for the defendant excepted to the foregoing remarks, assigning them as prejudicial to the rights of the defendant, in that they involved "a threat to the jury as to what will take place if they don't convict this defendant."

There was, as we have shown, a statement by the witness Frazier that tended to indicate that the defendant's conduct with and toward Wing was intended merely as a joke, and it is perhaps that testimony which furnished the motive for the remarks of the district attorney complained of here. We perceive nothing in the language referred to which is objectionable. It involved a mere ironical reference to a claim which might be predicated upon the inference from Frazier's testimony that the affair at the Wing house was only a joke. And it would require a long stretch of the imagination to see in that language a threat of any character or anything calculated unjustly to influence the jury against the defendant.

We have now considered all the points urged against the result arrived at below, in none of which, as is manifest, have we found any justification for disturbing either the judgment or the order.

Accordingly, the judgment and the order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. FRAZIER. (Cr. 481.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 24, 1919.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Elton Frazier was convicted of extortion, and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. C. Kerr, of Quincy, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. This is a companion case to People v. Peck, decided by this court on October 18, 1919, and reported in 185 Pac. 881. On a separate trial this defendant was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for an indeterminate period. The appeal is from said judgment. No argument, either oral or written, has been submitted in this court in behalf of appellant. His counsel appeared at the time set for the hearing, but declined to make any argument. We have, nevertheless, examined the record and have found abundant evidence to support the verdict. It may be stated further that we know discovered no prejudicial error, and we knew of no reason why we should disturb the conclusion reached in the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

BURRITT v. SANTA BARBARA TRUST CO.

(L. A. 6136.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸442 — COLLATERAL PROCEEDINGS BY LOWER COURT NOT DIVESTED BY APPEAL.

Generally, a duly perfected appeal divests trial court of further jurisdiction in the cause, but does not divest court of jurisdiction to hear and determine questions arising in proceedings independent of and collateral to the proceeding wherein the judgment or order appealed from was rendered.

2. WILLS ⟸368 — JURISDICTION OF COURT AFTER APPEAL FROM DENIAL OF PROBATE OF WILL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 963, 1312, providing for appeal from order on motion for new trial in will contest on ground of incompetency of testator, perfection of appeal from order denying probate on such ground did not divest lower court of jurisdiction to hear and determine motion for new trial.

On Rehearing.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸438—APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT DOES NOT PREVENT LOWER COURT FROM DETERMINING MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

That an appeal has been taken from a judgment in no case operates to divest trial court of power to entertain and determine motion for new trial in the matter in which the judgment was given, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. §§ 658–660, 939, 956, 963, as amended in 1915.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of William G. Waters, deceased. Proceeding to probate will by Santa Barbara Trust Company, contested by Edith Scott Burritt. Order denying probate, and from a subsequent order granting new trial, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

R. H. Cross, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. G. Griffith and Harry W. T. Ross, both of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from an order granting a new trial after verdict in favor of contestant in a will contest.

Respondent herein offered for probate a document purporting to be the last will and testament of William G. Waters, deceased. Appellant appeared to oppose the probate of the document, alleging that at the time of its execution the said William G. Waters was of unsound mind. The issue as to the capacity of the deceased to make a will was tried before a jury, which rendered its verdict in favor of appellant. The court thereupon entered its order denying the probate of the document offered by respondent. Within ten days after the entry of this order respondent filed its notice of intention to move for a new trial, stating that the motion would be made upon the minutes of the court. Within 60 days after the entry of the order, and before the motion for a new trial had been brought on for hearing, respondent perfected an appeal to this court from the order in question. Thereafter, and while the appeal from the order was still pending, it brought the motion for a new trial on for hearing. After argument the matter was submitted, and the court made its order granting the motion and ordering a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. The appeal herein is from this order, and the sole ground of the appeal is that the perfection of respondent's appeal from the order denying probate to the purported will divested the trial court of further jurisdiction in the cause.

[1] The general rule is that a duly perfected appeal divests the trial court of further jurisdiction in the cause. It is also true that this rule does not operate to divest the court of jurisdiction to hear and determine questions arising in proceedings independent of and collateral to the proceeding wherein the judgment or order appealed from was rendered. The single question presented for our consideration is whether or not the motion for a new trial in the instant case was an independent and collateral proceeding.

At common law the motion for a new trial was made before the rendition of the judgment. It was in direct line of the judgment, and was in no sense an independent and collateral proceeding. The provisions of the Code, as they stood before the amendments of 1915, indicated a fundamental change from the common-law system. Provision was made for the making of the motion for a new trial after the rendition of the judgment. There was no provision fixing the time within which the motion was to be heard and determined. The only limitation in this regard was the general one, applicable to all proceedings, that it must be prosecuted with due diligence. An appeal from the order granting or denying the motion was provided for. Code Civ. Proc. (Ed. 1909) §§ 657, 658, 659, 660, 963. On the other hand, the time within which to appeal from judgments was fixed at definite periods, and wholly without reference to the pendency of a motion for a new trial. It was, moreover, provided that only the verdict or decision and intermediate orders could be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment. Code Civ. Proc. (Ed. of 1909) §§ 939, 941a, 941b, 956. These provisions of the Code clearly evidenced an intent on the part of the Legislature to make the motion for a new trial wholly independent of and collateral to the main proceeding, in effect a new action in the nature of a writ of error brought to reverse the judgment in the lower court. Knowles v. Thompson, 133 Cal. 245, 247, 65 Pac. 469; Fowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 149 Cal. 151, 154, 86 Pac. 178.

The system of new trial and appeal established by the Code sections above cited was found to be anomalous, complicated, and unsatisfactory. To remedy the obvious defects of the system, and Code was amended in 1915. Under the Code, as amended, the motion for a new trial must be made upon affidavits or upon the minutes of the court within 10 days after the entry of the judgment or order, and the limit so fixed cannot be extended by order or stipulation. The hearing and disposition of the motion take precedence over all matters except criminal cases, probate matters, and matters actually on trial, and, if no action is taken within 3 months after the entry of the judgment or order in the principal proceeding, the motion is deemed denied. Separate appeals from orders granting new trials can be had only in those cases where a jury trial has been had as a matter of right. Code Civ. Proc. (Ed. of 1915) §§ 658, 659, 660, 963. The time within which to appeal is extended 30 days beyond the time of the entry of the order determining a motion for a new trial, and upon the appeal from the judgment the order made on motion for a new trial may be reviewed. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 939, 956.

The question presented in the briefs is whether or not the sections as amended evidence an intent on the part of the Legislature to reintegrate the proceeding on motion for a new trial with the principal proceeding in the case. Assuming, without undertaking to decide the point, that in those cases where a separate appeal from an order on a motion for a new trial is denied the proceeding based on the motion and the principal proceeding in the case are merged and integrated to such an extent that it can no longer be said that the proceeding on the motion constitutes in effect a new and independent action, it is not, we think, open to question that in those cases where a separate appeal from the order is expressly provided for the proceeding on the motion must of necessity be considered independent of and collateral to the principal proceeding. Where, therefore, a separate appeal from an order on a motion for a new trial is authorized, the perfection of an appeal from the judgment or order in the main proceeding does not divest the court of jurisdiction to hear and determine the motion.

[2] Section 1312 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that where a will is contested, and the petitioner files an answer traversing or otherwise obviating or avoiding the contestant's objection—

"any issues of fact thus raised, involving: 1. The competency of the decedent to make a last will and testament * * * must, on request of either party in writing (filed at least ten days prior to the day set for the hearing), be tried by a jury. If no jury is demanded, the court must try and determine the issues joined."

It therefore appears that the issues in the principal proceeding in the instant case were such that a jury trial was a matter of right. It further appears that a jury trial was in fact had, and that an order was entered granting a new trial. Section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that—

"An appeal may be taken from a superior court in the following cases: * * * 2. From an order granting a new trial in an action or proceeding tried by a jury where such trial by jury is a matter of right. * * *"

It follows that a separate appeal from the order granting a new trial is authorized by the Code in the instant case. The proceeding on the motion is therefore, in this instance, distinct from and independent of the principal proceeding. The perfection of the appeal from the order denying the probate of the purported will of William G. Waters did not, therefore, divest the court of jurisdiction to hear and determine the motion.

No question on the merits being presented, the order granting a new trial must be affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [3] In denying a rehearing we deem it proper to say that we are entirely satisfied that in no case does the fact that an appeal has been taken from a judgment operate to divest the trial court of power to entertain and determine a motion for a new trial in the matter in which the judgment was given. The amendments of 1915 have in no respect changed our established law in this regard. The opinion in department was correct in holding that this is true, at least in so far as cases in which a separate appeal from the order is expressly provided are concerned. The exigencies of this case were not such as to require the court to go further, but in order that the practice in trial courts may not be thrown into confusion by a possible distinction as between cases in which a separate appeal from the order is provided, and other cases, we feel that this statement of our views should be made.

The application for a rehearing is denied.

WORSWICK STREET PAVING CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ASSUR. CORPORATION, LIMITED, OF LONDON, ENGLAND, v. SAME.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸405(2)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; EVIDENCE SHOWING EMPLOYMENT BY SUBCONTRACTOR.

Evidence held to support the finding of the Industrial Accident Commission that the deceased was, at the time of his injury, an employé of a subcontractor company doing excavation work at cost.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸383—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; LABOR NOT WITHIN SCOPE OF POLICY.

Workmen's compensation insurance policy issued by an indemnity company to a paving company held not to cover the liability of the latter to pay compensation to the dependents of a deceased workman, injured in excavating a sewer, work expressly excepted from the policy.

3. INSURANCE ⟸146(3) — CONSTRUCTION OF AMBIGUOUS CONTRACT AGAINST INSURER.

Where provisions of a contract of insurance are not free from uncertainty, they are to be construed most strongly against the insurer, who has framed the contract and caused the uncertainty to exist.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸383 — POWER OF ACCIDENT COMMISSION TO MAKE NEW CONTRACT OF INSURANCE.

The Industrial Accident Commission was without power to make a new contract between an employer and its workmen's compensation insurer.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸347—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; AWARD UNAUTHORIZED AGAINST ONE OTHER THAN EMPLOYER OR INSURER.

Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917, § 25, in so far as it purports to authorize the Industrial Accident Commission to make any award on account of injury to an employé other than against his immediate employer, or the insurance carrier of his immediate employer, is invalid as without constitutional sanction under Const. art. 20, §§ 17½ and 21, as amended.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂=23 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; AMENDMENT NOT APPLICABLE TO PRIOR ACCIDENT.

The amendment of November, 1918, to Const. art. 20, § 21, authorizing workmen's compensation legislation, is inapplicable to an accident which happened some months before its adoption.

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by the dependents of Selso Morales, opposed by the Worswick Street Paving Company, the employer, and the Employer's Liability Assurance Corporation, Limited, of London, England, the insurer. Compensation was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the employer and insurer apply for certiorari. Award annulled in part and affirmed in part.

Everts & Ewing, of Fresno (W. E. Simpson, of Fresno, of counsel), for petitioner Worswick Street Paving Co.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco (Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for Western Indemnity Co.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. These are proceedings in review by different parties assailing an award in favor of dependents of one Selso Morales, who on April 9, 1918, was fatally injured while in the course of his employment; his injuries resulting in death the same day. He and several others were engaged in excavating a trench, when one side thereof caved in, crushing him and three other workmen. It is not disputed that the injury arose out of and in the course of employment and was proximately caused thereby. Nor is there any question as to the correctness of the award in so far as amount and beneficiaries are concerned. The only questions are as to who is liable for the payment thereof.

The award was made against the Worswick Street Paving Company and the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation; execution against the latter being stayed until execution against the former is returned unsatisfied. The findings of the commission upon which such award was made were, so far as material to the questions here presented, substantially as follows: The Fresno Natatorium Company entered into a contract with one W. W. Taft, under which the latter was to construct for the company a conduit for the drainage of an indoor swimming tank of the company in the city of Fresno. Taft sublet to the Worswick Street Paving Company the work of excavation, refilling, and resurfacing of the trench necessary for the construction of the conduit, thus making such Worswick Company the subcontractor for such work. On reaching the depth required by said contractor of a portion of said trench, it was found necessary to make the same deeper, and this extra work the Worswick Company agreed to do for Taft at the actual cost of the labor necessary therefor. While this extra work was being done by the Worswick Company the accident occurred. The deceased, Morales, was engaged in this work as an employé of the Worswick Company. The insurance carrier of the Worswick Company was the Western Indemnity Company, but the policy of insurance expressly excluded all employés engaged in sewer construction, and the conduit was a sewer, with the result that the insurance carrier was not liable, and the Worswick Company, the immediate employer of deceased, not insured against liability as to this accident. The petitioner Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation was the insurance carrier for the original contractor, W. W. Taft, and liable for any sum for which Taft might be liable on account of said accident. The theory of the award, upon these findings, was that the Worswick Company, as immediate employer, was primarily liable, and that, inasmuch as such company did not maintain compensation insurance covering the liability, the insurance carrier of the original contractor, Taft, viz. the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, was also liable, in view of the provisions of section 25 of the Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 853). Assuming the findings to be supported by the evidence, the award thus made was in strict conformity with the provisions of section 25 of the Compensation Act. As against the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation the award rests wholly on the provisions of said section purporting to authorize under certain circumstances an award against others than the immediate employer and his insurance carrier.

The award is assailed by the Worswick Company upon two grounds, the first being that the deceased employé was not the employé of said company at the time he was injured, and the second being that, assuming he was such employé, its insurance policy issued to it by the Western Indemnity Company covered the liability, with the result that the award should have been against the insurance company, its insurance carrier, instead of against the Worswick Company.

[1] As to the first ground, consideration of the record discloses no warrant for holding that the finding of the commission is without sufficient support in the evidence. As we have seen, Taft, the original contractor, sublet the excavation work for the trench to the Worswick Company. There was a written contract providing for the doing of this work according to the plans, which showed the depth of the proposed trench at all points. After the excavation had been fully made, according to these plans, for a portion of the way only, and before the excavation had been completed the whole distance, it was discovered that as to the portion already completed a sufficient depth had not been provided by the plans, and that a lower depth must be reached. This necessitated additional work not embraced in the existing contract between Taft and the Worswick Company, and it was in the doing of this work that the accident occurred, and the claim of the Worswick Company is that Taft himself did this work with employés of the company loaned to him for the purpose, and that he was consequently the immediate employer with reference to such work. Taft took the matter of this work up with Mr. Bader, the president and manager of the Worswick Company. There was ample testimony to support a conclusion that it was then orally agreed between them that the Worswick Company would do this extra work for Taft for the exact cost to it of the labor employed thereon, and that the work was being done under this agreement, by the Worswick Company alone, by its own employés, at the time of the accident. The contention to the contrary appears to us to be without any substantial basis. Taft's testimony is clear and explicit to the effect that Mr. Bader said he would have to have extra pay for the extra excavation, that he (Taft) assented, and that the agreement was then made and the work proceeded with thereunder, he having nothing to do therewith except that he gave to the company's foreman the figures showing the changes in the grade. In the last analysis the claim of the Worswick Company appears to be based on the fact that for the extra work the company was to charge, and did charge, only for the cost of the labor furnished, without any percentage or profit, which, under the circumstances, appears to us to be an entirely immaterial factor. As to this, Mr. Bader was asked why he did that extra excavation at cost, and said, "Well, for the first reason, it was a hazardous piece of work, and I didn't know how much it would cost, and I would rather do that work without any profit than to take a chance on it to make some money." Being then asked, "I don't quite understand what you mean by 'taking a chance'; what chances were there to take?" he said, "Because it was digging in the hardpan on the bottom of the ditch, and it was pretty hard to figure what that would cost." All of the work, original and extra, was done by employés of the Worswick Company, under the immediate direction and control of Mr. Lobdall, the foreman of the Worswick Company, under the supervision of Mr. Bader, and apparently Mr. Taft exercised no supervision whatever in the matter, over either men or work, and did not have the right to exercise any such supervision, except that he did furnish what were, in effect, the revised plans for the work, just as he had furnished the original plans. The extra work undertaken by the Worswick Company was to further excavate the trench to the depth shown by the revised plans, and Taft had nothing whatever to do with the method used in reaching this result. The case is apparently simply one of a subcontractor undertaking to do certain extra work for a specified consideration; the consideration in this case being fixed as the exact cost of the work.

[2] As to the second ground of attack, viz. that the insurance policy issued by the Western Indemnity Company covered the liability of the Worswick Company arising from this accident: The question thus raised is simply one as to the proper construction of a written contract between the Western Indemnity Company and the Worswick Company. So far as material here, the insurance policy provided as follows, italics wherever used being ours: The indemnity company agreed to assume and perform all obligations imposed upon the employer "named and described in item 1 of the schedule of statements forming part hereof" by the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act, "for or on account of bodily injuries, including death, resulting therefrom suffered while this policy is in force by any employé of the assured * * * in and during the operation of the trade, business, or work herein described." The schedule of statements referred to and constituting a part of the policy contained several items. Item 1 gave the name of the assured as the Worswick Street Paving Company, its address as Fresno, Cal., and described it as a corporation. Item 2 declared that "the description of the assured's trade, business or work, place where such work is carried on, and estimated pay roll of all employés for the period of the policy are given in the following table," and in the table, except for the place of work, referred for particulars to an indorsement attached. The indorsement originally attached when the policy was issued was similar, in so far as designation of the trade or business of the Worswick Street Paving Company is concerned, to an indorsement subsequently attached, dated November 12, 1917, and accepted and countersigned December 4, 1917, for the purpose of correcting the rates to conform with new schedule of rates approved by the insurance commissioner. The second indorsement was as follows:

"INDORSEMENT

"Date November 12, 1917.

"In accordance with indorsement previously attached to undermentioned policy, the rates are hereby corrected to conform with a new schedule of rates approved by the insurance commissioner of the state of California, and from and after November 12, 1917, item No. 2 of the undermentioned policy shall read as follows:

"Premium to be adjusted in accordance with terms of policy.

"All other terms and conditions remaining unchanged.

"Accepted: Worswick Street Paving Co., Assured, F. Bader, Pres.

"Attached to and forming a part (when countersigned and dated by an authorized agent) of policy No. CC-12153 issued by the Western Indemnity Company, Dallas, Texas, to Worswick Street Paving Co. of Fresno, California.

"Countersigned this 4th day of December, 1917, E. R. Long, Secretary.

"E. Edwards, Agent."

A section of the policy styled therein variously as a "clause," "condition," and "paragraph," being denominated "F," was as follows:

"(F) It is understood and agreed that if during the policy period there shall be any change in, or extension of trade, business, profession or occupation of the assured as set forth in the schedule of statements of the policy, or if the assured make any structural alterations, additions or repairs to his plant or buildings, or enter into any contract for the performance of any part of such work, or in case the assured shall procure any work to be done wholly or in part by a contractor, and by or through him, by a subcontractor, then this policy shall cover such operations, and the liability of the assured under section 30 of said chapter 176 as respects such work, and the assured shall be liable for and pay to the company the premium on account thereof calculated in the manner provided in paragraph G of the policy, at the company's rate or rates applicable to such work. The assured shall furnish the company a statement of the wages expended on account of such work, as is provided in paragraph H of the policy, and in the event of his failure to do so one-third of the contract price of such work shall be deemed as wages earned by employés, and the assured shall pay the premium thereon computed in the manner above specified, unless and until the assured shall furnish proof satisfactory to the company that all contractors engaged thereon were fully protected by compensation insurance in an insurance carrier covering their full liability under the said compensation act or law, on all such work performed by the assured while this policy was in force: Provided, however, that this clause shall not cover the operation of vessels, construction of sewers, tuneling, erection of structural steel or iron, and/or wrecking, and/or blasting."

It is manifest from the foregoing that the work being done was not covered by the policy, unless by force of the provisions of paragraph or clause F relative to a change in or extension of the trade, etc., of the assured as set forth in the schedule of statements of the policy. Except as affected by this paragraph or clause, the policy was limited to injuries suffered by employés "in and during the operation of the trade, business, or work herein described." That "trade, business, or work" was described as "state or municipal road or street making—including culverts not exceeding 10 ft. span." There is no warrant whatever for holding that the work being done by the Worswick Company under its contracts with the Fresno Natatorium Company was in any sense of the words "road or street making," or in any way incidental to such work. We entertain no doubt that, except for paragraph or clause F, the policy must be construed as limited to operations in the trade, business, or work of road or street making, and that the specifications other than this general specification in the indorsement are simply specifications of various classes of work incidental to such road or street making; the object thereof being to prescribe the premium rates applicable to the various classes. In other words, the work specified in these subspecifications is covered by the policy only when done in the prosecution of the business or work of road or street making. But even if this were not the case, none of these specifications includes such work as the Worswick Company was doing here. The particular specification relied on, which includes among other items the one of "water conduits," is confined to "concrete work"; the designations thereunder being simply of various kinds of "concrete work."

Coming then to a consideration of paragraph of clause F, we are satisfied that it could fairly be held sufficiently broad in its terms to include the work the Worswick Company was doing, although the same was not done in road or street making, were it not for the proviso at the end thereof which expressly excepts certain kinds of work from the effect of the paragraph or clause. This proviso is:

"Provided, however, that this clause shall not cover the operation of vessels, construction of sewers, tunneling, erection of structural steel or iron, and/or wrecking, and/or blasting."

There is no force in the claim that the work in which the company was engaged was not the work of constructing a sewer. The conclusion of the Industrial Accident Commission on this point was undoubtedly correct. Nor can we see any foundation for the claim that the proviso is limited in its application to the latter portion of the general paragraph or clause F. This claim is founded on the use of the words "that this clause"; it being urged that the term "clause" does not include the whole of F, or at least that the provision may be reasonably so construed. We think that a consideration of the policy shows no other possible reasonable construction of the term "clause" in the connection in which it is used than as meaning the whole of the part of the policy designated as F. It may properly be noted that such portion is designated as "clause F" in the very next paragraph, or clause (G), as is G so designated in the very first line of the policy. It seems to us also that any other construction would render the proviso practically without point. The clear intention of the whole paragraph, clause, or condition designated F was to so enlarge the coverage of the policy as to include any change in or extension of the business described in the policy, provided always that such enlargement should not in any event be held to include work expressly specified as excepted.

[3, 4] We have had in mind in considering this policy the well-settled rule to the effect that, where provisions of such a contract are not free from uncertainty, they are to be construed most strongly against an insurer who has framed the contract and caused the uncertainty to exist. But we are satisfied that it must be held that there is no ambiguity or uncertainty in the policy before us with relation to the matters we have discussed. The provisions involved are plain and unambiguous, and susceptible to only one reasonable construction. The Industrial Accident Commission was without the power to make a new contract for the parties, and its conclusion that the work being done by the Worswick Company was not covered by the policy was correct.

[5, 6] The Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, found to be the insurance carrier of the general contractor, Taft, assails the award in so far as it runs against it, upon the ground, among others, that in so far as section 25 of the Compensation Act purports to authorize the Industrial Accident Commission to make any award on account of injury to an employé against any person other than his immediate employer, or the insurance carrier of his immediate employer, it is invalid as being without constitutional sanction. It is conceded by learned counsel for the commission that this court has so held in the recent case of Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 181 Pac. 788, decided June 5, 1919, but he asks for a reconsideration of the questions involved. It had previously been held many times that a substantially similar provision in the Compensation Act of 1913 (page 294, § 30) was invalid, in that the constitutional provision relative to the enactment of workmen's compensation laws (section 21, art. 20) did not contemplate a law authorizing an award of compensation by the Industrial Accident Commission against some other person than the employer. Carstens v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 572, 158 Pac. 218; Sturdivant v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 581, 158 Pac. 222; Western Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 172 Cal. 766, 158 Pac. 1033; First Christian Church v. Industrial Accident Commission, 173 Cal. 552, 160 Pac. 675. The later case of Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, involved the question whether the change in phraseology of the section of the Compensation Act (old section 30, now section 25) made in the act of 1917 overcame the constitutional objection, and it was held that it did not "for the reason that the terms 'employer,' 'employés' and 'employment' as used in section 21, art. 20, of the Constitution, as amended in October, 1911, must be construed in the light of their meaning at the time of the adoption of the amendment and cannot be extended by legislative definition, for such extension would, in effect, be an amendment of the Constitution, if accepted as authoritative." See, also, Flickenger v. Industrial Accident Commission, 184 Pac. 851. We can see no reason to doubt the correctness of this conclusion. The cause further involved, as does this case, the question whether the legislative power in this regard had been enlarged in this respect by the addition of section 17½, art. 20, to the Constitution, by an amendment adopted November 3, 1914, and it was held that the new provision had no such effect. The matter was then thoroughly considered, and we see no reason to doubt the correctness of the conclusion reached. Attention is also called by learned counsel for respondent to an amendment of section 21, art. 20, of the Constitution, adopted in November, 1918, some months subsequent to the happening of the accident here involved. The inapplicability of this amendment to any question involved in the case at bar is fully shown by what is said in discussing the amendment in Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, and we reaffirm what was thus said. It follows from the foregoing that the award against the Employers' Liability Assurance Company has no proper support in the record.

In so far as the award of the commission runs against the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, it is annulled. In all other respects said award is affirmed.

OSWALD v. SCHWARTZ, Treasurer of San Diego County (GRANGER et al., Interveners) (two cases). (L. A. 5905, 5606.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1919. On application for rehearing, Dec. 29, 1919.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS ⊜88—RIGHT TO BONDS ASSIGNED AS SECURITY BY SUBCONTRACTOR.

Where company notified county of its assignment before one to whom subcontractor assigned as security his rights to bonds issued by county for road improvement bid, held claim of former to bonds is superior to that of latter; the principal contractor not being the debtor upon whom notice of assignment was required to be served.

2. ASSIGNMENTS ⊜34—ORAL ASSIGNMENT BY SUBCONTRACTOR.

Assignment by subcontractor as security of his contract and his right to bonds, which contractor was to receive under his contract with county for road improvement, to one who was to advance and did advance money to enable subcontractor to perform his contract, held valid though oral.

3. ASSIGNMENTS ⊜137—EVIDENCE SHOWING ASSIGNMENT BY SUBCONTRACTOR OF RIGHT TO HIGHWAY BONDS.

Evidence held to support finding of oral assignment as security by subcontractor of his contract and his right to bonds which contractor was to receive under his contract with county for road improvement.

4. ESTOPPEL ⊜90(1)—ESTOPPEL OF CONTRACTOR BY PARTICIPATION IN ASSIGNMENT BY SUBCONTRACTOR.

Contractor's participation in and knowledge of whole transaction held to estop him from questioning assignment by subcontractor as security of his contract and his right to bonds which contractor was to receive under his contract with county for road improvement.

5. ASSIGNMENTS ⊂=88—VALIDITY OF ASSIGNMENT BY SUBCONTRACTOR AGAINST SUBSEQUENT INDEBTEDNESS.

Where subcontractor with knowledge of contractor assigned as security his contract and right to bonds before beginning work, any indebtedness subsequently incurred by him could not be urged by the contractor as a claim against the bonds to the detriment of the assignee.

Appeals from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Suit in mandamus by George H. Oswald against John F. Schwartz, Treasurer of the County of San Diego, in which Ralph Granger and the Pacific Metal Products Company intervened. From the whole of the judgment, which was adverse to him, and also from an order denying his motion to set aside the judgment and to enter a different judgment upon the findings, Oswald appeals, and from that portion of the judgment which awarded bonds to the Pacific Metal Products Company intervener Granger appeals. Affirmed.

Crouch & Chambers, of San Diego, for appellant Oswald.

Ray M. Harris, of San Diego, for appellant Granger.

W. F. Schuermeyer, Dist. Atty., of San Diego, for defendant Schwartz.

Clifford C. Pease, of San Diego, for respondent Pacific Metal Products Co.

PER CURIAM. In so far as the appeal of appellant Oswald is concerned we are entirely satisfied with the opinion filed by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, Division 1, and adopt the same as the opinion of this court.

[1] As far as the appeal of appellant Granger, involving the rights of the Pacific Metal Products Company, is concerned, we are satisfied that the judgment of the superior court was correct; in other words, that as Granger had not notified the county of his assignment, and as the Pacific Metal Products Company had given such notice, the claim of the latter became superior to that of Granger. Under the circumstances Oswald was not the debtor upon whom notice of assignment was required to be served. In this respect the case is within the doctrine declared in Adamson v. Paonessa, L. A. 4627, 179 Pac. 880.

The judgment of the superior court and the order denying the motion of plaintiff Oswald to vacate the judgment are in all respects affirmed.

All concur, except MELVIN, J., absent.

The following is the per curiam opinion of the District Court of Appeal:

In the year 1912 the board of supervisors of San Diego county determined to do certain road improvement work under an act of the Legislature, the terms of which are not in question here. By that act bonds were authorized to be issued to cover the cost of the work. Appellant Oswald was awarded a contract to make the improvements, in consideration of the doing of which it was contracted that he should receive bonds of the par value of $315,260.96. The work was completed as contracted for and bonds in the amount mentioned came into the hands of respondent Schwartz, treasurer of said San Diego county, to be delivered to the persons entitled thereto. Upon completion of the work the treasurer, with the consent of Oswald, delivered to intervener Granger 98 bonds of the par value of $98,950. He delivered to Oswald bonds of the par value of $149,760.89. There then remained in his hands bonds of the par value of $66,550 as to which there were conflicting claims as between Oswald, Granger, and the Pacific Metal Products Company. Claiming to be entitled to all of the bonds remaining in the hands of the county treasurer, Oswald brought this suit in mandamus to compel that officer to deliver the bonds to him. Whereupon petitions in intervention were filed by Granger and Pacific Metal Products Company. The trial judgment determined that Oswald was entitled to bonds of the value of $38,889.16, that Granger was entitled to bonds of the par value of $23,160.84, and that Pacific Metal Products Company was entitled to bonds in the amount of $4,500, par value. Oswald appealed from the whole of the judgment, which was adverse to him, and also from an order denying his motion to set aside the judgment and to enter a different judgment upon the findings. Intervener Granger appealed only from that portion of the judgment which awarded bonds to Pacific Metal Products Company; his appeal being presented upon the judgment roll alone.

This controversy as to the right to possession of the bonds arose by reason of the following facts: After the contract for the doing of the improvement work was awarded to Oswald, he desired to sublet a portion of the work and entered into a contract with one Knight for the doing of certain grading, surfacing, and excavating. The compensation of Knight was agreed to be made by delivering to him a portion of the bonds which Oswald was to receive under the terms of the main contract. The provision of the Knight contract relative to the payment to be made was as follows: "Payment for said work is to be made by the party of the first part (Oswald) to the party of the second part when bonds are issued by the county treasurer of said county in payment for the performance of his said contract with the said county, the party of the second part (Knight) taking the said bonds at par, and the party of the first part hereby sells and assigns to the party of the second part sufficient of said bonds to pay for the doing of the work herein agreed to be done by second party, the amount thereof being approximately one hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars ($122,000.00)." In the course of the negotiation between Oswald and Knight which led up to the making of the subcontract, it appeared that Knight had not sufficient money with which to cover the necessary outlay incidental to the doing of the work. He, therefore, consulted the Merchants' National Bank of San Diego, of which intervener Granger was president and one Rogers cashier. He represented to the bank and Granger that if he could obtain the necessary money to enable him to carry through the work which Oswald desired him to do, the contract could be performed at a large profit. He offered to assign any contract that he might be given, also the right to the bonds which would accrue thereunder, to the bank if the bank would advance to him the necessary money. He produced Oswald to the bank, and Oswald was present during the principal negotiations which led to the agreement made for the advancing of the funds of the bank and Granger. Granger was brought into the transaction because of the fact that it was the bank's position that the law would not permit it to loan on such an account to exceed the sum of $30,000. This amount Knight anticipated would not be sufficient, although he thought, and so stated, that an additional $20,000 would carry him through. It was then agreed that Granger should individually advance to Knight such sums of money as might be necessary over and above the $30,000, which the bank was to and did advance to Knight. Whereupon Oswald executed the contract with Knight, and the contract was delivered over to the bank on September 13, 1912, together with an assignment of the bonds referred to therein, and which were to be received by Knight in compensation for the work. Oswald was present at the time the written assignment was made, and was present at the time of the agreement made by Granger to supplement the bank's advances. At that time no formal written assignment was made on behalf of Granger. Referring to that transaction, Mr. Granger testified as follows: "The contract that Mr. Knight got from Mr. Oswald was deposited with us. Mr. Knight said, 'I will put this up as security, and give you an order for these bonds for your security,' and I asked him about what security I would have if I had to put up extra. * * * Mr. Knight says, 'This contract and these bonds; you will keep this contract, and nobody will have a prior claim to you, and whatever money you put up, you will collect these bonds; you will get these bonds when they are issued, and you will hold out any money you will put up, and I will leave up the whole thing as security.'" At another point in his testimony the witness said: "Mr. Wadham and Mr. Oswald and myself went into my private room, and there is where Mr. Oswald repeated again what I have said, and said, 'Granger, why can't you put this money up; you have got the money, and why can't you put it up?' He said, 'You can't lose anything on this, and I will guarantee that you will never lose anything on these bonds.'" The money that was in fact advanced by the bank and Granger to Knight amounted to the sum of $129,370.76. So that it appears, assuming that Granger was protected by a valid assignment of the bonds earned by Knight, and made on September 13, 1912, and assuming there was no other intervening superior claim, that the judgment as between Oswald and Granger should not be disturbed. And upon the same assumption, and assuming that the apportionment to Pacific Metal Products Company was improperly made, then the bonds so apportioned to the latter should also be awarded to Granger. There are some questions affecting this latter matter, which are argued in Granger's appeal, which will be considered at a later point in the opinion.

[2-5] Taking up first the appeal of Oswald: The principal contentions made are that the alleged oral assignment by Knight in favor of Granger, claimed to have been made on September 13th, was invalid, and, if not invalid by reason of there having been no writing evidencing the same, that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding of even an oral assignment. That an assignment of a chose in action may be orally made seems to be beyond question. Puterbaugh v. McCray, 25 Cal. App. 469, 144 Pac. 149; 2 R. C. L. p. 615. The particular terms of the transaction had with the bank under which it was agreed that Granger was to advance money in excess of that to be loaned by the bank, and that he was to have the benefit of the security which the bonds to be issued to Knight would afford, were fully understood by Oswald and, in fact, as appears from the testimony, Oswald was active in bringing about the consent of the bank and Granger to make the advances to Knight. That there is ample evidence in the record to support the conclusion that it was the full understanding of the parties that an assignment of the contract and bonds had been made for the benefit of both the bank and Granger on September 13th we are well satisfied. The cashier of the bank explained that his failure to make a writing in favor of Granger, as was done in favor of the bank, was an omission on his part. He stated further that later on, in May of 1913, having in mind that there should perhaps be a writing evidencing such assignment to Granger, he had one drawn, and Knight signed it. On Oswald's part it is claimed that this written assignment to Granger was the first valid assignment made, but, as has already been stated, we think that the oral transaction which was consummated on September 13th was sufficient to create an assignment in Granger's favor. The importance which these dates bear to the controversy on Oswald's appeal is apparent from the fact that Oswald claims the right to offset the charge of a considerable sum of money against Knight on account of mules, etc., sold to Knight during the progress of the work. If these offsets occurred prior to any valid assignment to Granger, then Oswald's contentions on the appeal would be valid. It seemed to be the opinion of the trial judge, as expressed in his findings, and one in which we concur, that assuming the invalidity of the alleged oral assignment to Granger, Oswald, by reason of his participation in and knowledge of the whole transaction, should be estopped from questioning the fact of an assignment made to Granger on September 13, 1912. It is unnecessary, however, to pass upon the question as to whether the findings sufficiently show the facts which the evidence discloses pertinent to the matter of estoppel, for we have already determined that the oral assignment was valid. At the time this assignment was made Knight had not begun work on the job; hence any indebtedness of Knight subsequently incurred could not be urged as a claim against the bonds to the detriment of Granger.

Referring now particularly to the award made to Pacific Metal Products Company: The trial judge evidently based the award made to this company upon the proposition that as Granger had not notified the county or its treasurer of his assignment, and as the Pacific Metal Products Company did give such a notice, the latter's claim became superior to that of Granger. The assignment made in the first instance to Granger carried the equitable right to the bonds when issued, even if it did not pass legal title thereto. Assuming that the assignment was nothing more than an agreement to create a lien upon the bonds and one requiring notice to be given to the debtor of Knight in order to shut off the demands of other claimants, it is our opinion that Oswald, and not the board of supervisors or the county, was the debtor to whom this notice was required to be given. The Road District Improvement Act of 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 806; Deering's 1915 Ed. Gen. Laws, Act 1465), provides for the issuance of bonds, collectible by means of special assessments upon land within a prescribed road district for the benefit of the road district fund, out of which fund the bonds shall be paid. The obligations thus created do not constitute a debt of the county or its officers. The debtor of Knight, and the only debtor to whom the right of notice could have accrued, was Oswald, the person with whom Knight made the contract under which his right to the bonds was acquired. In view of what has been stated in the foregoing, the conclusion of the court is apparent.

There was, we think, sufficient evidence to sustain all of the material findings made by the trial judge.

The judgment as against plaintiff, Oswald, is affirmed. The order made denying the motion of plaintiff, Oswald, to vacate the judgment is affirmed. The judgment in favor of Pacific Metal Products Company is reversed, with direction to the trial court, upon the findings as made, to enter judgment awarding to intervener Granger bonds of the par value of $4,500, in addition to the award heretofore made by the judgment; said intervener Granger to have his costs.

On Application for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Complaint is made in a petition for rehearing filed on behalf of appellant Granger that, in view of the fact that Oswald had a right of set-off against Knight as to a portion of the Knight bonds going to Granger and the Pacific Metal Products Company, the right of the latter (the Metal Products Company) is extinguished to the amount of the set-off, which is more in amount than the value of the bonds going to the company, and Granger is entitled by virtue of his prior assignment to the bonds given to the company. There is no force in this claim, in view of what is shown in that portion of the District Court of Appeal opinion which we have approved. By reason of the fact that Granger did not give notice of his assignment to the county, and that the company did give notice of its assignment, the company's assignment became superior to that of Granger, and its claim must first be satisfied. Hence, if there is any offset to be considered, it would have to come out of Granger's share in the bonds remaining after the company's claim is satisfied. So no error has been made in favor of the company as against Granger. The opinion of the District Court of Appeal sufficiently shows why Oswald cannot urge this claim of set-off as against Granger, and so no error has been made in regard to Oswald's rights.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

All concur.

CITY STREET IMPROVEMENT CO. v. PEARSON. (S. F. 8621.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐473—STREET IMPROVEMENT ASSESSMENT MUST PROVIDE FOR INSTALLMENT PAYMENTS.

Under San Francisco City Charter, art. 6, c. 2, § 33, as amended by St. 1913, p. 1623, an assessment for a street improvement in excess of 50 per cent. of the assessed value of the property was improper, where the procedure ordinance of the supervisors made no provision for installment payments.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐493(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENT; CURE OF DEFECTIVE ASSESSMENT ON APPEAL.

Defect that assessment for a street improvement was in excess of half the assessed value of the property, without provision by the supervisors' procedure ordinance, under San Francisco City Charter, art. 6, c. 2, § 33, as amended by St. 1913, § 1623, for payment in installments, held not curable on appeal to the board of supervisors.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐493(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENT; CURATIVE PROVISIONS.

Curative provisions in a law relative to street improvements in cities may cure any defect that does not go to the jurisdiction of the particular board, as the board of supervisors, over the proceeding, and may cure any defect arising from the omission of any step in the proceeding which the Legislature itself might have omitted from the law, if something not essential to due process, or other constitutional prerequisite.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐493(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS; CURATIVE PROVISIONS OF ORDINANCE.

Curative provisions in ordinance relative to street improvements in cities are not to be considered as intended to apply to any of the preliminary steps which the ordinance itself requires to be taken, whereby jurisdiction of the proceeding is to be acquired by the local board or body in charge, unless such intent is declared or necessarily appears.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸586 — CHARACTER OF CLAIM OF STREET IMPROVEMENT CONTRACTOR.

Even if the claim of a street improvement contractor against property had constituted a valid lien, it would not have been a personal obligation of the owner, but a mere lien on his property, enforceable only by foreclosure.

6. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸92(3)—FORBEARANCE ON UNENFORCEABLE DEMAND AS CONSIDERATION.

Where the owner of land, subject to a lien for street improvements void as for more than half the assessed value, while not payable in installments, gave the contractor a note for half the amount of the assessment, paying the rest in cash, in consideration of the contractor's forbearing to foreclose the lien for 90 days, such note was unsupported by consideration; there having been no compromise of a doubtful right.

7. CONTRACTS ⟸72 — FORBEARANCE ON UNFOUNDED CLAIM AS CONSIDERATION.

Forbearance to sue on or extension of time for payment of a baseless demand is not sufficient consideration for a contract.

Olney and Lawlor, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by the City Street Improvement Company against F. E. Pearson. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Adams & Adams, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jesse A. Mueller and Hugo D. Newhouse, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff sued to recover upon a promissory note for $612.77. Defendant answered, alleging want of consideration for the note. The court found that it was wholly without consideration, and gave judgment for the defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff made certain improvements of the street in front of the defendant's property in San Francisco, under a contract with the board of public works executed in pursuance of the proceedings taken for that purpose. An assessment for the cost thereof was issued to plaintiff. The amount assessed against defendant's property was $1,225.54. Plaintiff demanded payment and threatened to foreclose the assessment if payment was not made. Defendant asked for an extension of time, and after some negotiation an agreement was reached whereby defendant paid $612.77, being one-half of the assessment, and executed to the plaintiff the note in suit, payable in 90 days, for the remaining half. The lien of the assessment was not formally released, but plaintiff agreed not to foreclose during the time covered by the note. Both parties at that time believed that the assessment was valid, and that it constitued a valid lien on defendant's property, and in that belief the note was given and accepted.

Two questions are presented: (1) Was the assessment void? (2) If it was void, was the note based on a lawful and valuable consideration?

[1] 1. The proceedings for the street improvement were taken under an ordinance of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, providing the procedure therefor, under the authority of section 33, chapter 2 of article 6, added to the city charter by the amendment of 1913. This section authorizes the board of supervisors to adopt an ordinance providing a method of procedure for the improvement of streets and for an assessment upon private property to defray the expense thereof. It contains the following additional provision:

"In such ordinance if said board deems it expedient, provision may be made for the payment of any assessment levied in pursuance of the provisions thereof in annual installments covering a term not to exceed ten years upon [such] conditions as to said board may seem reasonable and just, the rate of interest to be paid on such payments not to exceed seven per cent. per annum. In any proceeding for the improvement of streets wherein provision is made for the payment of any assessment in annual installments, the amount of such assessment shall not be limited by the provisions contained in subdivision 3 of section 8 of this chapter." Stats. 1913, p. 1623.

The provisions of subdivision 3 of section 8, referred to in the foregoing quotation, are as follows:

"No assessment shall be levied upon any property, which, together with all assessments for street improvements that may have been levied upon the same property during the year next preceding, will amount to a sum greater than fifty per centum of the value at which said property was assessed upon the last preceding assessment book of the city and county." Stats. 1899, p. 297.

In pursuance of the authority given by section 33 aforesaid, the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, on October 27, 1913, adopted an ordinance providing a procedure to be followed in San Francisco in making improvements upon streets and assessing the expense thereof upon private property. The proceedings in question were taken under this ordinance, and the question to be determined is whether or not they were valid under the ordinance and the aforesaid provisions of the charter. The proceedings for the street improvement were begun by a resolution of expediency adopted by the board of public works on May 20, 1914. The work was completed on March 11, 1915, and the assessment was issued on May 5, 1915. The assessed value of the property of the defendant for the year 1914, that being the year in which the contract for the improvement was let, was $2,260. One-half of this sum, $1,130, was the limit of the amount which the city authorities had power to assess against defendant's property, unless provision was made for the payment thereof in annual installments, as provided in section 33 aforesaid. The objection to the assessment is that no such provision was made, and that in consequence thereof the assessment is void. The plaintiff, in answer to this proposition, contends that this defect in the proceeding is not jurisdictional; that it could have been cured by the appeal to the board of supervisors provided for in section 21 of the ordinance fixing the procedure. For the understanding of this question it will be necessary to state in some detail the provisions of said ordinance.

It is first provided that the board of public works, deeming that public convenience requires a street improvement, the expense of which should be assessed upon private property, shall by resolution declare such expediency, briefly describing the improvement, and cause plans and specifications therefor to be prepared (section 3); that after such plans and specifications are prepared the board "shall pass a resolution of its intention to recommend to the supervisors that said improvements be ordered to be made," referring therein to the plans and specifications and fixing a day for taking action upon the matter, of which day notice shall be given (section 4); that at the time fixed in the notice, if no objections are made, the board of public works shall "pass a resolution recommending to the supervisors that they order such improvements to be made" (section 7); that the supervisors may, in their discretion, order that not exceeding one-half of the expense of the work may be paid out of the city treasury (section 7); that the improvement so proposed may be ordered by the board of supervisors by ordinance adopted in the manner provided by chapter I, article 2, of the charter (section 7). When the improvements are thus ordered, bids shall be advertised and the contract for the work let to the lowest bidder. Section 16 of the ordinance contains a provision as follows:

"No assessment shall be levied upon any property, which, together with all assessments for street improvement that may have been levied upon the same property during the year last preceding, will amount to a sum greater than fifty per centum of the value at which said property was assessed, exclusive of improvements thereon, upon the assessment book of the city and county current at the date of the passage of the resolution of intention, except, however, as in this ordinance hereinafter provided."

Section 18 provides that if, at the time street work is done, none of the methods provided in the ordinance is sufficient to authorize the board of public works to make an assessment to pay for the expense thereof, the board, before it passes "a resolution of its intention to recommend the ordering of said work or improvement," shall establish by resolution a method by means of which such assessment shall be made, and that when the work is done the assessment shall be made according to the method so established. The ordinance provides in the usual manner for the issuance of an assessment and warrant to the contractor for the expense upon the completion of the work to the satisfaction of the board of public works. Section 28 is as follows:

"Any assessment imposed under the provisions of this ordinance may be paid in annual installments, not exceeding 10 in number, whenever the board of public works shall so determine and declare in the resolution of intention or whenever the board of supervisors shall so determine and declare in the ordinance ordering the work, and it shall be mandatory for the board of public works to so determine and declare in every case when the amount of the assessment imposed will exceed one-half of the assessed value of the lot or parcel of land against which such assessment is imposed. Such resolution or ordinance shall state the number of installments in which the assessment may be paid, and the rate of interest to be charged on all deferred payments, which rate of interest shall not exceed 7 per centum per annum."

The ordinance further provides that any person aggrieved by any act of the board of public works in the matter, or who claims that the work has not been properly performed, or having any objection to the correctness or legality of the assessment, shall, within 30 days after the date of the warrant appeal to the supervisors and that upon such appeal the supervisors may remedy and correct any error in the acts of the board of public works or in the assessment and cause said board to correct the warrant assessment or diagram in any particular so as to conform to their decision upon the appeal; that the decisions of the supervisors on such appeal "shall be final and conclusive upon all persons entitled to appeal under the provisions of this section as to all errors, informalities, and irregularities which the supervisors might have avoided or have remedied during the progress of the proceedings or which they can at that time remedy"; and that "no assessment * * * and no proceedings prior to the assessment, shall be held invalid by any court for any error, informality, or other defect in the same, where the resolution of intention of the board of public works to recommend to the supervisors the ordering of the improvement has been actually published and posted and the notices of improvement posted as in this ordinance provided." Section 21.

The proceedings for this assessment did not conform to the provisions of this ordinance regarding cases in which the assessment amounts to more than half of the assessed value of the property for general taxation for the current year, as was the case here. Neither the resolution of intention of the board of public works to recommend the making of the improvement nor the ordinance of the board of supervisors ordering the work to be done, nor any resolution, order, or ordinance of either body, declared or provided that the assessment should be paid in installments, or made any provision on that subject. The consequence was that the entire assessment, under the terms of the ordinance, became due and payable immediately upon the issuance of the warrant, and a suit to foreclose the same could have been begun at the expiration of 35 days thereafter. Section 19 and section 22. If the proceedings had been valid, the contractor would have had the right to insist upon this date of maturity.

The above-quoted provision of section 8, chapter 2, article 6, of the charter forbids the making of such an assessment in such a case. Section 33, above quoted, qualifies this prohibition so far as to allow an assessment of that amount to be made under a method of procedure ordained by the board of supervisors, if provision is made in the proceeding for the payment of the assessment in installments, but not otherwise. The provision for installment payments can only be made in the manner prescribed in the procedure ordinance. The board of supervisors and the board of public works, in making improvements and levying assessments under the provisions of an ordinance adopted under section 33 aforesaid, are acting as agents under a special power, and they cannot lawfully act at all except as authorized by the terms of the law under which they act. They are as much limited by the terms of the ordinance of the supervisors providing the procedure as they would be if they were acting under some street improvement act enacted by the Legislature. The ordinance declares that, in order to authorize installment payments, the board of public works must "so determine and declare in the resolution of intention," or, as an alternative thereto, the board of supervisors must "so determine and declare in the ordinance ordering the work." It is declared to be mandatory that the resolution thus referred to shall so state whenever "the amount of the assessment imposed will exceed one-half of the assessed value of the lot or parcel of land" to be assessed. Section 28. Furthermore, the provisions of section 18 above mentioned require that the board of public works, if none of the methods provided in the ordinance is sufficient to authorize an assessment to pay for the expenses of an improvement, shall, before it passes the resolution of its intention to recommend the ordering of the work, establish an adequate method for making the assessment. It is difficult to give this section any meaning, unless it was intended to require the board of works to look into the matter at the beginning and provide for installments if it found that the assessment was likely to exceed one-half of the tax valuation on the properties.

[2] The contention that this departure from the authorized procedure could have been lawfully cured or corrected on appeal to the board of supervisors, had such appeal been taken, cannot be sustained. Section 28 of the procedure ordinance, it will be noted, provides that, in every case where the assessment will exceed one-half the tax valuation, "it shall be mandatory" that the board of public works shall first determine, and then declare in its resolution of intention, that payment of the assessments may be made in annual installments. Section 18 of that ordinance, if we interpret it aright, also requires such preliminary determination. And sections 8 and 33 of chapter 2 of article 6 of the charter withhold entirely from the two boards the power to make such an assessment, unless it is made in the manner to be prescribed by the procedure ordinance which section 33 authorizes the supervisors to adopt. Under that ordinance, the resolution of intention of the board of public works, together with the notices to be given of the time of taking action thereon, comprise the mode, and the only mode, whereby either of said boards can obtain jurisdiction of such a proceeding or power to make any assessment. It is very clear from all these provisions that, in a case where the necessary assessment for the work will exceed one-half of the assessed value of the land for the current year, they cannot obtain such jurisdiction or power, except by determining to make the assessment payable in annual installments and inserting in the resolution of intention of the board of public works a declaration to that effect. This of course, could not be done by the supervisors in deciding the appeal. It could not lawfully be done at all after the contract was let, for the contractor would then have a contractual right to immediate payment upon the completion of the work.

[3] Curative provisions in a law of this character may cure any defect that does not go to the jurisdiction of the board over the proceeding. It has been said that they may cure any defect arising from the omission of any step in the proceeding which the Legislature might have itself omitted from the law, if it be a thing not essential to due process of law, or necessary to comply with some other constitutional prerequisite. Ramish v. Hartwell, 126 Cal. 443, 58 Pac. 920;

Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 359, 80 Pac. 81. As a general proposition this is a correct statement of the law. The difficulty with its application to the present case is that here the charter, with respect to the powers of the board of supervisors to adopt a procedure ordinance, stands in the place of a Constitution; indeed, it is more stringent, for its provisions on this subject constitute a specific grant of power, and not a limitation upon powers included in a general grant. The charter says that an assessment for this amount shall not be made, except it be payable in annual installments. The curative provision of the ordinance, if allowed the effect contended for, would, in effect, declare that a valid assessment for this excessive amount can be made, although payable immediately and not in installments, provided no objection thereto is made until after the work is done. The prohibition of the charter against such assessments would thus be evaded and defeated.

[4] We think the general rule of construction with regard to curative provisions of this character is that they are not to be considered as intended to apply to any one of those preliminary steps in the proceeding which the statute itself requires to be taken whereby jurisdiction of the proceeding is to be acquired by the local board or body in charge thereof, unless such intent is expressly declared, or appears by necessary implication. Of course, it could in no case excuse or cure a want of due process of law. And where several material acts are prescribed for obtaining jurisdiction and are adapted to that purpose, it is difficult to perceive how a general curative clause can be held to apply to any of them. For if it could be applied in one case to excuse the want of one of such acts, it could in another case be made to dispense with another, and so all of them would, one by one, be declared unimportant, and a compliance with any one of them would be sufficient in any case. With respect to the curative provision here involved, we think it must be held that it was not intended to allow a disregard of the jurisdictional acts which the ordinance itself expressly declares shall be mandatory. Our conclusion is that the assessment against the property of Pearson was void. This brings us to the second question.

[5, 6] 2. There was no dispute or difference between the parties concerning the existence or nonexistence of any fact, nor regarding the validity or invalidity of the claim of the plaintiff. Both parties acted with the belief, or upon the tacit assumption, that it was a valid demand and an enforceable lien upon the property. So far as the evidence shows, neither party knew the amount of the tax valuation for the current year. Even if the claim had constituted a valid lien against the property, it would not have been a personal obligation of the defendant, but a mere lien upon his property, enforceable only by foreclosure. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 254. It does not appear that the plaintiff asserted that Pearson was personally liable for the claim. The asserted lien was not released, and there was no agreement or understanding that it should be released. The fact that the assessment was more than 50 per cent. of the tax valuation was a matter which appears of record, and could not be, and was not, disputed by either party. There was therefore no consideration whatever for the note, other than the extension of time to the defendant wherein to pay a claim that he was under no obligation to pay at all, and the corresponding forbearance of plaintiff for 90 days to forclose the claim of lien which was of no validity, and which, if foreclosed and the land sold thereunder, would have given the purchaser no title thereto.

[7] On behalf of the plaintiff it is contended that a promise given in consideration of an extension of time to pay a demand, and a corresponding forbearance to sue during the time allowed, is based upon a good consideration, even if it appears that the demand was of no legal validity, and there was no doubt or dispute concerning the facts upon which it was founded. In support of this proposition a number of decisions are cited. Upon examination we find that each of them comes within the well-established rule that a promise given in consideration of the settlement or compromise of a dispute or controversy, the event of which is uncertain or doubtful, or even in consideration of the forbearance to sue upon or the extension of time of payment of a lawful demand, is founded upon a sufficient consideration. Of the cases cited, the nearest in analogy to the case at bar is Young v. French, 35 Wis. 111. In that case the defendant was in possession of logs, with power to sell them on commission. His sales depended upon his continued possession. The plaintiff claimed a lien against the logs for a demand against the owner, and threatened to file such lien. Defendant promised plaintiff to pay his demand if he would refrain from filing the lien, which the plaintiff thereupon did; defendant holding possession of the logs by means of his promise. The decision was expressly put on the ground that the defendant had thus retained possession of the logs, and was enabled to exercise his right to sell them on commission, and that plaintiff had relinquished his right to file a claim of lien, and that these respective concessions and benefits were sufficient consideration for the promise. It was said that under these circumstances it was immaterial whether the plaintiff's claim to a lien was valid or not.

The decision was correct, but it is not applicable here. Where there has been a compromise of doubtful claims, or concessions and benefits given and received in good faith, as consideration for a promise, the actual validity of the claims is immaterial; otherwise, as remarked by Mr. Wharton:

"There could be no compromise of litigation, since there is no litigation in which one or the other party, if the case be pressed to judgment, does not fail to make out his case." Wharton on Contracts, § 533; McClure v. McClure, 100 Cal. 343, 34 Pac. 822.

But in the same section that author states that—

"a promise to compromise a claim utterly unfounded will not be regarded as a valuable consideration."

In Elliott on Contracts, vol. 1, § 235, it is said:

"If the claim threatened to be enforced is invalid or worthless, a promise not to attempt to enforce or to refrain from making trouble concerning it is not a consideration recognized by the law as valuable."

In 8 Corpus Juris, at page 238, the rule is stated thus:

"The actual forbearance or the promise to forbear to prosecute a claim on which one has a right to sue is a sufficient consideration; but such forbearance is no consideration, if it is clear that no action would lie."

Other writers state the same doctrine. 1 Beach, Cont. § 176; Bishop, Cont. § 70; 1 Chitty, Cont. § 39; 1 Parsons, Cont. § 441. An examination of the cases cited by these writers shows that the text is fully supported. There has been no decision of this court precisely on the point involved, but it was presented to the District Court of Appeal in Pacific, etc., Co. v. Carr, 29 Cal. App. 722, 157 Pac. 529. There the plaintiff presented to defendant a claim against a corporation in which the defendant was the principal stockholder. The claim against the corporation was invalid. The defendant agreed to assume the claimed indebtedness and executed a note therefor, and upon its maturity she executed another note in renewal. The action was upon the last note. The court said:

"The consideration for her note was the purported obligation of the company upon this contract; but there was no obligation, either express or implied. This being true, it cannot be said there was any consideration for the execution of the note sued upon. Clearly, if suit had been brought upon the contract against the Amritam Company, no recovery could have been had thereon upon a showing of the facts here presented. And if there was nothing upon which to base an action against the Amritam Company, it must follow that plaintiff, in releasing the company from liability which did not exist, suffered no prejudice by reason thereof."

And it was said that, unless there was some uncertainty or doubt concerning the validity of the claim for which the note was given, it did not come within the category of a compromise of a doubtful or disputed claim, and there was no consideration for the new promise. We cite a few of the many cases establishing this doctrine. Nicholson v. Neary, 77 Wash. 294, 137 Pac. 492; Daniel v. Hughes, 196 Ala. 368, 72 South. 23; Ernst v. Hollis, 86 Ala. 513, 6 South. 85; Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 147, 39 Am. Rep. 355; Foster v. Metts, 55 Miss. 82, 30 Am. Rep. 504.

In this case there was no disputed claim, no compromise of a doubtful right, no release of the lien of the plaintiff, and there was no valid claim against the defendant in existence. The claimed lien was wholly without foundation and absolutely void, and it constituted no consideration for a promise to pay the demand or any part thereof.

The judgment is affirmed.

to the disposition of public lands, and its practical application thereof, is given great weight by the courts in construing the law, and is followed if it is at all reasonable.

6. PUBLIC LANDS ⟸102—WHEN SUCCESSFUL CONTESTANT MUST MAKE ENTRY AFTER CANCELLATION.

Under Act Cong. May 14, 1880 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4536–4538), giving claimant, who has been successful in having land entry canceled, 30 days from notice of cancellation in which to make entry, successful contestant, who received notice of cancellation after land had been withdrawn from entry, had 30 days from restoration to entry in which to enter upon land, in view of Reclamation Act, § 10 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4708).

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by John McLaren against L. G. Fleischer. Judgment of dismissal. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry M. Willis, of Los Angeles, and J. O. Phillips, of Blythe, for appellant.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Leonard, Surr & Hellyer, of San Bernardino, amici curiæ.

LAWLOR, J. This appeal was taken from a judgment of the superior court of Riverside county, dismissing plaintiff's complaint after a general demurrer was sustained and the plaintiff refused to amend.

The action was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant to procure a decree in equity declaring that the defendant holds the title to a certain quarter section of land in trust for the plaintiff, requiring the defendant to convey title to the plaintiff, and for the value of the use of the land for the period set forth in the complaint. The prayer of the complaint is based on allegations to the effect that the plaintiff was wrongfully, through mistake of law, deprived of such title, or the acquiring of such title, and the defendant was wrongfully, and by mistake of law, granted such title by the Land Department of the United States. There is no claim of fraud, either actual or constructive.

[1] Before proceeding to a consideration of the points involved in this appeal, it is proper to point out that the rule is well settled that the courts cannot exercise direct jurisdiction over the rulings of the officers of the Land Department of the United States, nor are the courts authorized to reverse or correct such rulings in collateral proceedings between private parties, but that the decisions of the Land Department are subject to review by the courts only where it appears that the Land Department has committed an error of law and denied to the parties the rights to which they are entitled under the Constitution and the laws of the United States. Under such circumstances the courts can in a proper proceeding interfere and refuse to give effect to the action of the Land Department. In Quimby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 420, 26 L. Ed. 800, it was said:

"It would lead to endless litigation, and be fruitful of evil, if a supervisory power were vested in the courts over the action of the numerous officers of the Land Department, on mere questions of fact presented for their determination. It is only when those officers have misconstrued the law applicable to the case, as established before the department, and thus have denied to parties rights which, upon a correct construction, would have been conceded to them, or where misrepresentations and fraud have been practiced, necessarily affecting their judgment, that the courts can, in a proper proceeding, interfere and refuse to give effect to their action. On this subject we have repeatedly and with emphasis expressed our opinion, and the matter should be deemed settled" (citing cases).

In Gage v. Gunther, 136 Cal. 338, 68 Pac. 710, 89 Am. St. Rep. 141, this court declared:

"If however, in making such determinations of fact, that tribunal [the Land Department of the United States] has disregarded the law applicable thereto, or has erred in its construction of the law, or by reason of mistake has issued to one person a patent for the land, which upon undisputed facts should have been issued to another who has contested his claim and has shown himself entitled to the patent, the person in whose favor the patent was issued will be held to hold the land for the benefit of the one to whom it should have issued. Proceedings for this purpose are, however, to be taken in a court of equity, and are to be governed by the rules of equity procedure."

[2] The following facts are taken from the complaint and must stand as true: On February 9, 1903, the southeast quarter of section 12, T. 7 S., R. 22 E., S. B. M., in the Palo Verde valley, Riverside county, was open to public entry under the land laws of the United States, and on that day one Charles W. Rider made his homestead entry on said land by filing his application in the land office at Los Angeles. This quarter section, along with other lands, was withdrawn from all forms of entry on September 8, 1903, by order of the Land Department, under and by virtue of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, and known as the Reclamation Act (32 Stat. 388, c. 1093 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700–4708]); such withdrawal being what is commonly known as "first form withdrawals," during the existence of which no lands embraced therein can be entered, selected, or located in any manner.

On February 18, 1908, while these lands were still withdrawn from public entry, L. G. Fleischer, defendant and respondent herein, filed a contest of the Rider entry before the register and receiver of the local land office at Los Angeles, who sustained the contest and recommended to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the Rider entry be canceled. The Commissioner approved the recommendation, and on January 26, 1909, canceled the entry, and directed the register and receiver to advise all parties in interest. The defendant was notified by the register and receiver of the cancellation of the entry on February 11, 1909, and at the same time was notified by the register and receiver that he had been awarded a preference right to enter upon the said quarter section within 30 days after the said land had been restored to public entry. An order of the Secretary of the Interior, dated January 10, 1910, restored the quarter section, along with other lands, to public settlement on April 18, 1910, and to public entry on May 18, 1910.

On the day that the land was restored to public settlement, April 18, 1910, the plaintiff, "being in all ways qualified under the laws to do so," made actual settlement on the quarter section hereinbefore mentioned, with the intention of claiming the land under the homestead laws of the United States. And on May 18, 1910, he filed his homestead application, as such settler, in the local land office at Los Angeles, paid the fees required by law, continued thereafter to reside upon and improve the land, and—

"in fact complied with all the laws and requirements of the laws of the United States, and all the rules and regulations of the Land Department of the United States, relating to homesteads, except as prevented or prohibited by the officers of said Land Department, until he was ejected from said premises by judgment of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Riverside, entered April 24, 1915."

The defendant, on May 18, 1910, made his application for entry on the same quarter section, but subsequent to the application of the plaintiff, claiming a preference right to make such entry, under and by virtue of the preference right awarded him by the provisions of the act of May 14, 1880, hereinafter set forth. On the same day all the entries on this quarter section and certain other land were suspended, pending the settlement of a contest between the state of California and the United States as to the character and disposition of these lands. On May 22, 1912, the lands were again restored to public entry, subject to the applications already made. Some time later, namely, on June 3, 1912, the register and receiver of the local land office at Los Angeles rejected the application of the plaintiff and allowed that of the defendant, "on the sole ground that the said defendant had acquired a preference right * * * by reason of the successful termination" of his contest of the Rider entry. Plaintiff appealed, but the Commissioner of the Land Office affirmed the decision of the register and receiver. In pursuance of this decision a patent for the said quarter section was issued to the defendant on January 15, 1915.

From the date of his settlement on the land, April 18, 1910, until he was ejected under the judgment of the superior court above mentioned, the plaintiff lived on the land with his family, and the complaint alleges that he has been always qualified, under the laws of the United States, to make the proposed homestead entry, and has complied with all the requirements of said laws and all the rules and regulations of the Land Department of the United States relating to homesteads, except as prevented or prohibited by the officers of the Land Department.

[3] The point is raised in the brief of amici curiæ that the "plaintiff has not connected himself with the government, or shown that he is vested with the equitable title, so as to enable him to maintain this action." There is clearly no merit in this contention. Section 2290 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. St. § 4531), provides:

"That any person applying to enter land * * * shall first make and subscribe before the proper officer and file in the proper land office an affidavit that he or she is the head of a family, or is over twenty-one years of age, and that such application is honestly and in good faith made for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and not for the benefit of any other person, * * * except himself, or herself, and upon filing such affidavit with the register or receiver on payment of five dollars when the entry is of not more than eighty acres, and on payment of ten dollars when the entry is for more than eighty acres, he or she shall thereupon be permitted to enter the amount of land specified."

What constitutes an entry was laid down in Hastings, etc., Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 10 Sup. Ct. 112, 33 L. Ed. 363; Mr. Justice Lamar writing the opinion:

"Under the homestead law three things are needed to be done in order to constitute an entry on public lands: First, the applicant must make an affidavit setting forth the facts which entitled him to make such an entry; second, he must make a formal application; and, third, he must make payment of the money required. When these three requisites are complied with, and the certificate of entry is executed and delivered to him, the entry is made—the land is entered."

See, also, Whittaker v. Pendola, 78 Cal. 296, 20 Pac. 680; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Nelson, 22 Wash. 521, 61 Pac. 703.

[4] The case of Chapman v. Quinn, 56 Cal. 266, is relied on to support the contention that the plaintiff has not connected himself with the government title sufficiently to entitle him to maintain the present action to declare the defendant trustee of the title for his benefit. This decision, however, is not in point. In that case the court was considering the pre-emption statute, which provided that before an entry could be made under that section it must be established to the satisfaction of the register and receiver that the applicant had settled upon and improved the land he sought to enter. Page 274. Section 2290, it will be observed, does not require the applicant to do anything more than the plaintiff herein had done in order to enter the land; that is to say, to make, subscribe, and file in the proper land office the affidavit required by that section, and to pay the amount of money necessary to enter the quantity of land he applies for. When this is done his right is complete. The statement in the opinion of Mr. Justice Lamar which seems to imply that the entry is not complete until the officials execute a certificate of entry to him is not warranted by the statute. The applicant has put himself in privity with the government when he has done all he could do in the matter. He is then in a position to compel the officials to do their duty toward him, and to assert his right against others claiming a similar right from the government. The plaintiff in this case had complied in all respects with the law, and stood in the relation of an entryman upon a homestead claim. In Chapman v. Quinn, under a lawful rule of the Land Department, Quinn had not been allowed to file any application or make any proof. The two cases are clearly distinct and different.

The only question presented and decided in the Land Department was whether the plaintiff or the defendant had the better or prior right to enter the land. This question was decided in favor of the defendant on the single ground that he had been granted a preference right. The sole question, therefore, which is presented for decision here, is whether the officers of the Land Department made a mistake of law in granting the defendant a preference right, in the recognition of which it became necessary to cancel plaintiff's entry.

A preference right is authorized by the act of Congress of May 14, 1880 (21 Stat. 140, c. 89 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4536–4538]), which reads in part as follows:

"Sec. 2. In all cases where any person has contested, paid the land office fees, and procured the cancellation of any pre-emption, homestead, or timber culture entry, he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancellation, and shall be allowed thirty days from date of such notice to enter said lands."

At the time this act of 1880 was passed the Reclamation Act had not been enacted. It is obvious that the act of 1880 is based on the assumption that when the entry of one claimant was canceled the successful party could immediately enter the land. It contemplates land which would remain subject to entry during the contest. The provision that the successful claimant should be allowed 30 days within which to enter the land after he was notified by the land office of the cancellation of his adversary's entry, was intended and supposed to give him 30 days, during the whole of which time he could complete his own entry. It cannot be conceived that the Congress intended to start the time of his preference running before it was possible for him to exercise his right thereto. The law gives the preferred right absolutely, and the provisions regarding the giving of notice of necessity imply that the land shall be subject to entry at the time the notice is received, and that it must be subject to entry before the notice can become effective to start the time running. The notice which the act contemplates shall be given must be understood to be a notice which would give effect to the right intended to be preserved, and not a notice that would defeat it.

In this case the land was not subject to entry at the time the contest was terminated and Rider's entry canceled. The register and receiver apparently so interpreted the effect of the act of 1880 when they sent the notice, for it informed the defendant that his preference right to enter the land would continue for 30 days after the land was restored to entry. The notice they gave must be construed as a notice to take effect on the restoration to entry of lands involved and not before. If this construction is not given, the object of the act of 1880 would be utterly defeated in all cases such as the one at bar. The Land Department itself has so understood and construed the act. Section 10 of the Reclamation Act gives to the Secretary of the Interior authority to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper to carry its provisions into effect. These provisions include his order restoring the land to entry after its withdrawal. As evidence of the departmental construction of the act of 1880, certain regulations were promulgated on June 6, 1905, of which No. 7 provides that—

"Any contestant who gains a preferred right to enter any such lands may exercise that right at any time within 30 days from notice that the lands involved have been released from such withdrawal and made subject to entry."

[5] The Land Department with regard to lands so withdrawn, has consistently held to the proposition that the preference right to enter given to the successful contestant by the act of 1880 does not begin to run until the land is again restored to entry, regardless of the time when he receives the official notice of cancellation of his adversary's entry. The construction placed upon an act of Congress by the Land Department, with respect to the disposition of public lands, and its practical application thereof, is always given great weight by the courts in construing the law and is followed if it is at all reasonable.

[6] We are satisfied that the Land Department correctly construed the act in the present case in its decision that the time within which the defendant could exercise his preference right, after the cancellation of the other entry, did not begin to run against him until the time of the restoration of the land to public entry. This occurred on May 18, 1910. This was in effect decided by the Land Department in the case of Fairchild v. Eby, 37 Land Dec. 362. Referring to the department regulations aforesaid, and to the preference right allowed by the act of 1880, Secretary of the Interior there said:

"It was thus contemplated that the preference right allowed by the sixth section [of the regulations] should remain suspended, if the land was not subject to entry at the date of the cancellation, but that the preference right so acquired might be exercised whenever the land was restored."

The sixth section refers to the preference right accruing under the act of 1880 aforesaid. To the same effect see Wright v. Francis, 36 Land Dec. 499; Beach v. Hanson, 40 Land Dec. 607; Wells v. Bodkin, 42 Land Dec. 340; Edwards v. Bodkin, 42 Land Dec. 172.

Appellant relies upon Edwards v. Bodkin, 249 Fed. 562, 161 C. C. A. 488, in support of his claim that the preference right was awarded to the respondent through a mistake of law. The decision there was not to the effect that the contestant was by mistake of law given the preference right. It was there held that the Commissioner of the General Land Office had mistaken the law in declaring that the settler had abandoned his homestead claim. In discussing the question the court remarked that the Reclamation Act did not confer authority "upon the Secretary of the Interior to so extend the limitation of the act of May 14, 1880." This is the statement relied upon. It is unnecessary to determine in this case whether the Reclamation Act gave or could give legislative authority to the Secretary of the Interior. It is enough for the purpose of this case to say that he may construe the act of 1880 in connection with the Reclamation Act, and if the construction he adopts is reasonable it will be upheld and followed by the courts.

For these reasons we are of the opinion that the preferred right of the defendant to complete his entry and thereupon occupy the land for the purpose of acquiring a homestead patent did not begin to run until the time of the restoration of the land to entry, when for the first time it became possible for him to exercise the right given by the statute. The demurrer was properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

CULPEPPER v. OCHELTREE. (L. A. 4962.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1919. Rehearing Denied Dec. 29, 1919.)

PUBLIC LANDS ⊂⊃102—SUCCESSFUL CONTESTANT MUST ENTER LAND WITHIN THIRTY DAYS AFTER CANCELLATION OF ENTRY.

Contestant, who has been successful in having entry canceled, and who has received notice thereof at a time when land has been withdrawn from entry, was entitled to preference right to enter land within 30 days after restoration of land to entry, regardless of whether notice was received while Rules and Regulations of Land Department of June 6, 1905, § 7, or Rules and Regulations of January 19, 1909, § 6, was in force, since the time of receipt of notice is immaterial; the 30-day period beginning with restoration of land to entry.

PER CURIAM. The appeal herein was taken from a judgment of the superior court of Riverside county, dismissing plaintiff's complaint after demurrer sustained, and plaintiff refused to amend. This case was submitted on the briefs filed in McLaren v. Fleischer (L. A. No. 4736) 185 Pac. 967, this day decided.

The only difference between the two cases is that the defendant herein received notice on January 13, 1909, that he had been successful in his contest and was awarded a preference right to enter the land within 30 days after it should be restored to entry. The defendant in McLaren v. Fleischer received a similar notice on February 11, 1909—the former notice coming within the time section 7 of the rules and regulations of the land department of June 6, 1905, were in force and the latter after section 7 had been superseded by section 6 of the rules and regulations of January 19, 1909.

In view of what we have said in Mc-

Laren v. Fleischer, this difference in the time of receipt of notice is immaterial, and therefore, upon the authority of that case, the demurrer herein is sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

PERCIVAL v. NATIONAL DRAMA CORPORATION. (L. A. 5214.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹80(11)—RECOVERY IN ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION.

In the absence of proof of a discharge and that it was wrongful, an employé is entitled to recover only the amount of salary due him at the time the action was brought, and not his full salary for the entire term of his contract of employment.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟹102(1)—AUTHORITY OF AGENT TO DISCHARGE EMPLOYÉ.

One left by a film company in charge of its properties and the adjustment of disputes regarding a lease, the company having decided not to produce films and having removed its offices to New York, did not have any authority, real or ostensible, to discharge an employé under contract with the company, or to make any admissions binding on the company as to its intentions on that subject, although he paid the employé's salary for some time.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹40(3)—LETTER NO EVIDENCE OF DISCHARGE OF EMPLOYÉ.

A letter by a master to plaintiff employé reciting that several officers of the master had resigned, and were receiving no salary, and that the master was not going to start up in business at all, but was going out of business and had no further use for the employé, and offering the employé a certain amount of money if he would release the master from the contract, concluding with the statement that, if the employé did not accept the offer, the master would pay him his salary as per contract, did not constitute any evidence of discharge of the employé.

4. ACTION ⟹65—RIGHTS DEPENDENT ON CONDITIONS AT COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.

In an action by a servant for compensation based on an alleged wrongful discharge, the rights of the parties must be judged by the conditions existing at the time that the action was begun.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹40(3) — FAILURE TO PAY EMPLOYÉ NOT EVIDENCE OF DISCHARGE.

Mere failure of master to pay compensation is not sufficient evidence on which to base a finding that an employé was discharged.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹31 — NO DISCHARGE OF EMPLOYÉ EFFECTED BY UNDISCLOSED INTENTION.

A discharge of a servant cannot be effected by a secret undisclosed intention on the part of the master, but must be done by some act or word communicated to the servant.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹31—DISCHARGE OF SERVANT.

Any words or acts which show a clear intention on the part of a master to dispense with a servant's services, and which are equivalent to a declaration to the servant that his services will be no longer required or accepted, are sufficient to constitute a discharge of the servant.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹68 — EFFECT OF FAILURE TO PAY EMPLOYÉ.

Failure or refusal of a master to pay salary merely gives a servant the option of quitting his employment and the right to sue for the salary then due and unpaid, or of continuing in the service with the corresponding right to require and enforce payment of the salary as it accrues.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹31—NO DISCHARGE OF EMPLOYÉ SHOWN.

Refusal to pay a servant his salary, accompanied by a refusal to permit the servant to perform duties, does not show a discharge of the servant, especially where the servant was employed under a contract assigning him no specific duties, but binding him to render only such services as should be required of him.

10. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹31—CLOSING OF PLACE OF BUSINESS NOT DISCHARGE OF SERVANT.

The mere closing up of the employer's place of business does not amount to the discharge of an employé, as there must be some affirmative act or declaration in addition manifesting a discharge.

11. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹31—FAILURE TO ANSWER TELEGRAM NOT DISCHARGE OF EMPLOYÉ.

Failure of master to pay compensation due employé and failure to answer a telegram of the servant asking him as to whether or not he was discharged did not show a discharge of the servant.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by George H. Percival against the National Drama Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. C. De Garmo, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The complaint sets forth a cause of action based on a written contract dated April 21, 1916, whereby the defendant engaged the plaintiff to render to it "such services as may be required of him" from April 21, 1916, to September 1, 1917. Plaintiff also agreed to give his exclusive services to the defendant and that he would not "render services at any other place or to any other firm in the United States or Canada from the date of this contract until it is closed, except under the management" of the defendant. It was also agreed that the defendant should have the right, if it so desired, to have the plaintiff work for other firms or corporations, but only in the capacity of art director. The nature of the services to be rendered to defendant was not described in the contract. Plaintiff's compensation was to be $50 per week until September 1, 1916, and thereafter $60 per week. It is alleged that the plaintiff entered into the service of the defendant and continued therein until September 30, 1916, and that the defendant then, without cause or justification, wrongfully discharged the plaintiff, and ever since has refused to permit plaintiff to perform services under the contract. Damages were demanded for the full balance unpaid that would have become due him under the contract up to the end of the term specified. The answer denied that the defendant had discharged the plaintiff. The court made findings to the effect that the defendant wrongfully discharged the plaintiff as alleged in the complaint and gave judgment for the full amount demanded. In support of the appeal the defendant contends that the finding that there was a discharge is not supported by the evidence.

[1] Plaintiff's action was begun on October 20, 1916, less than three weeks after the alleged discharge and more than ten months before the expiration of the contract. In the absence of proof of a discharge and that it was wrongful, plaintiff would be entitled to recover only the amount of salary due him at the time the action was brought instead of his full salary for the entire term. Winsor v. Silica Brick Co., 31 Cal. App. 89, 159 Pac. 877.

The evidence shows that the defendant's business was the production of photoplays. At the time the present contract was made defendant was not actively engaged in production, but expected to be engaged therein. In fact, it never did resume such production, but went out of business. It was a New York corporation. Its office was in New York City, but its producing plant was at Los Angeles, and it had an office at the plant, at which the principal officers were stationed during the time prior to the making of the contract when it was engaged in production. The contract was made in Los Angeles. Thomas Dixon, director general of the defendant, was the only officer of the corporation who had authority to hire and discharge employés. Plaintiff's contract was signed in defendant's behalf by W. C. Burns, its treasurer, but he acted under specific instructions from Dixon, who had left Los Angeles for New York just before the contract was signed. About July 13, 1916, defendant rented its plant to the Fox Film Corporation and removed its officers and headquarters to New York, leaving at Los Angeles some of its property and retaining an office at the plant, which was occupied by Jordan Dixon, son of Thomas Dixon, who was left behind by defendant as custodian of the property and paymaster of the plaintiff and one or two other employés of defendant who remained at Los Angeles.

Plaintiff, up to this time, had taken an inventory of defendant's property, which occupied him for a part of the time for about two weeks, and was the only service defendant had required of him. After defendant removed to New York plaintiff was not called on to render any further services, but continued to report to defendant's office in Los Angeles for duty and was regularly paid his weekly salary by Jordan Dixon, up to and including September 30, 1916. No further payments were made. The last six or seven installments of salary paid to the plaintiff were advanced by Jordan Dixon out of his own funds. Said Dixon was notified by the defendant that after September 30, 1916, any further payments made by him on its account, without its authority, would be on his own responsibility, but this was not communicated to plaintiff.

For proof of a discharge plaintiff relies on testimony of certain conversations had with Jordan Dixon, on evidence of efforts of the defendant to obtain a rescission of the contract, of the defendant's failure to pay his salary, of its lease of its plant to the Fox Film Corporation, and of its failure to answer a certain telegram sent by the plaintiff.

When Jordan Dixon paid plaintiff his salary for September 30, 1916, he told plaintiff he had no more money. Plaintiff then said: "Won't I get my money next week?" To which Jordan Dixon replied: "I don't think so, unless they answer some of my communications, and they have not been answering them." On October 7, 1916, another weekly payment of salary became due, and it was not paid. Plaintiff then asked Jordan Dixon what the intentions of the defendant were about paying plaintiff any more salary, to which Dixon replied that he did not know, but thought they were of the worst. The plaintiff then said: "What will I do; will I sue for my money?" Dixon answered: "I guess you might as well." On or soon after September 30th Dixon told the plaintiff, in response to the plaintiff's request for information whether he was to consider himself discharged, that he, Jordan Dixon, had no authority to pay the plaintiff or to dismiss him or anything else.

[2] The evidence shows that this statement of Jordan Dixon as to his want of authority was correct, except, perhaps, as to the matter of payment. Defendant's pay rolls and testimony of several of its officers show that authority to employ and discharge employés was vested in Thomas Dixon, director general, and that Jordan Dixon's authority, such as he had, was conferred on him by Thomas Dixon. The latter testified that he authorized Jordan Dixon to serve as custodian of defendant's property and as paymaster of its employés, but gave him no authority to employ or discharge any one, and instructed him to report all matters of importance to New York for decision. The plaintiff's evidence on this point goes no further than to show that Jordan Dixon took charge of the adjustment of disputes regarding the lease and had something to do with the exhibition of defendant's picture when it was in Los Angeles, and that he paid plaintiff's salary until September 30, 1916. The defendant did not, by directing or permitting Jordan Dixon to exercise these powers, confer upon him any authority, real or ostensible, to discharge the plaintiff, or to make any admissions binding on the defendant as to its intentions on that subject. I view of this lack of authority in Jordan Dixon, of which plaintiff was informed as aforesaid, the various statements made by said Dixon to plaintiff do not afford any support for the finding that the plaintiff was discharged. Furthermore, even if he had authority to discharge the plaintiff, his statements did not purport to amount to a discharge. They were mere expressions of his views as to defendant's intention, given in response to plaintiff's inquiries, and not a declaration or consummation of that intention. The plaintiff's question as to suing for his money did not necessarily mean anything more than a suit for the salary then due, and the answer made to it, even if made with authority, would amount to nothing more than a refusal or neglect to pay what was due.

[3] In regard to the matter of a release from the contract, the plaintiff testified that Burns, the defendant's treasurer, before he left for New York, which happened on July 13th, asked the plaintiff if he was going to hold the defendant to the contract and gave the plaintiff to understand that he would not relish the idea of paying plaintiff the salary. Late in September Jordan Dixon showed plaintiff a letter from the defendant's New York office, which, after saying, "Show this to Mr. Percival," went on to state that several officers of the defendant had resigned and were receiving no salary, and that defendant was not going to start up at all, but was going out of business and had no further use for an art director, and then offered plaintiff $200 and his fare to New York if he would release defendant from the contract, concluding with the statement that, if the plaintiff did not accept the offer, the defendant would pay him his salary as per contract. Upon this plaintiff told Jordan Dixon that he would accept his salary according to the contract. This was the last communication had from any one authorized to speak for the defendant in the matter. These negotiations for a rescission, especially in view of the final conclusion just stated, cannot be construed as any evidence of a discharge. Pinet v. Montague, 103 Mich. 521, 61 N. W. 876; 1 Labatt on Master and Servant (2d Ed.) vol. 1, p. 586. They tend to show that there was no discharge; for the letter unequivocally declared defendant's intention to comply with the contract, and the plaintiff accepted that proposition.

[4-8] The nonpayment of salary shown does not amount to a discharge. It appears that when he brought this suit only two weekly installments thereof were due and unpaid, and that no statement of the reasons for such nonpayment, or of the intention of the defendant in that behalf, had been made to the plaintiff by any one authorized to act for the defendant. Thomas Dixon, general director, testified that before leaving Los Angeles he had ordered the suspension of plaintiff's salary because of failure to perform certain duties which he said had been assigned to the plaintiff, but further that "we have never dismissed him from our service, simply suspended payment of his salary because of the failure to perform duties assigned to him." Plaintiff denied that the duties mentioned had been assigned to him. The testimony of Thomas Dixon therefore amounts only to the statement that the defendant had suspended payment of plaintiff's salary, but had not dismissed him from its service. He further stated that, owing to his neglect of duty aforesaid, he felt under no obligation to continue to pay the salary. This testimony is not sufficient to warrant the finding that plaintiff was thereby discharged. Possibly a refusal to pay a servant's salary, if declared to the servant by the master, and based on an asserted reason that is false, would be sufficient evidence to justify an inference that there had been a discharge. But that question does not arise here. The rights of the parties must be judged by the conditions existing at the time the action was begun. Neither Thomas Dixon's reasons for suspending the plaintiff's salary nor his feeling that he was under no obligation to pay the plaintiff was communicated to the plaintiff, nor does it appear that the defendant took any action on account of these reasons or this feeling, except to suspend payment. A discharge cannot be effected by a secret, undisclosed intention on the part of the master. It must be done, by some word or act communicated to the servant. "No set form of words is necessary; but any words or acts which show a clear intention on the part of the master to dispense with the servant's services, and which are equivalent to a declaration to the servant that his services will be no longer accepted, are sufficient." 26 Cyc. 987. In this case nothing was communicated to the plaintiff beyond the bare fact that his salary for two weeks was unpaid. No authority is cited by plaintiff, and we have found none, that this fact alone amounts to a discharge. On the contrary, the authorities declare that mere failure of the master to pay wages to the servant does not amount to a discharge. 1 Labatt on Master and Servant (2d Ed.) p. 590; 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 26; Wheaton v. Higgins (Sup.) 90 N. Y. Supp. 1041; Barnett v. Cohen (Sup.) 110 N. Y. Supp. 835. Such failure or refusal to pay merely gives the servant the option of quitting his employment and the right to sue for the salary then due and unpaid, or of continuing in the service, with the corresponding right to require and enforce payment of the salary as it accrues.

[9] Even when the refusal to pay is accompanied by a refusal to permit the servant to perform the duties it has been held that no discharge was shown. Stone v. Bancroft, 139 Cal. 83, 70 Pac. 1017, 72 Pac. 717. Stone v. Bancroft, 112 Cal. 657, 44 Pac. 1069; Winsor v. Silica Brick Co., supra. The evidence here does not show that the defendant refused to permit the plaintiff to render any services. The most that can be said of it is that defendant did not require any services of plaintiff. This fact, unless accompanied by some affirmative act indicating a discharge, is not sufficient proof thereof. Winsor v. Silica Brick Co., supra; Berg v. Carroll (Com. Pl.) 9 N. Y. Supp. 511. Under the conditions of this contract it is entitled to no weight at all. The contract assigned no specific duties to plaintiff and bound him to render only such services as should be required of him. It imposed on the defendant no obligation to provide for the rendition of any service by the plaintiff. According to the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant had nothing for him to do, either when the contract was made, or thereafter, except the trifling matter of making an inventory of its property, as above stated. The terms of the contract as a whole, and the attending circumstances, indicate that it was not expected that the plaintiff would be continuously engaged in service, and that his salary was to go on just the same.

[10] Plaintiff lays some stress in his argument on the fact that defendant closed up its plant at Los Angeles and went out of business. But this occurred a long time before the alleged discharge. Defendant was practically out of business when the contract was made, and plaintiff undoubtedly entered into it knowing that defendant would have little, if anything, for him to do unless and until it should resume production. These circumstances show that the defendant had a motive for discharging the plaintiff; but proof of motive cannot take the place of substantive proof of the act which is to be accomplished. The mere closing up of the employer's place of business does not amount to the discharge of an employé. There must be some affirmative act or declaration in addition, manifesting such discharge. Webster v. Wade, 19 Cal. 291, 79 Am. Dec. 218.

[11] On October 11, 1916, after defendant had defaulted in payment of one week's salary to plaintiff, he sent a telegram, addressed to the defendant in New York, as follows:

"Oct. 11, 1916.

"National Drama Corporation, 1480 Broadway, New York City: My salary due Saturday October 7th not paid. Jordan Dixon states nothing further to be paid me. Am I discharged and what are your intentions as to paying my wages now due and to become due? I am at your services. Wire fully. Saratoga Hotel, Los Angeles. G. H. Percival."

This telegram was not prepaid by plaintiff, and when it reached the defendant's New York office the defendant learned from the telegraph company that it was a telegram signed by the plaintiff, and thereupon it declined to receive or pay for it and returned it to the telegraph company unopened. The next day the plaintiff was notified of this refusal, and thereupon paid the charges on the telegram. He never received any answer to it. The defendant's witnesses denied that defendant had received the telegram or that it was read by the persons in the office. There is no evidence to the contrary, unless a redelivery of the telegram can be inferred from the plaintiff's payment of the charges. No evidence was given that it was the custom of the telegraph company to make a redelivery in such a case. It is not necessary to determine whether the court will take judicial notice of such custom so that the inference would arise that the ordinary course of business had been followed. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 20. Even if the telegram had been delivered and read, the mere failure of the defendant to answer could not be construed as a discharge of the plaintiff.

Plaintiff was asking for information as to whether he was discharged and, as he received no answer, he was left with no more information than he had before, but no further effect can be given to the defendant's silence on the subject.

No other evidence of the discharge is presented by the record, and we are therefore of the opinion that the court erred in finding that the plaintiff was discharged. As a reversal is necessary for this reason, the other points presented regarding the insufficiency of the evidence need not be considered.

The judgment is reversed.

WILLETT & BURR v. ALPERT et al. (two cases). (S. F. 8630, 8631.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1919. Rehearing Denied Jan. 5, 1920.)

1. ATTACHMENT ⟸5—WRIT WILL NOT LIE IN ACTION BY BUYER FOR SELLERS' FAILURE TO DELIVER FULL QUANTITY.

Action by the buyer of personalty against the sellers for damages from failure to deliver the full contract quantity, delivery of part having been made, and the buyer having paid the full price, is not such that attachment will lie under Code Civ. Proc. § 537, subd. 1, and section 538, subd. 1, there being no express contract for direct payment of the money, and no implied contract, while such an action will not be permitted in such case where there is an express contract to do something other than pay money, and damages are sought because of failure.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸451—APPEAL AS TO ONE DEFENDANT DOES NOT PRECLUDE HEARING OF MOTION OF CODEFENDANT.

Though plaintiff took and perfected appeal from order dissolving attachment as to one defendant, the court still had jurisdiction to entertain the motion of another defendant to dissolve the writ as to him.

3. ATTACHMENT ⟸238—MOTION TO DISSOLVE BY EACH DEFENDANT.

Each defendant can move to discharge an attachment irregularly or improperly issued as to him.

4. ATTACHMENT ⟸246—AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS SUPPORTING MOTION TO DISSOLVE.

Where a defendant, in support of his motion to dissolve attachment as to him, filed affidavit in which he set forth that he was a resident of the state, and that the money attached belonged to him, there was a sufficient affidavit of merits, since, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 557, the motion might have been made without any affidavit.

5. ATTACHMENT ⟸241 — GENERAL APPEARANCE NOT NECESSARY TO MOTION TO DISSOLVE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 556, despite section 554, general appearance is not necessary before defendant can make his motion to dissolve attachment.

6. ATTACHMENT ⟸244 — SUFFICIENT NOTICE OF MOTION TO DISSOLVE.

Notice of motion to dissolve attachment on the ground it was improperly issued, in that the alleged cause of action set forth in the complaint and affidavit in support of the attachment was insufficient to bring the alleged claim sued on within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 537, 538, and on the ground the writ was irregularly issued, in that the claim was not for an indebtedness on a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, was sufficient.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸854(2)—ORDER DISSOLVING ATTACHMENT SUSTAINABLE ON GROUND NOT ALLEGED.

If order dissolving attachment can be upheld on any ground alleged, appellate court will not interfere, so that it cannot be said the trial court erred in granting motion to dissolve attachment which recited it was irregularly and improperly issued, though attaching plaintiff contends there was no irregularity in issuance of writ.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸190(1) — RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF OBJECTION TO DISSOLUTION OF ATTACHMENT.

The objection that notice of motion to dissolve attachment was not filed in proper time, in that an order provided that service should be made on or before September 15th, while the moving papers and an order shortening time were not filed until September 17th, should have been made in the trial court in the first instance.

Shaw, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Actions by Willett & Burr, a corporation, against D. Alpert, Milton Brownstone, and S. Gordon. From orders discharging writ of attachment as to defendants Alpert and Gordon, plaintiff appeals. Orders affirmed.

R. H. Countryman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

F. W. Nightingill, of San Francisco, for respondent Alpert.

A. S. Newburgh, of San Francisco, for other respondents.

LAWLOR, J. Under stipulations two separate appeals from two orders, one discharging an attachment as to the defendant Alpert, the other discharging the writ in the same action as to defendant Gordon, are considered together.

The plaintiff corporation brought an action to recover damages against the defendants, Alpert, Brownstone, and Gordon, in the total sum of $6,562.50. At the time of filing the complaint the plaintiff also filed an undertaking on attachment. The affidavit is in the usual form, and alleges that the plaintiff is a corporation and that each of the defendants is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $6,562.50 upon an express contract for the direct payment of money. A writ of attachment was issued in regular form, and a garnishment was served on the Bank of Italy in San Francisco, covering the funds of Alpert and Gordon. On September 6, 1917, defendant Alpert served and filed a motion to discharge the writ of attachment, in support of which he filed an affidavit. The motion was made on the grounds: First, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that the writ of attachment was improperly issued, in that the alleged cause of action does not come within the provisions of sections 537 and 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure; third, that the writ of attachment was irregularly issued, in that the claim sued upon "was not an indebtedness due from defendant to plaintiff upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, but that on the contrary, said alleged claim set forth in plaintiff's complaint herein is for an alleged breach of contract upon a claim for unliquidated damages."

On September 11, 1917, the motion of defendant Alpert, after hearing, at which counsel for defendant Gordon appeared as amicus curiæ and argued in favor of the motion, was granted, and the court made an order discharging the writ as to all of the defendants; the name D. Alpert, however, appearing in parentheses following the word "defendants." Counsel for defendant Gordon at this time reserved the right to make a separate motion to discharge the writ as to defendant Gordon. On the following day, September 12, 1917, the plaintiff perfected its appeal from the order so made. Thereafter defendant Gordon appeared specially for the purpose of making a motion to discharge the writ, and on September 18, 1917, moved to have the attachment discharged on the grounds:

"(1) That said writ of attachment was irregularly and improperly issued." (2) That the writ was not issued in accordance with the provisions of sections 537 and 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure. (3) That the writ was not issued in an action based upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, where the contract is made or is payable in this state. (4) That the cause of action was not upon a contract, express or implied, against the defendant, or defendants, not residing in this state, but, on the contrary, against the defendant or defendants residing in the state and residents thereof. (5) That the action is for damages for alleged breach of contract, and that the damages are unliquidated, "and cannot be ascertained with reasonable certainty from an inspection of the complaint, or the affidavit upon which said alleged illegal attachment is based. (6) That the affidavit on attachment is insufficient for any and all the grounds heretofore shown and alleged."

Plaintiff made preliminary objections to the hearing of the motion of defendant Gordon on the ground that the notice of motion had not been filed within the time allowed by law, and on the further ground that the trial court had no jurisdiction to hear the motion:

"For the reason that the attachment had been discharged, and an appeal taken and perfected, and the superior court had no further jurisdiction in the matter pending the determination of said appeal, and on the further ground that defendant Gordon had not filed an affidavit of merits, and on the further ground that the notice of motion of defendant Gordon was insufficient as he gave and made only a special appearance and not a general appearance, and on the further ground that the notice of motion of defendant Gordon was stated in the conjunctive form, and that all of the conjunctive grounds must exist or the motion must be denied."

On October 10, 1917, the motion was granted and an order made discharging the attachment as to the defendant Gordon. From this order plaintiff has also taken an appeal.

The essential facts appearing in the complaint are these: The Pacific Coast Redwood Company, on July 12, 1916, for $5,000, sold to one Baker "two locomotives, two hoists, together with all railroad iron, cars, railroad equipment, and all machinery and iron in and about the mill of the party of the first part, now situate on land owned by the party of the first part, along and near the Navarro river, Mendocino county." This contract was, on August 4, 1916, assigned by Baker to Alpert, defendant and respondent herein. Alpert shortly thereafter entered into contracts with Dillingham and Linn and others for the delivery of the rails at Albion, "except rails that were buried," undertaking to pay them a certain price for their services and assuming other obligations. On January 28, 1917, Alpert, with Brownstone and Gordon, his codefendants, sold to Lerch and Dimmick for $8,000 "all that certain personal property located in and upon the lands of the Pacific Coast Redwood Company at Navarro river, * * * consisting of one locomotive, two donkey engines, eleven flue boilers, also all pipe and other miscellaneous equipment and scrap iron, also at least six hundred tons rails and fittings and in addition to the foregoing approximately one hundred ton rails now at Albion"; the buyers agreeing to assume the obligations of the contracts with Dillingham and Linn and others for the delivery of the material at Albion. On April 30, 1917, after $4,000 of the $8,000 purchase price had been paid to Alpert and his associates, the plaintiff corporation purchased from Lerch and Dimmick, for $6,000, the material they bought from the defendants, assumed the payment to Alpert and his associates of $4,000, the balance due on the $8,000 purchase price, and assumed the obligations of Lerch and Dimmick under the contracts for hauling, releasing them from all warranties except as to the payment of the first $4,000, and as to the genuineness of signatures, in consideration of which Lerch and Dimmick assigned to the plaintiff corporation their interest in the contract, excepting from the operation of the assignment one hundred tons of rails at Albion. Subsequently the plaintiff corporation made the final payment of $4,000 to Alpert, Brownstone and Gordon.

It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant delivered only 425 tons, instead of 600 tons, of rails. It is further alleged that plaintiff, by reason of the failure of the defendants to deliver the balance of 175 tons of rails, has been damaged in the sum of $6,562.50. The affidavit of the plaintiff's president for attachment contains averments that the defendants are indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $6,562.50 "over and above all legal set-offs or counterclaims upon an express contract for the direct payment of money, to wit, a written contract to sell and deliver certain personal property, to wit, 600 tons of rails, the price of which has been fully paid to defendants, but defendants only delivered 425 tons of said rails, more or less, to the damage of plaintiff in said sum of $6,562.50."

Two questions are presented by the appeals. First, is the case one in which the character of the action is such that attachment will lie under subdivision 1 of section 537 and subdivision 1 of section 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure? and, second, were the defendants entitled to be heard on their respective motions to dissolve the attachment?

[1] 1. As to the character of the action, it is simply one brought by the vendee in a contract for the sale of personalty against the vendors to recover damages for a failure of the vendors to deliver the full quantity of property claimed to be called for by the contract, a delivery of a part of the quantity having been made, and the vendee having paid the full purchase price. There was no entire failure of consideration so as to entitle the vendee to recover the purchase price paid on that ground, nor was there any attempt to rescind for a partial failure so that the vendee could recover the purchase price paid on that ground, and the action in fact is not brought for a recovery of the purchase price, or any part thereof, but is strictly for damages for a breach of contract.

There is much discussion in the briefs as to whether the damages sought are liquidated or unliquidated; the appellant claiming that they are liquidated and that because of that fact an attachment will lie. In support of this are cited Donnelly v. Strueven, 63 Cal. 182; Dunn v. Mackey, 80 Cal. 104, 22 Pac. 64; De Leonis v. Etchepare, 120 Cal. 407, 52 Pac. 718; Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 142 Cal. 134, 75 Pac. 653; Hamburger v. Halperm, 28 Cal. App. 317, 152 Pac. 61. But whether the damages sought be liquidated or unliquidated is not determinative. The determinative question is whether the action is within the statutory requirement that it be "upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money," and in all of the cases just mentioned it will be found upon examination that there was either an express contract for the direct payment of money, or else a similar contract implied in fact or as a matter of law in the manner hereinafter mentioned. In not one of them was the action one for the recovery of damages for the breach of a contract other than for the direct payment of money.

The statute is explicit. It permits of an attachment against residents of the state (and the defendants in the present case are such residents) only, as we have said, "in an action upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money. * * *" Subdivision 1, § 537, Code Civ. Proc. It is obvious that the contract in this case, so far as the defendants are concerned is not an express contract for the direct payment of money. The contract was not one by which, according to its terms, the defendants were to pay money. They were to deliver certain personal property, including a certain quantity of rails, and the action is one for damages for their alleged failure to make a complete delivery.

If an attachment will lie, it must be because there was an implied contract on the part of the defendants to pay money, to wit, the value of the rails contracted for, but not delivered. The position of appellant's counsel is apparently that there is such an implied contract in this case. He states his position thus:

"If plaintiff had sued under a common count that it had bought and paid for 175 tons of rail, that the rail had not been delivered, that the rail was of the value of $6,562.50, the complaint would have stated a cause of action."

Now, it is true that, where a common count will lie, the law implies, as a fiction which cannot be controverted, a promise or contract to pay the amount recoverable in such an action, and that some of our decisions go so far as to sustain the issuing of an attachment in such a case upon the strength of the promise or contract so implied, even though there was in fact no such promise or contract. But, on the other hand, no such promise or contract will be implied unless a common count will lie. The implication is created solely to sustain the common count. It results that, if a common count will not lie, no promise will be implied by law, unless there was one in fact, which is not the case here. The plaintiff's right to an attachment in the present case must therefore depend upon whether or not it could have brought the present action in the form of a common count. Plaintiff's counsel, in the statement just quoted, assumes that it could; but the truth is that it could not, and this is determinative of the plaintiff's right to an attachment.

The action, as we have said, is one to recover damages for a failure on the part of the defendants to execute completely their contract to deliver, along with other things, a certain quantity of rails, and it is well-nigh elementary that a common count will not lie to recover damages for the breach of an unexecuted contract, where the obligation breached is something other than the payment of money. The rule is thus stated in 5 Corpus Juris, pp. 1386–1388, with the citation of a large number of authorities (the italics are ours):

"3. Existence of Express Contract as Affecting Right to Maintain General Assumpsit on Implied Contract. (a) General Rule. It is a well settled rule that when an express simple contract is open and unexecuted, and plaintiff proceeds for a breach of it, he must declare specially. Indebitatus assumpsit will not lie. * * *

"(b) Limitations and Exceptions to Rule—(1) Where Contract Has Been Fully Performed by Plaintiff. (a) Defendant's Obligation to be Settled by Payment of Money. Where an express contract, not under seal, has been fully performed on plaintiff's part, and nothing remains to be done under it but the payment of money by defendant, which is nothing more than the law would imply against him, plaintiff may declare specially on the original contract, or generally in indebitatus assumpsit at his election. * * *

"(b) Defendant's Obligation to be Settled Otherwise Than by Payment of Money. If the agreement is to be carried out by defendant in some way other than by the payment of money, the general rule is that it must be declared on specially. * * *"

The rule so stated is the rule in this state. It is expressed in almost identical language in Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, at page 257, 23 Pac. 127. To the same effect are O'Connor v. Dingley, 26 Cal. 11; Barrere v. Somps, 113 Cal. 97, 101, 45 Pac. 177, 572; Roche v. Baldwin, 135 Cal. 522, 525, 65 Pac. 459, 67 Pac. 903.

The rule is enforced so strictly that a common count will not lie, not merely where the defendant's obligation is, as in the present case, to deliver something wholly different from money, but where it differs as slightly from an obligation to pay money as an obligation to deliver a promissory note in a certain amount. The case of O'Connor v. Dingley, just mentioned, was of just that character. The plaintiff and the defendant had entered into a contract whereby the plaintiff was to construct a building for the defendant, and the latter was to pay for it by his note. The plaintiff constructed the building, and the defendant refused to give his note, whereupon the plaintiff brought an action for the amount of the note upon a common count, and brought the action before the time at which the note, if given, would have become due, and therefore at a time when the defendant's obligation was still one to give a note, and not to pay money. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the lower court, and upon appeal this was reversed, on the ground that a common count would not lie in such a case, and that the action had to be upon the special contract. The court said:

"The conclusion of law found by the court would have been upheld under the rules of pleading at common law (though not, in our opinion, by the rules established by our Practice Act), if the part of the contract to be performed by the appellant had consisted merely of the payment of money. But he did not promise to pay in money at the time of the completion of the work. He undertook to execute his note, as specified in the contract, and the ground of the action against him was his failure to execute the note according to the contract, and not his liability for the payment of money upon the completion of the work. It was held in Musser v. Price, 4 East, 147, which was a case in indebitatus assumpsit to recover the price of goods sold and delivered, to be paid for in three months by a bill of two months, that the action would not lie in that form, that the proper ground of the action was the nonperformance of the agreement to pay in a bill of two months, and that the contract was broken by his not giving the bill. See Hoskins v. Duperoy, 9 East, 498; Dutton v. Solomson, 3 Bos. & Pull. 582; Brooks v. White, 1 Bos. & P. N. R. 330; Ward v. Whitney, 8 N. Y. 442; Lutz v. Ely, 3 E. D. Smith [N. Y.] 621; Hanna v. Mills, 21 Wend. [N. Y.] 90 [34 Am. Dec. 216]. In the last case Mr. Chief Justice Bronson says: 'When goods are sold to be paid for by a note or bill payable at a future day, and the note or bill is not given, the vendor cannot maintain assumpsit on the general count for goods sold and delivered, until the credit has expired, but he can sue immediately for a breach of the special agreement.' The respondent was entitled to sue at the time he commenced this action, but he should have sued specially for the breach in failing to execute the note according to the contract."

On the question of whether a common count will lie, no distinction is possible between this case of O'Connor v. Dingley and the present.

It may be well to point out the distinction between the present and such cases as Fuel Co. v. Tuck, 53 Cal. 304, cited by appellant, where, upon a failure of consideration, or a breach of contract followed by rescission, the plaintiff sues to recover, not damages, but the money he has paid under the contract. Such an action proceeds upon the theory that the defendant has received money which should be returned by him to the plaintiff and which, therefore, the law implies a promise on his part to return, and the action for its recovery may therefore take the form of indebitatus assumpsit. But where, as in the present case, there is neither an entire failure of consideration nor a rescission of the contract, so as to entitle the vendee to recover back his money, with the result that he is limited to his remedy of damages, or where there has been an entire failure of consideration and the vendee yet elects not to recover his money, but to recover damages, the action does not proceed upon any theory of the defendant having received money which he should return to plaintiff, and which the law can therefore imply a promise on his part to return, and so indebitatus assumpsit will not lie. If this distinction between actions for the recovery of money paid because of failure of consideration or of rescission resulting from a breach of contract, and actions for damages for a breach of contract be not sound, it would follow that indebitatus assumpsit would lie in every case of a breach of contract. Such is not the law.

To recapitulate, it is plain in the present case that there is no express contract for the direct payment of money; it is also plain that there is no implied contract unless the law creates the fiction of one for the purpose of permitting an action upon a common count; and, finally, it is a well-settled rule that an action upon a common count will not be permitted in such a case as this, where there is an express contract to do something else than pay money and damages are sought because of the failure of the defendant to do that something else. It follows that the present action is not one in which the statute authorizes the issuance of an attachment. To hold otherwise would be simply to wipe out the statute and permit an attachment in every action for damages for a breach of contract, regardless of whether or not the contract be one for the direct payment of money.

[2, 3] 2. Under plaintiff's second contention—that the motions to dissolve the attachment were improperly heard by the trial court—it is urged that the trial court lacked jurisdiction to entertain the motion of respondent Gordon to dissolve the attachment as to him, by reason of the fact that appellant had taken and perfected an appeal from the order dissolving the attachment as to defendant Alpert. There is no merit in this contention. If the order made on the Alpert motion discharged the attachment as to Gordon, the appellant was not injured by the subsequent order. But if the former order simply discharged the attachment as to Alpert, the court still had jurisdiction to entertain the motion of Gordon to dissolve the writ. In one aspect of the case the order would not be reversed because the appellant was not injured; in the other, the contention of the appellant is futile. It is well settled in this state that each defendant can move to discharge an attachment which, as to him, was irregularly or improperly issued. Sparks v. Bell, 137 Cal. 415, 70 Pac. 281; Kennedy v. California Savings Bank, 97 Cal. 93, 31 Pac. 846, 33 Am. St. Rep. 163.

[4] Another objection of appellant is that no affidavit of merits accompanied the motion of the defendant Gordon to dissolve the attachment. The record shows that the respondent filed an affidavit in which he set forth that he was a resident of the state of California and that the money attached belonged to him. This, we think, was sufficient. The motion might have been made without any affidavit on his part. Section 557 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"If the motion be made upon affidavits on the part of the defendant, but not otherwise, the plaintiff may oppose the same by affidavits or other evidence, in addition to those on which the attachment was made."

[5] Under this same contention the point is made that defendant Gordon's motion should not have been heard for the reason that he appeared specially and not generally. The respondent's motion to dissolve the attachment contains this language:

"The defendant S. Gordon appearing for the purposes of this action and for no other. * * *"

Under the requirements of section 556, Code of Civil Procedure, a general appearance is not necessary before the defendant can make his motion to dissolve the attachment. That section reads:

"The defendant may also at any time, either before or after the release of the attached property, or before any attachment shall have been actually levied, apply on motion, upon reasonable notice to the plaintiff, to the court in which the action is brought, or to a judge thereof, that the writ of attachment be discharged on the ground that the same was improperly or irregularly issued."

Section 554, Code of Civil Procedure, relied on by appellant in support of this contention, relates to the release of property under attachment upon the execution of an undertaking, and has therefore no bearing on the point urged.

[6] Appellant contends that the court should not have heard the motion of Alpert because the notice of motion was insufficient. The insufficiency is not pointed out, nor do the cases cited by appellant support the contention. The notice stated that the motion would be made on the ground that the attachment was improperly issued, in that the alleged cause of action set forth in the complaint and in the affidavit in support of the attachment were insufficient to bring the alleged claim sued upon within the provisions of sections 537 and 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, further, that the writ was irregularly issued in that the claim sued upon was not for an indebtedness upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money. We think the notice of motion was sufficient.

[7] Nor is there any merit in appellant's contention that the court erred in granting defendant Alpert's motion, which recited that the attachment was irregularly and improperly issued. On this point appellant urges that since the conjunctive form was used it must be made to appear that the issuance of the attachment was both irregular and improper. The appellant does not deny that the attachment was improperly issued. He contends, however, that there was no irregularity in the issuance of the writ, and that, therefore, it was error to have granted the motion. It is too well settled to require citation of authority that if such an order can be upheld upon any ground urged an appellate court will not interfere.

[8] It is urged by appellant that the notice of motion was not filed in proper time. "The motion was noticed for September 18, 1917. An order provided that the service should be made on or before September 15, 1917. The service was made on September 14, 1917, but the moving papers and the order shortening time were not filed until September 17, 1917." It is sufficient to say that this objection should have been made in the trial court in the first instance. It not appearing that this was done, the point will not be considered on appeal.

The orders are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. The case comes up upon appeal from an order granting a motion to dissolve the attachment. Upon a decision of such a motion the court does not scrutinize the complaint and judge its sufficiency as rigidly as upon considering an order sustaining a demurrer thereto. "Unless the complaint shows upon its face that the plaintiff has no cause of action with the help of an amendment, the attachment should not be dissolved. If the complaint is defective merely, and can be made good by amendment, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend before the decision of the motion to dissolve; but if the complaint is incurable the attachment must be dissolved." Hathaway v. Davis, 33 Cal. 168.

The complaint in this action shows that the defendant Alpert had sold 600 tons of iron rails and other property to the plaintiffs at the price of $8,000, which the plaintiffs had paid in full, and that the title to the rails passed to the plaintiffs at the time the price was so paid; that the plaintiffs obtained 425 tons of said rails and all of the other property, but that defendant failed to deliver the remaining 175 tons.

When the title passed to the plaintiffs in pursuance of the sale, the defendant became the mere bailee of the plaintiffs with respect to the property sold. His failure to deliver the 175 tons of rails amounted to a conversion thereof. In such a case it seems to be well settled that the bailor may waive the tort shown by the conversion and sue the bailee in assumpsit for the value of the property converted. Hill v. Smith, 32 Vt. 433; Winside State Bank v. Lound, 52 Neb. 469, 72 N. W. 486; Deere v. Lewis, 51 Ill. 254; Davis v. Fish, 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 406, 48 Am. Dec. 387; Lehmann v. Schmidt, 87 Cal. 20, 25 Pac. 161. See, also, 1 Cooley on Torts, 164, note 27. The theory upon which these decisions rest is that the law implies a contract in such a case on the part of the bailee to pay to the owner the value of the goods so converted. The facts stated in the complaint are sufficient to support an action of this character, and consequently they are sufficient to show that the action is, or could be, by a sufficient amendment, based upon an implied contract for the direct payment of money. In such a case an attachment will lie.

If it be contended that the somewhat obscure allegation in the complaint to the effect that, instead of there being 600 tons of rails, there were only 425 tons, should be taken as an allegation that the remaining 175 tons had no existence, then the contract set forth, so far as the 175 tons of rails are concerned, would be a contract for the sale of property which had no existence. It was designated and specified property, and therefore the contract of sale could not be fulfilled by the delivery of other rails procured elsewhere. The rule regarding a contract of sale of property which has not even a potential existence is that it is a void contract. 1 Mechem on Sales, § 199; Strickland v. Turner, 7 Exch. Rep. 217. In that event, inasmuch as the plaintiff paid the price thereof, it necessarily follows that the defendant has received of the plaintiff whatever portion of the price was properly applicable to the 175 tons of rails which had no existence. In other words, the defendant has received from the plaintiff that amount of money for which he has rendered no consideration whatever and a suit in assumpsit for money had and received could be maintained at common law. This would be a suit upon an implied contract for the direct payment of money, in which case an attachment would clearly lie.

It is true that apparently it has been decided in this state that an attachment will no lie where the action is in assumpsit upon the implied contract raised at common law in a case where the defendant had unlawfully received money belonging to the plaintiff. Babcock v. Briggs, 52 Cal. 502. But the decision in that case consists of but two lines, and it is difficult to determine whether it was placed upon the ground that no action on contract would lie in such a case as has just been stated, or whether it was placed on the ground that the complaint by its averments confined its scope to an action in tort. The statute allows an attachment in all cases of implied contracts for the direct payment of money. The word "direct" is apparently surplusage, for every contract for the payment of money would be a contract for the direct payment of money. The common law has always been in force in this state except as changed by statute. It is to be presumed that the term "implied contract," as used in the attachment law, was intended to include all cases where at common law a contract was implied. If this be not so, great confusion would result. If it is now proposed to limit the application of that section to cases where the contract is one implied from the evidence, or to cases where there is an actual contract for the payment of money, though not expressly stated, and to exclude cases where the contract arises solely by implication of law, the matter should be clearly stated so that it would be generally understood. I do not believe that this was the intent of the statute.

HILBORN v. SOALE et al. (Civ. 3039.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂⊃14(3)—DEED CONSTRUED TO CREATE JOINT TENANCY.

A deed of property to a husband and wife "as joint tenants with the right of survivorship," to have and to hold to the said grantees "and to the survivor or [of] them forever," held to create a joint tenancy, and not a joint life estate in the husband and wife and a contingent remainder in fee to the survivor.

2. DEEDS ⊂⊃97—HABENDUM CLAUSE CAN BE RESORTED TO TO LIMIT GRANT.

The habendum clause in a deed, where such intent is made clear, can be resorted to to restrict, limit, or enlarge the estate indicated in the grant.

3. JOINT TENANCY ⊂⊃4—EXECUTION SALE OF INTEREST OF JOINT TENANT RESULTS IN TENANCY IN COMMON.

The execution sale of the interest of one of two joint tenants severs the joint tenancy and leaves the purchaser at the execution sale and the other joint tenant as tenants in common.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Grace A. Hilborn against Carl B. Soale and Wilson H. Soale, her husband. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

S. L. Carpenter, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank L. Muhleman and Jones & Evans, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The title to the property involved in this action was conveyed to the defendants and appellants, Carl B. Soale and Wilson H. Soale, her husband, by the following deed:

"Grant Deed. Bertha E. Hookway and William R. Hookway, her husband, in consideration of ten dollars to them in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do hereby grant to Carl B. Soale and Wilson H. Soale, her husband, as joint tenants with the right of survivorship, all that real property situated in the city of Pasadena, county of Los Angeles, state of California, described as follows: Lot twenty-eight (28) of the Bixby tract, as per map recorded in book 14, page 92, miscellaneous records of said county, subject to taxes fiscal year 1908–1909. To have and to hold to the said grantees and to the survivor or [of] them forever. Witness their hands this second day of July, 1908. Bertha E. Hookway. William R. Hookway."

Plaintiff claims title to an undivided half of the premises under an execution sale of the interest of Wilson H. Soale, and brought this action for partition between himself and the defendant Carl B. Soale. This appeal is from the interlocutory judgment in plaintiff's favor.

[1, 2] The case turns on the construction of foregoing deed. Respondent claims that the conveyance created a joint tenancy in fee in the two grantees, and appellants contend that the effect of the deed was to create a joint life estate in the husband and wife, and a contingent remainder in fee to the survivor. Appellants' contention is based upon the theory that the words in the deed, italicized herein for the purposes of this case, are effective to prevent the severance of the joint tenancy by execution sale, or voluntary act of either of the parties to the title, and preserve the right of survivorship by creating an independent title in the survivor upon this life estate. Without discussing the question as to whether or not such an estate can be created under the limitations of the California Civil Code, we are satisfied that the language of the instrument, as relied upon by appellants, is not calculated and was not intended to limit or modify the apt language for the creation of a joint tenancy. We see nothing in the words "with the right of survivorship," following the grant to "Carl B. Soale and Wilson H. Soale, her husband, as joint tenants," other than the expressed declaration of the implied incident of right of survivorship which characterizes a joint tenancy; and the italicized words in the habendum clause, "To have and to hold to the said grantees and to the survivor of them forever," is in no wise inconsistent with the granting clause. Of course, no question of tenancy by entireties, as between husband and wife, is involved in this case under our statutes; and it is apparent under the granting clause, independent of the language in controversy, that it was the intention of the grantor to create a joint estate. It is not disputed that the habendum clause, where such intent is made clear, can be resorted to to restrict, limit, or enlarge the estate indicated in the grant; but no such purpose is indicated here. In Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 37 Pac. 1049, and Jacobs v. All Persons, etc., 12 Cal. App. 163, 106 Pac. 896, cited by appellants, the habendum clause under consideration in each instance in expressed terms limited the estate vested in the grantee named to a life interest.

[3] Without reviewing appellants' citations from the courts of other states, we find them all distinguishable from the case at issue here, and for the most part concerned with the construction of deeds in which the habendum clause is in irreconcilable conflict with the granting clause. Such is not the condition here. In Swan v. Walden, 156 Cal. 195, 103 Pac. 931, 134 Am. St. Rep. 118, 20 Ann. Cas. 194, in which case the deeds in question more nearly correspond to the deed under consideration here than in any of the foreign cases cited, our Supreme Court held that a conveyance to grantees, husband and wife, "as joint tenants, with fee to the survivor," and another to grantees as husband and wife "during their joint lives," and afterwards to the survivor in fee simple absolute, vested the estate in these grantees in joint tenancy. We reach the same conclusion in this case. The execution sale of the interest of Wilson A. Soale to the plaintiff here severed the joint tenancy and left plaintiff and defendant Carl B. Soale tenants in common, and the land subject to partition between them.

The judgment is affirmed.

GATES v. KEHLET et al. (Civ. 3080.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 23, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(3)—PRESUMPTION THAT FINDINGS OF FACT ARE SUSTAINED BY THE EVIDENCE.

On appeal based on judgment roll alone involving question whether findings of fact are sufficient to support the judgment, it must be assumed that findings are fully sustained by the evidence.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸194(3) — RELEASE OF ORIGINAL LESSEE AFTER SUBLETTING WITH CONSENT OF LESSOR.

Where with consent of lessor lessee assigned lease upon express understanding that he should remain liable for performance by assignee, who afterwards under a like understanding assigned his interest, held, that acceptance by lessor of keys from one of assignees in possession upon express understanding that he would attempt to rent premises for benefit of original lessee and the assignees did not relieve original lessee from liability.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸208(4)—ORIGINAL LESSEE CANNOT COMPLAIN OF AGREEMENT WITH ASSIGNEE TO RELET PREMISES.

Where under terms of original lease and assignments thereof by original lessee and his assignee both original lessee and his assignee were made liable for whole unpaid portion of rentals under original lease, an agreement by lessor with assignees of original lessee's assignee that lessor would attempt to relet premises for benefit of original lessee and all the assignees was for the benefit of original lessee, and he cannot complain thereof.

4. PLEADING ⟸48—DENOMINATING AMOUNT CLAIMED AS RENT INSTEAD OF DAMAGES DOES NOT AFFECT RIGHT OF RECOVERY.

Where plaintiff states in complaint the facts upon which he relies for recovery and does not in body of complaint or prayer denominate the amount claimed as either rent or damages, suggestion that complaint is defective because the plaintiff is suing for rent, and not for damages, has no merit, and even if plaintiff had so denominated amount claimed, it would not affect his right of recovery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by C. W. Gates against Oswald Kehlet and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant L. M. Armstrong appeals. Affirmed.

Stuart M. Salisbury, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Barstow, Rohe & Jeffers, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal by the defendant Armstrong from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover a sum of money alleged to be due under the terms of a certain lease and of an alleged agreement on the part of said Armstrong guaranteeing the performance of the terms and conditions of said lease.

This appeal is based upon the judgment roll alone, and the only two questions presented by the appellant are: First, as to whether the findings of fact are sufficient to support the judgment; and, second, as to whether the plaintiff's amended complaint contains facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

[1] The following is a summarized statement of the findings of the trial court, which we must assume upon the record before us are fully sustained by the evidence in the case: On the 24th day of September, 1912, the plaintiff and respondent herein, as lessor, and the defendant and appellant Armstrong herein, as lessee, made and entered into a written lease of certain premises in the city of Los Angeles at a rental of $125 monthly during the first year of the term of said lease, and of $150 per month during the remaining four years of said term, which said term of said lease was to expire on the 30th day of September, 1917. Said defendant Armstrong entered into possession of said premises under said lease. Thereafter, and on the 4th day of December, 1913, the said Armstrong, with the consent of his lessor, assigned all of his interest in said lease to the defendant herein, Oswald Kehlet, upon the express condition that said Armstrong should remain liable to the said lessor for the performance by Kehlet of all the terms and conditions of said lease. Thereafter, and on the 1st day of May 1914, the said defendant Kehlet, with the consent of the original lessor, assigned all of his interest in said lease to the defendants herein Mary E. and Ade Orrill, upon the express condition and agreement that the said defendants Armstrong and Kehlet should and did become and remain guarantors for the performance by the said assignees of Kehlet of all of the terms and conditions of said lease. Thereafter the premises became vacant, and so remained from October, 1914, to May, 1915, during all of which time the defendants had the keys to and possession of said premises. In the month of May, 1915, the defendant Ade Orrill gave the keys of said premises to the plaintiff upon the express understanding and agreement that the plaintiff would make what effort he could to rent said premises, but only on behalf of and for the benefit of the defendants herein, and that neither they nor any of them would thereby be relieved from any liability whatever, but that, in case the said premises were relet for any sum less than the stipulated rental thereof under the terms of said lease and of said assignments thereof, the lessor would expect the defendants to pay him the difference, that the plaintiff in the exercise of reasonable diligence did succeed on or about June 1, 1915, in obtaining a tenant for said premises for a stipulated rental of $75 per month up to December 31, 1915, and thereafter again rented said premises for the period between January 1, 1916, and December 31, 1916, at a stipulated rental of $90 per month, but that said premises then became vacant, and so remained between January 1, 1917, and September 30, 1917, the date of the termination of the original lease of said premises. That after crediting the amounts so received from the succeeding rentals of said premises through the efforts of said plaintiff upon the total sums due and payable under the terms of said original lease there still remained due the sum of $2,325 as rent of said premises, for which sum, together with certain expenses, costs, and counsel fees, the court rendered judgment against each and all of said defendants. From the judgment so rendered the defendant Armstrong prosecutes this appeal.

[2, 3] The said appellant's first contention is that the findings do not sustain said judgment; his claim being that the surrender of said premises by the defendants Orrill to said plaintiff and his acceptance of the same and the subsequent reletting of the premises by him terminated the original lease, and thereby relieved the said appellant Armstrong of any further liability for the rent thereof under his agreement and guaranty. We can perceive no merit in this contention in view of the facts as found by the court that the retaking of the possession of said premises on the part of the plaintiff as the original lessor thereof was under an express agreement that he was doing so for the benefit of the defendants, and that his act in so doing and the reletting of the premises by him was not in any manner to relieve the lessees or any of them of liability for the rent of said premises as provided in said lease. The burden of the appellant's contention, however, seems to be that this agreement as to the terms and conditions of the plaintiff's retaking of the possession of said premises and attempt to relet the same was made with the defendants Orrill, who were then in possession of the premises, and was not made with the appellant, and that he therefore is not bound thereby. The difficulty about this contention is that under the terms of the original lease and of the assignments thereof by both Armstrong and Kehlet, the appellant Armstrong was made expressly liable for the whole unpaid portion of the rentals due under said original lease, and that he had guaranteed the payment of the same, and that the agreement which the plaintiff made with the Orrills was made for his benefit, and that he was in no wise affected other than advantageously by said agreement, and hence cannot complain of it. The agreement between the plaintiff and the Orrills did not work a termination of the estate created by the terms of said original lease, or of their assignment thereof, but only worked a termination of their possession for their benefit and for the benefit of their two preceding lessees. The authorities cited by the appellant upon this point do not sustain his contention and have no application to a state of facts such as the findings in this case reveal. On the other hand, it has been held by this court that, where a landlord accepts the possession of rented premises from his tenant upon the understanding and agreement that he does so for the latter's benefit and in order to relet the premises on the latter's behalf, he has a right to recover from the tenant and from whoever else has made himself liable therefor the difference between what he has been able, in good faith, to let the property for and the amount agreed to be paid under the terms of the original lease. Baker v. Eilers Music

Co., 26 Cal. App. 371, 146 Pac. 1056. We therefore see no merit in the appellant's first contention.

[4] As to his remaining point, that the plaintiff's amended complaint fails to state a cause of action, it is mainly supported by the argument of counsel for the appellant in support of his first contention, and hence falls with it. The suggestion that the plaintiff's said complaint is defective because the plaintiff is said to be suing for "rent," and not for "damages," has no merit. The plaintiff states in his amended complaint the facts upon which he relies for a recovery, and does not denominate the amount he claims to be due in the body or prayer of said complaint as either rent or damages; and even if he had done so it would not affect his right of recovery of the sum due as either upon the facts set forth in the complaint.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; BEASLEY, Judge pro tem.

SINGH v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR GLENN COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 2058.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 3, 1919.)

1. BRIBERY ⟸1(2) — STATUTE PROHIBITING BRIBERY OF "EXECUTIVE OFFICER OF THIS STATE" INCLUDES DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

In view of Pen. Code, § 771, under which the duties of the district attorney are for the state within the territorial limits of the county, and Pol. Code, § 343, designating the district attorney "as a civil executive officer," the district attorney is an "executive officer of this state" within the provisions of Pen. Code, § 67, relating to bribery of public officers.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Executive Officer.]

2. STATUTES ⟸181(2)—CONSEQUENCES OF A PARTICULAR CONSTRUCTION MAY BE CONSIDERED.

Where the language of a statute is upon its face ambiguous, or its meaning likewise uncertain or obscure, the consequences of a particular construction or interpretation may be taken into consideration, and where not necessary a penal statute will not be given a meaning which would lead to absurd consequences.

Application by Channan Singh for writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Glenn, and the judge thereof, Hon. William M. Finch, to enjoin proceedings upon an indictment. Application dismissed.

W. T. Belieu, of Willow, and Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

HART, J. The petition asked for a writ of prohibition, restraining and prohibiting respondents from hearing, proceeding with and deciding any matter in relation to a certain indictment returned by the grand jury of Glenn county against petitioner.

The charging part of said indictment reads as follows:

"The said Channan Singh * * * did then and there willfully, unlawfully and feloniously and corruptly, offer and give a bribe, to wit, $500 in currency, lawful money of the United States, to one H. W. McGowan, who was then and there, and on the 6th day of January, 1919, and ever since said time has been and now is, an executive officer of the state of California, to wit, the duly elected, qualified, and acting district attorney of the county of Glenn, state of California, with the intent then and there to willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and corruptly to influence the act, vote, decision, and opinion of the said H. W. McGowan, as such officer, in respect to the prosecution of a certain action entitled the People of the State of California v. Santa Singh, Mit Singh, and Ishar Singh, on the charge of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with the intent to commit murder, * * * then and there * * * pending in the superior court of the county of Glenn, state of California, contrary," etc.

[1] The indictment herein assailed is based on section 67 of the Penal Code, which reads:

"Every person who gives or offers any bribe to any executive officer of this state, with intent to influence him in respect to any act, decision, vote, opinion, or other proceeding as such officer, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not less than one nor more than fourteen years, and is disqualified from holding any office in this state."

The contention of the petitioner is that a district attorney is neither an executive officer nor an officer of the state.

Waiving consideration of the question, which, under some of the decisions in this state, might arise here, whether the petitioner has available to him for the relief he seeks by this proceeding a plain and an adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, the real ground of his objection to the indictment being that that document does not state a public offense under any known law of this state, we will proceed to consider the merits of the contention advanced by him.

It may first be conceded that a district attorney is a county officer in at least a geographic sense—that is to say, that the exercise of his powers as such is limited territorially to the county for which he has been elected. But, considering the nature and purposes of county governments, he is also in a sense a state officer, or, perhaps it would be more correct to say a part of a political organization which is itself an agent of the state. The authorities are quite uniform upon the proposition that all the powers and functions of a county government organization have a direct and exclusive reference to the general policy of the state, and are, in fact, but a branch of the general administration of that policy. Dillon on Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) § 35; People v. Sacramento County, 45 Cal. 692; People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 498, 22 Pac. 851, 15 Am. St. Rep. 66; County of San Mateo v. Coburn, 130 Cal. 636, 63 Pac. 78, 621; Reclamation Dist. No. 1500 v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 679, 154 Pac. 845; County of Sacramento v. Chambers, 33 Cal. App. 142, 164 Pac. 613; Dillwood v. Riecks, 184 Pac. 35. The more important duties of a district attorney are the prosecution of criminal cases, which are prosecuted, not in the name of the county or the people of the county, but in the name of the people of the state. The Legislature, in section 771 of the Penal Code, seems to have proceeded upon the theory that the district attorney, in exercising his powers as such, acts for the state. That section provides that when an accusation is presented by the grand jury of a county against the district attorney the judge of the superior court in and for the county in which such accusation is presented must, upon the delivery of the accusation to him, "appoint some one to act as prosecuting officer in the matter, or place the accusation in the hands of the district attorney of an adjoining county, and require him to conduct the proceedings." This language is mandatory, and if the judge should elect to order a district attorney of an adjoining county to prosecute the accusation, that officer would be compelled to perform that duty. Hence it is clear that the theory of that provision of section 771 is that, in the performance of the duties imposed upon that officer by law a district attorney acts for the state within the territorial limits of the county for which he was elected; for it is hardly supposable that, if that was not the theory of said provision, the Legislature would have authorized the imposition upon an official in one county the performance of duties appertaining to his office in another county. But this discussion, in view of the conclusion at which we have arrived upon points the decision of which is decisive of this case, may well be regarded as unnecessary or academic.

As above stated, the petitioner contends that a district attorney is not an executive but a judicial officer; hence that officer does not come within the class of officers mentioned in section 67 of the Penal Code, the bribing of or offering to bribe whom is by said section made a public offense. There are some decisions in other jurisdictions which say that a district attorney is a judicial officer. We cannot assent to that proposition, so far as this state is concerned. In the first place, it is to be stated that the Legislature, in general language contained in section 343 of the Political Code, designates a district attorney as a "civil executive officer." In the second place, we remark that we cannot conceive of any duty among those imposed by law on a district attorney which is of a judicial nature, except perhaps the duty of giving legal opinions to other county officers with respect to their official duties, which, strictly speaking, is not judicial, for, when performing such a duty, he does no more than the lawyer engaged in private practice does when advising his clients. The Attorney General of the state is required to advise the several other state executive and administrative officers with regard to their respective duties, but he is also designated by said section 343 of the Political Code as a "civil executive officer."

But it is further insisted that a district attorney is not within the class of officers referred to in section 67 of the Penal Code, because, as is the contention, he is not an "executive officer of this state." Said section, it will be noted, provides that "every person who gives or offers any bribe to any executive officer of this state," etc., and the argument is that the language italicized was intended to be understood as being synonymous with the phrase, "state officer." That position cannot, in our opinion, be sustained. We think what the Legislature intended to say in section 67 was that "every person who gives or offers any bribe to any executive officer in this state," etc. This construction is strengthened by the consideration that there is no other section in the Penal Code which makes it a crime to give or offer a bribe to an executive officer, either county or state, for the purpose of corruptly influencing his official action than section 67, and we shall not commit ourselves to the belief, in the absence of more persuasive reasons than those which learned counsel have been able to present here, that the Legislature has either intentionally or inadvertently omitted to pass a law authorizing the punishment of a person for corrupting or attempting to corrupt a county executive officer. And if the Legislature had intended to limit the application of section 67 to state officers, it would have been a very easy matter for it to have given apt and unambiguous expression of such intention. It would have undoubtedly said, if such had been its purpose, "any state executive officer," in the place of "any executive officer of this state."

[2] It is a familiar rule of statutory construction that where the language of a statute is, upon its face, ambiguous, or its meaning likewise uncertain or obscure, the consequences of a particular construction or interpretation of such statute may be taken into consideration. If the construction of section

67 of the Penal Code contended for by petitioner were to be adopted, the result would be that no punishment could be inflicted upon a person for giving or offering a bribe to a county executive officer. The language of said section, as is plainly manifest, does not make it clear that the Legislature intended to restrict the operation of the section to state officers. While it may be conceded that, without consideration of the consequences following from such a construction of the section, it might with some show of reason be held that the Legislature intended the section to be so restricted, it can, likewise viewed, reasonably be held to be the legislative intent at the bottom of the section to include within the purview of its provisions any executive officer in this state, whether state, county, or municipal. Under this view of the section, we are not compelled to give to it a meaning which would lead to absurd consequences.

We have carefully examined the very able brief of counsel for petitioner and the authorities cited therein in support of their several contentions here. We have found nothing in the cases or other authorities cited which have tended to lead us from the conclusion herein arrived at.

The alternative writ is discharged, and this proceeding dismissed.

In re MAUVAIS' ESTATE.

TEVIS et al. v. FERGUSON.

(Civ. 2962.)

1. WILLS ⇐278—PETITION FOR REVOCATION OF PROBATE BY "PERSONS INTERESTED."

A petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, for the revocation of the probate of a will, alleging that petitioners are son and daughter of deceased, and, together with another named daughter and son, constitute the sole heirs at law of deceased, shows that the petitioners were "persons interested" within the meaning of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Interest.]

2. WILLS ⇐278—WANT OF INTEREST OF PETITIONERS FOR REVOCATION OF PROBATE MAY BE SHOWN BY ANSWER.

In a contest under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, by heirs at law to revoke the probate of a will, the right of the petitioners to wage the contest may be challenged by answer creating an issue as to their necessary interest.

3. WILLS ⇐166(11)—UNDUE INFLUENCE NOT SHOWN BY DECLARATION OF DECEDENT.

Statements of a decedent, both prior to and subsequent to the date of a will, that she intended treating all her children alike in the final disposition of her property, are not of themselves sufficient to establish undue influence on the part of a favored child.

4. WILLS ⇐166(7)—OPPORTUNITY AND INTEREST NOT ENOUGH TO SHOW UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Mere proof of opportunity to influence a testator's mind, even when coupled with an interest or motive so to do, will not sustain a finding of undue influence, in the absence of testimony showing that there was pressure operating directly on the testamentary act.

5. WILLS ⇐166(12)—SUFFICIENCY OF PROOF OF UNDUE INFLUENCE.

While the exercise of undue influence may be shown by indirect evidence, such evidence must do more than raise a suspicion, and must amount to proof of circumstances inconsistent with the claim that the will was the spontaneous act of the alleged testator.

6. WILLS ⇐166(1)—UNDUE INFLUENCE NOT SHOWN.

In a will contest evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that undue influence was exercised.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Clemence Mauvais, deceased. From an order revoking the probate of the will and the accompanying judgment declaring the will to be null and void, Juliette M. Ferguson, individually and as executrix, appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Delphin M. Delmas, of Los Angeles, and Leib & Leib, of San Jose, for appellant.

Harry W. McNutt, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

Oliver Ellsworth, of San Francisco, and James P. Sex, of San Jose, for respondents.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order revoking the probate of the alleged will of Clemence Mauvais, deceased, and the accompanying judgment declaring said will to be null and void.

Two claims are urged in behalf of the appeal: (1) That the court was without jurisdiction to hear the petition for the revocation of probate of said will; and (2) that the evidence adduced below is insufficient to justify the findings of the jury. These claims will be disposed of in the order stated.

Clemence Mauvais died on August 8 1916, leaving as her sole heirs at law her four children, all of mature age, named Juliette Mauvais Ferguson, the appellant and proponent of the will, Romeo Mauvais and Edith Mauvais Tevis, the respondents and contestants, and Ernest Mauvais. Mrs. Mauvais left a written instrument dated June 16, 1907, purporting to be her holographic will, by the terms of which she left all her property to her daughter Juliette. On September 22, 1916, the order was made admitting the purported will to probate and appointing Juliette Mauvais Ferguson the executrix thereof; letters testamentary being thereupon issued to her.

Within one year after said order was made the contestants filed their petition containing allegations against the validity of said will and praying that the probate thereof be revoked. A demurrer was interposed against the petition based upon general and special grounds. The demurrer was ordered sustained on September 21, 1917, leave being granted to file an amended petition within ten days. An amended petition was filed September 29, 1917, seven days after the expiration of one year from the date of the order admitting the will in question to probate. The amended petition concededly contains all the essential allegations required by the statute. The appellant has ever since the filing of the amended petition asserted by appropriate pleadings and procedures the claim that the court was without jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding in contest of said will, and that the contestants were barred from procuring the relief sought, for the reason that the statute of limitations applicable to the subject-matter in hand (section 1327, Code Civ. Proc.) precluded the filing of a petition in contest of the will after the expiration of the time limited by the statute, except it be in mere amplification of a petition filed within the prescribed time, and that, since the original petition failed to show that the contestants were persons "interested" within the meaning of the section of the Code stated above, such defect could not be cured by amendment made after the expiration of the statutory period, and that therefore the bar of the statute must prevail.

The first petition contains the following allegation:

> "That your petitioners are son and daughter of said deceased, and that together with said Juliette Ferguson, a daughter, and Ernest Mauvais, a son, constitute and are the sole heirs at law of said deceased."

To this allegation there was added, in the amended petition, the following:

> "That said decedent in said alleged will leaves nothing whatsoever to any of her children except said daughter, Juliette, to whom she bequeaths and devises all her property and estate."

[1] We are of the opinion that the original petition as a pleading showed that the petitioners were persons "interested," within the meaning of the section of the Code referred to. The contention of the appellant to the effect that the court was without jurisdiction to hear the contest or to grant the relief prayed for, is neither in accord with the views of the Supreme Court of this state already expressed upon this subject (Estate of Zollikofer, 167 Cal. 196, 138 Pac. 995; Estate of Land, 166 Cal. 538, 137 Pac. 246; Estate of Benton, 131 Cal. 472, 63 Pac. 775), nor with that of other jurisdictions where similar statutory requirements have been prescribed (40 Cyc. 1242; case note 130 Am. St. Rep. 189; case note L. R. A. 1918A, 448–452).

[2] If for any reason not apparant upon the face of the petition the petitioners were not in fact "interested" within the meaning of the statute notwithstanding their status as heirs at law of the decedent, it would have been proper to challenge the right of the petitioners to wage the contest of decedent's will by answer creating an issue as to the necessary interest of the petitioners, and as was done in Estate of Wickersham, 153 Cal. 603, 96 Pac. 311, and in Estate of Edelman, 148 Cal. 233, 82 Pac. 962, 113 Am. St. Rep. 231.

We pass now to the consideration of the second point urged in behalf of this appeal. The contestants' case is founded upon the theory that the proponent of the will in contest and the sole beneficiary therein named procured such will to be made against the will and wish of the testatrix by the exercise of undue influence, and that therefore it must follow that the paper purporting to be a will is invalid and void. The allegations of the petition having relation to the charge of the exercise of undue influence are substantially as follows: That for some months prior to the execution of the alleged will the health of the decedent was seriously impaired, thus producing a weakened condition of the physical and mental powers of said decedent, which condition existed at the time of the exercise of the testamentary act in question and rendered her easily susceptible to undue and unreasonable influences; that decedent was a woman of strong and easily excited prejudices; that at the time of the execution of said alleged will the proponent made her home with the decedent, was in constant attendance upon her, and assumed charge of her affairs; that by reason of decedent's said impaired mental and physical condition, and of proponent's close association with her, that decedent's will and mind became controlled and directed by proponent who by false statements and prejudices embittered the mind of the decedent against her other children; and that under such circumstances, and while under the domination and control of proponent, and against her own will and wish, she executed the purported will. All these allegations of the petition were controverted by the answer. The findings of the jury were in favor of the contestants.

The will in contest was the second holographic will made by Mrs. Mauvais following the death of her husband. The record is silent as to the immediate circumstances attending its execution. The preparation of the first will bears close and significant relationship to the execution of the second one. Both wills were practically the same; the difference consisting only in the omission from the second will of the bequest of a watch to Romeo Mauvais and some articles of jewelry of Edith Tevis.

With reference to the preparation and execution of the first will, E. M. Rea, of the Santa Clara county bar, testified that for a number of years he had been the personal attorney of Romeo Mauvais, Sr., the predeceased spouse of Clemence Mauvais, and that upon the death of Mr. Mauvais he became the attorney of Mrs. Mauvais serving as legal adviser to her in matters personal to her own affairs, and also in her representative capacity as executrix of her deceased husband's last will. Mr. Rea testified that shortly following the death of Mr. Mauvais, which occurred in the earthquake of 1906, Mrs. Mauvais requested him to call at the family home, which he did. Mrs. Mauvais stated to Mr. Rea on that occasion that she desired to make her will. At that time Mr. Mauvais' will was still in the family home. It was suggested by the attorney that, in view of Mrs. Mauvais' desire to be secretive about the execution of her will, she make a holographic will as her husband had done, which was agreeable to Mrs. Mauvais. She gave detailed instructions as to the disposition of her property, and her will was prepared with the assistance of Mr. Rea, who closely followed the phraseology of the holographic will of Mr. Mauvais as to form. The testamentary desires of Mrs. Mauvais were explicitly carried out. In explanation of the reason why she made her daughter Juliette practically the sole beneficiary under her first will (although she was accustomed to speak in loving terms of all her children), she stated to Mr. Rea, according to his testimony that Edith "had everything she wanted and would never want for anything," and that "Ernest would get no good out of the money" for certain expressed reasons, "and that as long as Juliette had the money she was sure that Ernest could always come around and get some money when he needed it," and that Juliette "had married poorly, and that her husband was not in a position to do for her as he wanted to." Practically the whole of one afternoon was consumed in the preparation and execution of the will referred to. No one else was present at any time. Juliette Ferguson was not at the house at the time, and, so Mr. Rea testified, had not been for several days at that time. The will, as executed, was left with Mrs. Mauvais to be placed in a secret receptacle in the Mauvais home.

Referring to the holographic will in contest, dated June 16, 1907, Mr. Rea testified that—

"Mrs. Mauvais brought this present will up to my office; I looked it over in court yesterday. She showed it to me. So far as my memory goes it was that exact paper. She might have copied it again; I can't say; but it was the same as that will. She told me she had rewritten it and left out the provisions of the watch to Romeo and the Jewelry to Mrs. Tevis, and she asked me to look it over and see if it was all right, which I did."

In 1908 the relation of attorney and client between Mr. Rea and Mrs. Mauvais ceased. She then retained Hiram D. Tuttle, formerly a judge of the superior court of Santa Clara county, as her counsel. Judge Tuttle stated in his testimony that he was legal adviser to Mrs. Mauvais for several years, and that his impression was that she had shown him the will in contest and had consulted him as to its form.

The testimony of Mr. Rea and of Judge Tuttle touching the matters above referred to stands unimpeached and uncontradicted in the record.

There is no evidence directly showing that Juliette Ferguson had anything at all to do with the preparation or execution of either of the wills referred to or knew or suspected either was being made. She positively swore that she did not know of their existence until after they were made, and there is no proof to the contrary. She stated that she did not learn of the preparation of the first will until after her mother's death.

The evidence does not disclose that the decedent suffered any serious impairment of health until after the execution of the will in probate; in fact, not until some months following its execution. There is not even slight evidence in the record showing that at the time of the exercise of either of the testamentary acts referred to in the evidence either her mental or physical powers were in a debilitated or weakened condition. In fact, the evidence shows that mentally she was a woman of superior will power and possessed a firm and determined mind, not only at the time of the execution of the will in probate but for years afterwards, and until her last illness.

Mr. Rea testified that at the time she made the first will she was in perfect health. Quoting from his testimony relative to the quality of her mind:

"During the long acquaintance I had with her I had opportunities to judge of her intelligence. * * * She was very superior to either the ordinary man or woman in business. * * * Mrs. Mauvais had a very technical mind and she got to the bottom of things. When Mrs. Mauvais consulted me upon a law point—I have to use a vulgar expression—'she was from Missouri, and I hard to show her.' She would take the statute and diagnose it herself, and go over it, and if my opinion didn't suit her, she would go to some other lawyer and come back and talk it over with me, and before she got through she would get right to the bottom of things. In matters of business in buying or selling or loaning money she was very thorough. Mrs. Mauvais had a very good idea of the value of real estate and of moral security of the people, and she went into those things very thoroughly, a hundred times better than I could myself on a business proposition. In regard to her will I would say that Mrs. Mauvais always made up her own mind. I dealt with her for years. Mrs. Mauvais was a person who made up her mind from personal investigation. She was exceedingly firm and determined. She was never a woman of vacillating purpose of will on anything that I ever saw in all the many years of acquaintance, both socially and in business."

Judge Tuttle testified:

That he was the legal adviser of Mrs. Mauvais for several years following 1908, and that "from her first appearance in my office I was impressed with her understanding, thorough understanding of her business. She was a capable woman; she was above the average in mentality. She understood her affairs; she understood things when they were explained to her, and insisted upon explanations frequently in matters that other clients would not be apt to insist upon, and matters would have to be explained to her fully frequently before she would adopt the advice which I was disposed to give her. In a general way she was a very competent woman. I do not think anybody could persuade Mrs. Mauvais to do what she did not think was right. She was a high-minded woman with correct notions of right and wrong, duty and the violation of duty."

Stated in brief form, Dr. Filipello testified:

That he had been acquainted with Mrs. Mauvais for 20 years, and had been her regular family physician since about 1902; that he saw her socially quite often. "I always found that she was in perfect, clear, sound intelligence, very bright. She was firm in her decisions, very affectionate to her children, and she attended to her business regularly. * * * She was not a woman readily influenced by the opinion or the advice of others, even her physician."

She often spoke about her business affairs. Dr. Beattie testified:

That he had called upon Mrs. Mauvais professionally at the beginning of her last illness and attended her for some months; that "she was a very strong-minded woman much to my surprise on many occasions; absolutely self-reliant. She was quick and alert. I formed the opinion that she was a high-minded, high-principled woman and a woman of refined education."

Dr. J. U. Hall testified that he had attended Mrs. Mauvais professionally as a consultant from time to time for a period of eight years, beginning in January, 1908, and had opportunities to form and did form the opinion that she had, for a woman of her age, a keen, forceful independent mind.

A number of letters written by the decedent to her children, for the most part subsequent to the execution of the will in probate, were offered in evidence. They show a degree of refinement and intelligence superior perhaps to that possessed by the average person. She continually addressed and spoke of all her children in terms of affectionate endearment and disclosed no degree of partiality nor suggestion of prejudice for or against any of them.

The relations existing between Mrs. Ferguson and her brothers and sister, during the years following the death of their father, Romeo Mauvais, Sr., were strained and fraught with misunderstandings and often with great bitterness of feeling. But it is not at all certain that these family disturbances and quarrels, and any false tales the daughter Juliette may have carried to her mother, had any perceptible or enduring influence upon the mind of the decedent. For instance, in a letter written by Mrs. Mauvais to her son Romeo in 1907 or 1908, having reference to previous difficulties between Juliette and Romeo, she wrote: "You know, Romeo, dear, I can't take any part in any of my children's misunderstandings." Much less may it be said that there is any substantial evidence in the record to which our attention has been directed which directly or indirectly establishes it as a fact that such family difficulties, or any statements made by the daughter Juliette to her mother, growing out of them, unduly influenced or unfairly affected the mind of the mother with reference to the composition and execution of the will in probate.

[3] Testimony was adduced on behalf of the contestant to the effect that the decedent had stated at times, both prior to and subsequent to the date of the will in issue, that she intended treating all her children alike in the final disposition of her property. Such statements, however, are not of themselves sufficient to establish undue influence. In re Calkins, 112 Cal. 296, 44 Pac. 577; Estate of Kilborn, 162 Cal. 4; Estate of Lavinburg, 161 Cal. 536, 119 Pac. 915.

[4] The favored daughter had ample opportunity, so far as time and environment were concerned, to influence her mother's mind, but, as said in the Estate of Kilborn, 162 Cal. 4, 120 Pac. 762:

"Mere proof of opportunity to influence a testator's mind, even when coupled with an interest or motive to do so, will not sustain a finding of undue influence, in the absence of testimony showing that there was pressure operating directly on the testamentary act."

It may be assumed, as claimed by the contestants, that the beneficiary of the will in question exerted a general influence over the affairs of the testatrix; yet, without proof that such influence was brought to bear upon the testamentary act, a case of undue influence is not made out. Estate of Morcel, 162 Cal. 188, 121 Pac. 733.

[5] The contestants offered no evidence directly showing the exercise of undue influence by the daughter Juliette with respect to the testamentary act itself in question. While it is, of course, true that the exercise of undue influence may be shown by indirect evidence, such evidence must—

"do more than raise a suspicion. It must amount to proof, and such evidence has the force of proof only when circumstances are proven which are inconsistent with the claim that the will was the spontaneous act of the alleged testator." Estate of Kilborn, 162 Cal. 4, 120 Pac. 762; McDevitt's Estate, 95 Cal. 17, 30 Pac. 101; Estate of Calkins, 112 Cal. 296, 44 Pac. 577; Estate of Morcel, 162 Cal. 188, 121 Pac. 733.

"In order to set aside a will for undue influence, there must be substantial proof of a pressure which overpowered the volition of the testator at the time the will was made." In re Langford, 108 Cal. 608, 41 Pac. 701.

It seems very highly improbable that a woman of Mrs. Mauvais mental capacity, temperament, and business experience, knowing how to write her will (having in fact already written two), accustomed to advise freely with lawyers, self-reliant and of decisive mind, and situated as she was, would have permitted any paper which she had been forced to execute against her desires to stand for years without revocation.

[6] It appears to us that the legal inferences proper to be drawn from the circumstantial evidence relied upon by the contestants amounted in weight and value to no more than to create the suspicion or surmise that the will in probate was procured through the undue influence of the proponent. We believe that the proof relied upon is insufficient as a matter of law to upset the will in contest.

The order and judgment appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

NORTHERN REDWOOD LUMBER CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 3205.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 1, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 29, 1919.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=419—LIMITATION ON POWER OF INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION TO MODIFY ITS AWARD.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 20(d), Industrial Accident Commission had no power to alter or amend its award after period for rehearing had expired, where application therefor was not based upon new facts occurring since the making of the award, notwithstanding section 30(e).

Proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act for compensation for death of Albert C. Lay, opposed by the Northern Redwood Lumber Company, employer, and California Casualty Company, insurer. To review order of Industrial Accident Commission denying employer's petition to be relieved from liability upon the award employer applies for certiorari. Application denied.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The facts of the case are these: Albert C. Lay, an employé of the Northern Redwood Lumber Company, the petitioner herein, was killed while in course of such employment on February 24, 1916. An application for an award was filed by the parents of the deceased on March 10, 1916, against the said employer, no reference being made in the application to the existence of any insurance carrier. The employer filed its answer on March 21, 1916, raising certain issues, but not setting up the fact of its insurance. On March 27, 1916, however, the California Casualty Company, which was at the time of said casualty the insurer of the Northern Redwood Lumber Company, filed its appearance and answer in the case in its capacity as such insurer, and was thereupon joined as a party defendant. The matter went to hearing before the commission, and its award was entered June 13, 1916, in favor of the applicants and against both the employer and its insurer. No petition for rehearing was filed, and nothing further was done in the proceeding, except that the insurer made for some period of time the payments which were provided for in said award. On June 30, 1919, three years after the making of said award, the employer made an informal request of the commission for relief from liability upon the award under the provisions of section 30(e) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 859). This informal petition having been denied, a formal petition for such relief was filed, which was also denied, whereupon the Northern Redwood Lumber Company filed its petition herein for a writ of review as to said last-named order.

The claim of the petitioner herein is that under the provisions of said section 30(e) of the Workmen's Compensation Act it was entitled at any time after the entry of said award to present its petition to the commission for release from liability under the terms of said section of the act, and that the commission, upon the showing required to be made under said section, was bound to enter its order for such relief, and had no jurisdiction to make or enter any other order having the effect of denying the right of the petitioner to such relief.

On the other hand, the respondents herein contend that under section 20(d) of the Workmen's Compensation Act the commission has no jurisdiction or power to alter or amend in any way a decision or award which has been made by it after the period provided for a petition for rehearing has expired, except that, under the terms of said section 20(d) of said act, it is given continuing jurisdiction to alter or amend its award during a period of 245 weeks from the date of the injury upon the proof or showing of facts occurring after the making of said award, and within said last-named period, and that the application of the employer herein for an order altering or amending the award of the commission so as to exclude it from its terms as a judgment debtor thereunder, not having been based upon any new facts occurring since the making of said award, did not bring the case within the limited jurisdiction of the commission as provided in said last-named section.

We are of the opinion that this contention on the part of the respondents herein must be sustained upon the authority of Georgia Casualty Co. v. Ind. Accident Comm., 177 Cal. 289, 170 Pac. 625, in which case it was held by the Supreme Court that the jurisdiction of the commission over its awards expired when it denied an application for rehearing thereon, or when the time to make such application had passed, except for the continuing jurisdiction of the commission to alter or amend its awards under section 20(d) of the act, which was confined to cases where the application was predicated upon new facts occurring since the making of the award. In the instant case there are no new facts arising since the making of the award in question upon which the petitioner's application could be predicated. It was entitled to be relieved of liability under the provisions of section 30(e) of the act at the time it presented its answer before the commission and at the time a hearing was had thereon. It made no such claim at that time, nor for a period of more than three years thereafter and after the time for a rehearing had long since expired. The application which the petitioner herein finally made was in effect for an order altering and amending the commission's judgment and award; and under the authority of the case above cited we are constrained to hold that the commission had no jurisdiction to make the required order.

It follows that the application herein must be denied. It is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. ALLISON. (Cr. 676.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 4, 1919.)

1. RAPE ⊂⊃52(1)—MARRIAGE OF ACCUSED TO PROSECUTRIX NOT SHOWN BY EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for rape on a female under the age of 18 years, prosecutrix's testimony that she never saw accused before the alleged attack and defendant's reference to another woman as his wife held to sustain a verdict that prosecutrix and accused were not married to each other.

2. RAPE ⊂⊃41—PROSECUTRIX MAY TESTIFY AS TO HER AGE.

In a prosecution for rape, the prosecutrix's testimony is competent to show that she was under 18 years of age.

3. RAPE ⊂⊃52(4)—PROSECUTRIX'S TESTIMONY AS TO HER AGE HELD SUFFICIENT.

In a prosecution for rape, prosecutrix's uncontradicted testimony that she was 16 years of age held sufficient to show that she was under 18 at the time of the alleged attack.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃564(1)—EVIDENCE HELD SUFFICIENT TO SHOW VENUE.

In prosecution for rape, prosecutrix's identification and description of the place where the crime was committed, which was shown to be in a certain county by other uncontradicted testimony, held sufficient to establish the venue.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1036(1)—OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE NECESSARY.

In a criminal case, an accused's failure to object to evidence when offered precludes him from complaining on appeal of its admission.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Everett Allison was convicted of rape, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

John F. Pryor, of Hanford, and Lamberson & Lamberson, of Visalia, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

SHAW, J. Upon an information charging him therewith, defendant was convicted of rape alleged to have been committed in Tulare county upon a female under the age of 18 years, who was not his wife. Judgment followed, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

[1] The first point urged in support of a reversal of the judgment and order is insufficiency of the evidence to show that the prosecuting witness was not the wife of defendant. As in the case of People v. Bonzani, 24 Cal. App. 549, 141 Pac. 1062, involving a like question, there was no direct testimony upon the point; nevertheless the character of the evidence was such as to exclude the existence of such relationship. Not only in his testimony did defendant refer to a person as his wife who was other than the victim of his alleged lust, but the prosecuting witness, whose name was shown to be different from that of defendant, testified that prior to the commission of the offense she never met defendant and did not know him. The conclusion based upon a fair inference to be drawn from such testimony is that reached by the jury, that they were not husband and wife when the crime alleged was committed.

[2, 3] That the testimony of the prosecuting witness was competent to show that she was under 18 years of age admits of no question. People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 Pac. 915. At the trial, on her direct examination, she stated that she was 16 years of age, and, in the absence of any evidence tending to contradict such statement, it must be deemed a sufficient showing that she was under 18 when the alleged attack was made upon her.

[4] The claim that the venue was not established is likewise without merit. The prosecuting witness, in her testimony, identified and described the place where the crime was committed, which place was, by other uncontradicted testimony, shown to be in Tulare county.

[5] It is finally claimed that the court erred in receiving in evidence a garment worn by the prosecuting witness at the time in question, upon which there were certain stains, the nature of which, however, was not shown. Considering the entire testimony, and conceding this evidence to have been incompetent, as claimed, the jury could not have been influenced thereby in reaching its verdict. However this may be, and conceding it was prejudicial, no objection whatsoever was made to the evidence when offered. Having failed by seasonable objection to direct the attention of the trial court to the alleged error, appellant's position in this court is not such as entitles him to complain of the evidence so admitted. People v. Wilson, 36 Cal. App. 589, 172 Pac. 1116.

We find no merit whatsoever in the appeal. The judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

John E. Daly and James H. Daly, both of Long Beach, for appellant.

E. C. Campbell, of Long Beach, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action for an accounting, and for judgment in the sum of $1,669.34. Judgment went in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,589.37. There was a motion for new trial, which was denied. The appeal is from the order denying said motion and from the judgment so entered.

Appellant urges two points in support of his appeal: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to support finding 1, "that the contract between the parties was that set out in paragraph 1 of the complaint"; and (2) that the judgment is in excess of that justified by the evidence. Neither of these points, we think, is well taken.

First of all, there was conflict in the evidence as to what the contract between the parties was. The court accepted plaintiff's version. That question, therefore, is settled, so far as this court is concerned. Bradley v. Davis, 156 Cal. 267, 104 Pac. 302; Knox v. Moses, 104 Cal. 502, 38 Pac. 318; Brown v. Campbell, 100 Cal. 635, 35 Pac. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 314. According to the agreement under which the parties hereto worked together, plaintiff was to find a customer and defendant was to furnish the listings, the office, and the machine, and give plaintiff half of the profits made on the customers he brought in. That the plaintiff brought in four customers, as alleged in the complaint, is true. That defendant did not carry out his part of the agreement, but concealed the facts as to what the profits actually were—notably so in the cases of the Barbour and Eberle transactions—is equally true. There is, we think, ample evidence to support the finding attacked.

This brings us to a consideration of the second point urged. This, in effect, is an attack on the third finding made by the court, wherein the court finds that in the Barbour-Hill deal the gross profit was $6,000, that the gross expenses on same were $1,567.34, that the net profits were $4,232.66, and that plaintiff had received no more than $716.33 on that account. We think no good purpose can be served by a verbose statement of the facts or by setting out here lengthy quotations from the evidence to support our conclusion, and refrain from so doing. The judgment is amply supported by the findings, which, in turn, are supported by the evidence, and is therefore not excessive.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; SLOANE, J.

TAYLOR et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 3153.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 30, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸458(2)—SUPERSEDEAS UNAUTHORIZED TO STAY EXECUTION PENDING APPEAL FROM ORDER SETTING ASIDE SATISFACTION.

The appellate court, pending appeal from an order setting aside satisfaction of judgment, cannot by supersedeas stay execution on the judgment; an appeal by provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 949, staying only proceedings in the lower court on the judgment or order appealed from.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸477—REMEDY FOR STAY PENDING APPEAL FROM ORDER SETTING ASIDE SATISFACTION IS IN TRIAL COURT.

The remedy, pending appeal from order setting aside satisfaction of judgment, to prevent execution on the judgment, is for the judgment defendant to apply to the trial court in which the action is pending for a stay of proceedings on the judgment, on the ground that the appeal stays the operation of the order, or to begin action to enjoin the execution on the ground that it has been stayed by operation of Code Civ. Proc. § 949.

Application by Ambrose Taylor and others for writ of supersedeas to the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and the Judge thereof. Writ dismissed.

Fred C. Peterson, of Grass Valley, for petitioner.

Lincoln E. Savage, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Application for a writ of supersedeas. A judgment having been entered by the superior court against the petitioners, satisfaction thereof was entered, which, upon motion, was set aside. An appeal has been taken from the order of the court setting aside said satisfaction of judgment, and in the meantime the petitioners seek by an application to this court for a writ of supersedeas to stay proceedings upon the judgment.

[1, 2] Upon an examination of the section of the Code (section 949, Code of Civil Procedure) under which it is claimed this application may properly be made, the court is disposed to the view that the remedy of supersedeas sought to be invoked cannot be availed of here. The section mentioned provides that the perfecting of an appeal in the manner provided by the provisions of the sections of the Code stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from. Now, of course, if there are any proceedings upon the specific order appealed from, those proceedings would be stayed by the operation of the section; but, if there are no proceedings upon the order appealed from, then, of course, there can be no stay of proceedings accomplished by the writ of supersedeas. Now, in the case at bar, there are no proceedings upon the specific order appealed from. That order merely sets aside the satisfaction of judgment; and that order, when made, requires no further proceedings for its execution. It is complete and final in itself. The proceedings which counsel is seeking to have stayed are the execution of the judgment itself, but those proceedings have nothing to do with the order which is appealed from in this case.

The question under consideration has, we think, been finally passed upon by the Supreme Court of this state in Bateman v. Superior Court, 139 Cal. 140, 144, 72 Pac. 922. We are unable to escape from the conclusions reached in that case nor from the reasoning upon which they are placed. We cannot conceive what possible form a writ of supersedeas, if issued in this case, would take so as to give it the effect which the petitioners desire. The broadest form which such a writ could take would be the form indicated by the language of section 949, Code of Civil Procedure. The utmost that could be obtained by the issuance of the writ would be a stay of proceedings upon the order appealed from. Now, there are no proceedings upon that order which could be stayed. The order has been entered. No further proceedings are necessary to make it effective, and the only proceedings which are sought to be stayed are those which would follow the issuance and levy of a writ of execution upon the judgment, which has not been appealed from. We have no power to stay the levy of an execution upon the judgment in this case because there is no appeal from that judgment before us. It seems to us, therefore, that the petitioners have mistaken their remedy, and that their proper procedure is either to make an application to the court in which the action is pending for a stay of proceedings upon the judgment on the ground that the effect of the appeal is of itself to stay the operation of the order; or, if the court refuses to grant that relief, then to begin some appropriate action to enjoin the execution of the judgment upon the ground that as a matter of law the execution of the judgment has been stayed by virtue of section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

For these reasons the demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the writ dismissed.

GLOYD v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 2985.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 30, 1919. On Petition for Rehearing, Nov 28, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 29, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE ⟸156—ENTRY OF FINAL DIVORCE DECREE JUDICIAL ACT.

The entry of a final divorce decree on expiration of the year following entry of interlocutory judgment, under Civ. Code, § 132, is a judicial act and not merely a clerical act consequent upon a previous judicial act; the prevailing party's right to such final decree being subject to be defeated by events occurring after entry of interlocutory judgment.

2. DIVORCE ⟸156—RECONCILIATION OF PARTIES DURING YEAR AFTER ENTRY OF INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT AUTHORIZING DENIAL.

Reconciliation of the parties and actual resumption of marriage relation during year following entry of interlocutory decree under Civ. Code, § 132, adjudging prevailing party entitled to divorce to be granted upon expiration of following year, may justify court in refusing, or make it the duty of the court to refuse, to grant the divorce.

3. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION ⟸63 — DIVORCE ⟸83—ENTRY OF FINAL DECREE AFTER DEATH OF HUSBAND UNAUTHORIZED.

Where husband who had been adjudged entitled to divorce by interlocutory decree under Civ. Code, § 132, died before expiration of year following entry of interlocutory decree, the court was without power, upon expiration thereof, to enter final divorce decree, the marriage relation having been dissolved by death; and the wife was left vested with the property rights to which she was entitled as surviving wife.

On Petition for Rehearing.

4. PROHIBITION ⟸3(5)—ADEQUACY OF REMEDY BY APPEAL MUST BE PLAIN AND SPEEDY.

The mere right of appeal does not constitute a bar to an application for a writ of prohibition, since it must further appear that in the particular case the exercise of such right of appeal would afford the petitioner a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

5. DIVORCE ⟸180 — DISMISSAL OF APPEAL UPON DEATH OF PARTY.

The death of one of the parties to a divorce action pending appeal from the decree would be sufficient ground for dismissal of the appeal.

Application for writ of prohibition by Maiette S. Gloyd against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the county of Los Angeles, J. P. Wood Judge thereof. Writ granted.

Oscar Lawlor and Overton, Lyman & Plumb, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

John C. Stick, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Prohibition. This matter is presented for decision upon the petition filed and the answer thereto of the respondent. The facts as we shall state them are admitted.

On the 27th day of February, 1918, in the superior court of Los Angeles county, in an action wherein Albert M. Gloyd was plaintiff and the petitioner Maiette S. Gloyd was defendant, an interlocutory decree was entered adjudging that the plaintiff was entitled to a divorce from the defendant, "and that when one year shall have expired, after the entry of this interlocutory judgment, a final judgment and decree shall be entered, granting a divorce herein, wherein and whereby the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between the said plaintiff and the said defendant shall be dissolved." It was alleged in the complaint and admitted by the answer and declared in the findings of fact in that action that there was no community property belonging to the plaintiff and defendant. The conclusions of law and the interlocutory decree were silent with regard to community property and all other property rights of the parties, and did not in terms purport to deal with any other matter than the right to a divorce. On the 4th day of April, 1918, Albert M. Gloyd died, leaving a separate estate consisting of property of large value, the principal part of which is located in the state of Missouri. Litigation is pending in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri, between the said Maiette S. Gloyd, claiming to be the widow of Albert M. Gloyd, deceased, and other persons concerning their respective claims of interest in the estate of said Albert M. Gloyd. On the 10th day of March, 1919, pursuant to notice, the attorneys who appeared for Albert M. Gloyd in the divorce action presented to the superior court a motion requesting that court to enter the final decree of divorce. This motion was resisted by the defendant in that action, petitioner herein, who contended there, and contends here, that the superior court had no jurisdiction to hear said motion or enter a final decree purporting to dissolve the marriage of Albert M. Gloyd and petitioner. Nevertheless the court did entertain the motion and threatens to, and unless restrained and prohibited from so doing will, make and enter the demanded final decree.

The interlocutory judgment, with its provision for a final judgment, was in conformity with section 132, Civil Code. That section was added to the Code in the year 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 76). Since the enactment of that section, its meaning and effect have been considered in a considerable number of decisions. In Estate of Walker, 176 Cal. 402, 168 Pac. 689, the death of the husband, plaintiff in a divorce action, occurred about four months after the entry of the interlocutory decree, and a controversy arose over the question of legitimacy of twin children born within ten months after the plaintiff's death. It was held that—

"The marriage relation existing between the husband and wife was not dissolved by the interlocutory decree of divorce, but by the death of the husband on November 20, 1913."

In Olson v. Superior Court, 175 Cal. 250, 165 Pac. 706, 1 A. L. R. 1589, the Supreme Court said:

"It is never to be forgotten that the interlocutory decree does not sever the marital bonds. It is merely a declaration that one of the spouses has at that time established a right to a final decree which will be entered at and after the expiration of one year."

It was then suggested that one of the important purposes of the law was to give the spouses opportunity to effect a reconciliation, and it was held that, where such reconciliation had taken place and the marital relations had been resumed within the year following the entry of the interlocutory decree, the court properly refused to enter a final decree. In Estate of Dargie, 162 Cal. 51, 121 Pac. 320, referring to Civil Code, § 132, the court said:

"By the terms of the statute, it is the final judgment alone that grants the divorce, dissolves the marriage, restores the parties to the status of single persons, and permits each to marry again. The statute does not itself declare the marriage dissolved at the expiration of the year from the interlocutory judgment. It merely suspends for one year the power of the court to dissolve it, and, in effect, provides that it becomes dissolved only when, after the expiration of that period, the court has, by its final judgment, so declared. In the meantime the parties remain in the legal relation of husband and wife. * * * It follows from what we have said that, at the time of the death of the decedent, Erminia P. Dargie was his wife and that she is now entitled to such rights as the law confers upon her, under the circumstances, as his widow, including the right to a family allowance."

[1, 2] From the law as thus settled and determined is becomes clear that the entry of a final decree of divorce is a judicial act and not merely a clerical act consequent upon a previous judicial act. Although by the interlocutory decree it has been declared that the prevailing party is entitled to a divorce and the time for appeal therefrom may have expired, that right is subject to defeat by events occurring after the interlocutory decree has been entered. As we have seen, reconciliation of the parties and actual resumption of the marriage relation may justify the court in refusing, or make it the duty of the court to refuse, to grant the divorce.

Petitioner contends that the death of either the husband or wife prior to the entry of a final decree of divorce deprives the court of the power to enter such final decree; that this is so because the subject of the litigation is the personal status of the husband and wife, arising from the marriage; and that this is a thing which terminates upon the death of either one of those parties. In Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 Pac. 1064, it was pointed out that the object of an action for divorce is to change the personal status of the plaintiff in relation to the defendant, and that upon the death of the plaintiff there was no personal status which a judgment could change. Such an action, the court said, could not be further prosecuted or defended upon the death of the plaintiff, whether her death was before or after the judgment. It was further suggested in that case that the primary and substantive subject of litigation in a suit for divorce is the personal relation of the parties, and their right to community property is but incidental thereto. In Begbie v. Begbie, 128 Cal. 154, 60 Pac. 667, 49 L. R. A. 141, the defendant died during the pendency of an appeal taken by her from an order denying her motion for a new trial in an action wherein a divorce had been granted to the plaintiff. Upon the suggestion of the death of appellant, the court dismissed the appeal and held that, the action being solely for the purpose of determining the defendant's personal status, it abated upon her death, and the court was without authority to review the proceedings of the superior court.

[3] Observing the principles above stated, we are satisfied that the superior court is without jurisdiction to change or alter the status of petitioner by entering a decree of divorce in the action of Gloyd v. Gloyd. The principal if not the only subject-matter of that action remaining for further judicial determination after the entry of the interlocutory decree down to the time of the death of the plaintiff was the status of the plaintiff and defendant as husband and wife. That relation and status having been dissolved by death, the petitioner, Maiette S. Gloyd, forthwith became the surviving wife of Albert M. Gloyd, with the vested right to be recognized as his widow and with such further vested rights of property as may result from the fact that she was his wife at the time of his death.

Respondent relies upon that part of the Civil Code, § 132, which says:

"The death of either party after the entry of the interlocutory judgment does not impair the power of the court to enter final judgment as hereinbefore provided."

In Estate of Seiler, 164 Cal. 181, 128 Pac. 334, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1093, the Supreme Court referring to this provision of the Code, said:

"Possibly it was designed to enable the court to establish, by final decree rendered after the death of a party, property rights which had been passed upon, provisionally or otherwise (Pereira v. Pereira, 156 Cal. 1, 103 Pac. 488, 23 L. R. A. [N. S.] 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107) in the interlocutory decree. But certainly such final decree could not have been intended to effect the dissolution of the marriage. This result is already accomplished by the death of one of the parties. Nor can we believe that the Legislature intended to authorize the court, possibly of its own motion and against the will of the only remaining party in interest (Civ. Code § 132), to enter a decree which should operate retroactively to take away rights of inheritance which had, by the death, become vested in the surviving spouse."

Respondent claims that, on the record in Estate of Seiler, the foregoing statement of the court was mere dictum. At least, it was on a point presented by counsel, and states a view with which we agree. And if the view so stated be correct, it follows that even if, for any imaginable purpose, the respondent might be authorized to enter a final decree declaring that there was no community property, such authority does not carry with it jurisdiction to enter a decree purporting to put an end to a matrimonial relation which has ceased to exist. Assuming that, as claimed by respondent, the decision of this court in John v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. App. 262, 90 Pac. 53, is in conflict with this conclusion, that decision, so far as such conflict exists, must be deemed to be overruled.

It is ordered that a peremptory writ issue in accordance with the prayer of the petition herein.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Counsel for respondent, in their petition for a rehearing after judgment rendered herein, suggest that with the answer there was filed a demurrer; the ground of demurrer being that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in which a writ of prohibition should issue.

When this case was called before the court for hearing, the attorney for respondent stated to the court that "a return has been made," and that the parties had agreed that the matter might be submitted upon briefs. The court made its order of submission accordingly. The briefs ignored the existence of any demurrer. We think that in the opinion filed we did not neglect any material part of the argument submitted by counsel in their briefs.

It may be said further, however, that we did carefully consider the question whether or not a proper case was presented for the issuance of a writ of prohibition.

[4, 5] The mere right of appeal does not constitute a bar to an application for a writ of prohibition. It must further appear that in the particular case the exercise of such right of appeal would afford to the petitioner a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. As has been pointed out by counsel for petitioner, the death of one of the parties to a divorce action pending appeal from the decree would be sufficient ground for dismissal of the appeal. Two cases establishing that rule are cited in the opinion filed in this case. Moreover, facts were alleged in the petition which, as it seems to us, tended to render inadequate the right of appeal from any final decree of divorce that might be entered in the action of Gloyd v. Gloyd.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

ROSSITER v. SHULZ. (Civ. 3081.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. DEEDS ⟸59(1)—DELIVERY FOR RECORD IS DELIVERY TO GRANTEE.

Where mother, who had contracted for purchase of lot, and who had assigned her interest in contract to her son, upon final payment receipted for deed wherein son was named as grantee, and deed, after recordation, was sent by the recorder by mail to the son at his mother's address, delivery was sufficient.

2. TRUSTS ⟸89(2) — EVIDENCE OVERCOMES PRESUMPTION OF RESULTING TRUST.

Positive testimony of defendant son that he had given his mother the money with which the lots in question were purchased held to warrant finding that defendant held the property free of any trust in favor of his mother, and was the absolute owner thereof.

3. TRUSTS ⟸81(4)—NO PRESUMPTION AS TO RESULTING TRUST.

The doctrine that a resulting trust arises when a transfer of realty is made to one person and the consideration therefor is paid by another does not arise where the parties concerned are parent and child.

4. TRUSTS ⊂=81(1)—PRESUMPTION THAT CONVEYANCE TO CHILD IS AN ADVANCEMENT.

In case of transfer of realty to one person and payment of consideration by the other, the presumption is, where the parties concerned are husband and wife, or parent and child, that the purchase and conveyance were intended to be an advancement for the nominal purchaser and not to create trust.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by J. G. Rossiter, as administrator of the estate of Carrie Smith, deceased, against Robert A. Shulz. From judgment quieting defendant's title, as prayed for in his cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John Dennison, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Landreth & Patten, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. Plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of Carrie Smith, deceased, brought this action against the defendant, her son, to establish a resulting trust in two lots in Los Angeles standing in defendant's name. From the judgment quieting the latter's title as prayed for in a cross-complaint filed in the action, the plaintiff appeals.

[1] The documentary evidence showed that the decedent in her lifetime contracted to purchase the two lots in question. One of them she bought from one Furth under a contract, her interest in which she assigned to the defendant. Upon making the final payment upon this lot, she receipted for a deed wherein the defendant was named as grantee and which, after its recordation, was sent by mail to the defendant at his mother's address.

There is no merit in the contention that such delivery of the deed was insufficient, for it is clear that whatever control the grantor had over the deed was lost when it was mailed by the recorder to the defendant, and title could then vest only in the grantee named in the instrument.

[2] As to the other of said lots, its purchase was contracted for by deceased with one Humbert, the contract providing that upon completion of the payments therein specified a deed was to be given to defendant. The payments on this contract had not been completed when plaintiff's intestate died, but defendant thereafter paid the balance due and took a deed from Humbert in his own name in accordance with the terms of the contract.

[3, 4] It thus appears that at no time did the title to either lot stand in the name of plaintiff's intestate, and the evidence offered by plaintiff, viewed in its strongest light, showed merely that the decedent was in possession of the lots at the time of her death, and that the payments had been actually made by her. To offset any presumption that might be drawn from these facts that the title was taken in the son's name for convenience only and that he held title in trust for his mother, there was the positive testimony of the defendant that he had given his mother the money with which the lots were bought, which testimony fully warranted the trial court in finding that the defendant held the property free of any trust in favor of his mother and was the absolute owner thereof. Indeed, that court would have been justified in reaching such conclusion without that particular testimony, for the doctrine that a resulting trust arises when a transfer of real property is made to one person and the consideration therefor is paid by another does not arise where the parties concerned are husband and wife or parent and child. In such case the presumption is that the purchase and conveyance were intended to be an advancement for the nominal purchaser. Hamilton v. Hubbard, 134 Cal. 603, 605, 65 Pac. 321, 66 Pac. 860. It may be noted that the only heir of the deceased other than this son was her husband, from whom she was living apart. The only evidence offered in behalf of plaintiff was that of two persons who held claims against the estate of the deceased of rather dubious origin and merit, and we are fully satisfied with the action of the trial court in refusing to impress the defendant's title with a trust upon the testimony in this record.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

WALSH v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2056.)

(District Court of Appeal. Third District, California. Oct. 30, 1919.)

DIVORCE ⊂=66—ATTORNEY'S FEES CANNOT BE GRANTED TO WIFE IN DIVORCE, WHILE MOTION FOR CHANGE OF VENUE PENDING.

An application for attorney's fees for prosecution of a wife's divorce suit cannot be heard while a motion for change of venue is pending.

Application by Leyla M. Walsh for a writ of mandate to the Superior Court of California in and for Sacramento County and Hon. Charles O. Busick, Judge thereof, to require said court to act on a motion for counsel fees. Alternative writ discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

Irving D. Gibson, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Guy P. Johnson and John A. McGilvray, both of Sacramento, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. On August 16, 1919, petitioner, Leyla M. Walsh, filed in the superior court of Sacramento county a complaint for a divorce against her husband, Earnest E. Walsh. On September 16th the defendant appeared in the action and filed a general demurrer to the complaint and a demand for a change of the place of trial, with an affidavit of merits and of his residence in the county of Butte. At the same time the defendant filed in the court a written instrument purporting to be a motion for said change of the place of trial, referring therein to the fact that said demand and affidavit were filed therewith, and averring that he had "served upon the opposing counsel notice of this motion, which said notice sets forth that this motion will be called for hearing on the 29th day of September." A copy of this instrument was served on the same day on the attorney for plaintiff. On the following day, September 17th, plaintiff in said action served upon the attorney for the defendant a notice in writing that on Monday, the 22d day of September, she would present a motion to said superior court "for an order awarding and allowing her, as such plaintiff, the sum of $100 as a reasonable and just sum with which to pay and defray the fees of her attorney for prosecuting said action, and the further sum of $20" for other costs. This application came on for hearing on said date, whereupon defendant, through his attorneys, objected to its consideration by the court for the reason that there was pending and undetermined said motion for a change of venue. Thereupon the court, after reciting said objection made by the defendant and the fact that the other motion was pending before said court, "ordered that said objection of defendant to the hearing of said motion be and it is hereby sustained, and that said motion of plaintiff made before this court on said 22d day of September, 1919, for the payment of counsel fees and costs be and it is hereby abated until after the motion for change of place of trial has been heard and determined, upon the ground that the power of this court to hear or consider said motion for counsel fees and costs is suspended because of the filing herein by said defendant of said affidavit, demand and notice of motion for the change of place of the trial of said action from Sacramento to Butte county, filed herein on September 16, 1919; that defendant is entitled to have all judicial action in the case determined by the superior court of the proper county."

We are satisfied that the decision of the lower court was entirely proper. If the defendant was entitled to have a change of the place of trial, as he claimed, it was his right to have the court of his place of residence determine every judicial question involved in the action. It is true that the court had not passed upon the merits of his motion, and the time had not arrived for its determination; but he had made his demand, and given notice of the hearing thereof even, before petitioner herein had taken any steps to secure an order for said allowance. While it may not be entirely accurate to say that the court thereby lost jurisdiction to consider any other motion, it is at least true that the court pursued the course that is required by the law and the decisions in this state. Even in those cases in other states wherein it is held that the mere filing of an application for a change of venue does not affect the jurisdiction of the court where the action is pending, and that the adverse party, if there be no stay, may proceed, it is declared "he does so at the risk of having the proceedings set aside in case the application is granted." But in other cases, as pointed out in 40 Cyc. 154, "it has been held that the application operates as a supersedeas or stay of proceedings, and that it must be disposed of before any other step can be taken, and that if the case is one where the applicant is entitled to a change of venue as a matter of right the court has no jurisdiction except for the purpose of granting the change." But we are not concerned with the exact technical phraseology of the situation, although it must be said that the appellate courts of this state have gone so far as to hold that under such circumstances jurisdiction to make any previous order does not exist. At any rate, there can be no doubt that the order of the lower court is entirely justified by the decisions of our Supreme Court, to a few of which specific attention may be directed.

In Hennessy v. Nicol, 105 Cal. 138, 38 Pac. 649, the holding is summed up in the syllabus as follows:

"A right to a change of the place of trial is to be determined by the condition of things existing at the time the parties claiming it first appeared in the action; and the plaintiff in an action for alimony has no right to have a motion for temporary alimony, pending at the time of a demand for a change of the place of trial, first heard before the demand is passed upon, and the court has no right to make a compliance with an order awarding such alimony a condition precedent to the hearing of the application to change the place of trial."

It is to be observed that in the Hennessy Case the notice for the hearing of the motion for temporary alimony was given days before the defendant made his demand or gave notice of his motion for a change of the place of trial, and yet the Supreme Court held that the trial judge had no right to consider the former motion until disposition had been made of the latter.

In Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 56, 39 Pac. 209, it is said:

"The statute requires the motion to be made 'at the time' the defendant appears and answers or demurs. If he does not then make the motion, he is not entitled to make it at any subsequent stage of the proceedings, even though the condition of the case may be such that if it could be then made it would be granted. Remington S. M. Co. v. Cole, 62 Cal. 318. This necessarily implies that the motion must be made and determined by the court before it can hear or determine any other motion in the case. If the defendants are entitled to have their motion granted, they are entitled to have every motion or proceeding in the case heard before the superior court of the county of their residence."

In G. & S. Co. v. M. & H. F. C. Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 Pac. 495, it was held that a ruling upon the demurrer could not be made until after a decision upon the motion to change the place of trial.

In Nolan v. McDuffie, 125 Cal. 334, 58 Pac. 4, it was held that the order of the court sustaining a demurrer to the complaint was a nullity, pending the hearing of a motion for a change of venue, notwithstanding the lower court at the time said order was made was not cognizant of the fact that the defendant had made a demand for a change of the place of trial.

The foregoing decisions are controlling in this case. An alternative writ of mandate was issued herein, that the question might be considered; but we are satisfied that the lower court took the proper view of the situation, and the said writ is therefore discharged and the proceeding dismissed.

MARR v. ROWELL et al. (Civ. 3069.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 5, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 2, 1920.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸169(2)—ACTION MAINTAINABLE AGAINST LESSOR AND LESSEE FOR INJURIES SUSTAINED BY THIRD PARTIES.

A person injured may maintain an action against both a lessee of property for the negligent use and against the lessor for the negligent construction of a fire escape forming a part of the building.

2. PLEADING ⟸205(2) — IMPERFECT STATEMENT OF CAUSE OF ACTION NOT GROUND FOR GENERAL DEMURRER.

Though a complaint was subject to special demurrer for imperfectly stating a cause of action against one of codefendants, a general demurrer was erroneously sustained, where sufficient facts were alleged to constitute a cause of action against him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, judge.

Action by Josephine Marr against Milo L. Rowell and another, for personal injuries. From a judgment on an order sustaining a general demurrer without leave to amend as to the defendant named, and overruling it as to the remaining defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Everts & Ewing and M. G. Gallaher, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Geo. Cosgrave, of Fresno, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered after an order sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend.

The action is for personal injuries, and was instituted by the plaintiff against the defendants, Milo L. Rowell and H. S. Whistler, the lessor and lessee, respectively, of certain premises in which the injury occurred. The court overruled the demurrer as to Whistler, the lessee, and sustained it as to Rowell, the owner, apparently on the erroneous theory that the premises, being in possession of the lessee, the owner thereof could not be liable.

[1, 2] From the complaint it appears that the plaintiff attempted to allege a cause of action against both the lessor and lessee of the building on the theory that each of them was responsible for the injury—the lessee for the negligent use, and the lessor for the negligent construction of a fire escape forming part of said building. On this theory a cause of action may be maintained against both defendants. Rider v. Clark, 132 Cal. 382, 64 Pac. 564; Kalis v. Shattuck, 69 Cal. 593, 597, 11 Pac. 346, 58 Am. Rep. 568. And the most that can be said against this complaint is that it imperfectly alleges a cause of action against the lessor, for which reason, no doubt, he might have specially demurred; but, containing, as it does in the last analysis, we think, sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action against said defendant, the court was in error in sustaining his general demurrer. Schaake v. Eagle, 135 Cal. 472, 63 Pac. 1025, 67 Pac. 759; Payne v. Bæhr, 153 Cal. 447, 95 Pac. 895; Robertson v. Burrell, 110 Cal. 579, 42 Pac. 1086; Norton v. Bassett, 158 Cal. 427, 111 Pac. 253.

The judgment is reversed.

VARROIS v. GOMMET et al. (Civ. 2894.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 24, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1919.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸103(2) — RUNNING OF STATUTE FROM REPUDIATION OF VOLUNTARY EXPRESS TRUST.

In case of a voluntary express trust, where the estate is to be managed for the benefit of the trustor, to be returned on demand, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until after repudiation of the trust.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸103(2)—STATUTE RUNS FROM REPUDIATION OF VOLUNTARY RESULTING TRUST.

The statute of limitations does not begin to run against actions to enforce voluntary resulting trusts until after a repudiation thereof.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸103(2) — STATUTE RUNS WITHOUT REPUDIATION OF INVOLUNTARY IMPLIED TRUST.

In the case of an involuntary implied trust raised by operation of law, no repudiation is necessary to start the statute of limitations running against an action to enforce the trust.

4. TRUSTS ⟸371(2)—CHARACTER AS EXPRESS AND VOLUNTARY.

In suit to enforce a trust against several banks, one trustee, and the executrix of the other, complaint held to allege an express voluntary trust arising out of the confidential relations existing between the parties.

5. TRUSTS ⟸4—STATUTES NOT APPLYING TO DEPOSIT WITH ADULT FOR USE OF OWNER.

Civ. Code, § 724, is a limitation on the power to create future interests by will or transfer in writing, and has no application to the deposit of money with an adult to be invested for the use and benefit of the owner, while section 857 relates only to the creation of a trust for the benefit of a third person.

6. TRUSTS ⟸35(4)—"TRUST TO CONVEY."

A trust to receive and hold real property to be transferred to the creator of trust on demand is not a "trust to convey" within the meaning of that expression as used in a prior opinion holding that a trust to convey real property to beneficiaries named in the instrument creating the trust is illegal.

7. TRUSTS ⟸30½(1)—RESULTING TRUST BECOMING VOLUNTARY.

If real property was purchased by trustees with money of creator of trust, in the absence of other specific agreement a trust resulted under Civ. Code, § 853, which is as valid as one created or declared by operation of law, and under section 2222 becomes a voluntary trust as to the trustees by any words or acts of theirs indicating with reasonable certainty their acceptance or acknowledgment.

8. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸103(2) — STATUTE DOES NOT RUN AGAINST TRUST UNTIL REPUDIATED.

In the case of an express trust created by the original agreement, with the possibility of a resulting trust, so far as concerns realty, growing out of the trustees' own acts in purchasing realty with the funds of the trustor, in either event a voluntary continuing trust is created against which the statute of limitations does not begin to run until repudiation of the trust by the trustees is brought to the knowledge of the trustor.

9. PLEADING ⟸192(6)—RAISING DEFENSE OF LACHES BY DEMURRER.

It is only when laches affirmatively appears on the face of a complaint that the defense can be raised by demurrer.

10. TRUSTS ⟸365(2)—NO LACHES IN SUIT TO ENFORCE.

Where demand upon a trustee's executrix was rejected August 22d, and demand made on the executrix individually as trustee was rejected October 15th, and suit to enforce the trust was instituted October 18th, there was no delay warranting the court in holding that plaintiff was guilty of laches.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Pauline Varrois against Marie Gommet, as executrix of the last will and testament of Fleury Gommet, deceased, also as an individual, the French American Bank of Los Angeles, the Italian American Bank, and the First National Bank of San Anselmo. From judgment for defendants on demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to overrule demurrer and grant leave to answer.

James P. Sweeney, of San Francisco (Frank J. Fontes, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

H. U. Brandenstein, of San Francisco, for respondent Gommet.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued Marie Gommet individually and as executrix of the estate of Fleury Gommet for a judgment decreeing that certain real and personal property was the property of plaintiff and held by said defendant in trust for plaintiff, for the transfer of such property to the plaintiff, and for an accounting. Three banks were joined as defendants upon allegations that they held moneys of the plaintiff which were deposited with them by the Gommets for the use and benefit of the plaintiff. No appearance was made for them. A demurrer, both general and special in form, was interposed to the amended complaint on behalf of the defendant Gommet individually and as such executrix. This demurrer having been sustained without leave to amend judgment was rendered in favor of defendant and this appeal followed.

Appellant argues upon all the grounds raised by the demurrer, but respondent relies solely upon the grounds that plaintiff's action is barred by the statute of limitations and by her laches. As to the other grounds of demurrer it is sufficient to say that they are without merit, and no discussion need be had as to them because abandoned by respondent upon this appeal.

The issue upon this appeal is: Does the amended complaint, being confessed by the demurrer, present a cause of action which upon its face is not barred by the statute of limitations or by the laches of plaintiff?

The allegations of the amended complaint are that plaintiff came to San Francisco from a foreign country when but 17 years of age and took up her abode with her elder sister, the defendant Marie Gommet; that about the 20th day of December, 1900, plaintiff entered into an agreement with Marie Gommet and Fleury Gommet, her husband, whereby they agreed to accept and receive all moneys deposited with them in trust by plaintiff, to be invested, managed, and controlled by them for the use and benefit of plaintiff until the same might be demanded by her. It is also alleged that by this agreement said defendants were to invest such part of said moneys in real estate as they might deem proper, and to transfer the same to plaintiff on demand, together with the rents, issues, and profits. A description is given of the real and personal property alleged to have been purchased with money so given them by plaintiff from time to time from 1900 to 1906, which are alleged to have totaled the sum of $54,000. Fleury Gommet died March 31, 1917. Marie Gommet duly qualified as executrix of his estate, and within time thereafter plaintiff presented her claim to such executrix and demanded the transfer of all the property so alleged to be held in trust for her, and soon thereafter made similar demand upon Marie Gommet individually. Both demands were rejected, and thereupon for the first time plaintiff had knowledge of the repudiation of the alleged trust. The action was instituted immediately after the rejection of the last demand.

Respondent argues that her plea of the bar of the statute was good, because: (1) Where a demand is necessary to set the statute of limitations running, the demand must be made within the time prescribed for the commencement of the action upon the original obligation; and (2) that the alleged trust was an express trust of the type forbidden by the law of this state, and being invalid gave rise to an implied trust against which the statute began to run immediately without demand and without repudiation.

[1, 2] Generally speaking, respondent's position as to the time when demand must be made is correct; but, in the case of a voluntary express trust where the estate is to be managed for the benefit of the trustor to be returned on demand, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until after a repudiation of the trust. Schroeder v. Jahns, 27 Cal. 274, 280; MacMullan v. Kelly, 19 Cal. App. 700, 706, 127 Pac. 819; Norton v. Bassett, 154 Cal. 411, 419, 97 Pac. 894, 129 Am. St. Rep. 162; Arnold v. Loomis, 170 Cal. 95, 98, 148 Pac. 518; Hughes v. Silva, 184 Pac. 415. The same rule is applicable to actions to enforce a voluntary resulting trust. Roach v. Caraffa, 85 Cal. 436, 446, 25 Pac. 22; Faylor v. Faylor, 136 Cal. 92, 96, 68 Pac. 482; Arnold v. Loomis, supra.

[3] It is true, as urged by respondent, that in the case of an involuntary implied trust raised by operation of law no repudiation of the trust is necessary to start the running of the statute of limitations. Benoist v. Benoist, 172 Pac. 1109; Earhart v. Churchill Co., 169 Cal. 728, 731, 147 Pac. 942.

It becomes important then to determine the character of the trust here involved. If it was an involuntary implied trust, then under the authorities last cited respondent's plea of the bar of the statute was good and the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed. On the other hand, if it was a voluntary express or resulting trust, the statute did not commence to run until after repudiation. It is alleged that the moneys were given to the trustees—

"To invest, loan out, care for, manage and control said moneys so deposited by plaintiff with them, or either of them, for the use and benefit of said plaintiff, until the same might be demanded by said plaintiff; to invest such part of said moneys in real estate for plaintiff as in the judgment of said Fleury Gommet, now deceased, and said Marie Gommet, seemed for the best interests of said plaintiff, and to transfer said real estate so acquired by said Fleury Gommet, now deceased, and said Marie Gommet, or either of them, to said plaintiff on demand of said plaintiff, together with all rents, issues and profits thereof; to lend such part of said moneys as in the judgment of said Fleury Gommet, now deceased, and said Marie Gommet, seemed for the best interests of this plaintiff at interest and to take good security therefor; to transfer all evidences of such loans and securities to said plaintiff on said plaintiff's demand; and to hold such balance of said moneys as had not been previously invested or loaned to the order of this plaintiff, for the use and benefit of said plaintiff, until demanded by plaintiff."

Also:

"That it was the agreement and intention of plaintiff and said Fleury Gommet, during his lifetime, and Marie Gommet, that said defendant Marie Gommet and said Fleury Gommet should hold and continue to hold said property during all of said times for the use and benefit of plaintiff, in order that the same might be increased by accumulations of interest, rents, issues and profits; that plaintiff always believed that said property would be delivered and transferred to her upon her request or demand and was so told and assured by said Fleury Gommet on many occasions during his lifetime and up to the time of his death, and also by her said sister the defendant Marie Gommet."

[4-7] From these allegations it is apparent that the pleader alleged an express voluntary trust arising out of the confidential relations existing between the parties. But respondent argues that, as the trust provided for accumulations after minority and permitted the conveyance of real property, it was void as an express trust under sections 724 and 857 of the Civil Code prohibiting trusts for accumulations beyond minority and trusts to convey realty. From this it is argued that it must be treated as an implied trust only. But section 724 is a limitation upon the power to create future interests by will or transfer in writing. It has no application to the deposit of money with an adult to be invested for the use and benefit of the owner, while section 857 relates only to the creation of a trust for the benefit of a third person. Furthermore, a trust to receive and hold real property to be transferred to the trustor on demand is not a trust to convey within the meaning of the Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70. If, as alleged in the amended complaint, real property was purchased by the trustees with the money of appellant, then, in the absence of any other specific agreement, a trust resulted under the terms of section 853, Civil Code. Such a trust is valid as one created or declared by operation of law. Civ. Code, § 853. A trust so created or declared becomes a voluntary trust as to the trustee "by any words or acts of his indicating, with reasonable certainty: (1) His acceptance of the trust, or his acknowledgment, made upon sufficient consideration of its existence." Civ. Code, § 2222.

[8] The complaint alleges both acceptance and acknowledgment on the part of both trustees, the continuance of the confidential relations between the parties, and the promises to turn over the property to appellant, made up to the time of the death of the trustee Fleury Gommet. There is thus pleaded an express trust created by the original agreement, with the possibility of a resulting trust so far as the realty is concerned growing out of the trustees own acts in purchasing the realty with the funds of the trustor. In either event, a voluntary continuing trust was created, against which the statute would not commence to run until a repudiation of the trust on the part of the trustees was brought to the knowledge of the trustor. Arnold v. Loomis, 170 Cal. 95, 98, 148 Pac. 518, Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 725, 127 Pac. 66, Roache v. Caraffa, 85 Cal. 436, 446, 25 Pac. 22. In the latter case the Supreme Court say:

. "If, now, it affects any real estate, as it presently appears to do, it has been made to do so because of the act of the trustee, and by operation of law under sections 852 and 853, Civil Code; but this does not change its character of express trust. A resulting trust, under section 853, may still be an express trust. It was not alone an express trust, but a continuing trust, and the statute of limitations would not run against the cestui que trust, until repudiation by trustee brought home to the knowledge of the beneficiary."

This is clearly the rule of law in this state, and further citation of authority is unnecessary.

[9, 10] Respondent next urges that the action is barred by the laches of appellant. The facts alleged are that at all the times during the continuance of the trust both trustees reaffirmed their obligations and promised to return the property on demand; that their relations were friendly and cordial, and appellant had no reason to anticipate that there would be a repudiation on the part of either trustee until she filed her claim against the estate of Fleury Gommet. The action was commenced within a few months after the rejection of this demand. It is only when laches affirmatively appears on the face of a complaint that this defense can be raised by demurrer. The demand upon the executrix was rejected on August 22, 1917. The demand made upon the respondent individually was rejected October 15, 1917. This suit was instituted October 18, 1917. This does not constitute such delay as would warrant the court in holding that the plaintiff was guilty of laches in the institution of the proceedings. Lamb v. Lamb, 171 Cal. 577, 153 Pac. 913; Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 589, 108 Pac. 506; Hughes v. Silva, 184 Pac. 415.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and to grant leave to the respondent to answer the amended complaint.

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜806(1) — ONE INSTRUCTION DEFINING CRIME SUFFICIENT.

That on a trial for robbery definition of the crime was given in one of the instructions was enough.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜824(1)—REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTION NECESSARY.

Failure to instruct or to instruct more specifically on a proposition is not error in the absense of request for instruction.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜655(1) — REMARK OF JUDGE AFTER VERDICT HARMLESS.

Remarks of the trial judge could not have harmed defendant, having been made after return of verdict.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂645—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MAY WAIVE OPENING ARGUMENT TO JURY AFTER CLOSE OF EVIDENCE.

Pen. Code, § 1093, subd. 5, providing that, when the evidence is concluded, unless the case is submitted on either side or on both sides without argument, the prosecuting attorney and counsel for defendant may argue the case, the prosecuting attorney opening the argument and having the right to close, does not prevent the prosecuting attorney waiving an opening argument with right still to closing argument, especially as section 1094 authorizes the court to depart from the order of trial prescribed by section 1093.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Frank Martin was convicted of robbery, denied a new trial, and appeals. Affirmed.

J. K. Ross, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and R. L. Chamberlain, of Sacramento, for the People.

WASTE, P. J. The defendant was convicted and sentenced to the state prison for the crime of robbery. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

[1, 2] Appellant's first contention is that the court misdirected the jury. He complains that there is no explanation in the charge of the gist of the offense. The definition of the crime of robbery was given to the jury in one of the instructions of the court. That was sufficient. Furthermore, the failure of the trial court to instruct the jury upon any proposition deemed essential by the defendant is not to be regarded as error, unless he made a request for such instruction. People v. Fice, 97 Cal. 460, 32 Pac. 531; People v. White, 5 Cal. App. 329–335, 90 Pac. 471.

As to the other alleged omissions to instruct: The charge is remarkably short, but the law of the case was correctly, and we think sufficiently, stated by the trial court in its instructions to the jury. If counsel for the defendant deemed it essential that the jury should be specifically instructed upon any particular phase of the case, it was his privilege and duty, to request such instruction. In the absence of such request, the charge to the jury is not open to attack on the ground that it failed to specifically cover a particular point in the case, which counsel for the defendant deemed pertinent and material to the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence. People v. Stirgios, 23 Cal. App. 49, 136 Pac. 957. See, also, People v. Rogers, 163 Cal. 476, 126 Pac. 143; People v. Wong Chow, 2 Cal. Unrep. 382, 4 Pac. 763.

There is nothing in the appellant's next contention that there is not sufficient evidence to warrant the conviction. The testimony of the complaining witness and of the arresting officer amply supports the verdict.

[3] There is no merit in the contention of appellant that certain remarks of the trial court worked an injury to the defendant. The alleged improper language of the court was made after the jury had returned its verdict, and had been discharged.

[4] The third and last point made by appellant is that the court erred in refusing to compel the district attorney to make an opening argument in order that appellant might "reply," and also erred in denying appellant the privilege of "closing the case." An examination of the record shows that at the conclusion of taking of the testimony the district attorney announced his willingness to waive argument. Thereupon defendant's counsel demanded the right "to close the case," with the apparent intention of making the only argument in the matter. Upon this application being denied, defendant submitted the case. As we read the entire record relative to this episode in the trial, we see nothing more than an expressed willingness on the part of the district attorney to submit the case to the jury without argument, and an attempt on the part of the defendant to force the district attorney into making an opening argument, on penalty of having the trial court refuse him the right to reply after defendant's counsel had argued. We do not understand that the court denied defendant the right to make his usual argument with the customary privilege of the district attorney to reply in case he so desired. We find nothing in section 1093, subd. 5, of the Penal Code to prevent a district attorney from waiving an opening argument in a criminal case. The section, however, does give him the right to close. Furthermore, the trial court may, in the exercise of its discretion, depart from the order of trial prescribed in that section. Penal Code, § 1094. The early cases cited by the appellant in support of his contention in this regard have no bearing upon the section of the Code as it now stands.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

DOUGLAS v. ORTH et al. (Civ. 3030.)

(District Court of Appeal. Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 3, 1919.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊂=58(4)—ACCRUAL OF CAUSES OF ACTION AGAINST CORPORATION AND STOCKHOLDERS.

Where plaintiff was injured in collision between a delivery wagon of a company and an automobile in which he was riding, his causes of action against the company and against its stockholders on their liability as such arose at the same time—that is, the time of the collision.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊂=65(2)—STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY NOT BASED ON PRELIMINARY JUDGMENT AGAINST CORPORATION.

Cause of action against stockholders of corporation on their stockholders' liability for injuries from collision with its delivery wagon, since it accrues at the same time as against the corporation, is not based upon judgment against the corporation.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊂=105(2)—NO EXCLUSION OF TIME FOR APPEAL BY CORPORATION, IN SUIT AGAINST IT FOR INJURIES, FROM PERIOD OF LIMITATIONS GOVERNING ACTION TO ENFORCE STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY FOR SAME INJURIES.

Where plaintiff was injured in a collision between a delivery wagon of a company and the automobile in which he was riding, and sued the company to recover, the time from filing of the company's appeal to affirmance of the judgment by the Supreme Court should not be excluded from the time between the collision and the date of affirmance in determining whether plaintiff's cause of action to enforce the liability of stockholders in the company is barred by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 338, 359.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by C. K. Douglas against Margaret Orth and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ingall W. Bull, of Los Angeles, for respondents Margaret Orth and John G. Orth.

Frankel & Frankel, Goldberg & Meily, and Leo Silverstein, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Kornblum.

THOMAS, J. This is an action against three stockholders of a corporation to recover the proportionate amount of a judgment obtained against the corporation in which these defendants were stockholders, on their alleged liability as such.

Summarized, the facts upon which the present action is based are as follows: On November 13, 1912, the plaintiff was injured in a collision between a delivery wagon of the Berlin Dye Works & Laundry Company, a corporation, and an automobile in which he was riding. Plaintiff commenced an action on the 13th of December, 1912, against said corporation for damages arising out of the collision, and, after trial, recovered judgment for the sum of $10,000, from which judgment the corporation appealed. The judgment was affirmed on December 17, 1914. On August 14, 1916, 3 years and 8½ months after the collision, plaintiff commenced this action against the three stockholders as aforesaid. Demurrers were interposed to the complaint by defendants on the grounds: (1) That it did not allege a cause of action against them; and (2) that the alleged cause of action was barred by the provisions of sections 338 and 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrers were sustained with leave to amend. Plaintiff refused to amend, and judgment was thereupon entered for defendants.

All parties to this action agree that the cause of action accrued, if any did accrue against the defendants, on the date of the collision, although more space is devoted to the argument and the citation of cases in support of this point than on any other proposition. But it is contended by appellant that the cause of action against these defendants is not barred, for the reason that the time which elapsed from the filing of the appeal to the affirmance of the judgment by the Supreme Court in the action aforesaid against the said corporation—from September 5, 1913, to January 16, 1915, both dates inclusive, a period of 1 year, 4 months, and 11 days—should be deducted from the 3-year limitation period. Appellant further contends that by excluding the said period only "2 years and 5 months' time for limitation between the time of the happening of the accident and the filing of the complaint herein" had elapsed, and hence the action would have been brought in time.

[1, 2] Appellant also urges that "the cause of action" in this case is the judgment referred to against the corporation, and in support thereof says:

"Surely it must be said that, if the corporation could maintain an appeal, which it could and did, in this behalf, any steps taken by it should be imputed to and become an act of the stockholders. The cause of action primarily was against the corporation sole, and after judgment was rendered then suit could be maintained on the judgment against the stockholders for their pro rata payment thereof."

With this contention we are unable to agree. We think the "cause of action" arose at the same time against the corporation and against the stockholders on their liability as such, if any there was. Davidson v. Rankin, 34 Cal. 503; Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117, 28 Pac. 110; Hyman v. Coleman, 82 Cal. 650, 23 Pac. 62, 16 Am. St. Rep. 178; Miller v. Lane, 160 Cal. 90, 116 Pac. 58. This being the law, and it being conceded that the cause of action against the corporation arose on the date of the collision, the cause of action therefore, if any exists against the defendants here, arose out of the act or omission, if any, by which the liability was incurred, and plaintiff's cause of action against defendants, if any he has, is not based upon the judgment against the corporation.

[3] There is only one question in this case, and that is:

"Should the time from the filing of the appeal to the affirmance of the judgment by the Supreme Court as aforesaid be excluded from the time transpiring between the date of the collision and the said date of affirmance in arriving at our conclusion as to whether the cause of action is barred by the statutes?"

We think not. Stilphen v. Ware, 45 Cal. 110; Union Trust Co. v. Journeay, 29 Cal. App. 502, 156 Pac. 999; Hyman v. Coleman, supra. In the case last cited the court said:

"A judgment against the corporation does not create a new liability, nor extend the time prescribed by the statute of limitations for bringing suit against the stockholders."

This being true on "contractual obligations," a fortiori it would be so when the obligation is one imposed by law.

Judgment affirmed.

Dying declarations are not admissible in a proceeding before the board of medical examiners to revoke a license to practice medicine, or in any other proceeding, except in criminal cases of homicide, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 4.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸407(1)—DECLARATIONS IN PRESENCE OF ACCUSED INADMISSIBLE WHEN DENIED AT TIME BY ACCUSED.

Statements made in the presence of an accused are not admissible in evidence under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3, relating to admissions by conduct, where accused expressly denies the truth thereof; it not being the accusation, but the conduct of the accused, that is evidence in such cases.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Proceeding before the Board of Medical Examiners of the State of California to have the license of Marion Thrasher to practice medicine revoked. An order, purporting to find and adjudge the respondent guilty of unprofessional conduct and to revoke his license to practice medicine, was, on writ of review, set aside and annulled, and the Board of Medical Examiners and others appeal. Affirmed.

Harry A. Encell, of Oakland, for appellants.

Samuel M. Shortridge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court made and entered upon the hearing of a writ of review, setting aside and annulling an order of the board of medical examiners of the state of California purporting to find and adjudge the respondent guilty of unprofessional conduct, and to revoke his license to practice medicine in this state.

The respondent was charged before said board of medical examiners with unprofessional conduct under the first subdivision of section 14 of the Medical Practice Act, which provides that such unprofessional conduct shall consist in "the procuring or aiding or abetting or attempting or agreeing or offering to procure a criminal abortion." The respondent appeared before said board upon said charge and a hearing was had, during the course of which certain essential evidence in support of said charge was admitted over the objection of respondent as to its competency. At the conclusion of the hearing the said board adjudged the respondent guilty of the said charge, and ordered his license to practice medicine revoked. Thereupon the respondent applied for a writ of review to the superior court which, upon the hearing on said writ, annulled the said judgment and order of the board of medical examiners, whereupon the latter have prosecuted this appeal.

The chief contention of the respondent at the hearing upon said writ and also upon this appeal is that the board of medical examiners received in evidence over his objection certain hearsay evidence which was not admissible under the rules with regard to the admission of evidence by which said board of medical examiners must be governed in proceedings before it. Section 14 of the Medical Practice Act, as amended in 1915 (Stats. 1915, pp. 196, 197), provides in respect to such cases that "if the charges on their face be deemed sufficient by the board, and issue be joined thereon by answer, the board shall proceed to determine the matter, and to that end shall hear such proper evidence as may be adduced before it." In the case of Englebretson v. Industrial Accident Commission, 170 Cal. 793, 151 Pac. 421, the Supreme Court of this state, in construing the terms of the statute then in force in relation to the rules of evidence governing hearings before said commission (which was much more broad and liberal than the terms of the Medical Practice Act above quoted), held that hearsay evidence was inadmissible upon hearings before tribunals of that character, and annulled the award of said commission because of its error in the admission of such evidence. In the later case of Connolly v. Industrial Accident Commission, 173 Cal. 405, 160 Pac. 239, this ruling was affirmed.

[1] We have no doubt that the principle enunciated in these cases is to be given full application to hearings before the board of medical examiners, in view of the language of the statute above quoted, which limits the power of said board to the hearing only of "such proper evidence as may be adduced before it." In the case of Englebretson v. Industrial Accident Com., supra, it was further held that where the ruling of the inferior tribunal upon an essential element in the case was based solely upon the hearsay evidence which had been thus improperly admitted, the judgment of such tribunal would be annulled upon a writ of review. In the instant case it is admitted that an essential element in the case necessary to be established by competent evidence was the fact of the pregnancy of the woman upon whom the respondent performed the operation. It is the contention of the respondent herein that the only substantial evidence upon this essential element in the case was wholly hearsay, and particularly that the chief evidence upon this point consisted in a written statement in the nature of a dying declaration made and signed by the patient a short while before her death. We have examined carefully the record before us, and find that this contention of the respondent as to the state of the evidence must be sustained, and that aside from said written statement of the woman there is not only a dearth of evidence of her pregnancy in the record, but that upon that feature of the case the testimony of the autopsy surgeon strongly supports the respondent's claim that the woman was not in fact pregnant when the operation, which was in the nature of a curettement, was performed.

[2, 3] The question then remains as to whether the written but unsworn statement of the deceased woman was admissible upon the hearing before the board of medical examiners, either as a dying declaration or upon any other theory which would take it out of the objection to it as hearsay. That it was not admissible in this particular proceeding as a dying declaration the authorities seem uniform and clear, holding that such declarations are inadmissible except in criminal cases of homicide, and never in civil actions or proceedings. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 4; Jones on Evidence, § 330, 2; 21 Cyc. 981, and cases cited; People v. Hall, 94 Cal. 595, 30 Pac. 7. It is in fact conceded by the appellants herein that the statement in question was not admissible as a dying declaration, but it is insisted by the appellants that it was admissible upon another ground and under subdivision 3 of section 1870, Code of Civil Procedure, as "the act or declaration of another, in the presence and within the observation of a party, and his conduct in relation thereto." The record of the proceedings had before the board of medical examiners does in fact disclose that the written statement of the respondent's patient was read in the respondent's presence and hearing while she was in the hospital and near to death, but it also discloses that while said statement was being read the respondent interrupted it several times with questions and assertions amounting to denials of its truth, and also produced a statement of his own regarding the case which the woman had already signed as correct, in which it was asserted by him that the patient had already had a miscarriage before coming to him for treatment. To such a state of the record the language of the Supreme Court in the case of People v. Teshara, 134 Cal. 542, 66 Pac. 798, has exact and special application. The court there says:

"The court also erred in refusing to strike out the evidence of Patton and Mullen as to the accusation made by Loucks, when Amaya and defendant were brought to his bedside. The statement made by Loucks at that time was hearsay, and Teshara made no admission of its truth, either expressly or tacitly. He expressly denied it. The court and the district attorney seem to have lost sight of the fact that it is not the accusation, but the conduct of the accused, that is evidence in such cases, and that the only reason for admitting the accusation is to explain the conduct. The district attorney should not have offered this evidence, knowing, as he did, that Teshara had not remained silent under the accusation, but had repelled it at the time it was made."

See, also, People v. Ah Yute, 54 Cal. 89; People v. Hartwell, 175 Pac. 21.

It will thus be seen that the unsworn statement of the woman as to her state of pregnancy at the time of the respondent's treatment of her case was not competent evidence of the fact of such pregnancy, and that the respondent's acts and conduct in respect thereto cannot be held to amount to an admission of the truth of her statement in that regard. It follows that there was no sufficient evidence before the board of medical examiners upon that essential feature of the case to justify it in finding the respondent guilty upon the charge before it and in making its order revoking his license to practice medicine. The trial court was therefore correct in its ruling that such finding and order were unsupported by evidence, and hence beyond the jurisdiction of said board.

Judgment affirmed.

CALIFORNIA CANNERIES CO. v. GREAT WESTERN LUMBER CO. (Civ. 2933.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 3, 1919. Rehearing Denied Dec. 2, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 2, 1920.)

1. PLEADING ⟸34(6)—DEFECTIVE PLEADING CORRECTED BY PROOF.

Allegation that defendant "failed, neglected, and refused to deliver the box-shook" in question, is an allegation from which demand for delivery may be reasonably implied, and, since defendant did not avail itself of the infirmity by special demurrer, it cannot after judgment question sufficiency of complaint to support the judgment because of said infirmity.

2. PLEADING ⟸59—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

It is a general rule that performance of conditions precedent in a contract must be averred in the complaint, either specifically or by authorized general averment, or waiver thereof alleged.

3. PLEADING ⟸59, 374—DEMAND FOR PERFORMANCE MUST BE ALLEGED.

Whenever it is essential to the cause of action that the plaintiff should have actually requested defendant to perform its contract, such request must be stated in the complaint and proved.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(3)—EVIDENCE PRESUMED COMPETENT IN ABSENCE OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

In the absence of any bill of exceptions, it must be assumed that the evidence presented in support of a finding was competent to establish the allegation of the complaint and was received without any objection and was sufficient to sustain the facts found.

5. PLEADING ⟸34(6)—NO PRESUMPTION THAT THE FACTS NOT PLEADED WERE PROVED.

The court will intend, after judgment, in order to support it, that facts imperfectly alleged have been established, but it will not presume for such purpose that material facts not at all stated have been proved.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by the California Canneries Company against the Great Western Lumber Company, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From the judgment rendered, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Marcel E. Cerf and C. H. Sooy, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

John R. Jones, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for alleged breach of a contract to furnish material for making boxes. Defendant, after demurrer (general as to the point here involved) overruled, denied generally and specifically the allegations of the complaint, and by way of cross-complaint set up a common count for goods, to wit, box-shook, sold and delivered. The trial court found in favor of plaintiff as prayed, but offset the damages by the amount claimed in the cross-complaint and entered judgment accordingly. Defendant appeals on the judgment-roll alone.

The complaint alleges the execution of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, setting forth a copy, and that the delivery of the box material was to be made in carload lots, at the cannery of plaintiff in San Francisco. Then occurs the following allegation:

"That defendant has failed, neglected, and refused to deliver (certain described material), to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $4,167.94."

This is followed by the prayer for judgment.

Under the terms of the contract, the defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff, and the plaintiff undertook to purchase, receive, and pay for, upon the specified terms and prices, "their entire requirements in box-shook for their own use." Defendant agreed to fill all orders promptly as it might receive the same from the plaintiff, all shook to be shipped between April 1, 1917, and January 1, 1918, as ordered by plaintiff, delivery to be made within 10 days from the time the order was received.

The court found "that defendant has broken said agreement, in that it has failed, neglected, and refused, to deliver" the material as in the complaint described; that plaintiff thereupon purchased said box-shook in the open market and paid therefor the market value, to wit, $14,864.55; that the price for the same, according to the contract, was $10,696.61; that the difference between the market value and the contract price was $4,167.94; that plaintiff was indebted to defendant, for box-shook sold, $2,311.91, which amount, plus a small demurrage charge, was deducted from the difference between the contract price and the amount plaintiff was compelled to pay in the open market. The judgment before mentioned followed these findings.

[1] But one question is presented for consideration on this appeal: Does the complaint state facts sufficient to support the judgment? Appellant contends that the judgment must be reversed because it does not appear from the complaint that the plaintiff ever required of defendant any box-shook that was not delivered, or gave any orders to defendant that were not promptly filled, or delivery made within the time specified in the contract. In other words, it insists that it was a condition precedent, devolving on plaintiff, to make a demand for the delivery of such box-shook as it required, before defendant was obligated to deliver, and that the failure to allege such demand in its complaint is fatal to plaintiff's cause of action.

[2, 3] It is a general rule that performance of conditions precedent in a contract must be averred in the complaint, either specifically or by authorized general averment, or a waiver thereof alleged. 21 R. C. L. 462. Whenever it is essential to the cause of action that the plaintiff should have actually requested the defendant to perform its contract, such request must be stated in the complaint and proved. 4 Ency. of Pleading and Practice, 647. "If the contract which has been broken provided for the delivery of the goods to the buyer on request, it is a condition precedent to the buyer's right of action that he should make this request." Benjamin on Sales (7th Ed.) § 878. Such request must be both alleged and proved. Radford v. Smith, 3 M. & W. 257, 258, cited in Benjamin on Sales, supra.

[4] Compliance with the requirements of these rules of procedure is to be found, if at all, in the allegation of the complaint "that defendant has failed, neglected and refused, to deliver" an amount of box-shook, and in the finding of the lower court "that defendant has broken said agreement, in that it failed, neglected and refused to deliver" the same. In the absence of any bill of exceptions, it must be assumed that the evidence presented in support of this finding was competent to establish the allegation of the complaint, and was received without any objection, and was sufficient to sustain the facts found. Cutting Fruit Packing Co. v. Canty, 141 Cal. 692, 695, 75 Pac. 564; Damon v. Quinn, 143 Cal. 75, 77, 76 Pac. 818. The allegation of the complaint, therefore, stands proved, and it only remains to determine whether, or not, it sufficiently states the performance of the required condition precedent resting on plaintiff, i. e., the making of a proper request, or demand, for the delivery of the box-shook it required.

[5] The court will intend, after judgment, in order to support it, that facts imperfectly alleged have been established, but it will not presume for such purpose that material facts not at all stated have been proved. Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 486, 489; Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 80 Cal. 505, 507, 22 Pac. 939; San Francisco v. Pennie, 93 Cal. 465, 468, 29 Pac. 66; Kimball v. Richardson-Kimball Co., 111 Cal. 386, 397, 43 Pac. 1111; San Joaquin Lumber Co. v. Welton, 115 Cal. 1, 46 Pac. 735, 1057. If, therefore, there is no statement in the complaint of the performance of the condition precedent, the contention of appellant must be upheld. On the other hand, if there was not here an absence of a material averment, but only a case of a material averment defectively pleaded, the point might have been well taken upon special demurrer, but the objection may not now be heard. Merrill v. Pacific Transfer Co., 131 Cal. 582, 585, 63 Pac. 915.

Respondent takes the position that the term "refused to deliver," in the complaint, viewed in the light of the entire pleading, is an averment, sufficient after judgment, because the facts essential to the cause of action appear therein by reasonable implication, in that a refusal implies a demand. This contention appears to be well supported by a number of authorities.

In Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hill, 97 Fed. 263, 38 C. C. A. 159, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 127, the answer to the amended complaint alleged as a separate defense that certain premiums upon a policy of life insurance became due and that both the insured and beneficiary "failed, neglected, and refused to pay" the same to the defendant, by reason whereof the said policy of life insurance became void and of no effect. A demurrer was interposed to this defense on the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a defense, and the demurrer was sustained. On certiorari in the United States Supreme Court (Mutual, etc., Co. v. Hill, 178 U. S. 347, at 350, 20 Sup. Ct. 914, 915 [44 L. Ed. 1097]) it was held that the allegation in the answer "does not disclose a mere omission, for it is 'neglected and refused,' and, of course, there can be no refusal unless with knowledge of the opportunity or duty. A party cannot be said to refuse to do a thing of which he knows nothing. Refusal implies demand, knowledge, or notice." The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals was reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the answer.

In Bowen v. Young, 37 Misc. Rep. 547, 75 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 1029, while the facts were somewhat similar, the position of the parties was reversed. It appeared from the complaint that the defendants purchased under the contract certain Niagara clips, to be made and delivered as required in such quantities as should from time to time be ordered. It was alleged that defendant, after ordering a certain amount of the commodity, refused and neglected, and still refuses and neglects, to accept any further quantity, or to place his order for the same, or carry out the contract in any respect. On demurrer it was urged that it did not appear in the complaint that the plaintiff's assignor had tendered a performance of the contract by offering to deliver the balance of the clips. The court said:

"In determining whether a complaint should be sustained as sufficient, we have to consider, not only the facts alleged, but also all that can, by reasonable and fair intendment, be implied from them; and averments which sufficiently point out the nature of the pleader's claims are sufficient, if under them he would be entitled to give the necessary evidence to establish his cause of action. Coatsworth v. Lehigh Valley Ry. Co., 156 N. Y. 451, 51 N. E. 301. Under the contract, it appears that the clips were to be manufactured from time to time in such quantities as ordered. And it appears that the defendant, since February 16, 1897, up to the time of the assignment, refused to order any of the clips. The word 'refuse,' as defined by the Century Dictionary, means 'to deny, as a request, demand, or invitation; to decline to accept; reject; as to refuse an offer.'"

Therefore, under the complaint, the court held it was proper to show that plaintiff's assignor, down to the time of their assignment to the plaintiff, offered to manufacture and deliver clips to the defendant, and that such offers were declined by him.

In Shaler v. Van Wormer, 33 Mo. 386, 388, the action was by the indorsee against the maker and indorser of a negotiable promissory note. The court said:

"Neither demand nor notice is expressly averred, but both by clear implication. The petition, after the usual averments in regard to the making and indorsement of the note, proceeds thus: 'At the maturity of said note, the same was duly presented for payment at the banking house of said Tesson & Danjen and payment thereof was refused.' * * * The averment 'that payment was refused' presupposes a previous demand of payment. The word 'refuse' signifies 'to deny a request, demand, invitation, or command,' and the proof of the refusal to pay necessarily involves the proof of a previous demand.'"

In Divan v. Loomis, 68 Wis. 150, 151, 31 N. W. 760, 761, the allegation was that the defendants "wholly and positively refused to perform their said agreement." The demurrer to the complaint was overruled. On the appeal the order of the lower court was affirmed, the court saying:

"It is said that the complaint is insufficient because it fails to aver any request of Loomis to comply with the terms of the alleged agreement. An allegation of refusal implies a previous demand, and is equivalent to an allegation of a demand and a refusal. Hammond v. Mason & H. O. Co., 92 U. S. 724 [23 L. Ed. 767]; Bogie v. Bogie, 41 Wis. 220. This being so, the breach is sufficiently alleged."

In Burns v. Fox, 113 Ind. 205, 14 N. E. 541, the court, while adhering to the rule that in actions in specific performance it is necessary for the plaintiff to show that he has made a demand for a conveyance, held the use of the word "refused" in the complaint implied such a demand.

In Davis v. Lumpkin, 106 Ga. 582, 586, 32 S. E. 626, 628, it was held that the ordinary meaning of the word "refuse" carries the idea of an application to the person refusing.

Again, in Beckhard v. Rudolph, 68 N. J. Eq. 740, 747, 63 Atl. 705, 707, it was held that the term "refuse" naturally, if not necessarily, imports a previous demand, or request for payment.

In People v. Perkins, 85 Cal. 509, 511, 26 Pac. 245, 246, the court said:

"To refuse is to decline the acceptance of something offered, or to fail to comply with some requirement. Neglect imports the omission or disregard of some duty. * * * The power to refuse a thing or neglect a duty must necessarily be based upon a knowledge of the existence of the thing or the duty."

In the light of these authorities, we are satisfied that under the more liberal rule of construction, to be applied to pleadings after judgment entered, we are justified in holding that the allegation of the complaint that the defendant "failed, neglected, and refused to deliver the box-shooks" in question, is an allegation from which the giving of the necessary orders to the defendant to furnish the same may be reasonably implied. There is not, therefore, such an entire absence of a material averment as to render the complaint fatally defective. As appellant did not avail itself of the opportunity to assail the infirmity of the averment by special demurrer, it cannot now successfully advance such contention.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Civ. 2932.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 3, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 2, 1920.)

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by the Great Western Lumber Company against the California Canneries Company. From the judgment rendered, the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Marcel E. Cerf and C. H. Sooy, both of San Francisco, for appellant.
John R. Jones, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The issues involved in this appeal are identical with those in California Canneries Co. v. Great Western Lumber Co. (No. 2933) 185 Pac. 1008, this day decided. By stipulation of the parties the result of that action was embodied in findings and judgment in this cause without a separate trial. The records were presented here in one transcript on appeal.

On the authority of the decision in that case, the judgment is affirmed.

UMSTEAD et al. v. AUTOMOBILE FUNDING CO. OF AMERICA.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 29, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=994(3)—WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY AND CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES FOR TRIAL COURT.

The matter of credibility of witnesses and weight to be given to the testimony of each is a matter resting in the discretion of the trial judge, whose determination may not be reviewed on appeal.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⊂=23(5) — RELATIONSHIP NOT SHOWN.

In an action to rescind a conditional sale of an automobile, evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that persons who made certain representations to plaintiffs were acting as agents of the defendant.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⊂=115(2) — EVIDENCE NOT SHOWING IMPLIED AUTHORITY TO MAKE REPRESENTATIONS AS TO PROPERTY SOLD.

Where automobile sales company negotiated with plaintiffs for the sale of an automobile, but would not sell on credit and had plaintiffs draw up an application to defendant, a company engaged in the purchasing of cars from dealers who have already found a buyer and in turn reselling them on credit to the buyers, and defendant accepted the application and fully prepared all the necessary papers for the transaction between itself and plaintiff and intrusted them to the motor sales company with instructions to have them properly signed and returned, the motor sales company was defendant's agent for that particular purpose, and for nothing else, and any representations made by the motor sales company as to the car obtained by plaintiffs was not binding on defendant.

4. EVIDENCE ⊂=121(2) — PRINCIPAL BOUND ONLY BY ADMISSIONS AND REPRESENTATIONS OF AN AGENT AT TIME OF TRANSACTION.

Only those representations, declarations, and admissions of an agent, respecting the subject-matter of a transaction, will bind the principal, which are made at the same time and constitute part of the res gestæ.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. A. Raker, Judge.

Action by Kate A. Umstead and others against the Automobile Funding Company of America. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Leon R. Yankwich, of Modesto, for appellant.
G. P. Adams, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiffs instituted this action to rescind a lease and conditional sale of an automobile, and to recover payments made, on the ground that the automobile was not new, as represented prior to the making of the contract. The real parties plaintiff are Kate A. Umstead and Edith G. Lawrence, sisters; their husbands also being made parties. Cousins and Lawrence (the latter not related to plaintiffs), partners, operating under the name of Chevrolet Motor Car Company of Los Angeles, were dealers in automobiles. Defendant is a corporation engaged in the purchasing of cars and trucks from dealers who have already found a buyer, and in turn leasing them to the purchasers on terms; in other words, as we view it, reselling them on credit. The lower court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and defendant appeals.

Plaintiffs Kate A. Umstead and Edith G. Lawrence were desirous of purchasing a new automobile, and made several trips to the place of business of Cousins and Lawrence to inspect automobiles and have the same demonstrated. They finally decided to buy, and claim that they selected one of two cars on the floor of the sales rooms. At the trial, it was admitted as a fact that this automobile was represented to them by the Chevrolet people to be a new car. Plaintiffs did not have sufficient ready money to pay the entire purchase price of the car and proposed a sale on the installment plan. Cousins and Lawrence, not being able to sell a car on credit, volunteered to get a company handling such transactions to buy the car, and in turn resell it to plaintiffs on satisfactory terms. They prepared, and the plaintiffs Mrs. Umstead and Mrs. Lawrence signed, an application in writing, addressed to the defendant, in which, after stating "We desire to purchase from Chevrolet Motor Car Company of California, one new five-passenger touring motor car, season of 1914, model Baby Grand, with catalogue equipment," etc., the price is quoted, and the application continues:

"We hereby propose that if you will purchase the same (securing and keeping for yourself such discount for cash as you may be able to obtain) we will and do hereby bind myself to execute and deliver unto you an agreement in words and figures set forth in the draft thereof hereto attached and made a part hereof."

This application was presented to, and accepted in writing by, the defendant. Whether the lease was actually attached to the application does not fully appear.

On information and data secured from Cousins and Lawrence, Buckingham, the vice president of defendant, prepared an agreement denominated a "lease and conditional sale of automobile" and the promissory notes secured by it, and gave them to Cousins and Lawrence, with instructions to have them properly signed by plaintiffs and returned. The principal document was a lease by and between the defendant and the plaintiffs, on terms therein specified, for the period of seven months, with the right to purchase after expiration of that time, and receive a bill of sale, of "One (1) 1914; Baby Grand Chevrolet touring car; standard equipment; car number 5392," together with its equipment.

At the time the application was accepted by defendant, Cousins and Lawrence entered into an agreement with it, in which, in consideration of defendant accepting the same, they recommended the applicants (plaintiffs) as persons worthy of credit, and agreed to assume the entire fulfillment of the manufacturer's guarantee covering the car, and also agreed that in case of nonpayment on the part of the applicants they would cooperate with defendant to secure payment, or in case a recovery of the car proved necessary, they further agreed to co-operate with defendant in such recovery, and to store and sell such recovered car under defendant's direction, and at a compensation mutually agreed upon.

Before executing the lease on the part of defendant, Buckingham, its vice president, personally examined the car bearing the number, and answering the description as inserted by him in the lease, and certified to his company that it was a new car. When cross-examined in court, during the trial of this action, he testified that he could not tell from the investigation he had made whether it was a new car or not; that he had the statement of Cousins and Lawrence as to what car it was and checked up that certain car.

When the papers were all signed, defendant paid the Chevrolet Motor Car Company for the automobile, received from it a bill of sale thereof, and the automobile was placed in possession of the plaintiffs.

According to the testimony of, and in behalf of, plaintiffs, they had trouble in operating the car from the start, alleged weakness of parts and serious mechanical defects soon manifesting themselves. Disagreements arose between plaintiffs and the motor company over the amount and payment of repair bills. After keeping and using the car for three months, and driving it until the speedometer registered about 5,000 miles, plaintiffs, according to their pleadings and testimony, for the first time learned that the automobile which had been delivered to them was not new, but was secondhand, and had been used by the Chevrolet Motor Car Company, before its sale to them, as a demonstrating car. They thereupon refused to pay any further installments upon their contract, and gave notice to the defendant, in writing, that they had elected to rescind their contract with it. They made demand for cancellation of the lease and repayment of the amounts paid thereunder, together with items for repairs and insurance. Defendants thereupon took possession of the car, which, according to the testimony, was in very bad shape. The rear "axle was broken, the motor was loose all over—it needed a general tightening up and overhauling."

The court found that, as an inducement to plaintiffs Umstead and Lawrence to enter into the contract, the defendant represented and stated falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully to the plaintiffs, and thereby induced them to believe, and the plaintiffs did believe, that the automobile was new, and had not been used, when, as a matter of fact, it had been used, and was not new. The first part of this finding is based on the admission that Cousins and Lawrence represented the automobile to be new. No one else made the statements. To further support that portion of the finding it was necessary for the trial court to conclude that Cousins and Lawrence were the agents of the defendant. Appellant contends, first, that there is not competent evidence to sustain the finding that the automobile delivered was not a new car. On this point, plaintiff Kate Umstead testified that in a conversation just prior to the rescission of the contract, and, about three months after the lease was signed, Cousins and Lawrence "acknowledged that it was not a new car; that they stated that the car was a demonstrator." Plaintiff Nathan Lawrence testified that in one of the conversations prior to this litigation the following occurred between Mrs. Lawrence and Cousins:

"Mrs. Lawrence made this statement at the time: 'Now, Mr. Cousins, you have had your say, etc., and what you would do, and would not do.' That is not the exact words, but that is the substance. Now she says, 'I have something to say to you. This is your demonstrator car, and you know it.' And he (Cousins) said: 'Yes, Mrs. Lawrence, that is our demonstrator.'"

He further testified that—

"Mr. Lawrence (of the Chevrolet Company) said they had used their judgment, as we were going to make that long trip, and if we had a new car we would not have got through the Newhall tunnel; that they would have had to come and tow us back. That was the Visalia trip."

The same witness testified:

"We rode in that car practically 30 days, up Canteere Hill, when the demonstration was made, before we bought the car."

Mrs. Blake, a witness for the plaintiff, testified that Mrs. Lawrence, one of the plaintiffs, said to Cousins, "I know this is not a new car, and you sold us a demonstrator," and Mr. Cousins said: "Well, Mrs. Lawrence, that is so." Witness Blake, an automobile mechanic, who appears to have done considerable work on the car while plaintiffs had it in their possession, testified that Cousins and Lawrence said to plaintiffs, because of the fact that (the plaintiffs) were going on a long trip, they, "in using their best judgment, had decided that it was advisable to give them a slightly used car." There was also evidence to the effect that the speedometer of the car registered 1,700 miles after its return from a trip after plaintiffs obtained it. Just which trip and what the mileage of these trips was does not appear.

Cousins and Lawrence both emphatically denied that they admitted that the automobile was a demonstration car. In explanation of the statements credited to them by the other witnesses, they both testified that the car, sold and delivered to plaintiffs, was a new car, one of two new ones which they had received in their consignment for the month, and which they had in their salesroom; that they had no demonstrating car, but took the plaintiffs out in one of the new cars, which was made ready for that use, and so used only on that occasion, and had not been demonstrated to anyone else; that it was the car subsequently sold to plaintiffs; that it had been driven around only a few times in the process of "tuning it up, and getting it ready." Lawrence testified that, when charged by plaintiffs with having sold plaintiffs a "demonstrator," he merely explained the actual facts to them. Both witnesses testified that the car was in good condition after "tuning up," and was in "A1 shape."

[1] The conflict in the testimony in support of the finding that the car was not new was a matter for the consideration of the lower court. The matter of credibility of the witnesses, the weight to be given to the testimony of each, was a matter resting in the discretion of the trial judge, whose determination may not be reviewed by us.

Appellants next contend that the testimony relative to the condition of the car, whether sufficient to support the finding, or not, was erroneously admitted, for two reasons: First, that Cousins and Lawrence were not shown to be the agents of defendant, hence any statements made by them in the premises were not binding on defendant; and, second, even though an agency was shown, the statements, or alleged admissions, as to the car not being new, were made after the transaction was closed. These contentions, we think, are correct.

[2] The witness Buckingham, vice president of the defendant company, Cousins, and Lawrence each testified that the latter two had no connection whatever with the defendant corporation, and were not its agents. The plaintiffs introduced testimony to the effect that, when the lease was being signed, Lawrence and Cousins were accompanied by a young man named Darling, and said by Cousins and Lawrence to be from the Funding Company, who made inquiries about the payment of the installments under the contract, and who went away saying as he left, "I now turn you over to these gentlemen, who will act as our agents," referring to Lawrence and Cousins. Defendant's vice president testified that Darling was not an agent of, and had no connection whatever with, defendant. Lawrence and Cousins testified that he was the representative of another concern, engaged in business similar to that of the defendant, and that he was interested in securing the contract if defendant did not consummate the deal. On cross-examination plaintiffs' counsel asked the vice president of the defendant, referring to Darling:

"So you did not act through him, but you acted merely through the Chevrolet Motor Car Company, in having the contract signed?"

The witness answered, "Yes, sir."

This is all the evidence relied on by respondents to establish the fact that the relation of principal and agent existed between defendant and Cousins and Lawrence. In our judgment it does not have that effect.

[3] When defendant, having fully prepared all the necessary papers for the transaction between itself and plaintiffs, intrusted them to Cousins and Lawrence, with instructions to have them properly signed and returned, it made them its agents for that particular purpose, and for nothing else. The deal between plaintiffs, and the Chevrolet people for the purchase by plaintiffs of the car had already been arranged for. Consequently, we find nothing in the transaction itself sustaining the finding that the relation of principal and agent existed to the extent that representations made by Cousins and Lawrence before defendant was in any way a party thereto were binding on the latter.

[4] Appellant's second ground of objection to the admission was equally good. The alleged declarations of Cousins and Lawrence, if established, were not made until long after the automobile deal was closed.

It is a well-established general rule that only those representations, declarations, and admissions of an agent, respecting the subject-matter of a transaction, will bind the principal, which are made at the same time, and constitute a part of the res gestæ. Moore v. Bettis, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 67, 53 Am. Dec. 771, 772, and note. The more recent cases, likewise, support the general rule that the unauthorized declarations or admissions of an agent, not made contemporaneously with the occurrence, or transaction to which they relate, are not competent evidence against the principal, unless they are so immediately connected with the transaction as to constitute a part thereof. Peterson Bros. v. Mineral King Fruit Co., 140 Cal. 624, 629–630, 74 Pac. 162. See, also, cases cited in notes to Conklin v. Con. Ry. Co., 196 Mass. 302, 82 N. E. 23, in 13 Ann. Cas. 859.

The judgment is reversed.

THEODORE et al. v. WILLIAMS, Judge of Superior Court. (Civ. 3074.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 30, 1919.)

1. INJUNCTION ⟸231 — EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW VIOLATION OF INJUNCTION.

Whether or not defendant violated an injunction was a question for the court on all the evidence in the contempt proceeding, and where the evidence is such that it cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in deciding that defendant was not guilty, such decision will not be disturbed.

2. INJUNCTION ⟸223(1) — EVIDENCE SHOWING ACTS NOT A VIOLATION.

Where a former laundry driver for plaintiff, while acting in the same capacity for another, was enjoined from soliciting business from customers on his former route for plaintiff, his driving along the street with his wagon, labeled with his own name and that of his employer, and his carrying an advertisement in a newspaper, wherein he stated he was the agent of his present employer, giving a phone number, construed not acts in violation of the injunction.

3. INJUNCTION ⟸223(1)—ACCEPTING FRUITS OF MISCONDUCT OCCURRING PRIOR TO INJUNCTION NOT A VIOLATION.

Where a laundry driver was enjoined from soliciting patronage from persons on route he formerly worked for plaintiff, contempt proceedings related to acts committed subsequent to the injunction, and defendant's acceptance of work from customers whom he had induced to give him their laundry by wrongful acts prior to the injunction is not a violation thereof, and does not render him guilty of contempt of court.

4. INJUNCTION ⟸230(3)—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW VIOLATION OF INJUNCTION.

In a contempt proceeding against a laundry driver, enjoined from soliciting patrons on a route he formerly handled for plaintiff, evidence held insufficient to show that defendant had violated the injunction.

Application by G. M. Theodore and others, doing business as the Anaheim Laundry Company, for mandamus against R. Y. Williams, Judge of the Superior Court of Orange County, to compel an adjudication of contempt against J. L. Adkins. Writ dismissed.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Clyde Bishop, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an original proceeding in mandate to compel the superior court of Orange county to adjudge J. L. Adkins guilty of contempt for the violation of a decree granting an injunction against him in an action therefor, wherein petitioners were plaintiffs and he was defendant.

Petitioners were the proprietors of a laundry in the city of Anaheim, operated under the name of the Anaheim Laundry. As an employé of petitioners, Adkins had charge of laundry route No. 1 in said city; his duty being to gather from and return to customers in such territory the articles consigned to petitioners for laundry. About March, 1919, Adkins severed his connection with the Anaheim Laundry, and in the same capacity entered the employ of the Model Laundry, also operating in said city of Anaheim, and, using the information obtained while in petitioners' employ, proceeded to solicit the business and patronage of customers of the Anaheim Laundry residing in said laundry route No. 1. Thereupon, in an action therefor, the court, on April 22, 1919, rendered a decree perpetually enjoining Adkins from soliciting, either directly or indirectly, any laundry work from any customers of petitioners who were such on the 26th day of March, 1919, in what was known as route No. 1 in the city of Anaheim, and further enjoin and restrain him from receiving any laundry work from such customers as the result of any solicitation on his part, either directly or indirectly, or taking any laundry work of said customers, obtained through such solicitation, to any competing laundry, or disclosing to any competing laundry the names or addresses of such customers or endeavoring to persuade them to cease their patronage of petitioners, or take their laundry work to another laundry.

Thereafter, upon application of petitioners, supported by affidavits that Adkins was violating the injunction so granted, he was by the court cited to appear therein on May 3, 1919, and show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt and punished therefor. Pursuant to this order, Adkins appeared in court, at which time a hearing was had, and the court made an order as follows:

"It appearing to the court that the defendant has not violated any of the terms of the injunction, therefore the defendant is not adjudged in contempt of this court."

The purpose of the injunction granted in the action was to protect the rights of plaintiffs therein, who are petitioners here. This purpose could only be accomplished by enforcing the terms of the injunction, and the only means provided by law for such enforcement was the proceeding in contempt, wherein, upon the disobedience of the injunction being shown, it was the duty of the court to impose punishment therefor. The application for writ of mandate is based upon the alleged neglect of this duty on the part of the court. While counsel for petitioners concede the general rule that, where a lower court is vested with power to determine a question upon which a right depends, mandamus will not issue to control the discretion of such court in the determination thereof (Hammel v. Neylan, 31 Cal. App. 23, 159 Pac. 618; Strong v. Grant, 99 Cal. 100, 33 Pac. 733), they nevertheless insist that, in the absence of any other remedy, the writ will lie to force a particular action by the inferior court when, upon the facts clearly established without conflict of evidence, the court, as a matter of law, may not act otherwise than in such particular manner. Ex parte Ford, 160 Cal. 334, 116 Pac. 757, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 882, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1267; Inglin v. Hoppin, 156 Cal. 483, 105 Pac. 582.

[1] As to whether or not there was a violation of the injunction was a question for the determination of the court upon all the evidence adduced at the hearing of the contempt proceeding, and we cannot say there was an abuse of discretion by the court in deciding that Adkins was not guilty of acts constituting a violation of the injunction.

[2, 3] In addition to the affidavits upon which the citation to show cause was issued, one of the petitioners was called as a witness. His testimony was to the effect that subsequent to the granting of the injunction he had seen Adkins call at the residences of former customers of petitioners and obtain their laundry. As to one of said customers, he said:

"I tried to talk to her; she would not let me have the bundles; she told me they were for Mr. Adkins."

As to another, he stated she refused to give him her laundry, and she said she would have no more laundry for the Anaheim Laundry. As to others, his testimony shows they refused to continue as patrons of the Anaheim Laundry, and transferred their work to the Model Laundry, represented by Adkins. There is no showing, either in the affidavits or testimony, that Adkins had done anything, subsequent to the issuance of the writ of injunction, which could be construed as soliciting laundry from such persons, unless, as claimed by petitioners, the driving along the street of his wagon, plainly labeled "Model Laundry, J. L. Adkins," and the carrying of an advertisement in one of the papers wherein he stated, "I am agent for the Model Laundry, J. L. Adkins, Phone Anaheim 14 W," be construed as acts in violation of the writ. To so hold would deprive him of the right to pursue a lawful calling as a means for obtaining a livelihood. This, in the absence of positive covenant, may not be done. See New Method Laundry Co. v. MacCann, 174 Cal. 26, 161 Pac. 990, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 1022, and cases therein cited. As against this testimony, Mr. Adkins testified that since the injunction was granted—

"I have not in a single instance told anybody to give me their laundry, or requested anybody to give me their laundry. I have not called for laundry in a single instance at any house in Anaheim, except where I have been previously requested personally by note or by telephone to call and get the work."

That former patrons of the Anaheim Laundry possessed the right to transfer their patronage from the Anaheim Laundry to the Model Laundry, represented by Adkins, there can be no doubt. Nor can there be any doubt as to his right to receive it, where such transfer is made without any act on his part which could induce the change. It may be conceded that prior to the issuance of the injunction Adkins had been guilty of unlawful acts, as a result of which he obtained for the Model Laundry the patronage of those who had theretofore given their work to the Anaheim Laundry. But in this proceeding we are not concerned with what he did prior to the issuance of the injunction; the inquiry in the contempt proceeding related to acts committed by him subsequent to the time when he was "enjoined from soliciting, either directly or indirectly, any laundry work from any customers of" petitioners, and restrained from receiving laundry work from such customers as the result of solicitation on his part, or taking any laundry work of said customers obtained through such solicitation. Conceding that, by means of wrongful acts committed by Adkins prior to the issuance of the writ of injunction, he had obtained the work of petitioners' customers, who thereafter, without further act on his part, other than to call for and receive their laundry on request by phone or otherwise to do so, such acts, being within his right, did not constitute a violation of the injunction. The conclusion of the court was that since the issuance of the writ he had not been guilty of soliciting work from former customers of petitioners; that he had not received any laundry work from such customers as the result of solicitation on his part, nor had he taken any laundry work from customers which had been obtained through such solicitation.

[4] In the absence of any direct showing on the part of petitioners that Adkins had solicited the laundries received by him from their former customers, and that the only act on his part, other than calling at their residences to get the work, was the driving along the streets of a wagon marked "Model Laundry," and the advertisement carried in a newspaper above referred to, it cannot be said the court abused its discretion in accepting as true the statement of Adkins that he had not in a single instance called at any house in Anaheim, except where he had been previously requested personally by note or by telephone to call and get their work.

The writ is dismissed.

WERNER v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(Civ. 3010.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 3, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 2, 1920.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=278(18)—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER FOR JURY.

In an action for the death of a member of a switching crew, killed in a collision between freight cars and an engine making a running switch, or "high-ball," evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the collision resulted from the negligence of defendant's employés.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=289(30) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF INJURED SERVANT FOR JURY.

In an action for damages for death of a member of a switching crew, killed in a collision between freight cars and an engine making a running switch, or "high-ball," whether or not deceased was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=204(1)—RISKS ASSUMED BY SERVANT ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

A servant of an interstate carrier, engaged in interstate commerce, only assumes the ordinary risks and dangers that might be expected by an ordinarily prudent man, without being increased or any additional hazard added thereto by reason of the negligence of the master or any of its employés.

4. TRIAL ⊂=419—NO ERROR IN DENYING MOTION FOR NONSUIT WHERE EVIDENCE WAS SUPPLIED BY MOVANT.

It was not error to deny a motion for nonsuit well taken at the close of plaintiff's case, where there was additional evidence from defendant's witnesses at subsequent stages of the trial strengthening plaintiff's case in the particulars covered by the motion to such an extent that the issue might be resolved in plaintiff's favor.

5. WITNESSES ⊂=388(8)—LAYING FOUNDATION FOR IMPEACHING OWN WITNESS BY FORMER TESTIMONY.

In an action for damages for death, it was not error to permit plaintiff to ask one of his own witnesses on direct examination as to whether or not he had not testified differently at the inquest, and whether certain answers were given at the inquest, under the authority of Code Civ. Proc. § 2049, counsel for plaintiff having stated that he was taken by surprise, and that the former testimony at the coroner's inquest was all that he had to rely on, although such record was not afterwards offered in evidence.

6. WITNESSES ⊂=380(5)—PERMITTING LEADING QUESTIONS AS TO INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS BY OWN WITNESS.

Permitting leading questions is a matter largely within the discretion of the court, and a state of facts which would justify a party in discrediting his own witness by showing that he had made contradictory statements would usually justify the exercise of such discretion in permitting leading questions.

7. NEGLIGENCE ⊂=101—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE DIMINISHES, BUT DOES NOT BAR, RECOVERY UNDER FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.

Contributory negligence is not a bar to recovery, in an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657–8665), but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the employé.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1068(2)—INSTRUCTION MADE HARMLESS BY FINDING.

Conceding that an instruction as to contributory negligence in an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657–8665) was erroneous, it was without prejudice where the jury found under a special issue that there was no contributory negligence.

9. COURTS ⟸97(5) — DECISIONS OF FEDERAL COURTS GOVERN AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.

A decision of the United States Supreme Court construing the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657–8665) as giving right of recovery for injuries to an employé resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of fellow servants is binding on the state courts in an action under such act.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸930(4)—VERDICT ASSUMED NOT BASED ON THEORY OF INSTRUCTION UNSUPPORTED IN EVIDENCE.

An instruction in an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657–8665), which erroneously advised the jury that plaintiff could recover if it was negligence for the railroad to make a running switch, the running switch having been directed by plaintiff's deceased, was not prejudicial, where it appeared without dispute that such method of switching cars was in common use and recognized generally by trainmen as a safe and proper method, as it cannot be assumed the jury based its verdict for plaintiff on negligence in so making the switch.

11. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸213(4)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Legal representative of a member of a switching crew killed in an attempt to make a running switch cannot recover under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657–8665) on the ground that it was negligence to attempt a running switch at the time, where decedent himself directed the running switch to be made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Anna M. Werner, adminstratrix of the estate of Charles A. Werner, deceased, against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry T. Gage and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The defendant appeals from a verdict and judgment against it in the sum of $8,500 damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate in a railroad accident. Both defendant and the deceased were at the time of the accident admittedly employed in interstate commerce, and the action is brought under the federal Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908 (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657–8665]).

The decedent was run over and killed while engaged as a member of a switching crew in the yards of the defendant company in Stockton Cal., on the night of November 2, 1915. The undisputed narrative of the facts discloses that on the night in question the crew was switching two freight cars by the method known as a running switch or "high-ball." To effect such a running switch as was here attempted, the engine approaches the switch, with the two cars attached, at sufficient speed to give the cars momentum enough to carry them past the switch upon the main line. When near the switch the engine is slackened sufficiently to enable the man in charge of that part of the work to uncouple the engine from the cars. The engine then speeds ahead and is switched to the side track and the switch replaced so as to permit the cars, by their own momentum, to run past the switch along the main line to a position beyond the side-tracked engine. The switching crew on this occasion consisted of the engineer and fireman, running the engine, the man at the switch, a brakeman on top of the foremost freight car to regulate its speed and distance, and the decedent, on the tail end of the engine, whose business it was to uncouple the cars from the engine when they were ready to make the run for the switch. The program was carried out to the extent that Werner, the decedent, had successfully uncoupled the engine from the cars, the engine had speeded up and was turned onto the side track, and the switch was replaced to permit the cars, approaching under their own momentum, to run forward on the main line. Before the engine had proceeded from the main line a sufficient distance onto the side track to clear the approaching cars, however, it was overtaken and run into by the forward car. The decedent, who had remained on the footboard of the engine, and had jumped off just before the collision, was run over by the freight cars and killed.

[1] As to the cause of the accident, there is evidence tending to show that the engine was slowed down by the engineer as it turned onto the side track, and came nearly to a stop. The engineer stated that he did this on account of the danger in making too sudden an approach over the switch points and the curve in the side track. The evidence also shows that the brakeman on the front freight car made no effort to use the brake to retard the speed of the cars. Various witnesses testified that there was ample room between, the engine and the cars at the time the engine was turned onto the side track to have cleared the way for the freight cars, under ordinary control. We think the jury was clearly justified in finding the collision to have resulted from the negligence of either the brakeman or the engineer, or both.

[2] It is true that the decedent gave the directions that the running switch be used on this occasion, and gave the signals for uncoupling the cars and the starting ahead of the engine; but here his duties in the matter ended. The failure of the undertaking to end safely and successfully is fairly attributable to the subsequent negligence of the engineer or the brakeman, or both, in not sufficiently accelerating the speed of the engine or retarding the speed of the freight cars; and there is no evidence that there was negligence in making use of the flying switch, or in the manner, time, or conditions of the signals given by the decedent, or in his remaining on the footboard of the engine.

[3, 4] At the close of plaintiff's case in chief the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was denied. This is one of the grounds of error presented. The grounds of the motion were that the decedent was familiar with the railroad yards and was an experienced railroad man; that he directed the movement of the engine in connecting the cars, directed the movement of the engine in starting the cars, drew the pin which uncoupled the cars from the engine, and had complete knowledge of the move that was to be made by the engine and cars, and therefore assumed the ordinary risks and dangers which were attendant on the movement in question. He did not, however, know, and it does not appear that he had reason to anticipate, that his fellow workmen would not co-operate in co-ordinating their subsequent movements in the usual manner and with the usual skill and prudence. As the jury was subsequently, and we think correctly, instructed, in assuming the ordinary risks of his employment, the decedent "only assumed the ordinary risks and dangers that might be expected by an ordinarily prudent man, without being increased or any additional hazard added thereto by reason of the negligence of the defendant or any of its employés working with him on the switch crew." It is further objected on this motion that there is a failure of proof upon the part of plaintiff to show that the deceased met his death in substantially the manner described in the complaint. On this question the evidence is meager as to just how and why the decedent jumped from the footboard of the switch engine in front of the moving cars; but the testimony discloses that the freight cars struck the engine just about where he had been standing, and as there appears to be no motive for his jumping off onto the track directly in front of the approaching cars, other than in an effort to escape the impending collision, we think the matter was properly left to the jury. There was additional evidence from defendant's witnesses at subsequent stages of the trial tending to strengthen plaintiff's case in the particulars covered by the motion for nonsuit; and if, on the whole showing, the issue may be resolved in plaintiff's favor, there is no error in the denial of the motion, even though originally well taken. Peters v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 48, 116 Pac. 400.

[5-7] Appellant takes exception to certain rulings of the court in admitting evidence over its objection. The witness Goedart, a member of the switching crew at the time of the accident, called by the plaintiff, was asked by plaintiff's counsel on direct examination if he had not at the coroner's inquest over this matter answered certain questions as to the distance between the cars and the engine at the precise time the engine was turned onto the side track, and as to the speed at which the cars were approaching, in a certain manner, different and more favorable to the plaintiff than answers given to similar questions on the trial. The witness was shown what purported to be a copy of the transcript of the evidence taken at such inquest, and asked if questions indicated were so asked and answered as shown. A single question and answer will suffice for illustration:

"Q. Didn't you state under oath on November 3, 1915, at Stockton, Cal., while under oath at the time of the coroner's inquest, weren't the following questions asked you and the following answers given: 'At what speed were they going? A. I should judge about 13 and 15 miles an hour.'"

The question was objected to by defendant as leading and suggestive, and as being an attempt to impeach plaintiff's own witness, and improper direct examination. The objection to this and other similar questions was by the court overruled. The questions were mostly answered in the negative, or by the statement of the witness that he did not remember. The jury, moreover, was properly instructed by the court that the evidence offered was only admissible to lay the foundation to show contrary statements of the witness for the purpose of discrediting his testimony on the trial, and could not be considered as evidence of the facts testified to. There was no subsequent offer of the record of the inquest to show what was actually testified to on that occasion.

We think the rulings of the court were without error, under the authority of section 2049 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the foundation for such impeaching or discrediting evidence was sufficiently shown to comply with the rule laid down in Zipperlen v. Southern Pacific Co., 7 Cal. App. 206, 93 Pac. 1049. Counsel for plaintiff stated that he was taken by surprise by the testimony given by this witness on the trial, and that the former testimony as given in the purported copy of the transcript at the coroner's inquest was all that he had to rely on. This showing was before the court and was accepted as a foundation for the impeaching testimony, and justified its admission in evidence for that purpose. The fact that this record was not afterwards offered in evidence is immaterial. There was no obligation resting on the plaintiff to follow the matter up. As to the objection that the questions were leading this was largely a matter within the discretion of the court, and a state of facts which would justify the party in discrediting his own witness by showing that he had made contradictory statements would usually justify the exercise of such discretion in permitting leading questions.

[8] Exception is also taken to the court's instruction to the jury on the question of proportionate reduction of damages in case of contributory negligence. The instruction substantially followed the language of the federal Employers' Liability Act in directing the jury that, if the decedent was guilty of contributory negligence, then "such contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery herein, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employé." But even conceding error in the instruction, it would be without prejudice to the appellant in view of the special issue submitted to the jury on which it was found that there was no contributory negligence. If this finding is justified by the evidence, as we have already indicated that in our opinion it was, it becomes entirely immaterial what admeasurement of damages was prescribed for a condition where contributory negligence might exist.

[9] The instructions covering the fellow-servant negligence question were in harmony with the doctrine of the federal Employers' Liability Act, which establishes the right of recovery for injuries to an employé "resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents or employés of such carrier." This language is construed in the Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44, as a modification of the common law relating to negligence of fellow servants as adopted by the Code provisions in California and many other states. In this connection Mr. Justice Van Devanter, speaking for the court in the cases above cited, says:

"Briefly stated, the departures from the common law made by the portions of the act against which the first objection is leveled are these: (a) The rule that the negligence of one employé resulting in injury to another was not to be attributed to their common employer is displaced by a rule imposing upon the employer responsibility for such an injury, as was done at common law when the injured person was not an employé. * * *"

And in actions in the state courts under the federal Employers' Liability Act the state courts are bound by this rule.

[10, 11] There might be sufficient ground for appellant's exception to the verdict under the instructions covered by exception No. 31 if there was any evidence before the jury tending to show that there was negligence in attempting the running switch on this occasion. In the instruction covering this point the court enumerates, among other grounds of negligence set forth in the complaint, the alleged negligence in "attempting to at all make the said high-ball or running switch," and charges the jury that, if they find from the evidence "that all of said acts of negligence, or any one of them, have been proven, and that all or either was the sole proximate cause of the accident, then you will find for the plaintiff." Had there been any evidence tending to support a finding that the attempt to make this running switch was in itself a negligent act which contributed to the injury, the instruction would be erroneous, for the reason that it appears without dispute that the decedent himself directed this running switch to be made. But we think the evidence shows without controversy that this method of switching cars was in common use, and recognized generally by trainmen as a safe and proper method. Under this state of the evidence it cannot be assumed that the jury predicated its verdict upon negligence in resorting to this mode of switching cars.

We think rulings complained of on other instructions were without prejudicial error.

Judgment affirmed.

44 Cal. App. 130

PEOPLE v. PYLE. (Cr. 683.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 5, 1919. Rehearing Denied Dec. 2, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 2, 1920.)

1. EMBEZZLEMENT ⟸48(1)—INSTRUCTION AS TO CORROBORATION NOT ERRONEOUS.

In an embezzlement prosecution, an instruction "that it is not essential to a conviction that the prosecuting witness, S., should be corroborated by the testimony of other witnesses as to the particular acts constituting offense; it is sufficient if you believe from his evidence and all other testimony and circumstances in proof in the case beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant," held not erroneous in that the jury was left free to convict whether all the other testimony and circumstances in proof in the case corroborated the complaining witness or not.

2. EMBEZZLEMENT ⟸48(4)—INSTRUCTION ON RECEIVING AND CONVERTING PROPERTY WHILE ASSUMING TO ACT AS AGENT PROPER.

In a prosecution for embezzlement, where there was evidence that defendant, assuming to act as the agent of the complaining witness, was intrusted with a draft for the purpose of giving the same to another to induce him to make a loan, and fraudulently appropriated the draft to his own use, the court properly instructed "that if any person assumes to act as the agent of another, and in such assumed capacity he is intrusted with and receives into his care and custody property, for the use of another person, and fraudulently appropriates such property to his own use or to any use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, he is guilty of embezzlement."

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸930—REMARKS OF THIRD PERSON IN PRESENCE OF JUROR NOT GROUNDS FOR NEW TRIAL.

Where a third person made a statement outside of the courtroom and in the presence of some of the jurors that he would "fix" the defendant, and that defendant beat him out of some money, the court did not abuse its discretion in denying a new trial, in the absence of a showing that the statement influenced the verdict of the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

I. L. Pyle was convicted of embezzlement. From a judgment of conviction and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

U. W. Breeden and R. J. Adcock, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Jerry H. Powell, and Arthur Keetch, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

THOMAS, J. The information in this action is in two counts—one alleging embezzlement, and the other grand larceny. The defendant was convicted of the former and acquitted as to the latter charge. There was a motion for new trial, which was denied; and thereupon the defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state's prison. This appeal is from the judgment and said order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Appellant urges four reasons for reversal of the judgment and order, viz.: (1) Error of the court in giving instruction "on the question of corroboration"; (2) error of the court "on the question of receiving and converting property while assuming to act for another"; (3) that there is in the record "no evidence of embezzlement, but that there is some evidence tending to prove that defendant obtained the signature of the prosecuting witness to the draft with intent to cheat and defraud him, of which defendant is not charged"; and (4) abuse of discretion by the court in refusing to grant defendant's motion for a new trial, "for the reason that at least a part of the jury received extrajudicial evidence, from a source and of a nature and under circumstances which naturally would bias them, and prevent the defendant from having a fair trial." Briefly stated, then, defendant's complaint here is: (1) That the court erred in giving certain instructions; (2) insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment; and (3) abuse of discretion by the trial judge.

Only two of the instructions given are objected to and criticized by defendant here. They are as follows:

(1) "The court further instructs the jury that, if any person assumes to act as the agent or servant of another, and in such assumed capacity he is intrusted with and receives into his care and custody property, for the use of another person, and fraudulently appropriates such property to his own use or to any use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, is guilty of embezzlement."

(2) "You are further instructed that it is not essential to a conviction in this case that the prosecuting witness, L. C. Stuckey, should be corroborated by the testimony of other witnesses as to the particular acts constituting an offense; it is sufficient if you believe from his evidence and all other testimony and circumstances in proof in the case beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant."

[1] It is contended by defendant, in referring to the instruction last quoted, that "the jury were left by this instruction free to convict, whether all the other testimony and circumstances in proof in the case corroborated Stuckey or not, and for that reason is clearly erroneous," and our attention is called to the case of People v. Neetens, 184 Pac. 27, as supporting this contention. With such contention, however, we cannot agree; nor does the case last cited support such a conclusion. In that case—a prosecution and conviction for obtaining money by false pretenses—the so-called false representations being entirely oral, there was no corroboration of the testimony as required by section 1110 of the Penal Code. In the case at bar the very "customer's draft" which defendant himself admits he drew and secured the "acceptance" of by said Stuckey is in evidence, to say nothing about other corroborating circumstances which answer conclusively defendant's contention here.

[2] As to the first instruction quoted, there was evidence that defendant, assuming to act as the agent of Stuckey, was intrusted with the draft mentioned for the purpose of giving the same to one Doyle to induce him to make the loan in question, and that defendant fraudulently appropriated the draft to his own use. This being so, the instruction, we think, was proper.

We have studied carefully, not only the instructions objected to, but all the instructions given, and they are, in our opinion, ample, and as favorable to defendant as they properly could be on the questions presented; and this is especially true when considered in the light of all the instructions given.

As to the second point—that of the insufficiency of the evidence—no discussion is necessary. Suffice it to say that the record groans under the weight of damning evidence amply sufficient to support the verdict and judgment.

[3] This brings us to the consideration of the last point, viz. the alleged abuse of discretion by the learned trial judge. In support of his motion for a new trial defendant filed two affidavits wherein it was stated that one Doyle had stated to defendant's attorney, outside the courtroom, and in the presence of some of the jurors, that he (Doyle) would "fix" defendant, that defendant beat him out of some money, and that for what defendant's attorney had done he (Doyle) would have defendant arrested. This, if true, was reprehensible; but, in the absence of a showing that such alleged statements influenced the verdict of the jury, we think it was not an abuse of discretion to deny defendant's motion. Unless we go out and into the thin air of metaphysics for inspiration and wholly disregard the ample evidence, independently of the alleged statements, to sustain the verdict of the jury, and arbitrarily hold that such alleged statements probably influenced the verdict, defendant's contention can find no support. It is not surprising that in these days of unrest that thoughtful men and women, while conceding the improbability of the conviction of an innocent person, under our system of courts and jurisprudence, are extremely apprehensive as to whether we can convict the guilty. To find the learned trial court guilty of an abuse of discretion under the evidence as disclosed by this record would, we think, be to furnish evidence in support of the pessimistic assumption to which we have just referred. "A new trial will not be granted because of remarks about the case made during the trial to jurors, or in the hearing of jurors, by strangers to the litigation, where neither the successful party nor the jurors were at fault, unless such remarks probably influenced the verdict." 29 Cyc. 798.

After reading the entire record we are satisfied, particularly as we are fortified by section 4½ of our Constitution, that, so far as this case is concerned, there has been no miscarriage of justice.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; SLOANE, J.

EDDY v. STOWE et al. (Civ. 2928.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 28, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸757(3) — BRIEF TO CONTAIN EVIDENCE.

It is not a compliance with the procedure governing appeals under the so-called alternative method for an appellant to print in his opening brief, or in a supplement thereto, only the testimony in the case favorable to his contentions, as all the evidence material to the point made on the appeal should be presented in order that the court may consider its weight and sufficiency and any conflict presented therein; the court not being required to make an examination of the typewritten transcript.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸757(1), 763—BRIEF TO INCLUDE PORTIONS OF RECORD TO BE REVIEWED.

The recent amendment to the Code of Civil Procedure does not relieve parties from the necessity of printing in their briefs or in a supplement appended thereto such parts of the record as are desired to be called to the attention of the court when the appeal is taken under the provisions of sections 953, 953a, 953b, 953c, and, when a party fails to comply with that requirement, the court hearing the appeal shall direct such party to print and serve on the adverse party and file with it a supplement to his brief in which shall be set forth in full that portion of the record relied on by such party and not printed in any former brief, in view of section 953c, as amended by St. 1919, p. 261.

3. HIGHWAYS ⟸184(3)—NEGLIGENCE IN COLLIDING WITH HORSE AS QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action by a horseman injured when defendant's automobile collided with his horse, which was rearing and bucking, whether defendant was negligent held for the jury.

4. HIGHWAYS ⟸184(3)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE AS QUESTION FOR JURY.

In such case, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury.

5. HIGHWAYS ⟸170 — STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS NOT RELIEVING OF DUTY TO AVOID INJURY.

Where plaintiff's horse was rearing and bucking on a highway and a collision occurred between the horse and defendant's automobile, the case is not governed entirely by St. 1915, p. 397, an act regulating the use and operation of vehicles upon public highways, because both the plaintiff and the defendant had an equal right to the use of the highway, and it was the duty of the defendant, if in a better position to avoid the collision, to take all necessary steps.

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

6. HIGHWAYS ⊂⊃170—DUTY OF AUTOMOBILIST AS TO FRIGHTENED HORSE.

Defendant automobilist having knowledge that plaintiff's horse was frightened, it was his duty to keep a lookout ahead, and as he approached the horse and rider to note the movements of the horse, and when he saw, or by the exercise of reasonable caution could have seen, that the horse was under excitement, bucking and manifesting unmistakable fright, ordinary care required him to slow up, stop his machine, or do whatever was reasonably required to relieve plaintiff of his perilous position.

7. HIGHWAYS ⊂⊃170—DUTY OF HORSEMAN TO SIGNAL AUTOMOBILIST TO STOP.

Defendant in such case was not relieved from liability because of the fact that plaintiff, busily engaged as he was, did not signal him to stop as required by St. 1915, p. 397.

8. HIGHWAYS ⊂⊃170—DRIVER OF AUTOMOBILE MUST EXERCISE ORDINARY CARE AS TO FRIGHTENED HORSE.

Whatever the condition or situation, the driver of an automobile must at all times and in all places observe ordinary care to avoid injury to persons or travelers on the highway, and St. 1915, p. 397, relating to the use and operations of vehicles upon public highways, does not leave it to such a driver, in the exercise of reasonable discretion, to decide whether or not he should stop when the rider of a frightened horse fails to signal him to stop.

9. HIGHWAYS ⊂⊃175(1) — BEING ON WRONG SIDE OF ROAD NOT NEGLIGENCE PER SE.

A horseman and an automobilist going in opposite directions have an equal right to the use of the road, and a horseman is not guilty of negligence per se by reason of St. 1915, p. 397, regulating vehicles on highways, because he was on the left side of the road when struck by the automobile; his position in the highway being governed by the actions of a frightened horse which he was unable to control.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by Frank G. Eddy against Harry Stowe and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Winfield Dorn, of San Francisco, J. E. Rodgers, of Martinez, and R. E. Fitzgerald and Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ostrander & Carey, of Oakland, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered after a verdict of a jury in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $12,000 damages, for personal injuries, alleged to have been sustained by respondent, as the result of a collision between a horse, then being ridden by respondent, and an automobile, being operated by appellant Stowe, an employé of the appellant Mt. Diablo Scenic Boulevard Company.

Appellants' main contention is that the evidence submitted in the court below was insufficient to sustain the verdict against them, but, in fact, affirmatively shows to the contrary. Counsel for appellants have printed in their brief, and in the supplement appended thereto, those portions of the evidence upon which they rely as supporting their position. Respondent insists that the opening brief of appellants should not be considered, claiming that only such extracts from the evidence are quoted as tend to support the views of the appellants, disregarding the testimony which conflicts therewith. An inspection of the brief convinces us that in a number of instances this is apparently true. Therefore, as was pointed out by the court in McKinnell v. Hansen, 34 Cal. App. 76–79, 167 Pac. 887, we are not in a position, without examination of the entire transcript, to assume that the quotations in the brief and printed in the supplement are complete as to the points argued, or to conclude without such examination that the record does not contain the evidence necessary to sustain the verdict of the jury.

[1] It is not a compliance with the procedure governing appeals under the so-called alternative method, for an appellant to print in his opening brief, or in the supplement thereto, only the testimony in the case favorable to his contentions. All the evidence, material to the point made on the appeal, should be presented in order that the court may consider its weight and sufficiency, and any conflict presented therein. Unless the record is thus prepared, the court cannot intelligently pass upon the appeal on its merits without imposing on counsel a further presentation of the record, or assuming the vexatious burden of an examination of the typewritten transcript. This the court is not required to do. Pasadena Realty Co. v. Clune, 34 Cal. App. 33, 34, 166 Pac. 1025; Marcucci v. Vowinckel, 164 Cal. 693, 130 Pac. 430.

[2] The recent amendment to the Code of Civil Procedure does not relieve the parties from the necessity of printing in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court, when the appeal is taken under the provisions of sections 953, 953a, 953b and 953c, of that Code. When a party fails to comply with that requirement, the court hearing the appeal shall direct such party to print and serve on the adverse party, and file with it, a supplement to his brief in which shall be set forth in full that portion of the record relied on by such party and not printed in any former brief. Section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended 1919 (St. 1919, p. 261). In the instant case, in order not to delay the determination of the appeal, otherwise ready for consideration, we forbear from exacting compliance with the statute.

[3, 4] We have therefore very carefully read the evidence, relied upon by appellant, and the other testimony appearing in the reporter's transcript bearing upon the same matters. From such examination we are convinced that the verdict is supported by evidence, which warranted the jury in arriving at the conclusion that the accident was caused by the negligence of appellant Stowe, and that no actions of the respondent in the premises constituted negligence contributing proximately thereto.

Plaintiff, who is a skillful rider and an experienced stockman, and known as such to appellant Stowe, was riding a young horse he was engaged in breaking, on the highway between Danville and Mt. Diablo Park. The horse became frightened at a passing motorcycle, began rearing and bucking, and attempted to jump over the fence on the side of the highway. One of plaintiff's chaparajos caught on the barbed wire, which threw his foot out of the stirrup. While the plaintiff was engaged in subduing the horse, an automobile approached, the occupants of which called to him. As it passed he saw the automobile, driven by appellant Stowe, coming from the other direction, "driving pretty fast," as far as plaintiff's knowledge of automobiles allowed him to judge. The horse, as described by plaintiff, was then "frightened and mad. * * * The horse shied again the fence, and I dug him back again. * * * Then he lunged, tried to get out of my hold, you see, as a horse will do, and when he was about in the center of the road * * * the horse was still rearing and lunging, and I saw the other machine (driven by Stowe), and I thought the horse would go past him, or past my own side of the road. At that time the horse just reared, and the next thing I heard was glass flying, and my lights was out, like that." Plaintiff, upon cross-examination, testified that, as the automobile, driven by appellant Stowe, was approaching, his horse continued beyond his control to such an extent that, while he could prevent it from running away, he could not otherwise direct its movements other than to allow it to rear and plunge. That such was the fact is fully corroborated by the testimony of other witnesses.

Appellant Stowe, by his own testimony, admittedly saw respondent before he (Stowe) met and passed the automobile which was going in the opposite direction. That distance was variously estimated from 100 to 200 feet. There was nothing to prevent his having a clear and unobstructed view of the horse and the rider from that time until the collision occurred. After the other automobile passed the horse, Stowe observed, so he testified, that it was "frightened, jumping around, and crowding over toward the fence." From that moment, he contends, he did not see the horse, although he admitted that he knew the horse was there. According to his testimony, when he met the other automobile, he was going 20 miles an hour, and then "unconsciously slackened down to about 18," as the two machines passed. He made no effort to stop his car until after the collision. From the evidence, somewhat uncertain by reason of the references to the diagram of the scene of the accident, used at the trial, and which is not a part of the record, it appears that Stowe turned neither to the right nor to the left, in order to avoid the plaintiff's bucking horse. The collision took place on the edge of the strip of macadam which was in the center of the roadway, which, in turn, was 42 feet wide between fences. The plaintiff was thrown from his horse and suffered very serious injuries, the gravity of which are not disputed by appellant, and for which the jury awarded the large amount of damages already alluded to.

It is appellant's contention that the case at issue is governed entirely by statutory law, as found in the act regulating the use and operation of vehicles upon public highways. Stats. 1915, p. 397. Pertinent portions thereof are, according to appellant, section 20, par. "a," which requires that the driver or operator of any vehicle, in or upon any public highway, shall drive and operate such vehicle in a careful manner with due regard for the safety and convenience of pedestrians and of all other vehicles or traffic upon such highway, "and wherever practicable, shall travel on the right hand side of such highway"; and section 20, par. "h," which requires that "every person having control or charge of any motor vehicle or other vehicle upon any public highway, and approaching any vehicle drawn by a horse or horses, or any horse upon which any person is riding, shall operate, manage and control such motor vehicle or other vehicle in such manner as to exercise every reasonable precaution to prevent the frightening of any such horse or horses, and to insure the safety and protection of any person riding or driving the same; and if such horse or horses appear frightened, the person in control of such motor vehicle or other vehicle shall reduce its speed, and, if requested by signal or otherwise by the driver or rider of such horse or horses, shall not proceed further toward such animal or animals, unless such movement be necessary to avoid accident or injury, until such animal or animals be under the control of the driver or rider thereof."

[5, 6] We do not think the case is governed entirely by the statute in question. Both Eddy and Stowe had an equal right to the use of the road, but if defendant was in the better position to avoid the collision it was his duty to take all necessary steps to do so; one of them being his duty to slow down and even to stop his car, if necessary, to avoid running against plaintiff's horse. Furtado v. Bird, 26 Cal. App. 152–158, 146 Pac. 58. With the knowledge that plaintiff's horse was frightened, it was appellant Stowe's duty to keep a lookout ahead, and as he approached the horse and rider, to note the movements of the horse, and when he saw, or by the exercise of reasonable caution, could have seen, that the horse was under excitement, bucking and manifesting unmistakable fright, ordinary care required him to slow up, stop his machine, or do whatever was reasonably required to relieve respondent of his perilous position. McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 63, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087; Ward v. Meredith, 220 Ill. 66, 77 N. E. 118; Huddy on Automobiles [4th Ed.] sec. 128a, 129).

[7] There is no merit in the contention that appellant Stowe was relieved from negligence in the matter because of the fact that plaintiff, busily engaged, as he was, in subduing a frightened, bucking horse, did not signal him to stop as he approached. By his own testimony Stowe was not looking for a signal because he "didn't feel that he (plaintiff) had his hands full with the horse," and "he (plaintiff) was the last man in the world to signal anybody to stop if his horse was unmanageable."

[8] The Motor Vehicle Act (section 20 [h], supra), as before noted, requires the person driving a motor vehicle on the highway, approaching a horse on which a person is riding, and the horse appear frightened, to reduce the speed of the car, and, if requested by signal or otherwise, by the rider of such horse, to proceed no further toward such animal, "unless such movement be necessary to avoid accident or injury," until such animal is under the control of its rider.

Appellants contend therefore that under this provision the question whether, or not, under the given set of circumstances, it was the duty of Stowe to stop his machine, in order to avoid the accident, was one to be answered by him, in the exercise of reasonable discretion, and failure to stop can be determined to be negligence only in the event of a clear showing of an abuse of such discretion. They quote, in support of this contention, Babbitt on The Law Applied to Motor Vehicles (2d Ed.), § 1122, viz.:

"Under the language of the act, in some of the states the vehicle is required to remain stationary 'unless forward movement be necessary to avoid accident or injury.' In such cases it has been held that it is for the chauffeur to determine whether such movement is necessary. His conclusion is controlling, unless he acts unreasonably or in bad faith, and will not be open to question afterward."

An examination of the two authorities cited by the learned author of the work in question does not warrant an unqualified application of his language to the case at bar. In McCummins v. State, 132 Wis. 236, 112 N. W. 25, the court was construing the section of the Motor Vehicle Act of Wisconsin (Laws 1905, c. 305, § 4), which provided that the driver of the motor vehicle, upon signal or sign of distress from the driver, or rider, of a frightened horse, should stop and "remain stationary, unless a movement forward shall be deemed necessary to avoid accident, etc." (The italics are ours.) The court, in brief, held "that the word 'deemed,' as used in this connection, conveys the idea that the standard upon which the operator is to act rests in his judgment." The word "deemed" does not occur in the California statute, and, furthermore, the court in that case said: "This, of course, implies that he must act reasonably under the conditions presented to him." McIntyre v. Orner, supra, also cited by Babbitt, has no reference to the language of the statute imputed to it. On the facts, however, the court (at page 63 of 166 Ind., at page 752 of 76 N. E. [4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087]) used the language we have already quoted in substance.

What appears to us to be a correct statement of the law in such cases is to be found in Webb v. Moore, 136 Ky. 708, 125 S. W. 152 (also quoted in Babbitt), wherein the court said:

"It is manifest that in cases like this no fixed standard of care can be laid down as a matter of law, nor can it be said what conduct will amount to negligence; and so the only rule that we can safely apply, when the facts authorize the submission of the case to a jury, is to leave it to them to determine from all the facts and circumstances whether or not the driver of the automobile exercised or failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid the accident, and whether or not the injured party observed due care. The legal measure of duty is the same upon both of the parties. Each must act with reasonable care to avoid an accident or collision. In some cases, this degree of care as to the operator might require the machine to be stopped upon the first evidence of danger; in others, it might be necessary to slow down the speed; and yet again, it might be more prudent to proceed at a high rate of speed, or not lessen the speed at which the machine is running. Each case presents different conditions and situations. What would be ordinary care in one case might be negligence in another. But, whatever the condition or situation, the driver of the automobile must at all times and in all places observe ordinary care to avoid injury to persons or travelers on the highway."

There is much in the record to indicate that the appellant Stowe was at fault in this matter. While he may have been proceeding along the highway in full compliance with the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act, he was not thereby relieved of all obligations in the premises. He was approaching a person whom he admits he saw to be riding a frightened horse. He saw the horse and rider at a distance sufficiently great to enable him to have stopped, if need be, in order to avoid an accident. We cannot but feel that the jury was correct in finding that he was guilty of negligence in proceeding as he did, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. Appellant, who was well acquainted with the plaintiff, and his ability as a rider, and his familiarity with horses, believed, according to his testimony, already referred to, that plaintiff would sufficiently subdue the horse to allow the automobile to pass safely on some portion of the wide highway. Consequently, he proceeded with no thought of taking precautions to avoid the injury which resulted. This is borne out by the testimony to the effect that shortly after the accident Stowe stated to witness Gould, in effect, that he (Stowe) "was not going so fast, but was hitting it right along; that he saw the horse; that he looked like he was going to jump the fence, getting away from the other machine; and that he took a chance, and thought that he could slip by."

[9] It appears that respondent, in order to avoid the motorcycle which frightened his horse, abandoned the macadamized portion of the road, and turned off to his left, which placed him upon what is sometimes denominated the "wrong side of the road." He was endeavoring to get the horse to cross the road to the right side as Stowe approached. Appellant contends that because of this fact respondent was on the left side of the road and was guilty of negligence per se, to wit, the violation of the statute governing the use of public highways (Stats. 1915, p. 397, supra), which contributed to his injury. There is no merit in this contention, for, as before stated, both parties had an equal right to the use of the road. Furtado v. Bird, supra. Respondent's position in the highway was governed by the actions of his frightened horse, which he was unable to control, as Stowe approached, of which Stowe had ample notice. This did not constitute a violation of the statute governing the use of the highway amounting to negligence per se, as claimed by appellants.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARBOZA v. CONSELHO SUPREMO DA IRMANDADE DO DIVINO ESPIRITO SANTO DO ESTADO DA CALIFORNIA (FARIA et al., Interpleaders). (Civ. 3066.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 25, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1919.)

1. INSURANCE ⊂⊃784(1)—METHOD OF CHANGING BENEFICIARIES.

Where the by-laws or constitution of a mutual benefit society provide a method of making a change of beneficiary, a member in making a change must follow substantially the method prescribed.

2. INSURANCE ⊂⊃780—BENEFICIARY MAY BE CHANGED AT WILL.

A member of a mutual benefit society may change his beneficiary and name a new beneficiary whenever and as often as he pleases, provided he follows the steps required by the society's rules on the subject.

3. INSURANCE ⊂⊃784(6)—WHO MAY OBJECT TO MODE OF CHANGE OF BENEFICIARY.

If a mutual benefit society has waived a strict compliance with its own rules as to the method of making a change of beneficiary, and in pursuance of a request of an insured to change his beneficiary has issued a new certificate to him, the original beneficiary will not be heard to complain that the course laid down in the society's rules was not pursued.

4. INSURANCE ⊂⊃784(1) — IMPOSSIBILITY OF LITERAL COMPLIANCE WITH RULES AS TO CHANGE OF BENEFICIARY.

If it is beyond the power of a member of a mutual benefit society to comply literally with the regulations of the society in regard to a change of beneficiary, a competent court will treat the change as having been legally made; thus when the certificate is lost, or when it is in the possession of a beneficiary who will not surrender it, and it is therefor impossible for the member to comply with the rules, equity will enforce the change.

5. INSURANCE ⊂⊃784(2)—DEATH OF INSURED BEFORE COMPLETION OF CHANGE OF BENEFICIARY.

If a member of a mutual benefit society has pursued the course pointed out by the laws of the society to be followed in making a change of beneficiary, and has thus done everything devolving upon him to change the beneficiary, but before the new certificate was issued he dies, a court of equity will decree that to be done which ought to be done, and act as though the certificate had been issued.

6. INSURANCE ⊂⊃784(2)—DEATH OF MEMBER BEFORE COMPLETION OF CHANGE OF BENEFICIARY.

Where the rules of a mutual benefit society required a member desiring a change of beneficiary to indorse a direction on his certificate, or a duplicate certificate, to obtain which he must make an affidavit and request that a duplicate policy issue, and submit the same to the supreme directors, a member who lost his certificate and made out an affidavit to the effect that he wanted to change the beneficiary, and was told to first obtain a duplicate of his certificate, and he then sent in an affidavit, which entitled him to a duplicate policy, but before it was acted upon by the supreme directors he died, there was no change of beneficiary, nor had the member done all the things required of him to change the beneficiary, the things remaining to be done being more than mere ministerial acts on the part of the society.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Joseph S. Koford, Judge.

Action by Maria Da Floria Barboza against Conselho Supremo Da Irmandade Do Divino Espirito Santo Do Estado Da California, in which Amelia Faria and others interplead. From a judgment in favor of the interpleading defendants, the plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Leonard Rose, of Oakland, for appellant.
Rose & Silverstein, of Oakland, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the interpleading defendants for the amount of a policy of fraternal insurance.

The plaintiff is the surviving wife of Augusto J. Barboza, who died in the month of November, 1916, and the respondents are his three children, issue of a former marriage. In the year 1905 Barboza became a member of the fraternal society named in the title to this action, and there was issued to him at that time a policy or certificate in which the respondents were named as beneficiaries. In the month of October, 1916, he was ill, and had been so for some time, and, desiring to change the beneficiaries named in said certificate, which he had lost, he set about having issued to him a duplicate thereof, the immediate purpose of obtaining said duplicate being that he might indorse thereon the desired change, such indorsement being the first step prescribed by the rules of the society to be taken in making the change. In order to obtain this duplicate certificate he made and signed an affidavit upon the regular form provided by the society, but failed to fill in its blank spaces correctly. Instead of stating therein that his certificate was lost, and that therefore he desired to obtain a new one, he stated as a reason for making the affidavit that he desired to transfer the certificate to his wife. The secretary of the society returned this affidavit to Barboza as insufficient, stating with reference thereto, "He cannot change the beneficiaries in this document." He then made a second affidavit, which was accepted by the secretary and presented to the supreme directors, who met on November 13, 1916, in regular session. The deceased died on the same day, and notice of his death was given to the supreme directors while in session. After receiving such notice the supreme directors approved the second affidavit, and ordered that a duplicate certificate issue "to the within member applying for the same." The laws of the society provided that a member may change beneficiaries "by making the change on the back of the policy or a duplicate thereof," and that if the policy has been lost or destroyed, in order to obtain a duplicate he must make an affidavit for that purpose, and that before a duplicate policy can be issued the supreme directors "must give their permission and approval to the supreme secretary before the issuance of said duplicate policy, and direct said supreme secretary to issue a duplicate policy." The rules further provide that when the change of beneficiary has been properly indorsed upon the back of the original or duplicate policy the same must be filed with a designated body for approval or rejection.

[1-5] It is settled law that where the bylaws or constitution of a mutual benefit society provide a method of making a change of beneficiary a member in making a change must follow substantially the method prescribed. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 104 Cal. 171, 37 Pac. 865, 43 Am. St. Rep. 83. A member may change his beneficiary and name a new beneficiary whenever and as often as he pleases, provided he follows the steps required by the society's rules on the subject. To this rule of law there are three recognized exceptions, namely: (1) If the society has waived a strict compliance with its own rules, and in pursuance of a request of an insured to change his beneficiary has issued a new certificate to him, the original beneficiary will not be heard to complain that the course laid down in the society's rules was not pursued. (2) If it is beyond the power of the insured to comply literally with the regulations, a competent court will treat the change as having been legally made. Thus when a certificate is lost, or when it is in the possession of a beneficiary who will not surrender it, and it is therefore impossible for the member to comply with the rule, equity will enforce the change. (3) If the insured has pursued the course pointed out by the laws of the association, and has thus done everything devolving upon him to change the beneficiary, but before the new certificate issues he dies, a court of equity will decree that to be done which ought to have been done, and act as though the certificate had been issued. Supreme Lodge v. Price, 27 Cal. App. 607, 617, 150 Pac. 803.

[6] In the case at bar the deceased had been married to the appellant for over a year and a half, during which time he had done nothing to effect a change of beneficiary until his last illness and just before his death, when he filed the affidavits already referred to. The second affidavit being sufficient, he became entitled to have issued to him a duplicate policy, upon which when received he could, if so minded at that time, have indorsed the desired change of beneficiary, and sent it to the supreme directors of the society for their action. But he undertook these necessary steps too late. Nothing in the record, we think, brings the case within any of the exceptions. It does not fall within the first of those heretofore enumerated, for the reason that there was no waiver by the society of compliance with its rules; nor within the second, for beyond evincing an intention to make the change he had done nothing, except the preliminary step of setting in motion the machinery to obtain a duplicate of his policy, upon the receipt of which it still would have been optional with him to take or not the first step in the procedure prescribed for making the change, namely, indorsement on the policy of the new beneficiary. Nor does the case fall within the third exception to the general rule referred to, for the simple reason that the deceased had not done all the things required of him under the policy, leaving only ministerial acts to be done by the society. There is a wide distinction between a member doing all that he can up to the time of his death, and doing all the things required of him by the by-laws of the society. The author of Bacon on Benefit Societies, at section 48, says:

"Much, however, depends upon the conditions expressed in the by-laws. * * * The general rule is that, if the member does all in his power, that is, does all things required of him under the contract to effectuate the change, it will be held complete, although the new certificate has not in fact been issued."

It follows from what we have said that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

MARTIN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(Civ. 2041.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 28, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1919.)

1. RAILROADS ⟸348(5)—EVIDENCE SHOWING EXCESSIVE SPEED BY RAILROAD'S MOTORCAR AT CROSSING.

In an action for injuries to an automobile passenger in collision with a railroad's gasoline motorcar at a crossing, evidence held sufficient to justify findings that defendant's motorcar was driven at an illegal rate of speed in excess of the eight miles an hour allowed by ordinance, and that the fact contributed to and brought about plaintiff's injury.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⟸93(1)—CHAUFFEUR'S NEGLIGENCE NOT CHARGEABLE TO AUTOMOBILE PASSENGER.

The fact that the chauffeur, hired by plaintiff, who had sole control and operation of the automobile, may have erred in judging the movement of a gasoline car at a railroad crossing, does not charge plaintiff as his passenger with negligence contributing to collision between the automobile and the gasoline car; plaintiff having done what he was reasonably expected to do to safeguard his own person.

3. NEGLIGENCE ⟸93(1)—AUTO DRIVER'S NEGLIGENCE NOT IMPUTABLE TO PASSENGERS.

The rule relative to the contributory negligence of drivers of automobiles and other vehicles does not apply to passengers therein.

4. TRIAL ⟸253(9)—INSTRUCTION IGNORING FACTS IS IMPROPER.

In an action for injuries to a passenger in an automobile in collision with defendant railroad's gasoline motorcar at a crossing, instruction on contributory negligence entirely overlooking the fact that plaintiff was a passenger, without control over the car in which he rode, which was in charge of a competent chauffeur, held properly refused.

5. NEGLIGENCE ⟸54—RAILROADS ⟸266—JOINT LIABILITY FOR INJURY TO AUTOMOBILE PASSENGER AT CROSSING.

If a railroad was negligent in operating its gasoline car at a crossing, and its negligence co-operated with the negligence of a chauffeur in causing a collision, the chauffeur's passenger could prosecute action and recover against both the chauffeur and the railroad, joint wrongdoers.

6. PLEADING ⟸403(4)—ALLEGATION OF RAILROAD'S NEGLIGENCE AIDED BY ANSWER.

In an action against a railroad for injuries in a crossing accident to plaintiff passenger in an automobile, complaint as aided by the second answer held to charge defendant railroad as well as its employés with negligence.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1170(3)—NO REVERSAL FOR HARMLESS ERROR.

Defendant having in its answer set forth all the matter omitted from the complaint, it cannot be heard to say that it has suffered any injury by reason of the trial court's ruling in not sustaining demurrer to the complaint, and, it not having suffered any injury, reversal for such cause on appeal is not warranted under Code Civ. Proc. § 475, or Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Gus C. Martin against the Southern Pacific Company. From judgment for plaintiff and order denying its motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. T. Matlock, of Red Bluff, and George R. Freeman and Frank Freeman, both of Willows, for appellant.

William A. Fish, of Red Bluff, and Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PLUMMER, Presiding Judge pro tem. On the 5th day of February, 1917, the plaintiff and one Clyde H. Vincent were traveling eastward in an automobile on Oak street in the city of Red Bluff, county of Tehama, and, in so doing, reached a point on said street crossed by the tracks of the defendant company. There a collision occurred with a gasoline motorcar being propelled northward on the tracks of said company, in which collision Vincent was killed and the plaintiff seriously injured. Plaintiff brought suit to recover for the losses incurred. The action was tried before a jury. A verdict was rendered for $7,500, and from the judgment entered thereon, and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

It appears from the evidence that on the morning of the day in question the plaintiff, then being at the town of Corning, about 20 miles south of Red Bluff, engaged the services for hire of the said Clyde H. Vincent to transport him by automobile to the town of Red Bluff. The automobile was a five-passenger car, owned by the said Vincent, and was at all times on said trip operated and managed by him alone. The plaintiff occupied a seat alongside of and to the right of Vincent. It appears to have been a perfect spring morning, no wind and no rain. Oak street in the city of Red Bluff is in the heart of the city, and was a street with which the chauffeur Vincent was entirely familiar. The plaintiff had never crossed the railroad tracks at Oak street, knew nothing of the conditions thereof, and was not aware of the fact that a motorcar was at any time being operated on the lines of the defendant.

Some 40 minutes preceding the collision in question, a live freight train had been side-tracked in the city of Red Bluff to the westward of the main line belonging to the defendant, and cut in two and separated for a distance of some 40 feet at Oak street, for the purpose of allowing pedestrians and vehicles in the neighborhood passage across the tracks belonging to the defendant company. As the plaintiff and Vincent were proceeding easterly along Oak street, they observed the freight train, constituting two sections, as aforesaid, one section being to the south and the other to the north of Oak street, the ends of the two sections projecting out over Oak street, leaving a trifle more than one-half of said street unobstructed. When within about 25 feet of the tracks of said company, the chauffeur Vincent brought the automobile to a temporary stop, and looked in both directions to determine whether there was any approaching trains; the plaintiff likewise, on his own behalf, making such observations as he found possible under the circumstances. The approach of the motorcar not being observed, and neither sound of whistle nor ringing of bell being heard, the automobile was sent forward by the chauffeur in second speed at a rate of about 5 miles per hour, turning in its course slightly northward, where it appears to have suddenly increased its speed, until it reached the main line on which a gasoline motorcar was moving northward, at which point the collision occurred. The automobile was lifted some 3 feet from the ground, and hurled in a northerly direction a trifle over 30 feet, and wedged under one of the cars of the freight train in such a manner that it required the service of the engine of the freight train to pull the automobile from underneath the freight car. The occupants were rendered unconscious, and the plaintiff suffered severe injuries. It may be here stated that no point is made as to the amount of the judgment being excessive.

It is strongly contended by the appellant that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of the jury, that its preponderance is in favor of the defendant, and that for this reason a new trial should be granted herein. Other points are made upon this appeal, which will be subsequently noticed, but which appear to be only minor reasons urged in support of this appeal.

It is contended by the plaintiff and respondent that the motorcar was traveling at a very high rate of speed, from 25 to 35 miles an hour. On the part of the defendant it is contended that the car was running at only 8 miles per hour. It was admitted during the course of the trial that the legal rate of speed within the city limits of the city of Red Bluff was 8 miles per hour. It is also contended by the plaintiff that, by reason of the train of cars situated as aforesaid, the approach of the motorcar could not be observed at any considerable distance away. On the part of the defendant it is insisted that the motorcar could have been seen at a point 150 feet north of the intersection of the company's lines with Oak street from the point where plaintiff testifies the automobile was temporarily stopped to make observations of approaching trains, and that from this point the motorcar moved only at a speed of 8 miles per hour, and that, had the plaintiff used reasonable diligence to discover the approach of the motorcar, a sufficient opportunity was offered, after passing through the opening of the broken freight train, to stop the automobile before it reached the main line. On the part of the plaintiff it is contended that the freight train was side-tracked on a line parallel and next adjoining the main line on which the motorcar was operated. On the part of the appellant it is as strongly insisted that the freight train was side-tracked upon a line next westerly of the one claimed by the plaintiff, and that there was a vacant side-track, called track No. 3, between the switch occupied by the freight train and the track called the main line, on which the motor was traveling.

If the contention of the plaintiff is true, there would have been but a trifle over 3 feet between the overhang of the freight cars on the company's side track, and the motorcar traveling on the main line. Under these conditions, it scarcely seems possible that the automobile could have been lifted and hurled northward, as the physical facts show to have been the case, but in all probability it would have been taken up and practically ground to pieces between the two cars. The testimony of the witnesses, and the photographs of the car introduced in evidence, show that only the front portion of the automobile was seriously injured, the right front wheel, fender, etc., being knocked to pieces, the left fender being also torn and bent backward.

The remainder of the car, which in width is greater than the distance would have been between the overhang of the motorcar and the freight car in such a position, escaped practically uninjured. The plaintiff and Vincent were also hurled free from the automobile, and lay stretched on the ground near some object not identified by the witnesses, but apparently similar in size to an appliance used for throwing a switch.

The defendant maintains and operates, or did on the 5th day of February, 1917, maintain and operate six parallel tracks crossing Oak street, the main track on which the motorcar was running being track No. 4, counting from the west.

After a careful reading of the testimony by the respective witnesses, and consideration of the physical facts and circumstances attending the collision, it seems to us more probable that the freight train was in fact standing on the track called No. 2, being the second track, and not the first track west of the main line. Basing its argument upon the correctness of this contention, appellant claims that the plaintiff had ample opportunity to save himself from injury by the use of due diligence after crossing the track upon which the freight train was then standing; that, if necessary so to do, he could have leaped from the moving auto. The plaintiff testified, and it is also established by the witness himself, that a vehicle drawn by a horse preceded the auto through the opening made by the freight train and across the tracks of the company, at a distance of about 150 feet in advance of the auto. The driver of the vehicle testified that there was no flagman at the intersection, and no one was standing there to give warning of the approach of the motor. The plaintiff likewise testifies to the same state of facts. The brakeman of the freight train testifies that at this particular time he was engaged in adjusting a coupler upon a section of the train immediately north of Oak street; that he stepped out and gave a signal to the occupants of the motorcar to stop, but they passed him without paying any heed. This brakeman also testifies that the south section of the freight train had been started northward, and had come to a stop. The fireman of the freight train testifies that he had a violent stop signal from the brakeman at about the instant of the collision, which would indicate that the brakeman was in error as to his giving signals or doing anything to attract the attention of the occupants of the automobile, and that the signals were given to stop his train after the occurrence of the accident.

A number of witnesses gave what is called "negative testimony," in that they testified that they saw the approaching motorcar, but heard neither bell nor whistle. On the other hand, the engineer and fireman of the freight train, and the motorman on the motorcar, testified as to the sounding of the whistle and the ringing of a bell by the approaching motor. Upon this question the testimony is in sharp conflict, but from the fact that one part of the testimony is positive and the other is negative, the jury might very well have concluded that the whistle was sounded and that the bell was rung. Without the opportunity of observing the witnesses on the stand, it appears that the testimony predominates in favor of the contention that the whistle was sounded and the bell rung. But as the opportunity for judging the credibility of the witnesses cannot be had by the appellate court, it cannot be said that there was no substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the jury, assuming that their verdict turned wholly upon this point.

But there is a further circumstance involved in this case, which doubtless caused the jury and justified them in coming to the conclusion which they reached, even though they may have believed that the contended-for signals were given. The complaint alleges that the motorcar was driven at an excessive rate of speed. As heretofore stated, the admitted legal rate of speed was 8 miles per hour. The engineer and fireman of the freight train testified that the motor passed the engine upon which they were standing at 8 miles per hour. The motorman in charge of the car says his speed after reaching the city limits was only 8 miles per hour. The conductor on the motorcar likewise testified to a speed of eight miles per hour. His testimony, however, was based upon his knowledge of the city ordinances, as illustrated by the following questions and answers:

"Ques. When you reached the town limits you came along, you say, about 8 miles an hour? Ans. Yes. That is a city ordinance. Ques. You haven't any independent recollection of what rate you ran this morning, have you? Ans. No, sir."

The schedule made by the motor on the morning in question, from Corning to Red Bluff, shows that it was traveling in the neighborhood of 30 miles per hour. A passenger upon the motorcar stated that there was no perceptible diminution of speed upon reaching the city limits, and not until after the collision had occurred. Other disinterested witnesses testified that the motor was traveling at a high rate of speed. It was admitted upon the trial that a motorcar traveling under like conditions, at a rate of 25 miles per hour, could be stopped in 100 feet. The motorman on the motor car testified that his brakes held for 65 feet after the collision; that his brakes then ceased to hold, and his car coasted before coming to a stop northward to a point some 400 feet from the scene of the accident. If it be true, as testified by the motorman, that his brakes on his motorcar held for 65 feet, and it be also true, as it was admitted to be true, and must be accepted to be true, that the motorcar under the conditions then traveling could be stopped in 100 feet when traveling at a speed of 25 miles an hour, then the jury had a right to conclude that it was not true that the motorcar at the time of the accident, or at any time preceding the accident after it entered the yards at Red Bluff, was traveling at a rate of speed not in excess of 8 miles per hour.

For purposes of illustration, the distance within which an automobile may be stopped traveling at different rates of speed, as published in trade journals, may be useful. It is there stated that an automobile traveling 10 miles per hour can be stopped in $9^2/_{10}$ feet; that the same automobile under the same conditions traveling at 25 miles per hour can be stopped in 58 feet. In other words, the added momentum to a moving vehicle by doubling or tripling the speed is such that it requires about six times the distance to stop an automobile running 25 miles per hour that it does to stop the same car when only running 10 miles per hour. These laws are not peculiar to automobiles. They apply to every moving body, and if the force applied to a moving motorcar traveling 25 miles per hour can stop it in 100 feet, the same force applied to the same car when traveling only 10 miles per hour would stop it in a trifle over 16 feet. A somewhat shorter distance would suffice if the car were only traveling 8 miles per hour. Then again the force with which the automobile was picked up and hurled northward was such as to reasonably lead the jury to the conclusion that the theory that the motor car was only traveling 8 miles per hour had, in fact, as the conductor said, nothing to support it, except that the ordinances of the city of Red Bluff limited the speed to that rate. From this it is clear that the jury had ample evidence before it to conclude that the motorcar was being operated at an illegal rate of speed.

[1] Then, again, it enforces another conclusion. The first four or five cars of the south section of the freight train against the south line of Oak street were gondola cars. The next four or five cars were ordinary box freight cars. Hence, if the speed materially exceeded 8 miles per hour from the point where Vincent stopped his automobile to take observations, it was not possible for the plaintiff to have seen the on-coming motorcar, as it would have been south of the line of visibility. All the testimony as to the visibility of the approaching motorcar was based upon the assumption that its speed was only 8 miles per hour, which assumption the jury could not have accepted without ignoring the circumstances and matters above set forth. We are thus brought to the conclusion that the jury had sufficient evidence to find that the defendant's motorcar was being driven at an illegal rate of speed, and that this fact contributed to and brought about plaintiff's injury.

There was some further testimony as to the speed of the respective cars, which may be mentioned. One or two members of the train crew testified that the automobile was moving 25 miles per hour, while the motorcar was traveling only eight. It is only necessary to say that if such had been the case there would have been no collision, as the automobile would have passed by long before the arrival of the motorcar.

Could the plaintiff have saved himself by leaping from the moving auto? Possibly so, but we have been pointed to no authority holding that passengers on autos or other vehicles are required at their peril to think quick enough to take this method of escaping injury resulting from another's negligence. The plaintiff was not in control of the automobile in which he was riding, It is barely possible that if he had displaced Vincent in the control of the car, and operated the levers, the accident might have been avoided. Again, we are not presented with any authorities holding that such a course is necessary.

[2] The jury were warranted in coming to the conclusion that the motorcar was being driven at an illegal, excessive, and dangerous rate of speed, and this especially so under the circumstances that it was coming down past a line of freight cars that had been broken to permit the passage of pedestrians and vehicles, where no flagman was stationed; and the fact that the chauffeur who had sole control and operation of the car may have erred in judgment in its movement does not charge the plaintiff, a passenger on the auto, with contributory negligence, where it appears that he had done what he was reasonably expected to do to safeguard his own person.

[3] A large number of authorities have been cited by counsel for the appellant, relating to the contributory negligence of drivers of automobiles and other vehicles, and it has been argued that the same rule applies to passengers. Such, however, is not the law in this state, and no useful purpose can be served by going over the long list of cases in appellant's brief upon this phase of the controversy.

The learned trial judge denied the motion for nonsuit, and based his ruling upon three cases decided in this court, and we agree with him that, under the facts shown in this case, they are decisive of the issues here involved. The three cases relied upon are Drouillard v. Southern Pacific Co., 36 Cal. App. 447, 172 Pac. 405, Ilardi v. Central Traction Co., 36 Cal. App. 488, 172 Pac. 763, and Ellis v. Central Traction Co., 174 Pac. 407.

All of these cases establish the law relating to the obligation or duty resting on a passenger so clearly that re-statement is unnecessary. We do not understand that appellant questions the correctness of any of these decisions, but only contends that the rule applicable to Vincent, under the circumstances narrated, likewise applies with the same binding force and effect to the plaintiff in this action, and, if its contention in this particular is not correct, its conclusion is also erroneous.

[4, 5] The instructions given to the jury by the trial court appear to have been prepared with great care, and so presented as to state the law with unusual clearness, and, in fact, so directly and precisely that appellant, in his assignment of errors on this branch of the case, only refers thereto by numbers, specifying that they were along the line of the three cases above referred to, and the refused instructions were refused or modified because they were not applicable to a passenger. Under such circumstances, it has been frequently decided that an appellate court is not called upon to look for errors. We have, however, read every instruction given, and every instruction asked by the defendant and refused, and find no error in the action of the court. As stated by appellant, one instruction asked for, to wit, instruction No. 16, and refused by the court, illustrates all the contention made by the appellant in relation to the instructions given or refused by the court. The asked instruction is as follows:

"That if you find the defendant, or any of its employés, was or were negligent in handling the said motor which caused the accident, yet, if you further find that the accident could have been prevented if the plaintiff had caused the said automobile to stop at any time before it reached the track upon which the said motorcar was running at a place where said motor could have been seen or heard by the plaintiff or the driver of said automobile, your verdict shall be for the defendant."

This instruction entirely overlooks the fact that the plaintiff was a passenger; that the plaintiff was not exercising any control or management over the motorcar; that a competent chauffeur was in charge thereof, and the plaintiff was only charged as a passenger, and not as a person in charge of a motor vehicle; and that if the defendant was negligent, and the negligence of the defendant entered into and co-operated with negligence of the chauffeur, in which the plaintiff did not participate, then the plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to recover, because if the plaintiff were injured by the joint wrong of two persons he could have prosecuted his action against both of them.

[6, 7] After presenting all the questions which we have heretofore considered, the appellant, in its reply brief, urges the insufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action, stating its contention in the following manner:

"A far more important question is, however, whether, on the face of the complaint, defendant was guilty of negligence at all."

It may be that technical construction was once more important than substantial facts, but under our reformed procedure we are not ready to accept unquestioningly any such statement. The point made by the appellant is that, in technical language, the defendant is not charged with negligence; that when so construed it only alleges negligence on the part of its employés. The complaint in paragraph 1 alleges the corporate existence of the defendant, and that it was engaged as a common carrier operating a railroad in the state of California, and through the city of Red Bluff, at the time of the injury of the plaintiff; that the employés of the defendant ran one of its motorcars in a northerly direction along its railroad and across said highway at a great rate of speed; "that the defendant's employés omitted to give any signal or warning of its approach to said crossing; that the employés of said defendant had, just prior to the time herein referred to, left certain freight cars upon said day west of and adjoining the track upon which said motorcar was approaching, and extending along said track in such a manner as to almost completely block the crossing at Oak street, and to prevent either the said Clyde H. Vincent or this plaintiff, as the said automobile approached said crossing, from obtaining a view of said motorcar approaching said crossing, as aforesaid. As said automobile reached said crossing, said motorcar, by reason of its negligent operation by the employés of the defendant in the manner aforesaid, and by reason of the high rate of speed at which it was being run by the employés of the defendant, and without any negligence whatever on the part of plaintiff or said Clyde H. Vincent, struck the automobile driven by said Clyde H. Vincent, and in which the plaintiff was riding as said passenger as aforesaid, causing said automobile to be demolished, killing the said Clyde H. Vincent and injuring the plaintiff in the manner hereinafter stated."

It may be admitted that technically and abstractly the defendant is not charged with negligence, and that its employés only are so charged. The appellant has, under the authorities hereafter cited, completely obviated this objection, if it be such. Paragraph 2 of the defendant's second answer alleges the necessary matter to help out the complaint, thus:

"That the said approaching motorcar was in plain view of plaintiff and the said Vincent, had they looked in the direction from which it was approaching said crossing, and that said motorcar was in full control of defendant's employés, and was approaching the said railroad crossing carefully, and with due regard to the rights of persons approaching said crossing, and that defendant's employés in charge of said approaching motorcar gave, as required by law, suitable and proper signals of the approach of the said motorcar to the said crossing, etc."

In Daggett v. Gray, 110 Cal. 172, 42 Pac. 569, the Supreme Court says:

"The rule is well settled that a complaint which lacks the averment of a fact essential to a cause of action may be so aided by the averment of that fact in the answer as to uphold a judgment thereon, * * * even though a demurrer to the complaint for the want of this fact had been erroneously overruled."

To the same effect is Kreling v. Kreling, 118 Cal. 420, 50 Pac. 546; also, Shively v. Land & Water Co., 99 Cal. 261, 33 Pac. 848; Nolan v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 2 Cal. App. 3, 82 Pac. 1119; Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 147 Pac. 90.

From the fact that the defendant was not deceived or misled by reason of the omission in the plaintiff's complaint, and also from the further fact that it specifically alleges the omitted matter, it would seem that section 475, Code of Civil Procedure, and section 4½ of article 6 of our state Constitution, would apply to this case and prevent any reversal on account of any such alleged defect in the pleadings. The demurrer interposed by the appellant does not call attention to the alleged defect, the first specification being a general demurrer. The second is as follows:

"It appears upon the face of the complaint that said complaint does not state a cause of action, in this, first, the collision described in the complaint which resulted in the injuries of the plaintiff on February 5, 1917, etc."

Without any specification whatever that the negligence set forth in the complaint is not directly charged to have been the negligence of the appellant, rather than its employés.

However, the following cases hold that to charge the ownership of the motor by the defendant and its operation by its employés establishes prima facie that the car was run by the defendant: McWhirter v. Fuller, 35 Cal. App. 288, 170 Pac. 417; Grantham v. Ordway, 182 Pac. 73; Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 253, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 Pac. 1020, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 59; Trabing v. California Navigation & Improvement Co., 121 Cal. 137, 53 Pac. 644.

A review of these cases and a number of others cited in the briefs would justify the court in holding that the complaint is sufficient, even though, for purposes of clearness, the pleading would have been better had the negligence been charged in the form claimed to have been necessary by the appellant.

In any view of the case the appellant, having in its answer set forth all the matter omitted from the complaint, it cannot be heard to say that it has suffered any injury by reason of the ruling of the trial court in not sustaining its demurrer, and, not having suffered any injury, a reversal for this cause would not be warranted under the provision of our state Constitution above referred to.

Being of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the verdict of the jury, and not having been pointed to any errors sufficient to justify a reversal, the judgment of the trial court is hereby affirmed.

1. INSURANCE ⊂=134(1)—POLICY APPLICATION, AND PREMIUM NOTE CONSTITUTE CONTRACT.

A life insurance policy including the application and note given for first premium together constitute the contract.

2. INSURANCE ⊂=138(1)—TERMS OF CONTRACT VALID IF NOT IN CONFLICT WITH LAW OR PUBLIC POLICY.

The parties to an insurance contract may incorporate therein whatever conditions they please, provided they are not in contravention of law or public policy.

3. INSURANCE ⊂=146(3)—AMBIGUOUS PROVISION WILL BE CONSTRUED AGAINST INSURER.

Ambiguous provisions in an insurance policy providing for a forfeiture of assured's interest will be strictly construed against the insurer, and the rule applies to life policies as well as to accident, fire, and marine insurance.

4. INSURANCE ⊂=392(10) — FORFEITURE OF LIFE POLICY FOR NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUMS WAIVED BY COLLECTING NOTE AFTER MATURITY.

Where a note given in part payment of a life insurance premium provided that nonpayment of the note should terminate policy and that it might be collected without reviving the policy, while the application provided that only that part of the premium paid in cash should be retained by insurer, held that, under rule of strict construction, the provision in application governed, so that collecting note after maturity waived the forfeiture.

5. INSURANCE ⊂=372—INSURER MAY WAIVE FORFEITURE FOR NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUMS.

A provision of a life insurance contract forfeiting the policy upon nonpayment of a note given in part payment of a premium is for the insurer's benefit and may be waived by it.

6. INSURANCE ⊂=388(3)—FORFEITURE WAIVED BY RECOGNITION OF CONTINUED EXISTENCE OF POLICY.

A provision of a life insurance contract that the policy should ipso facto terminate upon insured's default in paying premium note held waived by correspondence between the parties in which the insurer recognized the policy's continued existence and discussed insured's desire to reduce it in amount.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; George L. Jones, Judge.

Action by Minnie B. Faris, as administratrix of the estate of John B. Faris, deceased, against the American National Assurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Oscar Lawler, of Los Angeles, and Nilon & Nilon, of Nevada City, for appellant.

Hennessy & Peterson, of Grass Valley, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover the sum of $3,000, the amount of an insurance policy issued on the life of said John B. Faris. There is no controversy about the facts, most of them being covered by an agreed statement and the others are contained in the deposition of one witness. On July 27, 1916, Faris made application to the company for insurance on his life for the sum of $3,000. Said application contained, among others, the following stipulation:

"(3) That if for the first premium of the policy hereby applied for, or for any part thereof, any note shall be given to said company or to any agent thereof, then, if and when said note is not paid at its maturity, the insurance granted by such policy shall ipso facto cease and determine, notwithstanding any provision in the policy to the contrary, and that such part of said premium as may have been paid in cash shall be retained by the company as earned premium for the term ending with the maturity of such note."

On July 28th following, the first premium, amounting to $84.09, was paid in the following manner: $28.03 in cash, and Faris' promissory note for the balance in the following form:

"$56.06. Grass Valley, Cal., 7/28/1916.

"Sixty days after date (without grace), for value received, I promise to pay to the American National Assurance Company $56.06 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum until paid.

"This note is given in part payment of the first annual premium on policy No. 4965, issued to me by said company. If this note is not paid at maturity, said policy and all rights secured thereby shall terminate and said policy shall become null and void, but the full amount of the premium on said policy shall be considered as the earned premium thereon, while said policy is in force and this note shall be payable without reviving said policy.

"[Signed] Dr. John B. Faris.

"Grass Valley, Cal."

On August 1, 1916, the defendant issued and delivered to Faris its policy No. 4695. The provisions therein material to this controversy are as follows:

"This policy and the application theretofore made constitute the entire contract between the parties hereto. * * *

"All premiums are payable either at the home office of the company or to such agent as shall be designated by the company upon delivery of a receipt signed by the president, vice president or secretary and countersigned by the agent designated. If any premium or installment thereof is not paid when due this policy shall be ipso facto null and void and all premiums forfeited to the company except as herein otherwise provided.

"This policy may be reinstated in the event of default of premium payments unless the cash surrender value has been paid, at any time upon presentation at the home office of evidence of insurability satisfactory to the company and payment of all past due premiums. * * *

"This insurance is granted in consideration of the application therefor, a copy of which is hereto attached and made a part of this contract and of the payment in advance of $84.09, being the premium to provide the legal reserve and for term insurance for the first policy year ending on the first day of August, 1917.

"The first year's insurance under this policy is term insurance.

"This contract will be continued as a limited payment life policy upon payment of the annual renewal premium of $84.09 on or before the first day of August, 1917.

"The American National Assurance Company * * * agrees to pay $3,000.00 * * * to the beneficiary upon receipt of due proof of the death of the assured during the continuance of this policy.

"Only the president, vice president or secretary has power on behalf of the company (and then only in writing) to make or modify this or any other contract of insurance or to extend the time for paying any premium and the company shall not be bound by any promise or representation hereafter given by any agent or person other than the above."

At a date not shown by the evidence, but prior to its maturity, the defendant company notified Faris by mail of the date of the note and requested remittance. In reply, Faris from Grass Valley, Cal., wrote the company at St. Louis, Mo., under date of September 28, 1916, that he was unable to pay the note, and he suggested returning the policy and a reduction thereof from $3,000 to $1,000, and offered to pay the interest "for the time note has run." This letter was answered by Assistant Secretary Redmond of the company, in which he stated among other things:

"We are advising Mr. Larrabee of your desire to reduce the policy and instructing him to take the matter up with you."

On October 7th following, Larrabee wrote to Mr. Redmond and also to Mr. Farris. The letter to Redmond was as follows:

"Your favor of October 3d re policy No. 4695, Dr. J. B. Faris, of Grass Valley, asking that the policy be reduced from $3,000 to $1,000 is received.

"I am not at all in favor of any such arrangement as this, and I am inclosing you a copy of the letter that I am to-day writing the doctor. I am quite familiar with the doctor's circumstances, and he is entirely able to pay any obligation of this kind, I am quite certain. Furthermore, we cannot adopt such a policy, or establish any such a precedent as to allow people to keep their policies two or three months, and then at will, to decide that they do not want them, or desire to cut them down to suit themselves.

"If I had to cut this policy down in the end, well and good, but I shall not do so until I have adopted the procedure outlined in my letter of which I am enclosing you a copy."

Said Larrabee, the general agent of the company at Los Angeles, Cal., writing on behalf of defendant corporation on October 7, 1916, sent a letter to Faris, in which he acknowledged receipt of said letter of September 28th and containing the following instructions:

"It is out of the question to have the policy reduced after the premium has once been paid or within 30 days thereafter. * * * Therefore, no change can be made. Therefore, doctor, it will be necessary for you to pay the balance due on your premium and reduce it next year if you choose. If you are not in a position to pay your note at the present time, I am authorized to inclose you a new note, which length of time is not stated therein and you can fill in such time as you desire, but no longer than 60 days."

On October 9th, following, Faris replied to Larrabee's letter of October 7th, saying, in effect, that he did not have the $59.65, or any part of it, and $3,000 was all the insurance he could possibly carry. In explanation of this latter statement it may be said that Faris was at the time carrying a policy for $2,000 with another company. On October 11th Larrabee wrote to Faris a letter as follows:

"Your letter of October 9th is duly received, and contents I have carefully noted. My previous letter to you holds good. This policy cannot be reduced until the beginning of the second year, and I shall expect you to pay the amount of your note. As I told you before, if you are not able to pay it now pay some part of it, and I will extend the balance. You say in your letter 'you ought to know your business best.' I quite agree with you and you should have known what you were doing when you gave your note promising to pay this amount of money, and there is no argument necessary whatever. We simply shall expect you to pay the balance due on your premium. You are therefore requested to sign the note that I sent to you in my previous letter and pay whatever you can. This is the best proposition that it is possible for you to be offered.

"Very sincerely yours."

To this letter Faris made no reply. In connection with these letters it may be observed that certain instructions were sent by Assistant Secretary Redmond to Larrabee after the former received Faris' letter, but the record does not disclose what those instructions were. In regard to those instructions the record shows:

"It was stipulated and agreed in open court that plaintiff had made, prior to the trial of the cause, a proper demand upon defendant for production of the written instructions under date of October 3, 1916, written by the home office of the defendant corporation to George Larrabee, agent of said corporation, at the city of Los Angeles, Cal.; that defendant was unable to produce such written instructions as requested and did not produce the same at the trial."

On November 8, 1916, nothing further having been done, Larrabee sent the unpaid note to the Nevada County Bank for collection, and on November 20, 1916, the bank collected the same. The transaction between the bank and Faris consisted merely in the receipt by the bank of the money and the delivery of the note to the payor thereof duly canceled. Faris died December 23, 1916; plaintiff was duly appointed administratrix of his estate, and in that capacity made proofs of death to defendant and demanded payment of the policy. Defendant declined to pay and hence the action. The superior court found:

(2) "That that certain policy of insurance, a copy of which is annexed to the complaint on file therein and marked 'Exhibit A' thereof, did not cease or determine on or about the 26th day of September, 1916, or at any other time or at all. That defendant waived any or all rights that existed or might have existed on the 26th day of September, 1916, or at any other date, to determine said policy or contract of life insurance."

(3) "That said policy or contract of life insurance was a valid and subsisting contract of insurance, and was in full force and effect to and including and on the 23d day of December, 1916."

Judgment was accordingly rendered for plaintiff in the amount stated, and the appeal is from said judgment.

Preliminarily, it is taken for granted that said Redmond and Larrabee were fully authorized to represent the assurance company in the correspondence and negotiation had with said Faris. This point is fully covered either by stipulation or the uncontroverted evidence in the case. In fact, it is not disputed by appellant in its closing brief, and therefore we shall give that proposition no further consideration.

[1, 2] Again, it is assumed, because well settled by the authorities, that—

(a) "The policy (including application) and note given for the first premium thereon together constitute the contract.

(b) "The parties to an insurance contract may incorporate therein whatever conditions they please, provided the same be not in contravention of law or public policy."

Keeping these considerations in view, it is apparent that we are called upon to determine the effect of an ambiguity created by the terms of the application and of the note. Under the provisions of the former, it appears that such part of the premium as may have been paid in cash "shall be retained by the company as earned premium for the term ending with maturity of such note." The amount so paid in cash, as we have seen, was $28.03. The effect of said provision was therefore that the earned premium for the term of 60 days should be $28.03. But the note provided that—

"The full amount of the premium on said policy shall be considered as the earned premium thereon while said policy is in force."

This full amount is, as we have seen, $84.09. We have therefore this situation: In one part of the contract between the parties it is clearly provided that $28.03, and in another part of the contract that $84.09, shall be the earned premium for the said term of 60 days. Of course, it is true, as contended by appellant, that the whole contract of the parties should be considered and its various terms should be reconciled, if possible. But these two provisions are hopelessly in conflict. A certain amount is stated in the application as constituting the earned premium. This necessarily implies that no additional sum is included therein. The note, however, mentions a larger sum as the earned premium. The case would be no different if the consideration for a contract were stated in one portion thereof to be a certain sum and in another portion to be an entirely different sum. For instance, if, in a contract between A. and B. for the sale of horses, it was recited in one part thereof that the price was $28 and in another that it was $84, could effect be given to both recitals?

[3] The court below, therefore, was called upon to determine the effect upon the rights of the assured of these two conflicting provisions, and in doing so it was guided by the well-settled rule as declared in many decisions of the Supreme Court of this state and of other courts in various jurisdictions. As to this it may be said that the rule in relation to accident, fire, marine, and life insurance is the same. In a fire insurance case it was said:

"It is well established that conditions which provide for a forfeiture of the interest of the assured or other persons claiming under the policy are to be strictly construed against the insurance company, and if there is any ambiguity in a policy which may reasonably be solved by either one of two constructions that interpretation shall be adopted which is most favorable to the assured." Welch v. British American Insurance Co., 148 Cal. 223, 82 Pac. 964, 113 Am. St. Rep. 223, 7 Ann. Cas. 396.

In a life insurance case the Supreme Court said:

"If this be so, no further argument is needed to establish the conclusion that under the settled rule policies of insurance are to be construed against the insurer. * * * Anderson v. Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York, 164 Cal. 712, 130 Pac. 726, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 903.

In the case of Williamsburg v. Williard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, in a California case, referred to the rule as a maxim as follows:

"Applying the maxim that in construing the terms of an insurance policy, if there be any ambiguity, it must be construed most strongly against the insurers, since the language * * * is their own. * * *"

Other decisions to the same effect are Berliner v. Travelers' Insurance Company, 121 Cal. 458, 53 Pac. 918, 41 L. R. A. 467, 66 Am. St. Rep. 49; Mackintosh v. Agricultural Insurance Co., 150 Cal. 440, 89 Pac. 102, 119 Am. St. Rep. 234; Goorberg v. Western Assurance Co., 150 Cal. 510, 89 Pac. 130, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876, 119 Am. St. Rep. 246, 11 Ann. Cas. 801; O'Neil v. Caledonian Insurance Co., 166 Cal. 310, 135 Pac. 1121; Victoria S. S. Co. v. Western Assurance Co., 167 Cal. 348, 139 Pac. 807.

[4] Construing said conflicting provisions in favor of the insured we must conclude that the collection of the note by the insurance company was a waiver of the alleged forfeiture. This position is supported by numerous authorities, among which we may quote from Cohen v. Continental Co., 67 Tex. 325, 3 S. W. 296, 60 Am. Rep. 24, as follows:

"It may * * * be considered as settled law that when a policy provides for a forfeiture upon failure to pay premiums which are to fall due, but does not stipulate that upon such failure the overdue premiums shall be considered as earned, a demand and payment of such premium constitutes a waiver of the forfeiture. Joliffe v. Madison Mutual Ins. Co., 39 Wis. 111 [20 Am. Rep. 35]."

As we are required to view the case it appears therefore that the insurance company agreed that the earned premium for the said period of 60 days should be only $28, and after the expiration of said period it collected the additional sum of $56 covered by said note. In other words, it claimed and received the benefit of the payment of the premium for the entire period of one year but sought to limit its responsibility to the said period of 60 days. Under the authorities and according to the plain principles of equity, this it cannot do.

[5, 6] Again, the forfeiture provision of the contract was solely for the benefit of the insurer and as such could be waived by the company if it chose to do so. It is true that the policy provided that the insurance should ipso facto cease and determine upon the default of the insured; but, nevertheless, by the decisions of the Supreme Court of this state it has been held that, under similar provisions, if the insurance company, after knowledge of said default, enters into negotiations or transactions with the assured which recognize the continued validity of the policy, and treats it as still in force, the right to claim a forfeiture for such previous default is waived. Murray v. Home Benefit Life Association, 90 Cal. 402, 27 Pac. 309, 25 Am. St. Rep. 133.

In Knarston v. Manhattan Ins. Co., 140 Cal. 62, 73 Pac. 740, the court decided that a waiver of forfeiture could be proven by parol. In the decision of the question, referring to the provision in the policy that upon a failure to make payment at the given dates the policy will be void, the court said:

"This latter provision, however, is one common to insurance policies, and is solely in favor of the company, and being so in its favor may be waived."

It is further stated that the contract continues in force by the election of the company not to avail itself of the reserved right of forfeiture and that the policy is similar to a lease or vendor's contract with condition of forfeiture contained therein in reference to which it has been invariably held that the right to declare a forfeiture, being a matter entirely for the benefit of the lessor or vendor can be, even by parol, effectually waived by either. Among other decisions holding that such provision in a policy means only that the policy shall be voidable at the option of the company, we may cite Noem v. Equitable, 37 S. D. 176, 157 N. W. 308; Smith v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins., 3 Dak. 80, 13 N. W. 355; Grigsby v. Russell, 222 U. S. 149, 32 Sup. Ct. 58, 56 L. Ed. 133, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 86. In other words, it seems to be well settled that a policy containing a forfeiture clause like the one in this case is not rendered ineffectual and inoperative by the mere default of the insured in payment of the premium unless the insurer desires to so treat and consider the policy; but, if the insurer elects to recognize the policy as existing and in force subsequent to the date of the breach, then the policy continues as an existing and operative insurance for the benefit of the insured.

Applying the foregoing principle to the facts of this case, there can be no doubt that the correspondence between the parties, which we have hereinbefore set out, was so intended and amounted to the recognition by the insurance company of the continued force and effect of said policy, and that it cannot be properly said, as contended by appellant, that said correspondence amounted to mere suggestions which were neither accepted nor acted upon. In other words, it seems plain, we think, that under a fair construction of said correspondence and negotiation there was an express waiver on the part of insurer of its right to declare the policy null and void on account of the insured's failure to pay the premium note on the 26th of September, 1916. The case falls clearly within the doctrine of Murry v. Home Benefit Life Association, supra. The policy therein contained a forfeiture provision in the event that the insured should neglect or omit to pay the last assessment that might be levied on the certificate within 30 days from the date of notice thereof. On September 1, 1886, the assessments which had fallen due on June 1st and August 1st of that year were still unpaid, and the defendant on that day addressed a note to said Murry, calling his attention thereto, with a request that he remit the amount due. At or about the same day it also addressed to him this letter:

"According to the conditions of your certificate of membership, No. 8361, an assessment amounting to $29.40 will be due and payable at this office on the 1st of October, 1886. Remittances should always be made payable to Home Benefit Life Association, San Franscisco, Cal."

On September 22d, the insured sent a third person to the office of the company with the amount of the delinquent payment. The president of the company would not accept the payment, but stated he "would be only too happy to do so" when insured should come and tender it himself. The insured died on September 30, 1886, without having paid the premium. The sole question was whether there was a waiver of the forfeiture on the part of the insurance company. In discussing the question the court declared that the failure of the deceased to pay the assessment of June and August would have released the company from all further liability if the defendant company had so elected. After stating the general rule as to waiver, which we have before set out, the court proceeds:

"The respondent, while not disputing the general rule that a forfeiture may be waived at the option of the person entitled to enforce it, insists that the letters of the defendant, above referred to, show only an offer by it to waive the previous default in the payment of the June and August assessments upon condition that such past-due assessments were immediately paid, and while the insured continued in the same state of health."

After stating that there were no such conditions in the letter and that a tender within a reasonable time with the amount due would have been sufficient to continue the policy in force, the court further said:

"But the letter notifying the insured that an assessment would be due and payable on October 1st, and in substance requesting payment, of itself constituted a waiver of the previous default, and must be construed as an unconditional offer to accept payment of that assessment on or before the date named. It was, in effect, an assertion that the certificate was still in force, and, notwithstanding previous defaults known to the defendant, would remain in force until the date therein named for such payment."

The point is also covered by the two decisions of the Supreme Court in Knarston v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 124 Cal. 74, 56 Pac. 773, and 140 Cal. 57, 73 Pac. 740. Therein is quoted with approval the following statement of the rule in Titus v. Glenn Falls Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 419:

"But, it may be asserted broadly that if, in any negotations or transactions with the insured, after knowledge of the forfeiture, it recognizes the continued validity of the policy, or does acts based thereon, or requires the insured by virtue thereof to do some act or incur some trouble or expense, the forfeiture is as matter of law waived; and it is now settled in this court, after some difference of opinion, that such a waiver need not be based upon any new agreement or an estoppel."

In the second decision in the Knarston Case the Supreme Court reiterates and reaffirms the rule:

"When an insurance company, with full knowledge of all the facts, enters into negotiations with the assured, recognizing the continued validity of the policy, the right to forfeiture of the previous default, which may be asserted, is waived"—and in confirmation of said doctrine many cases from other jurisdictions are cited therein.

In the Noem Case, supra, there was a default on the part of the insured, and thereafter the company wrote him as follows:

"We note that the premium due June 18, 1913, on your policy in our company No. 72,972 is still unpaid, and we write to remind you of the matter, as we are inclined to think you have simply overlooked it. The contract has many liberal features, and we are sure you do not wish to forfeit the protection it affords. * * * Kindly complete this health certificate and return to us with a remittance for the amount of the premium."

The health certificate was not furnished, and the court held the insurer liable on the policy by reason of the fact that said letter indicated an intention on the part of the company to treat the contract as in force, and therefore it amounted to a waiver of the default.

It is quite plain from the correspondence herein that the insurance company continued to recognize the existence of said policy after said default of September 26th. For instance, on October 3d, six days after the insured was in default, in a letter to him, the assistant secretary of the company, acknowledging the receipt of the insured's letter of the 28th of September, stated:

"We are advising Mr. Larrabee of your desire to reduce the policy and instructing him to take the matter up with you at once."

The letter contained no statement that the policy was forfeited, nor did it intimate in the slightest degree that the company regarded it as having lapsed. On the contrary, it clearly implied that the company recognized it as still in force and would consider the insured's proposal for a change in the policy. Again, on October 7th, eleven days after the default, Mr. Larrabee, the general agent of the company, virtually admitted that the policy was still in force by stating to the insured that "it would be necessary for you to pay the balance due on your premium and reduce it next year, if you choose." There could scarcely be any more emphatic recognition of the continued existence of the policy and of the intention and purpose of the company to give the insured a further opportunity to pay the premium or to enter into a new contract for the modification of said policy than is found in the language of these letters. It may be said that this conclusion is further strengthened by the said letter of October 11th, in which the insured was told that he could pay some part of the premium and that the balance would be extended, and also that the policy could not be reduced until the "beginning of the second year." This language implies that the insured would have the privilege of reducing the policy at the end of the first year. This, of course, is entirely inconsistent with the theory that the policy had become null and void by reason of the default of the insured. We deem it unnecessary to cite further authorities upon the question herein presented. We think that the position taken by respondent is in accordance with law and the facts of the case. This conclusion may be based upon any or all of the propositions stated substantially in the language of respondent as follows: First, under a proper construction of the contract, giving due regard to the earned premium provisions of said application, the collection of the note by the insurer was a waiver of the alleged forfeiture, if such forfeiture had ever existed. Second, the policy did not lapse and the company's liability thereunder did not end because of nonpayment at maturity of the note dated July 28, 1916, and due September 26, 1916, but, on the contrary the condition in the policy that it should be void if the premium note was not paid when due meant only that it should be voidable at the option of the company; that the company waived the forfeiture and by accepting the balance of the premium treated the contract as subsisting after the breach. Third, the said correspondence constituted a waiver on the part of the insurer of any right that theretofore may have existed to forfeit the policy.

We think the judgment is just and in accordance with the requirement of the law and the contract of the parties, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem.; HART, J.

THILL v. MOULTHORP et al. (L. A. 5331.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1919.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸982—RECITALS IN TAX DEEDS UNDER LOCAL IMPROVEMENT ACT NOT PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE OF REGULARITY.

In action to determine adverse claims to real estate under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, plaintiff, claiming under tax deeds issued under Local Improvement Act of 1901, had burden of proving compliance with statutory requirements as to proceedings leading up to tax levy, the recitals in deeds, in absence of provision in such statute to such effect, not being prima facie evidence thereof, notwithstanding Pol. Code, § 3786, such statute applying only to state taxes, and notwithstanding Municipal Incorporation Act, § 871, as amended in 1905 (Stats. 1883, p. 273; Stats. 1905, p. 89), such statute applying only to proceedings under such statute.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Andrew Thill against George Moulthorp, Sylvester Kipp, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and last-named defendant appeals. Reversed.

Sylvester Kipp, of San Diego, in pro. per.

F. L. Richardson, of San Diego, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an action under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure to determine adverse claims to real estate. Defendant Kipp answered the complaint, denying the facts relied upon to establish plaintiff's interest in the property and setting up an estate therein in himself. Plaintiff based his right to recover judgment upon certain tax deeds and relied upon the recitals in the said deeds as prima facie evidence of compliance with the requirements of the statute pursuant to which the proceedings leading up to the levy of the tax had been had, namely, the Local Improvement Act of 1901 (Page 34). Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, and defendant Kipp appeals on the ground that the recitals in the said deeds are not prima facie evidence of compliance with the requirements of the statute in question.

The provisions of the Political Code by which tax deeds are made prima facie evidence of compliance with the requirements of the statute pursuant to which the proceedings leading up to the levy of the tax have been had, by their own terms, apply only in the case of state taxes. Pol. Code, § 3786. Plaintiff and respondent contends, however, that these provisions are applicable in the present case by virtue of section 871 of the Municipal Incorporation Act. St. 1883, p. 273; St. 1905, p. 89. That section, as amended in 1905, provides that—

"All deeds made upon any sale of property for taxes or special assessments under the provisions of this chapter shall have the same force and effect in evidence as is or may hereafter be provided by law for deeds for property sold for nonpayment of state taxes."

The difficulty with plaintiff's contention lies in the fact that this provision, by its plain terms, applies only to tax deeds "made upon any sale of property for taxes or special assessments under the provisions of this chapter," while the recitals of the tax deeds here in question show conclusively that the said deeds were issued and all proceedings resulting in their issuance were had under the Local Improvement Act of 1901. Such being the situation, if the deeds here in question are prima facie evidence of the proceedings prior thereto, it must be solely by reason of a provision to that effect in the Improvement Act itself. Phelan v. San Francisco, 120 Cal. 1, 52 Pac. 38; Haines v. Young, 132 Cal. 512, 64 Pac. 1079. It is not claimed that any provision of the Local Improvement Act of 1901 has the effect of making the said deeds prima facie evidence of the proceedings prior thereto. It was therefore incumbent upon plaintiff to prove these proceedings.

There is no basis for the contention that the re-enactment of the sections of the Political Code relative to the effect of tax deeds as evidence subsequent to the decision in Phelan v. San Francisco and Haines v. Young, supra, had any effect upon the authority of these cases.

The judgment is reversed.

CONNELL v. HOGG. (L. A. 5339.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1919.)

1. REPLEVIN ⟸103(1) — JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT LIMITED TO AMOUNT OF LIEN FOR REPAIRS.

In replevin of automobile, where defendant claimed a lien for repairs, he was entitled to judgment for no greater sum as damages than the amount due him for repairs, and judgment for the value of the machine was error.

2. PLEADING ⟸36(3)—ADMISSIONS IN ANSWER TO BE CONSTRUED WITH VIEW TO WHOLE PLEADING.

Finding for defendant was not against an admission in the pleading because statements therein, if standing alone, would constitute admissions, since such statements should be construed in view of the whole pleading.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Replevin by J. F. Connell against J. N. Hogg. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hickcox & Crenshaw, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. Replevin for an automobile, upon which defendant claims a lien for repairs. Judgment was entered for defendant, and plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll alone.

Defendant rendered a bill for repairs upon the machine in question amounting to the sum of $449. Plaintiff paid $122 on account, and tendered the sum of $150 as payment in full of the balance due, asserting that the reasonable value of the repairs was not in excess of $272. Defendant refused to accept the sum so tendered. Plaintiff thereupon instituted this action, alleging that $449 was grossly in excess of the reasonable value of the repairs, and that the said repairs were not reasonably worth any sum in excess of $272. The court failed to find the true amount of defendant's lien, but found that it was in excess of $272, and thereupon made its conclusion of law that defendant was entitled to judgment against plaintiff for the possession of the automobile or for the value thereof in the amount of $2,999.99. Judgment was rendered accordingly.

[1] This was error. Defendant, at most, had no more than a lien upon the machine for the balance due him for the repairs made. In such case, if he could not recover the machine, he was entitled to no greater sum as damages than the amount so owing to him. Wilkerson v. Thorp, 128 Cal. 221, 60 Pac. 679; Griffith v. Reddick, 182 Pac. 984. The cause must therefore be remanded for a determination of the amount due to defendant for the labor and materials expended by him.

We see no reason, however, why that portion of the judgment which requires a return of the machine should not be affirmed if the amount due is substantially in excess of $272. The defendant, in his answer, denied that the sum of $449 was grossly or at all in excess for the said repairs, alleging that the services performed and the materials furnished were reasonably worth in excess of $272, and denying that $272 was the reasonable value of said services and materials. The court found:

"That the services performed upon said automobile by said defendant were of the reasonable value of a sum in excess of $272, and that the balance due to said defendant by reason thereof was in excess of the sum of $150."

[2] Construed in the manner which will support the judgment, the finding is, in effect, that the reasonable value of the repairs was a sum substantially in excess of $272. Appellant insists that, so construed, the finding is against defendant's admission in the pleadings that the reasonable value of the repairs was substantially $272. That part of the answer which avers that the services performed and the materials furnished were reasonably worth in excess of $272, and which denies that $272 was the reasonable value of said services and materials, torn from its context and standing alone, does, without doubt, amount to an admission that the services and materials in question were not worth a sum substantially in excess of $272. The answer cannot, however, be so construed. Read in the light of the context, the statements are, in effect, that the services performed and the materials furnished were reasonably worth in excess of $272, namely $449, and that the reasonable value of said services and materials was not $272 or any other sum than $449. So construed, the statements cannot be said to amount to an admission that the repairs were not worth a sum substantially in excess of $272. The finding is not therefore against an admission in the pleadings.

The judgment is affirmed as to all matters excepting the alternative that defendant recover the sum of $2,999.99 in case redelivery of the machine cannot be had. That portion of the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered solely as to the issue of the amount of defendant's lien, unless the parties agree that the court may enter findings on this issue upon the evidence already before it.

In re BRIX'S ESTATE.

Appeal of CHAMBERS, State Controller.

(S. F. 8778.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 10, 1919.)

1. TAXATION ⊂⊃861—TAXABILITY OF TRANSFER DETERMINED BY LAW WHEN TRANSFER WAS MADE.

Taxability under the inheritance tax laws of a transfer made by a decedent in his lifetime must be determined by the law in effect at the time the transfer was made.

2. TAXATION ⊂⊃879(1) — TRANSFERS NOT TAXABLE UNLESS WITHOUT VALUABLE AND ADEQUATE CONSIDERATION.

Under St. 1911, p. 713, § 1, imposing a tax on transfers without valuable and adequate consideration, in contemplation of grantor's death, or intended to take effect in possession at or after such death, the transfer must be without an adequate consideration, as well as without a valuable one, to be subject to the tax, and must be made either in contemplation of death or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at death.

3. TAXATION ⊂⊃893—REVIEW OF DECISIONS AS TO TAXABILITY OF TRANSFERS AS AFFECTED BY SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

On appeal from an order declaring a transfer of certain property made by decedent in his lifetime not subject to an inheritance tax under St. 1911, p. 713, § 1, the finding of the lower court must be upheld if it can be supported upon any reasonable view of the evidence, even where such evidence is not conflicting.

4. TAXATION ⊂⊃879(1) — INHERITANCE TAXES; ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION FOR TRANSFER.

In determining whether there is adequate consideration for a transfer by a decedent under St. 1911, p. 713, § 1, imposing a tax on transfers in contemplation of death and without valuable and adequate consideration, the rule applicable in specific performance cases must control.

5. TAXATION ⊂⊃893—ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION FOR TRANSFER TO TAKE EFFECT IN POSSESSION AT GRANTOR'S DEATH.

A transfer by a husband and his wife of certain realty to their children, subject to a life estate in the husband, held, under the evidence, supported by adequate and valuable consideration within St. 1911, p. 713, § 1, imposing a tax on transfers to take effect in possession or enjoyment at grantor's death, where it appeared that the actual consideration was not only a waiver by the wife of all her interest in the community property, but constituted a complete alteration of the relation between husband and wife, as authorized by Civ. Code. § 159, notwithstanding that part of the consideration was not susceptible of exact valuation in money.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Proceedings to collect an inheritance tax from the estate of Herman Hugo Brix, deceased. From an order declaring that a certain transfer was not subject to the tax, John S. Chambers, as State Controller, appeals. Affirmed.

Robert A. Waring, State Inheritance Tax Atty., of Sacramento, and J. Paul Miller, Asst. Inheritance Tax Atty., of San Francisco, for appellant.

M. B. Harris, E. M. Harris, and Harris & Harris, all of Fresno, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the state controller from an order declaring that a transfer of certain property made by the decedent, Herman Hugo Brix, in his lifetime, is not subject to an inheritance tax.

The transfers were made in the year 1913 and Brix at that time was about 48 years of age and in good health. He and his wife, Helena S. Brix, had been married more than 20 years before the transfers and had accumulated a large amount of community property, real and personal. They had three children, Emma M. Brix, who was born November 17, 1893, and two other children, Carl H. Brix and Theodore F. Brix, both of whom are minors. The decedent and his said wife were living together at the time, but the relations between them were strained, and she filed a suit against him for divorce about a year afterwards and obtained the divorce sued for.

The transfers in question consist of the following documents, which, for convenience of reference, we have numbered.

(1) A deed executed by Herman H. Brix, as grantor, conveying to Helena S. Brix, his wife, a life estate in three lots in Fresno, and to said three children the remainder therein after said life estate. This deed was dated March 3, 1913, and was recorded March 4, 1913.

(2) A deed executed by Herman H. Brix and Helena S. Brix, as grantors, conveying six lots in Fresno to Emma M. Brix, subject to a life estate reserved to Helena S. Brix. This deed is dated May 26, 1913, and was recorded June 9, 1913.

(3) A deed executed by Herman H. Brix and Helena S. Brix, as grantors, conveying seven lots in Fresno to said three children, subject to a life estate reserved to Herman H. Brix. This deed is dated May 26, 1913, and was recorded June 9, 1913.

(4) An agreement between Herman H. Brix and Helena S. Brix dated May 27, 1913. This refers to other papers executed by the parties "for the purpose of effecting a settlement of the property rights between said parties," and states that its recitals "are a part and portion of the agreements by which the parties hereto have mutually settled their respective property rights." It contains a covenant by Herman H. Brix to pay during his lifetime the sum of $500 per month to his said wife so long as she shall live, and after her death to the said children. It also mortgages the life estate of Herman H. Brix in the property described in deed (3) to secure payment of these monthly sums.

(5) A deed executed by Helena S. Brix, as grantor, dated May 27, 1913, by which she granted to Herman H. Brix, "his heirs and assigns forever, all the right, title, and interest which the grantor herein may have or acquire in any property hereinafter acquired by conveyance, bequest, or otherwise by the grantee herein and which is so received in the name of said grantee." This deed was recorded June 3, 1914.

(6) An agreement executed by Herman H. Brix and Helena S. Brix and dated May 27, 1913. This agreement recites that the parties are husband and wife and are living together as such and have accumulated properties and property interests, that they desire to divide their property interests and arrange that each shall have a separate income, and that certain properties shall, on the death of the respective parties, or either of them, revert to their children. It also declares, at some length, that this agreement is to be binding whether the parties continue to live together as husband and wife or separate, and whether either of them shall secure a divorce for any reason, or shall remain husband and wife, and that it is not made in contemplation either of a divorce or of their remaining husband and wife. It also recites that the above-mentioned documents, which we have numbered (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5), have been executed to carry out the agreement of the parties, and provides that the parties "do by these presents expressly waive any and all claims which they or either of them may have to any and all property now owned by either of said parties, and each of them do further expressly waive any and all claim to any and all property which either of them may acquire in any wise," and that "either of said parties may execute and deliver good and sufficient transfers of any and all property which they may own or may hereafter acquire, without the signature of the other party thereto, and such transfers shall be treated and considered as passing a good and sufficient title to such properties, regardless of the consideration of said transfer, and each of said parties hereto do expressly waive hereby any and all interest which they, or either of them, may have in or to any or all property, real or personal, now or hereafter owned by them, or either of them, or in which they or either of them may acquire any interest whatsoever." The agreement further declares that it is a complete settlement of all interests which either party may have or acquire in the property of the other, and that each party releases the other from payment of any costs, attorney's fees, or judgment which either might receive in any proceeding instituted by one against the other, and that Helena S. Brix waives any and all claims for alimony, attorney's fees, separate maintenance, and other costs in any divorce suit, or other suit, that may be brought by either, and waives any claim for further division of the property. It then provides again that it shall be binding, independent of whether the parties live togother or live separate without a divorce, or a divorce proceeding is instituted by either.

Helena S. Brix testified that the reason her husband gave her for the execution of the agreement was that it was done so that he would not have to consult her about his business matters, and that there was nothing said by him to her about a divorce or separation in connection with the agreement, at or before its execution. N. B. Harris, who was the attorney for Herman H. Brix in the matter, testified that Brix stated to him that his purpose was that he might be freed from the objections of Mrs. Brix to his handling is property, and that if she did not get a divorce he proposed to get one himself.

The inheritance tax appraiser, to whom the matter was first submitted, made a report finding that the above-mentioned transfers (1), (2), and (3) were not taxable as to the interest passing to Helena S. Brix thereby, but that as to the remainders passing to the children they were taxable. Upon objections by the children, the matter was heard by the superior court, and it adjudged that none of the transfers to the children made by said deeds (1), (2), and (3) was taxable. The controller has appealed from the whole of this judgment, but states in his brief that the appeal is not prosecuted as to the transfers numbered (1) and (2). This leaves only transfer No. (3) for consideration.

[1] As already stated, this transfer was made May 26, 1913. The deed appears to have been fully delivered and effective at the time it bears date. The taxability of the transfer must therefore be determined by the law in effect at that time. Hunt v. Wicht, 174 Cal. 209, 162 Pac. 639, L. R. A. 1917C, 961; Estate of Felton, 176 Cal. 669, 169 Pac. 362. The law in force at that time was the act of 1911. Stats. 1911, p. 713. That act imposes a tax on transfers "by deed, grant, bargain, sale, assignment or gift, made without valuable and adequate consideration in contemplation of the death of the grantor, vendor, assignor, or donor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after such death." Section 1. The court found that the transfer under consideration was made for a valuable and adequate consideration, that it was not made in contemplation of the death of the decedent, but that it was intended to take effect in possession and enjoyment at his death.

[2] The statute clearly requires two things to subject such a transfer to the tax: First, that it be without valuable and adequate consideration; and, second, that it be either in contemplation of death, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at death. This transfer, being subject to a life estate in the decedent, fulfills the second requirement in its second alternative, but the question is: Does it fulfill the first requirement; that is, was it made without valuable and adequate consideration?

Appellant does not deny that the consideration was valuable, but rests his case entirely on the contention that it was not adequate. The question thus arises: What does the statute mean by an adequate consideration? We are cited to Estate of Reynolds, 169 Cal. 600, 147 Pac. 268, as answering this question. The clause relating to the consideration first made its appearance in our inheritance tax law when the statute of 1911 was passed, but, as noted in the Reynolds Case, this addition to the statute did not actually change the law, but merely inserted in the statute the construction which the courts had already put upon the law without that phrase. In the Reynolds Case the deceased had given to his son a store business and property worth $100,000, and in return therefor the son had assumed his father's debts, amounting to $30,000, and agreed to pay his father an income of $600 per month during the father's life. At that time the father was, to the knowledge of all the parties, suffering from a mortal disease, from which he died about for months later. The lower court held that this transfer was made without valuable and adequate consideration. This court, in upholding the finding, said:

"If it can be said there was any element of valuable consideration received back by the father for his transfer to the son, it was certainly not adequate from any commercial point of view." (Italics ours.)

Appellant bases his argument largely on the words italicized. He also cites Abstract & Title Guaranty Co. v. State, 173 Cal. 691, 161 Pac. 264, and Estate of Felton, 176 Cal. 663, 169 Pac. 392. In the first of these cases the decedent, in his lifetime, had transferred all his property to a corporation owned by his sons, in consideration of the agreement of the corporation to care for and maintain him during the balance of his life. At the time of the transfer the grantor was 80 years of age and very feeble, and his physical condition was such that his death was likely to occur at any time, and it did occur about six months afterwards. The lower court found that this transfer was made without valuable and adequate consideration, and this court declared that the finding was sustained by sufficient evidence, but did not discuss the meaning of the statute. In the Felton Case a father had given to his son a certificate of stock in a corporation, reserving to himself the dividends thereon during his lifetime. The certificate was for 990 shares, but it appeared that prior to the transfer 136 of them really belonged to the son, only 728 to the father, and the balance to others. The trial court found that there was no adequate consideration for the transfer. On appeal it was argued that the surrender by the son to the father for his life of the dividends to accrue on the 136 shares belonging to the son was an adequate consideration for the transfer of the 728 shares owned by the father. This court upheld the finding that it was not adequate, citing Estate of Reynolds, supra, and said that, while the consideration granted might be valuable, it would not be adequate.

[3] In all of these cases it must be noted that the lower court held the consideration inadequate, and this court upheld the finding in each case; but here the lower court has found that the consideration was adequate, and this presents the matter to us in a different aspect. Even where there is no conflicting testimony, we are bound to uphold the finding if it can be supported upon any reasonable view of the evidence, although we might be inclined to think that the finding should have been the other way. The facts in the case cited are not at all like the present case, and none of them can be regarded as controlling here.

[4] The statement in Estate of Reynolds, supra, that the consideration was not adequate from a commercial point of view was not intended as a complete definition of adequacy of the consideration, but merely to indicate that the particular transaction there considered, being a sale of a going business, must be regarded from the same point of view as any commercial transaction. The inheritance tax act of 1917 defines the phrase "valuable and adequate consideration" as "a consideration equal in money or in money's worth to the full value of the property transferred." Stats. 1917, p. 882, § 2, subd. 3. Appellant claims that this amendment like those considered in Estate of Reynolds, supra, serves but to clarify without changing the pre-existing law. If the provision that such consideration must be "equal" in money or money's worth to the full value of the property does in any wise change the previous rule on the subject, the amendment cannot be applied to this case, which arose before its enactment. The use of the word "valuable" in the act of 1911 excludes considerations of love and affection such as were referred to in O'Hara v. Wattson, 172 Cal.

525, 157 Pac. 608, and in Magee v. Magee, 174 Cal. 281, 162 Pac. 1023, both of which were equity cases. But in other respects the court must view the transactions as they appeared to the parties and consider the conditions under which they acted and their purposes in the matter. We think the rule applicable in specific performance cases, so far as the mercenary side of it is concerned, should control. Considering the transactions in that light, this transfer, as will be shown, was made for an adequate consideration "in money's worth."

A contract cannot be specifically enforced against a party unless he has received an adequate consideration therefor. Civ. Code, § 3391. But it is well established that this section does not require exact equality of consideration. In Dore v. Southern Pac. Co., 163 Cal. 196, 124 Pac. 822, we said the rule as to adequacy of consideration requires—

"that the value of the land and the price to be paid are in reasonable approximation to equality. [Citing cases.] If the other party, with knowledge of such inequality as there may be, nevertheless desired to and freely did enter into the contract without any unfair advantage being taken of him, it will not be deemed inequitable as to him."

In O'Hara v. Wattson, 172 Cal. 525, 157 Pac. 608, the matter of adequacy of consideration, as it relates to the specific performance of contracts, was carefully considered by this court, and we there said on rehearing:

"It will not do to say that the consideration must be held inadequate unless the value of the property at the time of the contract, as the court finds it to be, exactly or even substantially equals the price fixed by the contract. The court must ascertain the value from the evidence, which ordinarily consists mainly of the opinions of witnesses. There are few subjects on which witnesses are more likely to differ than that of the value of property, and few are more difficult of satisfactory determination. Exact accuracy is not to be expected. And after the value is determined, the question of adequacy is not necessarily settled thereby, for other circumstances may affect the question. Undoubtedly the relations of the parties, and their love, affection, or regard for each other, as well as the object to be attained by the contract, may be given some effect. Just how far such matters should incline a court, in its sound discretion, to conclude that a price less than the value as found, is nevertheless adequate to justify specific performance, we cannot state by any general formula of words."

Again, in Schader v. White, 173 Cal. 446, 160 Pac. 560, where the lower court had found the consideration to be adequate, this court affirmed the decision, saying:

"Adequacy of price does not mean equality of price. An adequate consideration does not mean a consideration measuring to the fullest extent up to the value of the property. Each case must rest for determination upon its own facts, and equity will find adequacy or inadequacy after considering all of the circumstances appearing in each particular case."

[5] Turning now to the facts of the case, appellant claims that the only consideration received by the decedent for the transfer in question was a waiver by his wife of all her interest in the community property, and that this is not an adequate consideration, calling our attention in this connection to Spreckels v. Spreckels, 172 Cal. 775, 158 Pac. 537, and Dargie v. Patterson, 176 Cal. 714, 169 Pac. 360, and other earlier cases, holding that the title to the community property is in the husband, and that the wife has, during coverture, no more than a mere expectancy like that of an heir. This rule is not determinative of the present case. While the wife has no title to the community property nor estate or interest therein, yet she has rights in relation thereto, the surrender of which may constitute a valuable and, according to the circumstances of the case, an adequate consideration for the transfer. She has a "possible interest in whatever remains upon the dissolution of the community otherwise than by her own death." In re Burdick, 112 Cal. 393, 44 Pac. 735. Upon the death of the husband she takes one-half of the community property, and upon a divorce she may in a proper case be awarded even the whole of it. Civ. Code, §§ 1402, 146. If a divorce is granted without any disposition of the community property, the former wife becomes the owner of one-half of the community property as tenant in common with her former husband. De Godey v. De Godey, 39 Cal. 157; Biggi v. Biggi, 98 Cal. 35, 32 Pac. 803, 35 Am. St. Rep. 141; Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 Pac. 1064. If the husband makes a gift of community property without the wife's consent, she may upon his death recover from the donee one-half of the property so given. Civ. Code, § 172; Dargie v. Patterson, supra. The fact that she may thus attack a conveyance by the husband made without her consent, on the ground that it was a gift, has a practical application that renders it a great disadvantage to a husband not in cordial relations with his wife. It has become the universal custom with purchasers of real property to insist on her signature to all contracts relating thereto. The custom is so general that it is a matter of common knowledge of which the court may take judicial notice. 16 Cyc. 873; Irwin v. Phillips, 5 Cal. 146, 63 Am. Dec. 113; Goldsmith v. Sawyer, 46 Cal. 212; Storrs v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 134 Cal. 94, 66 Pac. 72; Grogan v. Chaffee, 156 Cal. 611, 105 Pac. 745, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 395. In the actual dealings of the husband in community real estate this gives her practical control or power of interference which may be a great burden to him. Where a husband and wife are not in accord, but live in strained relations, as was the case here, the adjustment of their relationship as to property so that this power of the wife to control, object, or interfere is taken away may be a consideration of very great pecuniary value to the husband and fully dequate for a transfer of valuable real estate.

The agreement pursuant to which the transfer in question was made amounted to more than a mere surrender by the wife of her interest in the community property. It was a complete alteration of the property relations between the parties, as authorized by section 159 of the Civil Code. Taking all the various documents together, they constituted an entire transaction by which the decedent and his wife provided for her support, divided their property interests, and settled and released all claims which either might or could have in the property of the other. The wife also thereby gave up the right which she would have by law to support out of her husband's property, other than that provided by the agreement, and her rights to alimony, costs, and attorney's fees in any divorce suit or separate maintenance or other suit between them. The testimony and the language of the agreement itself, coupled with the fact that their relations were strained, show that the parties contemplated a divorce as a possibility. In fact, the wife did obtain a divorce a little more than a year afterwards. If this agreement had not been made, she could have maintained a claim in her divorce suit for an award of at least one-half of the community property, besides attorney's fees, costs, and alimony. The evidence shows that the decedent at that time was possessed of property worth between $500,000 and $600,000. He died only two years and four months afterwards. The property transferred to the children, subject to a life estate in the wife, was worth $45,000, that transferred to the daughter, subject to a life estate in the wife, was worth $30,000, and the property transferred to the children, subject to a life estate in the decedent by deed (3) was worth $240,000. At his death the property still remaining in his hands was appraised at $259,000, making a total of $574,000. Of this estate he conveyed the whole fee in property worth only $75,000, agreed to pay an allowance of $500 per month during his life, and parted with the remainder here in question in property worth $240,000; while, on the other hand, he retained in sole ownership property worth $259,000, retained a life estate in property worth $240,000, and obtained a release of his wife's claims, not only to the property he retained, but to all other property which he might thereafter acquire, and became free from her interference in any dealings he might wish thereafter to make in property. We have no evidence of the value of the life estate of the decedent or of the annuity which he agreed to pay, but if it is computed according to the mortality tables on a 5 per cent. interest basis, taking the age of the decedent at 47 years, the present value in May, 1913, of the decedent's life estate would be $144,240, and that of the annuity of $600 per year would be $72,120. The value of the remainder is the difference between the whole value of the property transferred, $315,000, and that of his life estate, $144,240, which amounts to $170,760. The summary of the matter is that he parted with property worth $170,760, and assumed an obligation to pay sums equivalent to a present payment of $72,120, in consideration whereof he got a release from all of his wife's claims and power of interference, and retained property valued at $403,240. We think the foregoing facts are sufficient to support the finding that there was a valuable and adequate consideration for the transfer in question. A part of the consideration is not susceptible of exact valuation in money. Who can say how much it was worth to him in money to have his marital troubles settled in this way? He had a just expectancy of many years of life. It is apparent that the parties looked at the transaction from a pecuniary, and not a sentimental, standpoint. They evidently regarded the consideration as adequate, and they were in a much better position to place a value thereon than is this court.

Appellant seems to concede that the transfers made by deeds (1) and (2) were supported by an adequate consideration; for he makes no attack on the finding with regard thereto, but confines his objection to deed (3). No such distinction can be drawn between these various deeds. They constitute, with the other documents mentioned, a single transaction, to all parts of which the consideration extends in equal measure. No line can be drawn enabling us to say that, while one part of the transaction is supported by an adequate consideration, another part lacks such support.

Appellant also argues that the consideration for the transfer has failed because the former wife of the decedent is now claiming the share of his property which he gave her by his will. In support of this argument he makes several assertions of fact which do not appear in the record, and which, of course, we cannot consider. The record shows only that the decedent left a will, made before the property settlement, by which he gave all his property to his wife, but declared that the children were to have their share as soon as they became of age, and that the inheritance tax appraiser has found that the wife takes one-half of the property passing by the will and has assessed an inheritance tax against it. This is not sufficient to show that she is claiming under the will. She would have a right to one-half of the community property regardless of the will. At all events her claim against the property now is one made in fact against the heirs, and her mere effort to obtain property to which, under the agreement, she is not entitled, would not constitute a breach of the agreement on her part. It contains no covenant that she will not make or assert any unfounded claim.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCARTY v. MORE. (L. A. 5302.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENT ⟸588—NOT RES JUDICATA OF STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY WHERE ISSUES WERE IRRELEVANT TO SUBSEQUENT ACTION.

Where, in suit against a corporation, judgment was had against a stockholder for the apparent amount of his statutory liability, but judgment against the stockholder was vacated, and judgment entered in his favor after a trial, it cannot be said, in a subsequent action against the stockholder to subject the unpaid portion of his subscription to the debt evidenced by the judgment against the corporation, that the former judgment in favor of the stockholder is a bar, where, so far as appears from the record, the former judgment may have been based solely upon plaintiff's failure to establish the statutory liability, and may have been determined altogether upon issues wholly irrelevant and immaterial in the present proceeding.

2. STIPULATIONS ⟸14(9) — STIPULATION SUFFICIENT TO PUT IN EVIDENCE LAWS OF OTHER STATE.

In an action to enforce statutory liability of a stockholder of a corporation formed in Nevada, where plaintiff failed to plead the corporation laws of that state, it cannot be said that a finding of due incorporation is unsupported, and that there was no foundation for admission in evidence of articles of incorporation, where a copy of the laws of Nevada was submitted to the trial judge following the submission of the case, it being stipulated that the document submitted contained a full and correct copy of laws relative to the facts necessary to be set forth in articles of incorporation, the fair intendment of such stipulation being that the said copy of laws should be considered as in evidence.

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸243(2)—RECORD STOCKHOLDER LIABLE TO CREDITORS.

One who appeared on the books of a corporation as owner of a certain number of shares of stock was the legal owner of the shares, and was liable as such to the creditors of the corporation, although he had surrendered his stock for cancellation.

4. CORPORATIONS ⟸261 — DEMAND ON DIRECTORS TO LEVY ASSESSMENT UNNECESSARY TO ENFORCE STATUTORY LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Where a judgment is had against a corporation and execution is returned unsatisfied, a demand on the directors of the corporation to levy an assessment to meet the obligation on the judgment is not necessary before bringing suit against a stockholder, on the theory that the unpaid portion of the stockholder's subscription to the capital stock is an asset which can be reached to satisfy the debt.

5. CORPORATIONS ⟸216 — STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY FIXED BY LAW OF STATE OF INCORPORATION.

The obligation of a stockholder in a corporation is fixed by the law of the state under which the corporation was formed.

6. CORPORATIONS ⟸89(4) — CALLS MAY BE MADE ON STOCK WHEN AMOUNT SUBSCRIBED AUTHORIZES CORPORATION TO DO BUSINESS.

The provision in the Nevada law (Rev. Laws, § 1108) that authorizes a corporation formed thereunder to commence business when $1,000 of the capital stock is subscribed if the corporators express an election to do so in the articles of incorporation is tantamount to an authorization to levy assessments on unpaid subscriptions when $1,000 of the capital stock is subscribed, and it is the will of the corporators that business be then undertaken, as authority to do business implies authority to contract debts, and authority to contract debts implies authority to make calls to satisfy them.

7. CORPORATIONS ⟸224—AMOUNT OF SUBSCRIPTIONS NECESSARY TO RENDER STOCKHOLDERS LIABLE FOR DEBTS.

Where the articles of incorporation under the laws of Nevada (Rev. Laws, § 1108), state facts raising an irresistible inference that corporators intended to commence to do business with $1,000 of subscribed capital stock, there was at least a substantial compliance with the requirement of the statute that the articles of incorporation should set forth the amount of subscribed stock with which the corporation was to commence business, and the stockholders became liable to assessments to pay debts of the corporation on unpaid subscriptions when $1,000 of the capital stock was subscribed.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by Charles R. McCarty against John F. More. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. Defendant dying during the pendency of the appeal, his administrator, John F. More, was substituted in his place. Affirmed.

Wm. G. Griffith, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Earl Curtis Peck, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff. The original defendant herein, John F. More, has died during the pendency of the appeal, and John F. More, the administrator of the estate of the deceased, has been substituted in his place.

On May 13, 1915, plaintiff, as assignee of various creditors of the Black Hawk Mining Company of New Mexico, recovered judgment against the corporation in the sum of $2,115.59. In the same action judgment was recovered against the deceased in the sum of $374.45, this sum apparently having been considered as the amount of the statutory liability of the deceased as a stockholder in the corporation. An order was made, vacating the judgment against More, and, after a trial of the action, judgment was entered in his favor. In the meantime execution had been issued against the corporation, and had been returned unsatisfied. Plaintiff thereupon instituted the present action against More, wherein he sought to recover on the theory that the unpaid portion of More's subscription to the capital stock of the corporation was an asset which could be reached by him to satisfy the debt evidenced by the judgment against the corporation.

[1] We cannot say that the judgment in favor of More in the action instituted by the plaintiff against the corporation and More is a bar to the present action. So far as appears from the record herein, that judgment may have been based solely upon plaintiff's failure to establish More's statutory liability, and may therefore have been determined altogether upon issues wholly irrelevant and immaterial in the present proceeding. In such case the doctrine of res judicata would obviously have no application.

[2] It is claimed that, by reason of plaintiff's failure to plead or prove the laws of the state of Nevada pursuant to which the corporation was formed, the finding of the due incorporation of the Black Hawk Mining Company of New Mexico is unsupported by the evidence, and that there was no foundation for the admission in evidence of the articles of incorporation of said company. It appears from the record, however, that a copy of the laws of Nevada was submitted to the trial judge following the submission of the case, it being stipulated that the document submitted contained a full and correct copy of the laws of the state of Nevada, relative to the facts necessary to be set forth in the articles of incorporation of corporations organized under the laws of said state. The fair intendment of this stipulation was, we think, that the said copy of the laws of the state of Nevada should be considered as in evidence in the case.

[3] Appellant also contends that the evidence does not support the finding that More was at all times since the 20th day of March, 1913, a subscriber to and the owner of 8,750 shares of the stock of the corporation. In this behalf reliance is placed upon testimony to the effect that before May 13, 1915, More had surrendered his stock for cancellation. It appears, however, that More appeared on the books of the corporation as owner of 8,750 shares of stock from March, 1913, down to the date of the trial. During this time he continued, of course, to be the legal owner of the shares, and was liable as such to the creditors of the corporation.

[4] It is insisted that plaintiff should have pleaded and proved a demand on the directors of the corporation to levy an assessment to meet the obligation on the judgment. It is well settled that such a demand is not necessary. Daggett v. Southwest Packing Co., 155 Cal. 762, 764, 103 Pac. 204.

[5-7] Defendant finally contends that plaintiff should have alleged and proved that at least one-fourth of the stock of the corporation had been subscribed, such subscription being, so it is urged, a condition precedent to the liability of a stockholder to pay for his stock. Conceding, without undertaking to decide the point, that such might be the rule in the case of a California corporation, and that if the obligation of a stockholder in this behalf were to be tested by the common law it should appear that all of the stock had been subscribed in order to show a liability on his part to make payments on his contract of subscription, nevertheless the fact remains that the obligation of More in the instant case was fixed by the Nevada law, and that that law authorizes a corporation formed thereunder to commence business when $1,000 of the capital stock is subscribed if the corporators express an election to do so in the articles of incorporation. This provision is tantamount to an authorization to levy assessments on unpaid subscriptions when $1,000 of the capital stock is subscribed and it is the will of the corporators that business be then undertaken. Authority to do business implies authority to contract debts, and authority to contract debts implies authority to make calls to satisfy them. Plaintiff alleged and proved that much more than $1,000 of the capital stock had been subscribed, and, while the articles of incorporation do not contain an express statement of intent on the part of the corporators to commence to do business with $1,000 of subscribed capital stock, that such was in fact their intent is an irresistible inference from the facts and figures set forth by them. Taken as a whole, the articles of incorporation evidence an unquestionable intent to embark at once upon the business contemplated by the corporators, while from the fifth paragraph of the articles it appears that $1,000 of the capital stock had been subscribed. This unmistakable expression of intent to commence business with $1,000 of subscribed capital stock was at least a substantial compliance with the requirement of the statute that the articles of incorporation should set forth the amount of subscribed capital stock with which the corporation was to commence business. It follows that from the very moment of its existence the corporation was authorized under the Nevada law to do business and contract debts and the stockholders were liable to respond to calls to satisfy those debts. Plaintiff has therefore sufficiently established More's liability to make payments upon the unpaid portion of his subscription to the stock of the company to meet the claims of its creditors.

The judgment is affirmed.

HURLBERT v. TITLE INSURANCE & TRUST CO. (L. A. 5343.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1919.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸118—EXECUTOR NEED NOT PAY ASSESSMENT ON STOCK PASSING TO JOINT TENANT BY SURVIVORSHIP.

The executor of a deceased joint tenant who lists in the inventory corporate stock purchased by deceased with funds belonging to the joint tenants does not have the legal title and owes no duty to the survivor to protect the stock from sale for nonpayment of assessments levied during pendency of a suit by the survivor against the executor in which the survivor established his title.

2. JOINT TENANCY ⟸6—SURVIVOR'S TITLE DATES FROM PURCHASE.

The survivor's title to corporate stock held in joint tenancy does not vest in him on the death of his cotenant, who purchased the property with funds belonging to them, but his title exists from the time of the purchase.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸118—RELATION TO SURVIVING JOINT TENANT IMPOSING NO DUTY TO PAY ASSESSMENTS ON STOCK.

Though executor of deceased joint tenant listed in the inventory stock purchased by deceased with funds belonging to the joint tenants, the relation of executor and legatee did not exist between survivor and executor prior to judgment in suit against executor establishing survivor's title, and therefore executor owed no duty to the survivor to protect the stock from sale for nonpayment of assessments levied pending the suit.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸118—EXECUTOR NOT BAILEE OF STOCK PASSING TO SURVIVING JOINT TENANT.

Though executor of a deceased joint tenant listed in inventory stock purchased by deceased with funds belonging to the joint tenants, and had official custody of the muniment of title, he was not a bailee liable to the survivor for loss resulting from failure to pay delinquent assessments, during pendency of a suit in which the survivor established his title.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by Theron L. Hurlbert against the Title Insurance & Trust Company. From a judgment entered after demurrer to his complaint had been sustained without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles M. Ackerman and Julius Smidt, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Erle M. Leaf, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered after demurrer to his complaint had been sustained without leave to amend.

In the complaint the following facts were, in substance, alleged: During the lifetime of Lillian D. Hoag, now deceased, she and her brother, the plaintiff, held certain property in joint tenancy over which she, with plaintiff's consent, assumed entire control. Without his knowledge she had used some of the joint funds to purchase 21 shares of stock in El Sobrante Land Company (a corporation), of the par value of $2,100. On May 14, 1914, she died testate, and on June 13, 1914, her will naming defendant as executor was duly admitted to probate and letters testamentary were issued. Thereafter defendant filed an inventory of her estate in which the 21 shares of stock were listed. On October 22, 1914, an assessment of $3 a share was levied on the said stock, and on December 15, 1914, said stock was sold for failure to pay the said assessment. On November 15, 1914, plaintiff began an action for a decree that all the property listed in the inventory was in fact the identical property accumulated by him and his sister in joint tenancy. Thereafter he prevailed in said suit, establishing his sole ownership in all the property, including the stock, by right of survivorship. On June 17, 1916, defendant was discharged from the office of executor, and not until the following day did plaintiff acquire possession of his property and the papers which had been in the executor's possession. Plaintiff pleaded that he had no knowledge of the assessment or sale of the stock and no opportunity to redeem the shares, and that defendant resisted all his efforts to obtain control of the property until judgment was rendered in his favor. After the certificate came into his possession he discovered upon due and prompt investigation that it was worthless. At the time of sale (as alleged in the pleading), when the shares could have been redeemed, they were worth $150 a share. Negligence of the defendant was alleged upon the ground that it failed to pay the assessment, having ample means in the estate with which to discharge it, that it neglected to protect the stock from sale, and that it failed to redeem said stock while resisting plaintiff's lawful demand for the property. The amount prayed for as damages is $3,150, the alleged value of the shares lost to him.

Respondent invokes the doctrine that there can be no actionable negligence without the existence of a corresponding duty upon the part of the persons against whom the negligence is charged, citing in that behalf Schmidt v. Bauer, 80 Cal. 565, 22 Pac. 256, 5 L. R. A. 580; People v. Perkins, 85 Cal. 509–511, 26 Pac. 245; Toomey v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 86 Cal. 374, 24 Pac. 1074, 10 L. R. A. 139; Kennedy v. Chase, 119 Cal. 637, 52 Pac. 33, 63 Am. St. Rep. 153; and Buckley v. Gray, 110 Cal. 339, 42 Pac. 900, 31 L. R. A. 862, 52 Am. St. Rep. 88.

[1-3] It is clear from the facts pleaded that the defendant, neither as executor of the estate of Lillian D. Hoag nor as bailee of the stock for appellant, owed any duty to Theron L. Hurlbert in the matter of preserving the stock from sale by paying the assessment. Appellant contends that the legal title was in respondent until the termination of his suit for possession of the property held in joint tenancy. This contention is without merit. The legal title did not even vest in plaintiff on the death of his joint tenant. His title existed from the beginning. Hannon v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 12 Cal. App. 350–355, 107 Pac. 335; Estate of Gurnsey, 177 Cal. 211, 170 Pac. 402. In no true sense, therefore, did the relation of executor and legatee exist between the parties hereto prior to judgment in the action of plaintiff in which his standing as joint tenant with his sister was judicially established. By his action he was strenuously asserting his title. Defendant, without fraud, was resisting his claims because it was bound so to do as executor of the estate of Hoag. Defendant was not responsible for plaintiff's ignorance of the facts regarding the stock and its value. It had listed the stock in its inventory. It is true that defendant had custody of the certificate, but the certificate is not the stock. It is merely an evidence of the title. By his pleading appellant alleged that the stock stood in the name of his sister, and that a notice of assessment was mailed to Lillian D. Hoag at her last-known place of residence. It therefore appears that the stock was never transferred to respondent on the books of the corporation. Appellant became the sole owner of the stock upon the death of his sister. He so asserted. He so sued. And he so prevailed in his action against the executor. His whole claim was inconsistent with any real relationship of beneficiary under the will and executor subsisting between him and defendant. Respondent therefore owed no duty to appellant in its capacity as executor.

[4] Respondent was not a bailee of the stock, although it had official custody of the muniment of title. But it held neither title nor possession of the property itself. While the stock was yet unsold and might have been redeemed plaintiff sued respondent, alleging that he was the owner of this identical property. He eventually established that fact, yet he now complains because respondent failed to deal with the property in a manner which would have been justified only, if at all, by the fact that it was of the assets of the estate. True, it took a long time for plaintiff to establish his rights as a joint tenant, but respondent was not responsible for "the law's delay." It was the plaintiff's privilege to assume the payment of the assessment or to do anything else for the protection of his stock. The mere fact that his sister's death left him as the sole owner of the property could not relieve him of his responsibilities as the owner and cast them upon respondent, whose only claim was due to the fact that plaintiff himself had permitted the stock and all other property jointly owned by him and his sister to be held in her name only.

The judgment is affirmed.

MURPHY v. DAVIDS et al. (L. A. 5280.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1919. Rehearing Denied Jan. 15, 1920.)

1. EMBEZZLEMENT ⊂⊃44(2)—ACQUITTAL SUSTAINED BY EVIDENCE.

Evidence in a prosecution for felony embezzlement held to justify the jury in finding that no criminal intent was proven on the part of the accused, and that the application of moneys in his hands was with the full knowledge and acquiescence of all persons concerned.

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⊂⊃71(4) — BONA FIDES OF ACTION UPON COUNSEL'S ADVICE QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for malicious prosecution, whether or not defendants acted bona fide upon counsel's advice concerning the arrest of plaintiff held for the jury.

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⊂⊃21(2)—ADVICE OF COUNSEL NO DEFENSE IF CLIENT DOES NOT BELIEVE IN GUILT.

Advice of counsel is no defense in an action for malicious prosecution, if the person who pretends that he acted upon it did not believe the accused was guilty.

4. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⊂⊃64(1) — DEFENDANT'S INSTIGATION OF PROSECUTION NOT SHOWN.

In an action for damages for malicious prosecution, evidence held sufficient to justify a finding that a defendant who appeared as a witness in the criminal case was the real instigator of the prosecution.

⊂⊃For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

5. EVIDENCE ⊂⊃211—TESTIMONY IN ANOTHER PROCEEDING ADMISSIBLE AS ADMISSION.

In an action for malicious prosecution, where defendant denied that he did take part in the prosecution, but was a mere witness, parts of the testimony of defendant, taken at the preliminary examination in the prosecution, was admissible, where it contained admissions regarding defendant's connection with the institution of the transaction, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3.

6. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⊂⊃59(4) — PROOF OF GOOD REPUTATION OF PLAINTIFF ADMISSIBLE ON QUESTION OF PROBABLE CAUSE.

In suits for malicious prosecution, the good reputation of the plaintiff may be proven in chief as having a direct bearing on the question of probable cause, especially when such reputation is known to the defendant.

7. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⊂⊃59(9) — TESTIMONY AS TO BELIEF IN GUILT ADMISSIBLE.

In an action for damages for malicious prosecution, defendant may testify that he believed plaintiff to be guilty at the time he instituted the criminal proceeding.

8. EVIDENCE ⊂⊃472(7)—CONCLUSION AS TO HONESTY OF DEFENDANT IN MALICIOUS PROSECUTION CASE INADMISSIBLE.

In an action for damages for malicious prosecution, the court properly sustained an objection, on the ground that it called for a conclusion of the witness, to the question to defendant, "Did you honestly in your conversation with them (attorneys) state to them everything that you knew or had learned touching that matter?" the question of defendants' honesty being for the jury.

9. TRIAL ⊂⊃296(2)—INSTRUCTION NOT ERRONEOUS AS TO PROBABLE CAUSE IN VIEW OF OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for malicious prosecution, instruction was not erroneous as leaving to the jury the question of the existence of probable cause, there being other instructions telling the jury that the question of probable cause was one of law, with which they had nothing to do.

10. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⊂⊃21(2)—FACTS WHICH MUST BE PROCURED AND DISCLOSED TO ATTORNEY.

To avoid liability for damages for malicious prosecution, one is not required, in addition to stating to his legal advisor all the material facts of the case of which he has knowledge, to go further and use diligence in the procurement of other facts; but if he has reason to believe that there are other facts bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the accused, he must either disclose that belief, or himself make inquiry to ascertain the facts in relation to the matter.

11. TRIAL ⊂⊃89—REFUSAL TO STRIKE HEARSAY TESTIMONY PROPER IN VIEW OF INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN.

Where a witness testified as to a conversation with one of two defendants, in which such defendant stated that the other defendant had made certain statements, and the court told the jury that the conversation could not bind the other defendant, court did not err in subsequently refusing to grant a motion to strike such testimony.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by M. A. Murphy against E. M. Davids and another. Judgment for plaintiff and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck, Joseph Citron, Swanwick & Donnelly, and Gray, Barker & Bowen, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, Byron Waters, of San Bernardino, and Victor T. Watkins, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment for $10,000 actual and $5,000 punitive damages in an action for malicious prosecution.

On August 11, 1915, E. M. Davids swore to a complaint, charging M. A. Murphy (respondent herein) and M. W. Findley with felony embezzlement. After a preliminary examination both Murphy and Findley were discharged. It was charged in the criminal complaint that the defendants therein, on October 25, 1913, being intrusted with and having in their control $4,000, as trustees and agents of the First National Bank of Los Angeles and Lycurgus Lindsay, feloniously embezzled, converted, and appropriated said sum of money to their own use, and to uses and purposes not in the due and lawful execution of their trust as such trustees and agents.

The complaint in the civil action set forth the circumstances of the charge against plaintiff and his arrest, examination, and discharge. It is alleged in this pleading that defendants maliciously and without probable cause instigated the criminal action; that all of the allegations therein were false; and that defendants were guilty of oppression and fraud in bringing the criminal action. There were elaborate allegations of damage by reason of the prosecution and its consequent publicity.

The answer of defendant Davids negatived the material allegations of the complaint, and further alleged that on or about April 28, 1913, and thereafter, M. A. Murphy and M. W. Findley were secretary and president, respectively, of the Independent Sewer Pipe Company; that they were acting as the managers and agents of that corporation; that as such managers and agents they had entered into a contract to furnish terra cotta for the Merchants' National Bank Building, in Los Angeles; and that while this contract was in full force Murphy and Findley assigned it, attaching to said contract the following agreement:

"Los Angeles, Cal., April 28, 1913.

"The Independent Sewer Pipe Company herewith transfers the within payments on terra cotta contract hereto attached (the original of which is now on file in the county clerk's office in Los Angeles County) to be furnished for the Merchants' National Bank Building, to be erected at the corner of Spring and Sixth Streets.

"It is understood and agreed that all payments on the attached contract shall be paid into the First National Bank, and the same shall be applied on payments of notes now held by the First National Bank.

"Independent Sewer Pipe Company,
"By M. W. Findley, President.
"By M. A. Murphy, Secretary."

It was further alleged that thereafter, and prior to the filing of the complaint in the criminal action, Findley and Murphy received $4,000 under the contract for furnishing terra cotta for the Merchants' National Bank Building, "which said $4,000 said Findley and Murphy, and each of them, failed, refused, and neglected to pay into or deposit with said First National Bank, but, on the contrary, said Findley and Murphy, and each of them, converted said $4,000 to other and different uses"; that thereafter Davids visited the office of Paul Schenck, Esq., an attorney at law; that he presented the several contracts and agreements to Mr. Schenck, "and also made a full, fair, and truthful statement of all the facts that had come to his knowledge at said time with reference to, and bearing upon, the question of the compliance of said Findley and Murphy with each and all of said contracts and agreements"; and that after Mr. Schenck read the contracts, heard the statement of defendant, Davids, and made some independent investigation into the facts of the case, the said attorney advised defendant, Davids, that the statement and facts showed that Findley and Murphy were guilty of embezzlement. There is a further averment that Mr. Schenck placed before the district attorney and his deputies the statement of facts obtained from defendant Davids and from his own independent investigation, and that after careful consideration of the facts so presented, the district attorney and his deputies gave to defendant Davids their opinions that the said facts and acts warranted the prosecution of Findley and Murphy on a charge of embezzlement; and that upon the opinion and advice of Mr. Schenck and the district attorney and his deputies, defendant Davids swore to the complaint in the criminal action.

Defendant Lycurgus Lindsay, by his answer, asserted that he did not influence or instigate or advise "the making, swearing to, or filing of said complaint" in the criminal action. He followed the answer of his codefendant Davids, in the allegations touching the assignment of the contract for terra cotta and the failure to pay the $4,000 collected by Murphy and Findley, and the advice of Mr. Schenck to said Davids.

The cause was tried upon the issues thus joined, and the jury, in response to special interrogatories, found that defendant Davids swore to the criminal complaint at the suggestion or with the knowledge of defendant Lindsay; that Mr. Schenck was acting as defendant Lindsay's attorney in advising defendant Davids to file the criminal complaint; that both defendants were actuated by malice; that neither of defendants stated to Mr. Schenck in full the facts and circumstances before the bringing of said criminal action; that Mr. Schenck did not make a complete investigation of the material facts, in addition to what was told him by one or both of defendants, before the criminal complaint was sworn to; that neither defendants nor Mr. Schenck stated to the district attorney all the material facts in the case before the criminal complaint was filed; that defendants did not rely entirely upon the advice of the attorneys in filing said complaint; and that neither of the defendants honestly believed M. A. Murphy guilty of the crime charged. The answer of the jury to a question involving the facts and circumstances which defendants failed to state to Mr. Schenck was as follows:

"They did not fully inform Mr. Schenck that Mr. Lindsay had agreed to furnish the money necessary to enable the Independent Sewer Pipe Company to carry through the contract with the Merchants' Fireproof Building Company.

"They did not fully inform Mr. Schenck that Mr. Lindsay, before going to New Orleans, had authorized Mr. Findley to telegraph him for more money in connection with the Merchants' Fireproof Building contract in case it was needed.

"They did not inform Mr. Schenck that Mr. Lindsay had telegraphed the First National Bank of L. A. that he expected to be able to take over the $7,000 loan by himself when he returned to Los Angeles.

"They did not inform Mr. Schenck that the resolution adopted by the Independent Sewer Pipe Company April 28, 1913, pledged to the First National Bank of Los Angeles the terra-cotta contract with the Merchants' Fireproof Building Company as collateral for the said note ($12,500), or any other liability or liabilities of the said corporation to the said First National Bank of Los Angeles due, or to become due, or that may be hereafter contracted."

Appellants contend: First, that embezzlement was committed by plaintiff; second, that in any event there was probable cause for defendant Davids to swear to the criminal complaint; third, that no malice towards Murphy or Findley was cherished by either defendant; and, fourth, that Lindsay had nothing to do with the matter except as a witness.

In support of their first contention appellants assert that Murphy and Findley wanted to borrow money for their company, the Independent Sewer Pipe Company; that they could not do so without Lindsay's indorsement; that he refused such indorsement unless offered some protection; that the corporation expected to collect in due course $33,990 under the building contract; that Murphy and Findley agreed that if Lindsay would indorse the corporation's note and the bank would loan $12,500 thereon, they would cause the corporation to hypothecate the building contract as collateral security to the bank for said note; that this was done, and thereafter Murphy and Findley collected all the money due under the contract, and despite the protests of Messrs. Lindsay and Davids, they placed it in the general account of the corporation, and checked it out for general expenses, including their own salaries. Further, they contend that it makes no difference whether or not the sum of $4,000 specified in the complaint in the criminal action was appropriated to the personal use of Messrs. Murphy and Findley or either of them, but that it is sufficient to satisfy the statute if (as they assert is the fact) it was appropriated to any use or purpose "not in the due and lawful execution" of the trust. Penal Code, § 506.

The trouble with the statement of facts set forth in the opening brief of appellants is that it omits many essential matters.

It appears from the record that there was testimony supporting the following conclusions as to matters of fact:

From the organization of the Independent Sewer Pipe Company in 1911 until February 16, 1915, M. W. Findley was president, Lycurgus Lindsay (one of the defendants herein) was vice president, and M. A. Murphy (plaintiff) was secretary and treasurer. Defendant Lycurgus Lindsay had been personally guaranteeing some of the loans made to the corporation. Money had been borrowed from the First National Bank, which was the holder of a note for $70,000, personally indorsed by Mr. Lindsay, Mr. Findley, and Mr. Murphy. A time came when there was the prospect of a large contract for terra cotta (the one afterwards secured). Mr. Lindsay went to the factory and talked to Mr. Findley, the president of the corporation, from whom he learned that the corporation had neither sufficient equipment nor funds with which to undertake the project. He agreed to furnish the money, and finally it was determined that the corporation should borrow $12,500. Before this transaction was consummated a resolution was duly passed, authorizing the borrowing of said sum and the pledging with the First National Bank of the contract for terra cotta as security for the corporation's note for $12,500, "or any other liability or liabilities of the said corporation to the said First National Bank of Los Angeles, due or to become due or that may be hereafter contracted." This resolution was thoroughly well known to both defendant Davids and to defendant Lindsay (who is the former's father-in-law). The note for $12,500 was indorsed like the one for $70,000, by the president, vice president, and secretary of the corporation. Subsequently, and before any payments on the terra cotta contract had been made, more money was needed by the corporation to carry on the business, and the president talked with Mr. Lindsay about raising it. The vice president was about to leave the city, but he said that if the necessary money could not be raised without his guaranty to wire him for it. This was done, and on October 9, 1913, the following telegram was received from New Orleans:

"First National Bank, Los Angeles, California.

"Findley wires me of needs for factory seven thousand dollars. I will guarantee same. Expect to be able to take lone over myself in return. L. Lindsay."

The money was loaned upon the corporation's note for $7,000, backed by the telegram. This note was not personally indorsed by either Mr. Murphy or Mr. Findley.

It will be seen from the foregoing that the assigned contract for about $33,000 was pledged as security equally for the notes for $70,000, $12,500, and $7,000.

On October 25, 1913, the first payment on the contract for terra cotta was made. The amount was for $4,000 (the very sum specified in the criminal complaint as embezzled by Messrs. Murphy and Findley). Subsequent installments were paid until the whole amount had been received by the corporation on April 9, 1914. This was all placed to the credit of the Independent Sewer Pipe Company in the First National Bank—a fact known to the defendants in this action. Indeed, E. M. Davids himself collected and deposited nearly $27,000 of this money. He and his father-in-law both were in a position to know that this money was used in the operation of the business of the corporation. Both knew that the $7,000 had been paid, before the arrest of the two officers of the corporation, from the funds to the credit of the Independent Sewer Pipe Company in the First National Bank. It is to be remembered that this note carried no personal obligation (as did the other two) of the two officers, Findley and Murphy, who, under a general authorization of the corporation, signed the check for its payment. It was in evidence that the payment of this smaller note, instead of anything on account of the note for $12,500, was approved by Mr. Lindsay and by the bank. Both E. M. Davids and Lycurgus Lindsay knew that part of the money collected on the contract for terra cotta was used in the ordinary business of the company. Indeed, the latter testified as follows:

"Q. You did know, as a matter of fact, that what application had been made of that money was in the general running of the company and the paying of expenses, did you not? A. Yes, sir."

It was not until after Mr. Lindsay had been compelled to pay the two notes for $70,000 and $12,500 that the prosecution was undertaken.

[1] From the foregoing it is quite evident that the jury was amply justified in believing, as did the magistrate before whom plaintiff (then defendant in the criminal case) was examined, that no criminal intent was proven on the part of Mr. Murphy, and that the application of the moneys received from the contract was with the knowledge and acquiescence of all the persons concerned. In this connection it is to be remembered that the assigned contract was in the bank's possession, and the bank had the right to collect and apply the moneys had it seen fit so to do.

We next will consider the position of defendants with reference to probable cause. Before the complaint in the criminal action was filed, both E. M. Davids and Lycurgus Lindsay were advised by Mr. Schenck and by certain prosecuting officers, yet the jury found, as we have indicated above, that full and free disclosure of all the facts was not made either to private or to public counsel and that neither the complaining witness nor his father-in-law honestly believed either Mr. Murphy or his associate guilty of embezzlement.

There are elaborate discussions in the briefs upon the matter of the support (or lack of it) in the testimony for the special findings. It will not be necessary, however, to review the record in which, as respondent asserts, the evidence concerning the special findings of the jury is sufficiently conflicting to warrant the court in refusing to interfere with said findings. If the defendants did not rely upon the advice of Mr. Schenck regarding the guilt of the president and secretary of the corporation of the crime of embezzlement, there was a want of probable cause which was sufficient to defeat the defense of "advice of counsel." The jury found that neither Mr. Davids nor Mr. Lindsay relied entirely on advice of counsel. That they did not rely upon the advice of counsel and did not believe in the guilt of Mr. Murphy and his associate were conclusions that the jury was justified in reaching. Although defendant Lindsay swore that he had nothing to do with swearing to the complaint, or suggesting that Davids swear to it, plaintiff showed that, upon cross-examination at the preliminary examination, he had made the admissions indicated by the following answers to the questions set forth below:

"Q. Didn't you suggest that it would be better for him to do it than you? A. I think I suggested—they were threatening about this case, if it was brought up they were going to sue me for damages. That is the only thing I talked about the matter. Q. And therefore that this prosecution should be commenced? A. I did not say anything about that. Q. Who did you say was threatening to sue you for damages? A. None of them threatened me, but that was the talk, and some of their friends came to me and said that if I took this up I would be laying myself liable for damages. Q. Did you tell that to Mr. Davids? A. I don't remember whether I told that to Mr. Davids. Q. It was a conversation with Mr. Davids I was asking you about. A. I think it was Mr. Davids spoke to me about it. Q. He reported it to you? A. Yes, sir."

[2, 3] At the trial of this case the same defendant, after stating that the prosecution had been commenced after the attorney employed by him had examined the books of the corporation, gave testimony as indicated below:

"Q. Did your attorney, after that examination, report to you that he had found any evidence that Mr. Findley or Mr. Murphy had converted any portion of that money to their own personal use? A. I do not remember whether—I couldn't say that they had. Q. Did your attorney report to you, after that examination, anything to the contrary, anything other than that they had deposited every cent of it in the First National Bank? A. They reported to me that they had not applied it on the note. Q. Simply that they had not applied it on the $12,500 note? He did not report to you that they had applied it to any purpose of their own? A. That I couldn't say; he did not report to me how they had applied it."

The evidence showed that defendant Davids had the same knowledge of the affairs of the corporation as did his father-in-law, and it follows that neither of them depended upon advice of counsel, knowing, as they did, that no crime had really been committed. Whether or not defendants acted bona fide upon counsel's advice is a question for the jury. Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 217. Advice of counsel is no defense if the person who pretends that he acted upon it did not believe the accused was guilty. Vann v. McCreary, 77 Cal. 434, 19 Pac. 826. We are convinced that the defense of "probable cause" in this case was properly held to be unavailing.

There was a showing of malice towards Messrs. Murphy and Findley. The arrest of plaintiff, Murphy, and Findley occurred after there had been litigation adverse to the interests of defendant Lindsay, which he believed to have been instigated by them. This and other circumstances connected with the case, notably the continuance of friendly business relations among all the parties long after these defendants knew all of the facts concerning the alleged "embezzlement," justify the reasonable deduction that a desire for revenge, growing out of business differences, was the real motive for the prosecution.

[4] That defendant Lindsay was something more than a mere witness in the criminal case was also properly deducible from the evidence. Admittedly, he employed special counsel for the prosecution and conferred with counsel and with his son-in-law upon the various aspects of the case. True, he asserted that he believed that the prosecution, if any, would be by indictment, but the testimony was, we believe, sufficient to justify the conclusion that he was the real instigator of the prosecution by complaint.

[5] Certain alleged errors of law are specified by appellants. First of these was the offering and receiving of certain portions of defendant Lindsay's testimony taken at the preliminary examination in the case of People, etc., v. Findley and Murphy. The contention is that such testimony may not be used unless the witness be deceased or otherwise unavailable (citing 2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1416). The parts of the transcript admitted in evidence were not offered as a deposition in lieu of the testimony of a witness, but as admissions of the defendant Lindsay regarding his connection with the institution of the prosecution. It was clearly admissible upon the issues joined by plaintiff's averment that he did take part therein and his own denial of that allegation. Section 1870, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc.; Macomber v. Bigelow, 126 Cal. 9, 58 Pac. 312.

Testimony regarding plaintiff's good reputation in the community was admitted in advance of any attack by defendants upon such reputation. This is specified as error upon the authority of Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143–185, 116 Pac. 530, and 1 Wharton's Law of Evidence, § 50. Respondent's counsel contend that the rule in cases of malicious prosecution is different from that ordinarily applicable in other actions, and that it admits proof of his good character as a part of plaintiff's case. In this behalf they cite Thurkettle v. Frost, 137 Mich. 115, 100 N. W. 283, 4 Ann. Cas. 836, 839, 840, and Calhoun v. Bell, 136 La. 149, 66 South. 761, Ann. Cas. 1916D, at pages 1168, 1169.

[6] We are constrained to follow the rule declared in the opinions in those cases, supported as it is by the great weight of authority that in suits for damages because of malicious prosecution the good reputation of the plaintiff has a direct bearing on the question of probable cause, and may therefore be proven in chief, especially when such reputation is known to the defendant or defendants.

[7, 8] The court sustained respondent's objection to the question propounded by the attorneys for the defendants: "Did you honestly, in your conversations with them, state to them everything that you knew or had learned touching that matter [whether Murphy was guilty of embezzlement]?" The objection went to the word "honestly," as calling for a conclusion of the witness. It was for the jury to determine from the evidence whether or not defendants related their knowledge of plaintiff and his acts honestly. The objection was properly sustained. His belief on the subject of plaintiff's guilt would have been admissible (Runo v. Williams, 162 Cal. 444, 122 Pac. 1082), but the question, in the form in which it was propounded, was vulnerable to the particular objection leveled at it.

[9] It is next asserted by appellants that the question of probable cause was not determined by the court, but was erroneously left to the jury. In this behalf certain instructions are quoted and criticized. For example, the jurors were instructed as follows:

"In order to determine that the plaintiff was guilty of the crime of embezzlement, it must appear from a preponderance of the evidence in this case that the plaintiff had under his control the sum of $4,000 on or about the date charged, as a trustee, or one of the trustees or agents, * * * and for the use of, * * * and, having it so under his control, fraudulently and unlawfully appropriated it to some use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust."

This is declared by appellants to be leaving to the jury the question of the existence or nonexistence of "probable cause," and therefore erroneous; and Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174, is cited as holding that the question of "probable cause" is one of law for the court. The criticism is without merit. One of the pleaded assertions of the defendants was that plaintiff was in fact guilty of embezzlement. The instruction quoted above, and others of similar import, properly left to the jury the solution of this issue.

Other instructions contained the statement that for the plaintiff to prevail certain things must concur, among them being that the defendants acted in charging plaintiff with crime "without probable cause," but again and again, throughout the charge, the jurors were told that the question of probable cause was one of law with which they had nothing to do—that they were to determine questions of fact upon which the court must base its decision as to the probable cause or want of it.

[10] By another instruction upon the defense that advice of counsel had been followed, the jurors were told that defendants, "thus seeking to justify their acts in the premises," must not only show by a preponderance of evidence that they disclosed to counsel all material facts known to them, "but also, if they had reasonable ground to believe that other facts existed tending to exculpate the person accused, they should either themselves make inquiry as to such other facts or disclose their belief of such other facts to said counsel that such counsel might have an opportunity to make such inquiry." This instruction was not opposed to the doctrine of Dunlap v. New Zealand Fire & Marine Insurance Co., 109 Cal. 365, 42 Pac. 29. In that case it was held that a defendant is not required, in addition to stating to his legal adviser all the material facts of the case of which he has knowledge, to go further and use diligence in the procurement of other facts. But if he have reason to believe that there are other facts bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the accused he must either disclose that belief or himself make inquiry to ascertain the facts in relation to the matter. This distinction is clearly defined in the opinion in Scrivani v. Dondero, 128 Cal. 31, 60 Pac. 463. Probably, the instruction which we are now considering was prepared with that opinion before the draughtsman.

We do not find it necessary to comment upon all of the instructions to which appellants present objections. We have examined the charge, which, as a whole, very fully, fairly, and correctly stated the rules of law properly to be observed by the jury.

[11] Mr. Findley, while on the witness stand, was asked about a conversation with Mr. Davis. Without objection he detailed a part of the conversation, involving a statement that "Mr. Lindsay was going to bring a criminal action." At this point the court asked if there was any objection, and, after some discussion, witness proceeded to testify, without objection, after the court had told the jury that the conversation could "only bind Mr. Davids and not Mr. Lindsay." The conversation as related, however, involved alleged statements by defendant Davids, regarding defendant Lindsay, among others, that the latter was not going to institute the action himself, but was going to make Davids do it. After these statements had been detailed by the witness, counsel moved that "the statement of what Davids said be stricken out so far as Mr. Lindsay is concerned, and that the jury be admonished to disregard it as to Mr. Lindsay." To this motion the court replied:

"It does not refer to anybody but Mr. Lindsay, and should not have been admitted at all, but you did not make an objection, and I am not going to strike it out now."

The ruling was proper under the circumstances. The jurors had been instructed that defendant Lindsay was not bound by the conversation. That was all that the court could well do if the conversation was admitted at all, and it had been admitted without legal objection.

No other alleged errors demand discussion. The judgment is affirmed.

SPEAR et al. v. MONROE, Judge of Superior Court, et al. (L. A. 6381.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹607(1) — FILING OF NOTICE TO PREPARE RECORD JURISDICTIONAL AS TO RECORD.

Failure to file notice requesting preparation of a record under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, within ten days as required by such section, went to the jurisdiction in so far as the preparation of the record was concerned, at least in the absence of an order of the trial court relieving the party from his default in the matter of filing such notice, and it was immaterial that a notice of appeal had been filed, and that there was an order of the judge made ex parte granting further time for the preparation of the record on account of the inability of the reporter to finish the same within the time specified in the section; such order being made by the judge in ignorance of the fact that no notice had been filed in time.

In Bank.

Petition by William C. Spear and others for writ of mandate prayed to be directed to Charles Monroe, as Judge of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, and others. Writ denied.

Geo. M. Harker, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

PER CURIAM. Proceeding in mandate looking to compelling the judge of the trial court to settle and certify a proposed record on appeal under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, and to requiring the clerk to certify and forward record of judgment roll, etc., prepared under said section. The petition shows that the notice requesting preparation of said record required by the section was not filed within ten days after notice of entry of the judgment. The failure to file such a notice within the time specified in the section goes to the jurisdiction in so far as the preparation of the record is concerned, at least in the absence of an order of the trial court relieving the party from his default in the matter of filing such notice. See Estate of Keating, 158 Cal. 109, 110 Pac. 109; Fiske v. Gosbey, 168 Cal. 334, 143 Pac. 611.

The fact that a notice of appeal has been filed is altogether immaterial in so far as the effect of a failure to file this notice for the preparation of a record is concerned.

The order of the judge, made ex parte, granting further time for the preparation of the record on account of the inability of the reporter to finish the same within the time specified in the section, is likewise immaterial here. It was not an order relieving the party from his default in the matter of filing the notice, and was made by the judge in ignorance of the fact that no notice had been filed in time. The court was justified in vacating the same and in refusing to settle and certify the transcript, as was also the clerk in refusing to forward any record prepared under that section.

The application for a writ of mandate is denied.

COOK v. NOBLE, City Recorder.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1919.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⊂=13 — JUSTICE MAY NOT PRACTICE LAW BEFORE CITY RECORDER IN COUNTY OF JUSTICE'S RESIDENCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 171, prohibiting justices of the peace from practicing law before any justice court in the county in which he resides, a justice may not practice before city recorder of city in the county in which the justice resides; the recorder's court being practically a justice's court.

2. MANDAMUS ⊂=12—WILL NOT LIE TO COMPEL PERFORMANCE OF ILLEGAL ACTS.

Mandamus will not lie to compel the performance of acts which are illegal, contrary to public policy, or which tend to aid an unlawful purpose.

In Bank.

Mandamus by George M. Cook against C. G. Noble, City Recorder of the City of Taft, County of Kern, State of California. Writ denied.

Geo. M. Cook, of Taft, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] Petitioner, a justice of the peace in Kern county, seeks a writ of mandamus to compel respondent, city recorder of the city of Taft, in Kern county, to allow him to practice law before him. Section 171, Code of Civil Procedure, provides: "Nor shall any justice of the peace practice law before any justice's court in the county in which he resides." In view of the nature and jurisdiction of a recorder's court in a city or town, it being practically a justice's court, we are satisfied it comes within the spirit and policy of the provision of section 171, Code of Civil Procedure, that we have quoted, and that petitioner has no lawful right to practice in respondent's court. Regardless of any other question presented, it is well settled that mandamus will not lie to compel the performance of acts which are illegal, contrary to public policy, or which tend to aid an unlawful purpose. See Godwin v. Carolina Telephone & Tel. Co., 136 N. C. 258, 48 S. E. 636, 67 L. R. A. 251, 103 Am. St. Rep. 941, 1 Ann. Cas. 203, and note.

TUCKER v. SCOTT et al. (L. A. 5300.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=757(2)—FAILURE TO PRINT ANSWER OR STATE ISSUES IN BRIEF PERMITS ASSUMPTION THAT ANSWER ADMITTED ISSUE.

In action for purchase price of stock, where defense was that the stock had not been delivered, court on defendant's appeal on typewritten transcript from judgment for plaintiff had the right, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, to assume, on defendant's failure to print answer or state the issue, that the answer admitted the delivery.

2. CORPORATIONS ⊂=116—DELIVERY OF STOCK BY DELIVERY OF CERTIFICATE TO AND APPROVAL BY BUYER'S ATTORNEY.

Where duly indorsed certificates of stock were produced and tendered by seller, were approved by buyer's attorney, and remained for some days in buyer's offices, there was a delivery of the stock under Civ. Code, § 1141, and notwithstanding section 1503, seller was entitled to recover purchase price.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1167—ADOPTION OF WRONG REMEDY HARMLESS WHERE PROPER RECOVERY HAD.

In action for purchase price of stock, where conceded facts showed plaintiff entitled thereto, court on appeal from judgment for plaintiff will not consider whether the appropriate remedy was an action for damages for breach of contract, there being no miscarriage of justice, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, since the measure of plaintiff's recovery in action for damages for breach of contract would have been the same as in action for recovery of purchase price under Civ. Code, § 3310.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by J. E. Tucker against W. C. Scott and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Arnold Praeger, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Andrew M. Strong, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff recovered judgment for $2,287.50 for the purchase price of 61 shares of stock of the Greenwood Advertising Company (Western). Defendant appeals. The agreement of sale is in writing. The only question raised by the appellants is as to whether or not the stock was delivered. This question becomes material only if the agreement of sale was executory. We will assume for the purpose of the decision that the contention of the appellants in that respect is correct. The plaintiff alleged and the court found that the stock was delivered to appellants on the 15th day of January, 1917. The appeal is presented upon a typewritten transcript, and the appellants print a copy of the complaint in their brief, but neither print the answer thereto nor state the issue raised thereby, contenting themselves in that respect with the following statement:

"Thereafter defendants answered, and in due course a trial was had, and the court, a jury having been waived, made findings in conformity with the complaint and gave judgment for plaintiff, and are as follows: [Then follows a copy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment, in part as follows:] From the evidence adduced and the facts admitted by the pleadings herein the court finds: * * * Third. That plaintiff has performed all the conditions in said agreement on his part to be performed, and said plaintiff did, on January 15, 1917, deliver to defendants and each and all of them the shares of stock described in said complaint," etc.

[1, 2] Because of the failure to state the issue or print the answer, we would be justified in assuming in favor of the judgment that the answer admitted the delivery. Code Civ. Proc. § 953c. However, an inspection of the typewritten transcript shows that the delivery was denied, and that this was the only issue in the case. The appellants admit the making of the contract and the refusal to pay the purchase price of the stock, and claim that plaintiff's remedy is an action for breach of contract, instead of an action for the purchase price of the stock. The difficulty between the parties arose at the time and place fixed for the transfer of the certificates of stock and the payment of the purchase price. At that time the appellants refused to pay the purchase price unless the respondent would sign a written agreement, then produced, that he would not engage in the advertising business within a certain district and certain time therein specified. The respondent was under no obligation to sign this agreement, and refused to do so, and appellants thereupon refused to pay the purchase price of the stock. There is no dispute that at the time and place specified the stock certificates were produced, duly indorsed, and tendered to the appellants, and that the certificates of stock remained in the office of the appellants for some days thereafter. One of the respondent's witnesses testified that the stock certificates were handed to the appellants' attorney, in their presence, and that he examined the indorsement "and said something about this being the number of shares, all right, and everything was all right, and then Mr. Praeger [appellants' attorney] pulled out of his coat pocket—inside coat pocket—a paper with a cover on it, * * * and he said, 'Everything is all right now, and we have no complaint.'" The document referred to was a draft of a proposed agreement by which respondent was to undertake not to engage in the advertising business. The evidence was clearly sufficient to establish the fact of delivery. Appellants contend, however, that an intention to accept is essential to a delivery, and that the facts and circumstances show that the defendants did not intend to accept the title to the stock unless they secured this additional agreement. The measure of plaintiff's recovery, however, would be the same whether the defendants intended to accept the stock or not. The title passes "when the buyer has accepted the thing, or when the seller has completed it, prepared it for delivery, and offered it to the buyer, with intent to transfer the title thereto. * * *" Section 1141, Civ. Code. "The detriment caused by the breach of a buyer's agreement to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is vested in him, is deemed to be the contract price." Section 3310, Civ. Code.

[3] Upon the conceded facts the plaintiff is entitled to recover the purchase price of the stock. Therefore on appeal we will not consider whether the appropriate remedy was for damages or for the purchase price, as the recovery would be the same in either case, and a judgment for the purchase price is not only no miscarriage of justice (Const. art. 6, § 4½) but is exact justice. Appellants contend that, treated as an offer of performance, the conduct of the respondent violates section 1503 of the Civil Code, which provides as follows:

"The person offering a thing, other than money, by way of performance, must, if he means to treat it as belonging to the creditor, retain it as a depositary for hire, until the creditor accepts it, or until he has given reasonable notice to the creditor that he will retain it no longer, and, if with reasonable diligence he can find a suitable depositary therefor, until he has deposited it with such person."

This section can have no application to a case where the purchaser actually receives and retains possession of the property, no matter how reluctant he may be to do so. The finding of the trial court that the stock was delivered is sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Proceeding for the disbarment of D. G. Kling, attorney and counselor at law. From a judgment of suspension, the attorney appeals. Reversed.

Winslow P. Hyatt, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Percy V. Hammon and Paul Vallee, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by D. G. Kling from a judgment of the superior court suspending him as an attorney and counselor at law from practicing his profession for a period of one year from March 10, 1919.

[1] The trial court made no findings of fact, and, conceding that findings in such cases are not essential to the validity of a judgment, nevertheless it is a practice not to be commended.

Want of such findings renders it necessary for us to state at length the facts which we deem established by the evidence. It appears therefrom that appellant and his sister, R. J. Kling, were the proprietors of a collection agency known as the Atlas Law & Adjustment Company; that among their clients was Dr. A. J. Berry, for whom, prior to these proceedings, they had acted in the collection and adjustment of some 2,000 different claims and aggregating in amount upwards of $30,000; that prior to appellant's admission to the bar, which was in July, 1915, they, when necessary to bring suits upon claims intrusted to them for collection, employed an attorney for such purpose; that on August 15, 1914, Dr. Berry assigned to R. J. Kling, appellant's sister, and one of the proprietors of the Atlas Law & Adjustment Company, a claim against T. L. Norris and wife, the amount thereof being $173.65, under an agreement that, where suit was brought upon claims assigned, the assignee should pay all cost and expense, including attorney's fees, incident to the bringing of such suit, and receive therefor as full compensation and reimbursement of expense made the sum of 50 per cent. of the amount collected in such cases. The attorney to whom the matter was intrusted, in bringing the suit, included as defendants therein with Norris and his wife two other persons, to wit, Clyde Briggs and Augustin Huizar, against whom like claims had been assigned to the plaintiff, R. J. Kling, the total of which claims included in said action was $248.50. Due service was had upon all the defendants, and judgment against them jointly taken for said sum. After this judgment was rendered a relative of the Norrises went to Dr. Berry, and, as to the Norrises, induced him to accept $60 in full settlement of the judgment and in full payment thereof. This was on March 21, 1916, after appellant had been admitted to the bar, and at which time, he, as attorney, represented the Atlas Law & Adjustment Company, and also the plaintiff in said action, R. J. Kling. In an effort to collect the judgment he called upon the Norrises, when for the first time he learned of the payment of this $60 to Dr. Berry and the fact of the giving of receipt. Thereupon he called upon the doctor and told him that, owing to the fact that the claim had been assigned and judgment obtained thereon by the assignee, which had an interest in the judgment, his act in settling the claim was unwarranted, and that, while the Norrises were entitled to recover the $60 from him, he would credit the judgment with the sum, which in effect would be equivalent to its return. Kling thereupon caused the judgment against the Norrises to be credited with the sum of $60, charged Dr. Berry with one-half thereof as commission, payment of which was retained out of collections made for and on behalf of Berry, and caused a transcript of the judgment rendered in the justice's court to be filed with the clerk of the superior court and an execution to be issued thereon and levied upon real estate owned by the Norrises. The amount for which the execution was so issued, however, was not the full amount of the judgment so rendered against the Norrises and their codefendants, Briggs and Huizar, in said action, but for the amount of the claim of Dr. Berry against the Norrises alone, to wit, $173.65, less such amounts as had been theretofore paid upon said claim against them. In other words, notwithstanding the fact that the judgment had been rendered against the Norrises for amounts due by their joint defendants, he only sought to recover from them the amount for which they alone were in fact liable. Of this action in thus levying the execution upon their property and advertising the same for sale the Norrises had notice, and thereupon employed an attorney who unsuccessfully sought relief in the justice's court by motion to quash and set aside the execution, and the property was sold under execution. Thereafter the judgment debtors brought a suit in the superior court to quiet title, which action was tried, and, after being held under advisement by the court for some three months, a judgment as prayed for was rendered in favor of the Norrises, from which, pending an appeal therefrom by the defendant in said action, to wit, R. J. Kling, the judgment creditor, a compromise was effected.

[2] Conceding the action of the attorney in joining other defendants with the Norrises, and thus taking judgment against them for more than the amount of the claim, was irregular and without warrant of law, nevertheless, since it was had prior to appellant's admission to the bar and by an attorney other than himself, he should not be held responsible therefor. Moreover, since he did not, when he took charge of the matter, seek to collect by execution from the Norrises other than that part of the judgment for which they would have been liable had the suit been brought against them alone, they suffered no prejudice by reason thereof.

Furthermore, in enforcing the collection of the judgment by execution and sale of the property, he acted openly and without design to suppress from defendants in said action knowledge of the fact that he was about to sell their property under execution. According to his own uncontradicted testimony, he examined the law and consulted other attorneys as to the rights of his client under the circumstances, and concluded that, as his client was the legal owner of the judgment, due to assignment thereof coupled with an interest in the account, he, acting for such client, was justified in enforcing payment of the judgment, in support of which he cites Cobb v. Doggett, 142 Cal. 142, 75 Pac. 785, and other authorities, which appear to support him in his contention. The circumstances were such that, conceding the assignment was made for collection, the legal title thereto passed to the assignee, and after notice thereof the debtors dealt with Dr. Berry, the assignor, at their peril. 4 Cyc. 90; McCloskey v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 104, 4 Pac. 1092. That the Norrises had notice of the assignment conclusively appears from the fact that service of summons in the action brought against them upon the assigned claim was had upon them, and hence, in adjusting the matter with Dr. Berry, they acted with a stranger having no authority in the premises.

That appellant, as attorney for the judgment creditor, could have repudiated the act of Dr. Berry in giving a receipt in full to the Norrises upon the payment to him of the $60, and thereafter proceeded to collect the full amount of the judgment, to our minds admits of no doubt. Respondent, however, insists that, in accepting one-half of said sum so collected by Berry, his client, with his knowledge, ratified the act, and hence his position was the same as though he, as attorney, had accepted said sum and given the receipt, by reason of which fact he was guilty of moral turpitude (subdivision 5, § 287, Code Civ. Proc.) in thereafter causing the levy of execution. Conceding that as a matter of law he was not entitled to enforce further payment, nevertheless, in the absence of deception or unfair advantage sought (and none is shown), his act was due to a mistake of judgment as to the law applicable to the case.

[3, 4] The record, as we read it, fails to disclose any deception on the part of appellant, or that he acted through corrupt motives or otherwise violated the provisions of section 282, Code of Civil Procedure. The oath required by section 278, Code of Civil Procedure, of an attorney is that he will "faithfully discharge the duties of an attorney and counselor at law to the best of his knowledge and ability." Moral turpitude cannot be predicated upon errors of judgment as to the law, or action had and taken in good faith by an attorney, openly and with notice to the adverse party under an honest assertion of legal right, where there is no deception practiced or unfair advantage sought.

The judgment is reversed.

CHARVES v. SAN FRANCISCO-OAKLAND TERMINAL RYS. (Civ. 2953.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 8, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 5, 1920.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ⊂⊃114(8) — NEGLIGENCE CAUSING INJURY TO CHILD ESTABLISHED BY EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a child struck by a street car while crossing street, based on negligence in operating car at an excessive rate of speed, and in failing to stop after motorman had ample opportunity to have seen child, evidence held sufficient to sustain verdict for plaintiff.

2. STREET RAILROADS ⊂⊃117(7) — SPEED OF CAR QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for injuries to a child struck by a street car while crossing street, question of speed of the car and question of whether such speed was excessive held for jury.

3. NEGLIGENCE ⊂⊃136(29) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF MINOR JURY QUESTION.

Generally the question of whether in a given case minor has been guilty of contributory negligence so as to prevent recovery is a question of fact for the jury.

4. STREET RAILROADS ⊂⊃111(2)—LAST CLEAR CHANCE ISSUE RAISED BY GENERAL AVERMENT OF NEGLIGENCE.

In an action against a street railroad for injuries, the general averment as to railroad's negligence raises the issue of last clear chance, and under the averment negligence in failing to take advantage of the last clear chance may be proved.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃882(12) — PARTY SUBMITTING INSTRUCTIONS ON ISSUE CANNOT COMPLAIN INSTRUCTIONS THEREON ARE BEYOND ISSUES.

A party who requests instructions on certain issues cannot complain of instructions given thereon on ground that issue is not raised by pleadings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by Lester Charves, a minor, by Frank Charves, as guardian ad litem, against the San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Smith, of Oakland, and A. L. Whittle, of San Francisco (Chapman & Trefethern, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellant.

Stanley Moore and Geo. K. Ford, both of San Francisco, and Ostrander & Carey, of Oakland, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered after the verdict of a jury in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $10,000, damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by said plaintiff as the result of an accident in which the plaintiff was struck by one of the cars of the defendant upon a public street of the city of Oakland on the 24th day of March, 1915.

Said plaintiff on said day, a child of the age of five years, was living with his parents near the place where the accident occurred, and had been sent by his parents on an errand which would take him across Adeline street, upon which the defendant was at the time operating a double-track electric railway, which ran in a general northerly and southerly direction. The child undertook to cross said street diagonally in a southwesterly direction, when a street car of the defendant, running in a southerly direction along the westerly track of its said railway, struck the plaintiff, cutting off his right hand.

In the complaint which was filed herein on behalf of said plaintiff for the recovery of damages for his said injuries it was alleged generally that while the plaintiff was crossing said street as aforesaid the defendant so negligently and carelessly ran and operated one of its electric cars in a southerly direction along said street that the car struck said plaintiff and caused the injuries complained of. To this complaint the defendant in due course filed its answer, denying negligence on its part, and setting up by way of special defense the negligence of the plaintiff.

Upon the trial of the cause upon the issues thus generally framed the verdict and judgment in plaintiff's favor were rendered, from which this appeal has been taken.

[1, 2] The first contention of the appellant upon the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a verdict against the defendant, based upon any negligence on its part or on the part of its employés in connection with the plaintiff's injuries. We are satisfied from an examination of the record that this contention is without merit. The accident in question occurred about the hour of 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when there was ample daylight enabling the motorman in charge of the defendant's car to see clearly objects on said street for several hundred feet. There is ample evidence to show that said motorman either did see, or, with a vigilant lookout, could and should have seen, this child from the time it left the sidewalk on the easterly side of Adeline street to the moment of the collision, and that at the time when said child was or should have been within the range of his observation for the first time said car was several hundred feet away from the spot where it was finally struck and injured. With respect to the speed at which the car was running at the time the evidence is somewhat conflicting; but there were witnesses who testified that the car at the time when the child first started to cross the street was proceeding at the rate of about 30 miles an hour. What the actual rate of speed of the car was at the time was a question of fact for the jury; and whether or not the rate of speed which the jury found said car to have been actually running at said time was an undue rate of speed for cars to be operated upon said Adeline street were also questions of fact for the jury. Burr v. United Railroads, 163 Cal. 663, 126 Pac. 873; Ellis v. Central Cal. Traction Co., 174 Pac. 407.

As to whether the motorman in charge of said car—with his opportunity to observe the child from the time it started to cross the street, and the direction in which it was going in attempting to cross, and its action in so doing, permitting him to judge whether or not the child was aware of the approach of the car—was or was not negligent is a matter upon which the evidence is conflicting. There was some testimony as to the ringing of the bell; but whether or not this form of warning was given sufficiently early for the child to have heard the same, and possibly to have thus avoided the collision, there is some dispute in the evidence, which it was the province of the jury to determine. There is also a conflict in the evidence as to when the motorman first applied his brakes, and first began to take such other steps as the mechanism of the car provided for its stoppage in time to avoid running down the child. These were also matters which it was the province of the jury to resolve. Upon this branch of the case we are therefore of the opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury as to the defendant's negligence in the operation of its car, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury.

[3] In this connection, however, the appellant makes the contention that the undisputed evidence shows that the plaintiff was guilty of such contributory negligence in the premises as should, as a matter of law, prevent his recovery in this action; and in support of this contention the appellant cites certain cases in which minors of various ages have been held to have been guilty of such contributory negligence as a matter of law as to preclude recovery for their injuries. The general rule, however, in this state is that whether or not a minor has in a given case been guilty of contributory negligence so as to prevent his recovery in an action to recover damages for his injury is a question of fact for the jury. Cahill v. Stone & Co., 153 Cal. 571, 96 Pac. 84, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094; Cahill v. Stone Co., 167 Cal. 126, 138 Pac. 712; Barrett v. Southern Pacific Co., 91 Cal. 296, 27 Pac. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 186; Foley v. Cal. Horseshoe Co., 115 Cal. 184, 47 Pac. 42, 56 Am. St. Rep. 87; Pierce v. United Gas & Elec. Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 Pac. 700. In the recent case of Mayne v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 175 Pac. 690, the Supreme Court, after a full review of the foregoing authorities, declared that "as a rule courts upon appeal have not interfered with the discretion of trial courts in referring or in refusing to refer to juries the question as to whether the contributory negligence of children of the age of 14 years or under was such as to prevent their recovery for injuries sustained by them." We are therefore of the opinion that there is no merit in the appellant's contention in this regard.

The next contention of the appellant herein is that the trial court was in error in giving to the jury any instruction upon the subject of last clear chance, and the appellant further contends in this connection that the instructions which the court did actually give upon this subject were erroneous.

[4, 5] With respect to the first of these contentions, the appellant insists that the doctrine of last clear chance was neither made an issue in the case by the pleadings nor was it properly presentable to the jury in the state of the evidence before it at the time such instructions were given. In response to the first of these contentions it may be stated that the doctrine of last clear chance is one of the issues which the plaintiff tenders when he makes his general averment as to the defendant's negligence, and that under such general averment he is entitled to introduce evidence showing that the defendant has been guilty of negligence in failing to take advantage of its last clear chance to avoid the injury. And as to the evidence in the case we are of the opinion that sufficient was shown with respect to the position of the child upon the street at a time immediately preceding its injuries to have entitled the plaintiff to an instruction upon the subject of last clear chance. The appellant itself evidently considered that the question of last clear chance was among the issues involved in the case, since it submitted to the court a number of instructions upon this subject which the record shows to have been given. It is not, therefore, in a position to complain that the court gave instructions upon this subject, and its only remaining contention can be that the court was in error in the instructions thereon which it gave to the jury at the plaintiff's request. We have carefully examined the whole body of instructions which the court gave to the jury upon the doctrine of last clear chance, and from such examination we are of the opinion, without undertaking to quote such instructions in detail, that the jury on the whole was fully and fairly instructed upon this subject, and that, whether or not the particular instruction of which the appellant complains was ample enough in its phraseology to fully cover the subject, the instructions which were asked and given on behalf of the appellant upon the same subject were sufficient to eke out such deficiency, and that upon the whole said instructions embrace a correct exposition of the law.

As to the other instructions of the court of which the appellant complains, its objections are urged in the most general terms without the citation of any authority which would serve to indicate in what respect they are erroneous. We are unable to perceive that these instructions were in any respect erroneous, and are satisfied that the jury on the whole was fully and fairly instructed as to the law of the case.

This disposes of the defendant's various contentions, none of which we find to have sufficient merit to justify a reversal of the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

GARRETT v. JENSEN et al. (Civ. 2251.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 4, 1919.)

1. VENUE ⟸41 — CHANGING TO COUNTY OF NONRESIDENT DEFENDANTS PROPER, WHERE RESIDENT DEFENDANT NOT NECESSARY PARTY.

Where the only defendant residing within the county in which an action was brought was not a necessary party defendant, and the complaint stated no cause of action against him, the remaining nonresident defendants are entitled to a change of venue to the county where they reside.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1180(1)—REVERSAL DOES NOT INVALIDATE PREVIOUS COLLECTION.

Where a claimant in an interpleader proceeding secured payment of a judgment in his favor after a stay had expired and before an appeal was taken, and paid a portion thereof to an attorney of the party paying the money into court, a subsequent reversal of the judgment did not relate back, so as to make the attorney's acceptance of the money an unlawful conversion.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1180(1)—DUTY TO REPAY AMOUNT COLLECTED BEFORE REVERSAL.

A claimant in an interpleader proceeding has the right to collect a judgment in his favor after a stay thereon has expired, and before an appeal has been taken; but the subsequent reversal of the judgment creates a legal obligation to repay what the other claimant had lost by the erroneous judgment of the trial court.

4. TRUSTS ⟸356(2)—RIGHT TO FOLLOW FUND DOES NOT EXIST AGAINST ONE WHO RECEIVED MONEY UNDER DECREE BEFORE REVERSAL.

Where a claimant in an interpleader proceeding collected a judgment between the time the stay expired and an appeal was taken, paid part to a third party, who had assisted in the collection, and the judgment was subsequently reversed, held, that the third party did not hold his share as a trust fund, since, at the time he secured it from the claimant, the fund was not impressed with a trust, and plaintiff had a right to dispose of it.

5. JUDGMENT ⟸660—ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT JUSTIFYING COLLECTION BEFORE REVERSAL.

Until reversal of an erroneous judgment, the party receiving satisfaction under the judgment may justify under it, and under any execution issued thereon, for the erroneous judgment is the act of the court.

6. INJUNCTION ⟸118(3) — PLEADING HELD INSUFFICIENT TO WARRANT RESTRAINING ORDER AGAINST RECEIPT OF MONEY UNDER REVERSED DECREE.

Where a claimant in an interpleader proceeding collected a judgment between the time the stay expired and an appeal was taken, and paid part thereof to a third party before the judgment was reversed, held, that the third party will not be enjoined from receiving additional sums from the claimant, in absence of allegations that he has or is attempting to take money subsequent to the judgment's reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Iva L. Garrett against Emma L. Jensen (guardian of William Edward Garrett, a minor), W. E. Lady, and others. From an order granting a motion for change of venue, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Robert L. Hubbard, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles S. Peery, of San Francisco, and V. J. Cobb and W. E. Lady, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendants, other than defendant Lady, moved in the court below to change the place of trial from Los Angeles county to San Francisco. Lady resides in Los Angeles county; the other defendants reside in San Francisco. From an order granting the motion, plaintiff appeals.

[1] If the complaint states a cause of action against Lady, the order granting defendants' motion for a change of venue should not have been made. If, on the other hand, Lady was not a necessary party defendant, or if the complaint does not state a cause of action against him, the right of the other defendants to have the place of trial changed to the city and county of their residence is undoubted. Sayward v. Houghton, 82 Cal. 628, 23 Pac. 120; Donohoe v. Wooster, 163 Cal. 114, 124 Pac. 730; Buell v. Dodge, 57 Cal. 645.

The case alleged in the complaint is substantially as follows: Prior to the commencement of the present action, the plaintiff here had brought an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county against an insurance company to recover certain money due on insurance upon the life of Edward E. Garrett. William Edward Garrett, a minor, of whose person and estate the defendant Emma L. Jensen is guardian, appeared in that action by his guardian as a rival claimant of the insurance money. The insurance company appeared in the action, deposited with the clerk of the court the insurance money sued for, $4,074, asked to be discharged from all liability, and, having thus interpleaded the two rival claimants for the money, the company was duly discharged from further liability. On November 12, 1915, the court rendered a judgment in that action whereby it adjudged that the minor was entitled to the insurance money—the $4,074 that had been so deposited in court by the insurance company—and, on the same day, made an order staying execution of the judgment for 10 days. After the expiration of the 10 days' stay, namely, on December 15, 1915, the judgment was entered. On December 24, 1915, the plaintiff in that action, who likewise is the plaintiff in this, served and filed her notice of appeal from the judgment that on December 15, 1915, had been entered in favor of the minor; and on December 29, 1915, she perfected the appeal by filing the necessary undertaking. The judgment so appealed from was reversed by the District Court of Appeals, that court holding that plaintiff, as the widow of the insured, was entitled to the insurance money. See Garrett v. Garrett, 31 Cal. App. 173, 159 Pac. 1050, for a report of that case. Meanwhile, after the expiration of the 10 days' stay of execution that had been granted by the trial court at the time when it rendered judgment in favor of the minor but prior to plaintiff's appeal from that judgment, namely, on December 23, 1915, one of the defendants herein, Emma L. Jensen, as guardian of the minor's person and estate, came into possession of $3,975.10, a part of the $4,074 that had been so deposited by the insurance company with the clerk of the court. In securing possession of the money for her ward, defendant Jensen was assisted by the minor's attorney of record in that action, Charles S. Peery, whom plaintiff has made one of the defendants herein, and likewise by the defendant Lady, who, it seems, had appeared as attorney for the insurance company in the other action. The circumstances under which the minor's guardian, with the assistance of defendants Peery and Lady, came into possession of the money that the insurance company had deposited in court to be contended for by the two rival claimants thereto, were substantially as follows: The money, after its deposit with the clerk of the court by the insurance company, was transferred by the clerk to the county treasurer, with whom it remained on deposit to abide the final determination of the rights of the two claimants, the widow and the minor child; on December 23, 1915, Lady caused a certificate to be made by the county clerk certifying that, by judgment entered December 15, 1915, the minor, William Edward Garrett, was awarded the $4,074. On the same day Lady made demand on the county treasurer for the payment of the $4,074 to the minor, and made oath that the same was justly due to the minor from the clerk and the treasurer. On the same day Lady also requested the judge before whom the cause had been tried in the superior court to make an order directing the county auditor to allow, and the county treasurer to pay, to the minor the $4,074 to which that court had adjudged him entitled, less any moneys due the county for taxes. Thereupon the court did make such an order. Upon the making of this order Lady caused the auditor to issue his warrant for, and the treasurer to pay to one or more of the defendants here, but which one plaintiff is unable to say, the sum of $3,975.10. The auditor's warrant was made payable to the Humboldt Savings Bank of San Francisco, and was signed by the defendant Emma L. Jensen as guardian of the person and estate of the minor, William Edward Garrett. In his reply brief counsel for appellant admits that, from the record of the transaction as detailed in the complaint, "the money was paid to the guardian." Indeed, the complaint alleges that on February 15, 1916, plaintiff was informed that the money had been drawn from the county treasury, "and was at the time deposited in the account of said Emma L. Jensen in some bank in the city of San Francisco." It is alleged that, since the withdrawal of the money from the county treasury, "defendants have appropriated to their own use and disposed of and dissipated a large part of said money"; also that, unless enjoined by the court, they "will dispose of and dissipate the whole thereof." In her prayer for relief plaintiff asks that she have judgment against each defendant for $4,074, with interest and costs, that defendants be restrained from further disposition of the money, and that they be directed to pay back into the custody of the court so much of the money as may remain unexpended.

To support her contention that the complaint states a cause of action against Lady, or that he is a necessary party defendant, appellant, must be able successfully to maintain one, at least, of the three following propositions: (1) That the transaction whereby Lady and the other defendants caused the money to be paid by the county treasurer to the minor's guardian was an unlawful conversion of money to which plaintiff was entitled, and that therefore Lady, with the other defendants, is liable in damages by reason of such unlawful conversion; or (2) that, after the money was paid to the guardian and while it was in her hands or on deposit in bank to her credit, it was a trust fund held by her in trust for plaintiff's benefit, and while so held by her as a trust fund it, or some part of it, was received by Lady from the guardian and appropriated to his own use; or (3) that, in order to insure due protection to plaintiff's rights, it is necessary that an injunction or restraining order issue against Lady, restraining him from making any disposition of the money.

[2, 3] We do not think that, on the facts alleged in the complaint, appellant can successfully maintain any one of these positions. And unless she can successfully maintain at least one of them, it must be held that the complaint does not state a cause of action against Lady, that he is not a necessary party defendant, and that the court properly granted the motion for change of venue to the place of residence of the other defendants.

If, on December 23, 1915—the day on which all the transactions were had that eventuated in the payment of the money by the county treasurer to the guardian of the minor—the latter was entitled to the possession of the money, then Lady's participation in those transactions was not wrongful or illegal. A judgment adjudging the minor to be entitled to the money had been entered; the stay of execution upon that judgment had expired. (Garrett v. Garrett, supra); and no appeal from the judgment had as yet been taken. There is no room, therefore, for the claim that, at the time when the money was received by the guardian, proceedings on the judgment had been suspended by any appeal therefrom, or that, at that time, supersedeas might issue to prevent an enforcement of the judgment in favor of the minor. The order of the court directing the county treasurer to pay the money to the guardian was, under the circumstances a proper proceeding for the enforcement of the judgment that had been given and made in the minor's favor. At the time when, on order of the court, the money was paid by the county treasurer to the guardian, there was a legal right in the minor to demand and receive it, or to enforce payment of it by some suitable method for enforcing the judgment that had been given and made in his favor. Doubtless the reversal of the judgment by the District Court of Appeal gave plaintiff a right or cause of action against the minor or his guardian. But that was a newly created right. It was a right created by the reversal of the judgment of the trial court and the entry of a new judgment—a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the widow of the insured, as directed by the District Court of Appeal. The reversal created a legal obligation on the part of the minor or his guardian to restore what the plaintiff here had lost by reason of the erroneous judgment of the trial court in that action. But the payment of the money to defendant Jensen, as the guardian of the minor, before plaintiff had taken any appeal from the judgment, was legal, and the reversal of that judgment did not have a retrospective operation so as to make void that which was lawful when done. The new right created by the reversal was, it is true, a right which, when created, was wholly antagonistic to the right that, before the reversal, was a right in the minor to obtain, by enforcement of the judgment in his favor, possession of the money that had been deposited in court. But this newly created antagonistic or inconsistent right did not make void, ab initio, the right created in the minor at the time when the judgment in his favor was given and made. The judgment in favor of the minor, though erroneous, was not void. By its enforcement—for that is practically what the order for the payment of the money to the minor amounted to—the minor received the money with a defeasible right thereto. But, until his right thereto was defeated by a subsequent reversal of the judgment, he, or his guardian for him, must be deemed to have received and held the money, clothed with all the attributes of rightful ownership. Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Washington, 6 Pet. 19, 8 L. Ed. 299.

If, at the time when the money was paid over to his guardian, the minor was entitled to an enforcement of the judgment that had been made in his favor, and he unquestionably was, then the fact that Lady had been the attorney for the insurance company and was not the attorney of record for the minor cannot lay him under any liability. If, as we hold, the guardian, at the time when the money was paid to her by the county treasurer, had the right to enforce the judgment that had been made in her ward's favor and compel payment to herself as guardian, the means and instrumentalities whereby she accomplished that result do not concern plaintiff.

[4, 5] The complaint alleges that, after the money was received by the guardian, the defendants—and that, of course, includes the defendant Lady—"appropriated" to their own use a large part of the money. Manifestly this can mean no more than that, after the money came into the possession or under the control of the guardian in the manner heretofore detailed, she paid or gave a part of it to Lady and the latter then used it as he saw fit. But that fact would not give plaintiff a cause of action against Lady for the part of the money that thus may have been paid to him by the guardian and then applied by him to his own use, unless, at the time when he received it from the guardian, it was then held by the latter as a trust fund. While it is true that, as claimed by appellant, equity will enforce a trust against all persons who, with notice of the trust, may come into the possession of the trust property, nevertheless, to entitle appellant to follow the money into the hands of Lady and recover it from him as part of a trust fund held in trust for her, she must first show that when Lady received it from the guardian the latter then held it as a trust fund in trust for appellant. This the complaint fails to do. It fails to show that, when Lady received any part of the $4,074 from the guardian, the latter did not then have the right of disposition. As we have seen, on December 23, 1915, when the money was paid by the county treasurer to the guardian, or to some agent of the guardian, she, as the guardian of the minor in whose favor the judgment of the trial court had been entered, was entitled to an enforcement of the judgment—entitled to have the money paid to her for her ward. And not until the judgment of the district court of appeal reversing the judgment of the trial court became final did any obligation rest upon the guardian to return any part of the $4,074.

On the reversal of an erroneous judgment, but not before, the law raises an obligation on the part of any party to the action who may have received the benefit of the judgment to make restitution to the other party for what the latter has lost. Until the reversal, the party who may have received satisfaction under the erroneous judgment may justify under it and under any execution issued thereon, for the erroneous judgment is the act of the court. Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Washington, supra; Garrett v. Garrett, supra. Until the reversal of the judgment by the District Court of Appeal the money that had been received by the guardian from the county treasurer was not held by her as a trust fund; until then it was not stamped with the character of a trust.

The complaint does not allege when it was that Lady appropriated a part of the $4,074 to his own use. Non constat but that whatever part of the $4,074 he may have received and kept was received by him from the guardian before the judgment of the District Court of Appeal became final. In fact, if on this appeal, we may take judicial notice of the record on the appeal in Garrett v. Garrett, supra, we know that necessarily whatever sum or sums may have been "appropriated" by Lady as alleged in the complaint herein, i. e., sums received by him from the guardian after the latter had received the money from the county treasurer, must have been so appropriated by Lady before the judgment of the District Court of Appeal became final, and, therefore, before any part of the money that had been paid over to the guardian could be regarded as money held by her as a trust fund in trust for appellant. This is so because the present action was commenced August 8, 1916, and if we take judicial notice of the judgment of the District Court of Appeal we know that that judgment did not become final before September 28, 1916. If it can be maintained that any moneys which may have been paid to Lady by the guardian before the judgment of the District Court of Appeal in Garrett v. Garrett should be regarded, at all times after that judgment, as moneys held by him in trust for plaintiff, the answer is that the complaint does not allege facts showing that that judgment had become final prior to the commencement of the present action; and, if we may take judicial notice of the record on appeal in Garrett v. Garrett, we know that, at the time when this action was commenced, it could not truthfully be alleged that the judgment of reversal had become final prior to the filing of the complaint herein.

[6] Nor is the issuance of an injunction or restraining order against Lady necessary to the protection of any of plaintiff's rights. The transactions that resulted in the payment of the money to the guardian by the county treasurer show that the money, finally, was deposited in a San Francisco savings bank to the credit of the guardian. There is no allegation that all the money is not still so on deposit, save in so far as the continued deposit of the whole sum received by the guardian may be inconsistent with the general allegation that "defendants have appropriated to their own use and disposed of * * * a large part of said money." In other words, the only part of the $4,074 that can possibly be regarded as a trust fund now held in trust by any of the defendants for plaintiff is the amount that still remains in the custody or under the control of the guardian, the defendant Emma L. Jensen. This is so because there is nothing before us to show that the guardian ever parted with any portion of the $4,074 after the judgment of the District Court of Appeal became final. This being the situation, the issuance of an injunction or restraining order against the guardian would suffice to protect plaintiff's rights in the unexpended portion of the total sum that was received by her from the county treasurer. There is no apparent necessity for the issuance of a restraining order against Lady, who is not even alleged to have threatened to take or receive from the guardian any money since the judgment of the District Court of Appeal became final.

For these reasons we do not think the complaint alleges any cause of action against Lady or shows him to be an interested party defendant, and that therefore the remaining defendants were entitled to have the place of trial changed to the city and county of their residence.

Order affirmed.

STEWART v. SAN JOAQUIN LIGHT & POWER CO. (Civ. 2038.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 7, 1919.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⟸136(30) — NEGLIGENCE OF DRIVER OF AUTOMOBILE CARRYING PASSENGER INJURED QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a power company for the death of an automobile passenger electrocuted in a collision with a power pole, whether it was negligence to drive an automobile without lights 18 miles per hour, over a road not traveled by the driver before, when it was dark and had been raining, held for the jury.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⟸93(1)—NEGLIGENCE OF AUTOMOBILE DRIVER NOT IMPUTED TO GUEST.

A passenger in an automobile is not responsible for the negligence of the driver, unless he has some control over him and his conduct.

3. NEGLIGENCE ⟸136(30) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF GUEST IN AUTOMOBILE FOR JURY.

Whether a passenger in an automobile was negligent in permitting the driver to drive at 18 to 20 miles an hour in the dark without lights, over a road which the driver had not traveled before, held for the jury.

4. ELECTRICITY ⟸16(7) — POWER COMPANY NOT LIABLE FOR ELECTROCUTION OF AUTOMOBILIST RUNNING INTO ROTTEN POLE NEAR HIGHWAY.

A power company maintaining a rotten pole was not liable for the death of a guest in an automobile, who was electrocuted when the automobile ran into and broke the pole, where it could not reasonably have been anticipated that a vehicle would leave the traveled portion of the highway and come in contact with the pole, and by reason thereof cause it to break and fall, not being called upon as a matter of law to take such precautions as would prevent injuries which might result from such contact.

5. ELECTRICITY ⟸16(7) — POWER COMPANY NOT LIABLE FOR ELECTROCUTION OF AUTOMOBILIST RUNNING INTO ROTTEN POLE NEAR HIGHWAY.

A power company maintaining a rotten pole was not liable for the death of a guest in an automobile, who was electrocuted when the automobile ran into and broke the pole, if the pole was in such condition as to withstand ordinary strain put upon it by the elements, and such strains as might be occasioned by the ordinary use of the highway by travelers, and was in such position as to be safe from the ordinary danger of collision from vehicles traveling on the highway, and if the breaking of the pole was caused by unusual circumstances over which the power company had no control and which it was not called upon to reasonably anticipate.

6. ELECTRICITY ⟸19(6) — NEGLIGENCE OF POWER COMPANY IN MAINTAINING ROTTEN POLE FOR JURY.

In an action for death of a passenger in an automobile, electrocuted when the automobile ran into a rotten pole on which was strung high-power cable, breaking the pole and causing the cable to fall, whether the power company was negligent in maintaining the rotten pole held for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Laura Hilda Stewart against the San Joaquin Light & Power Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. S. Bell, of Napa, for appellant.

Short & Sutherland, of Fresno, for respondent.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. The plaintiff is the widow of one Carl D. Stewart, and brings this action to recover damages for his death, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant.

It is set forth in the complaint that on the 9th day of May, 1915, the defendant was the owner of and maintaining, for the purpose of its business of selling electricity, a line of poles upon which was strung high-power wires or cables along and upon the side of a public road running from Woodlake, in the county of Tulare, to Seaville, in the same county; that at a point about 1 mile from the town of Seaville the defendant maintained a pole upon said highway forming a part of its power line and supporting a high-power electric cable carrying a heavy voltage of electricity; that said pole was in a rotten and dangerous condition and dangerous to people traveling said highway; that the defendant knew of its condition; that on May 9, 1915, Carl D. Stewart was a passenger in an automobile as the guest of one George Cole, who was driving the machine, and Stewart had no control or management of said automobile; that said automobile at said time, while being driven along said highway by said Cole, and through no negligence of said Carl D. Stewart, came in contact with said pole; that, by reason of the rotten condition of the pole it broke off at the top of the ground and also in two or three other places, and the cable dropped upon the automobile and upon Carl D. Stewart, and he was killed instantly by reason of his coming in contact with said cable carrying a heavy voltage of electricity.

The defendant, as one defense, alleges that the accident was caused by the negligence of said Cole, in driving an automobile while in an intoxicated condition, and in a reckless manner, off the traveled portion of the road and against said power pole, and that said Stewart knew the condition of said Cole, and that he was driving in a reckless manner, and with this knowledge had ample time to remove himself from the machine before the accident happened.

As another defense the defendant denies that it was guilty of any negligence that was the proximate cause of the accident.

The case was tried by a jury, and a verdict rendered for the defendant, upon which judgment was entered, and from this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The only ground relied upon for reversal is the claim that the verdict is not supported by the evidence.

If there is substantial evidence sustaining the defendant's plea of contributory negligence, or of its denial of any negligence on its part proximately causing the injury, the judgment must be affirmed, as a finding by the jury in favor of the defendant on either would necessarily result in a verdict for it.

While there was a conflict in the evidence on some points, there was sufficient, if accepted by the jury, to show the following facts: That the plaintiff and her husband left their home in Orange Cove, in Tulare county, at about 8 o'clock in the evening of May 8, 1915, at the invitation of George Cole to take an automobile ride, the Stewarts both sitting then on the front seat with Cole; that they went to Seaville, a small town in Tulare county, and took in two other young people, and then proceeded to Woodlake, another small town in the same county, about 12 miles distant, where they arrived between midnight and 1 o'clock, and in the meantime admittedly drank four pints of beer. The party left Woodlake at about 1:30 in the morning, occupying the same position in the car as above, and started home by another road with which they were unfamiliar. The distance from Woodlake to Seaville by the road traveled is about 12 miles. When the party left Woodlake, Cole, who was driving the car, had an ordinary lantern hanging on his radiator cap, which was originally placed there to supplement his oil dash lights; his electric lights being out of order and not lighted. None of these lights were burning at the time of the accident, the lantern having been extinguished at Woodlake, and the dash lights after the repair of a tire was finished, at a time when it was dark. The foot brakes of the car were out of commission, and the machine was being driven without lights on a wet and oil surfaced road. When the party had reached a point about a mile from Seaville the car swerved to the right and, after leaving the road, traveled in practically a straight line for about 125 feet, and struck defendant's pole, which was on the extreme northerly side of the highway, in line with a row of trees, and about 24 feet from the center of the main-traveled portion of the highway. At the moment the car left the traveled portion of the highway it was traveling at a speed of 18 to 20 miles per hour, and by the time it struck the pole was traveling not to exceed 6 miles per hour. There was evidence, although conflicting upon the point, to show it was dark when the accident occurred. The power pole, which was broken as a result of the collision, was 12 inches in diameter at the ground, the inside was rotten, but it had a shell about one-fourth of an inch thick which was very hard, and it and the other poles on the line had withstood the windstorms during the preceding winter. When the car struck the pole it broke in three pieces, and the weight of the cross-arms and the upper piece of the pole caused the wires to sag down across the machine, striking Stewart and causing his death instantaneously.

[1] From this evidence the jury might well have drawn the conclusion that the driver of the automobile, Mr. Cole, was driving in a very careless and reckless manner. They might justly have concluded that it was negligence for Cole to drive a car over a road that he had not traveled before, when it was dark, and had been raining to some extent, part of the time with insufficient lights and, at the time of the accident without any lights whatever.

[2, 3] It is true, as claimed by appellant's counsel, that the deceased, Stewart, cannot be held responsible for the negligence of Cole, who was driving the car, unless he had some control over him and his conduct. But it is equally true that he was responsible for his own negligence. He was bound to use due care to keep himself from injury. While he might not have known that the brakes were inefficient, he certainly did know that Cole was driving the car over an unknown road, in the dark, and without adequate, and at some points without any, lights, and at a time when from the evidence the jury might conclude it was dark, he was driving at a rate of speed of 18 to 20 miles per hour, and the jury might well have concluded that it was negligence for the deceased, under such circumstances, not to have taken some precautions for his own safety in requesting the driver to lessen his speed, or to stop and permit him to remove himself from the car. The evidence introduced before the jury would have justified such findings upon their part, and, so finding, they would have been justified in concluding that the accident was the result of negligence properly attributable to the deceased.

[4, 5] The foregoing recital of the salient facts of the case is taken mainly from the brief of respondent, but the court has verified it by an examination of the record, and finds it contains a fair statement of the same.

Upon the other defense set up in the answer, that the defendant was not guilty of any negligence approximately causing the accident, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"I instruct you that if you believe from the evidence in this case that the defendant could not reasonably have anticipated that a vehicle would leave the traveled portion of the highway and come in contact with its power pole, and by reason thereof cause the said pole to break and fall, it was not called upon, as a matter of law, to take such precautions as would prevent injuries which might result from such contact, and that any accident or injury caused thereby cannot be said to have been caused proximately by the negligence of the defendant."

And, again:

"If you believe from the evidence that the particular pole in question here was in such condition as to withstand any ordinary strain put upon it by the elements and weather conditions, and such strains as might be occasioned by the ordinary use of the highway by travelers, and was in such position as to be safe from the ordinary danger of collision from vehicles traveling on the highway, and that the breaking of said pole was caused by any unusual circumstance over which the defendant had no control, and which it was not called upon to reasonably anticipate, then I instruct you that the defendant was not liable because of such breaking and consequent falling of the power wire which caused the power wire to come in contact with and cause the death of Carl D. Stewart, and your verdict should be for the defendant."

These instructions state the law correctly, and are not complained of by the appellant.

[6] The defendant, in building its power line along the edge of a public highway, owed a duty to the public to build it of such construction and in such manner that it would not be a menace to those who had occasion to travel the highway. It was, as stated in the instruction, its duty to anticipate such uses of the road as would probably occur, and to provide against accidents from its poles from such causes as might be reasonably anticipated.

In the instructions the court left it to the jury to say whether or not the defendant was bound to anticipate that persons driving upon the highway might, either through negligence or design, drive automobiles against the poles that it had set, and they were told that if the defendant, acting with reasonable prudence and with a proper regard for the safety of the public, was not called upon to anticipate that persons might drive against its poles with automobiles, then it was not in duty bound to set said poles or maintain them in a condition to prevent injury from such collision.

The jury might well have found from the evidence in the case, from the width of the road, the location of the pole, and the attending circumstances, that no duty rested upon the defendant to anticipate that any one, either by accident or design, lawfully traveling upon the highway, would come into collision with the poles which it had set and was maintaining, and therefore was not bound to keep a pole of such strength and soundness as would withstand such unexpected contact.

The judgment is affirmed.

MOORE et al. v. STRAYER et al. (Civ. 3027.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Nov. 5, 1919.)

MORTGAGES ⟸25(6)—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO PROVE WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

Evidence held sufficient to support findings refusing cancellation of note and mortgage for want of consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Rebecca J. Moore and another against Henry Strayer and others, for the cancellation of note and mortgage. From a judgment for the named defendant, directing foreclosure of the mortgage, and orders denying motions for new trial and to retax costs, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 175 Cal. 171, 165 Pac. 530.

M. B. Butler, of Pasadena, and R. A. Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

S. W. Odell and Tanner, Odell & Taft, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action for the cancellation of a certain note and mortgage, alleged to have been made, executed, and delivered by plaintiffs to defendant Strayer, on the ground "that the said mortgage and note were made without any consideration and are void; no money or other property of value was ever paid to or delivered to these plaintiffs for the consideration of said mortgage."

Defendant's answer denied all the material allegations of plaintiffs' complaint, and alleged that $2,000 had been paid by defendants to plaintiffs through Jas. H. Gaut Company, of Pasadena, Cal., that plaintiffs had thereafter made three payments of interest on the note, and that the plaintiff R. A. Moore had himself indorsed two of said interest payments thereon. Defendant Strayer—being the only answering defendant—also filed a cross-complaint, setting up in the usual form the execution and delivery of said note and mortgage, and the default thereon made in the payment of interest, and that he had elected to declare the whole sum due, praying for a foreclosure of the mortgage. Plaintiffs thereafter filed their answer to the cross-complaint, setting forth substantially the same allegations as contained in their complaint, and alleging that—

"Subsequent to the 24th day of April, 1914, and on or about the 7th day of May, 1914, cross-defendants did place the note and mortgage in the custody of James H. Gaut Company, of Pasadena, on the condition, and not otherwise, that said note and mortgage become effective and of force as such instruments when $2,000 is paid on a certain $2,500 note, which was secured by a prior mortgage on said real property; that said $2,000, or any part thereof, was not paid on said $2,500 note."

Cross-defendants also denied that there was any interest overdue or unpaid, and alleged that the nine months' interest, referred to as having been paid by them, was paid by reason of the belief of cross-defendants that the $2,000 for which the said $2,000 note and mortgage were executed had been paid on the $2,500 note, and that they had no knowledge that said $2,000 had not been so paid, as alleged, at the time when the said interest payments were in fact made. The court found against the plaintiffs on all the issues, and decreed that defendant Strayer have judgment foreclosing said mortgage. Judgment was entered accordingly. There was a motion for new trial, and a motion to retax costs, both of which were denied. The appeals here are from the judgment and each of said orders.

Respondent contends that the appeal comes too late; but that question has been settled contrary to such contention. Moore v. Strayer, 175 Cal. 171, 165 Pac. 530.

As to the said orders, and each of them, we can see nothing in this case which would justify their disturbance.

As to the judgment, four specifications of error are urged, but they all go to the suffiency of the evidence to support the findings. We have read the entire record, and are satisfied that the findings are amply supported by the evidence.

The judgment and orders appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

ENG-SKELL CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 3200.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 7, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 5, 1920.)

1. EVIDENCE ⟸442(4) — PAROL EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE TO SHOW RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CLAIMANT AND EMPLOYER UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

In workmen's compensation proceedings involving issue of whether claimant, who by written contract had agreed to furnish employer with delivery truck, was an employé, oral testimony was admissible on such issue where the written contract did not purport to define any personal service between claimant and employer.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸367 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; CLAIMANT "EMPLOYÉ" WHILE MAKING DELIVERIES WITH HIS TRUCK.

Where an automobile delivery truck owner agreed for six months' term to furnish truck and to devote his exclusive personal services from 8 a. m. to 6 p. m. in delivery of goods for a company, and during such time to be under its control and direction, he was its "employé" under Civ. Code, § 2009, and entitled to compensation for injury.

Proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) by George B. Rogers for compensation for injury opposed by the Eng-Skell Company, employer, and the Continental Casualty Company, insurer. Award by Industrial Accident Commission for claimant, and employer and insurer bring certiorari. Award confirmed.

Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The facts of the case are these: The Eng-Skell Company, one of the petitioners herein, was, in the month of March, 1917, engaged in the business of supplying soda water fountains with the materials and compounds necessary to the conduct of such establishments. The said petitioner's business required regular and daily deliveries by means of delivery trucks or wagons operated by a driver and making a regular daily round of its customers. In March, 1917, the said petitioner, Eng-Skell Company, entered into an agreement in writing with one George B. Rogers, who was at that time the owner of a Ford delivery truck, by which the daily use of said truck, with its driver, was agreed to be supplied by said Rogers to said petitioner, for the purposes of its said business, between the hours of 8 a. m. and 6 p. m., Sundays and holidays excepted, for a period of six months thereafter, for the sum of $1,050 for the entire term, payable in equal semimonthly amounts of $87.50. This agreement was in the form of a written offer by said Rogers to supply said truck and driver during said term, and in connection with said offer and as a part thereof he was to deposit the sum of $50 to guarantee the faithful fulfillment of his offer, in case of its acceptance, in so far as the same provided for an uninterrupted delivery service during said term. To this written offer the Eng-Skell Company affixed its acceptance, also in writing, and thereupon said Rogers entered upon the duties provided for in the agreement thus made. Said agreement was, from time to time, renewed, and was in existence under one of such renewals on the 2d day of April, 1919, when said Rogers, while personally discharging the duties which devolved upon him by virtue of said agreement, sustained an injury to one of his eyes; he being at the time engaged in unloading or unpacking one of the boxes of said petitioner in which its deliveries were wont to be made. Thereafter said Rogers applied to the Industrial Accident Commission for an award against said petitioner and its insurer, in due course of proceedings upon which the award in favor of Rogers was made, for the annulment of which the petitioners herein have instituted this proceeding.

The sole question presented for our determination is as to whether said Rogers was at the time of his injury an employé of the Eng-Skell Company or was an independent contractor.

If, in the consideration of this question, we are to be confined to the terms of the written contract entered into between said parties, it might well be concluded that said Rogers was not an employé of the Eng-Skell Company, but that he was an independent contractor. Upon the hearing before the commission, however, evidence was presented showing that, while by the terms of said contract Rogers was merely to furnish a Ford delivery truck during its term, with a driver thereof, the real arrangement between the parties was such that Rogers was himself to be such driver and was to give his personal services to the Eng-Skell Company during the term of said contract and during each day of its continuance, Sundays and holidays excepted, from 8 a. m. to 6 p. m., and that in the course of such personal service he was not only to be the driver of the truck, but was to attend to all of the details incident to the delivery of the goods and material which the Eng-Skell Company supplied daily to its customers. The evidence further sufficiently shows that this service on the part of Rogers was not only a personal service, but was such a service as precluded the pursuit of any independent calling by himself or the use of his delivery truck in any other business than that of the Eng-Skell Company, and that in the performance of such service and the use of said truck Rogers was at all times under the control and direction of the Eng-Skell Company.

[1, 2] It is the contention of the petitioners herein that the Industrial Accident Commission was in error in admitting such evidence, and that the relation between said Rogers and the Eng-Skell Company was to be determined solely from the terms of the written agreement. An examination of that agreement, however, discloses that it did not purport to relate to or define any personal service which Rogers was to furnish to the Eng-Skell Company; and, this being so, we are satisfied that the commission committed no error in going outside of the aforesaid written agreement and in seeking to ascertain, through oral testimony, what the actual relation was between Rogers and the Eng-Skell Company. And we are further satisfied that the evidence thus adduced established all of the elements necessary to the existence of the relation of employer and employé under the terms of section 2009 of the Civil Code.

The facts, as disclosed by such evidence, show that Rogers stood in no other or different relation to the Eng-Skell Company than that which is found in many trades and employments in which employés agree to furnish their own tools and appliances and to care for and replace them during the course and term of their employment; and it has been uniformly held that the fact that such persons were to supply such tools or appliances did not in any manner affect their relation or status as employés. The cases cited by the petitioners herein are sound in principle, but have no particular bearing upon the issues involved in this proceeding, and hence do not require review in detail. The case is clearly one in which the commission acted within its powers in determining the actual relation existing between said Rogers and the Eng-Skell Company, and it committed no error in arriving at the conclusion to which it came on the evidence which was properly presented before it.

It follows that the writ must be denied, and the award confirmed; and it is so ordered.

FORD v. FORD. (Civ. 3036.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 22, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1011(1)—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED.

Finding of trial court based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹931(1)—PRESUMPTION THAT TRIAL COURT FOLLOWED PROPER RULE IN WEIGHING EVIDENCE.

Rule that evidence of fraud and undue influence to defeat conveyances must be clear and convincing is a rule of evidence directed to the trial court, and it must be assumed that in reaching conclusions the court was governed by the rule in weighing the evidence.

3. TRUSTS ⟹103(3)—CONVEYANCE TO HUSBAND ON FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS CREATING TRUST IN FAVOR OF WIFE.

A trust estate is created in behalf of a wife where she without consideration deeds an interest in her separate property to her husband and permits him to take in his name an interest in other property purchased with her separate funds, on his representation that he only desires to hold an interest of record for the sake of his business and social credit and that he will convey to her at any time she desires;

she having parted with her title in reliance upon such representations made to her with bad faith and with intent to withhold the property from her.

4. PLEADING ⊂⊃249(1)—COMPLAINT TO QUIET TITLE MAY BE AMENDED TO ONE TO ESTABLISH TRUST.

Though action was begun under an ordinary complaint to quiet title, trial court did not err in permitting plaintiff pending trial to file an amended complaint setting up the facts relied upon to defeat defendant's claim of title and establishing the trust in plaintiff's behalf and praying that such trust be declared and a reconveyance of the premises decreed.

5. PLEADING ⊂⊃236(6) — TRIAL AMENDMENT WITHIN DISCRETION OF COURT.

So long as the action as set out in the amendment is not entirely foreign to the original form of the action, the amendment is within the discretion of the court; the relief sought arising out of the same general state of facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Josephine Ford against Louis M. Ford. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, of Stockton, and Geo. E. Cryer and J. H. De La Monte, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gordon A. Stewart, of Stockton, and H. H. Appel, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. Plaintiff, Josephine Ford brought this action against the defendant, Louis M. Ford, her husband, to establish her title to several parcels of land in the city of Los Angeles. She acquired title to one of the properties before her marriage, and, as the court finds, was at the time of her marriage also "the owner of and in the possession of a large sum of money." Shortly after her marriage with defendant, she conveyed by deed an undivided one-half interest in this real property to the defendant. The court also finds that after her marriage the other parcels of land were purchased with her separate funds, and the title taken in the names of herself and husband as tenants in common. These properties were subsequently handled by the parties jointly, mortgages and releases were made in their joint names, and moneys collected, handled, and deposited in bank to their joint account. The court further finds that the defendant acquired his apparent interest in this property as follows:

That as to the real property she owned before marriage, "after said marriage, and on or about the 6th day of July, 1904, and prior thereto, defendant desired to have it appear that he was the owner of an interest in said property, and importuned that plaintiff should make a conveyance to him of an undivided one-half in said lands and premises, and then and there promised plaintiff that defendant would, whenever plaintiff should demand, reconvey said lands and premises to plaintiff. Plaintiff believed said promises and representations of defendant, and relied upon said representations and promises, and induced solely by her reliance and belief in said representations and without other consideration moving to her from defendant, than said belief and said promises on the part of the defendant, and the confidence which she then had in said defendant, did on or about the 6th day of July, 1904, execute and deliver to defendant a conveyance in the form of a grant, bargain and sale deed, conveying to the defendant an undivided one-half of, in and to said lands and premises."

And as to the property acquired after marriage:

"That the defendant desiring to have it appear that he was the owner of an interest in said lands and premises, at the time of the purchase of each of said last-mentioned pieces and parcels of land, requested plaintiff to permit and to cause conveyances to be made, at the time of each of said purchases, by the predecessors and owners of said lands and from whom the plaintiff purchased said pieces of land, to the plaintiff and defendant as tenants in common, and for that purpose to permit the name of defendant to be mentioned in each of said conveyances as a grantee therein, together with the name of plaintiff, and then and there promised plaintiff that if plaintiff should permit said conveyances to be so executed, that he would at any time upon demand by plaintiff convey to her said lands and premises by a good and sufficient deed of conveyance, in such form and of such character so that the legal title to the whole of said lands should be and appear of record in her own name and as her own separate estate and property."

It is also found that there was no other consideration for these conveyances to defendant, that the plaintiff relied on the promises to reconvey, and that the promises were made in bad faith, with no intention to carry them out, but with intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiff.

[1] There is no serious controversy in the evidence as to the purchase of all these parcels of land with the separate funds of plaintiff, possessed by her before marriage, together with the rents and profits accruing therefrom after marriage. There is direct conflict in the evidence as to the conditions on which the defendant acquired his apparent interest as a cotenant with plaintiff. He claims that it was the result of voluntary and unsolicited action of the plaintiff to endow him with an interest in all her worldly goods. The court, however, found against this contention and in favor of the testimony given by the plaintiff, which, if accepted as true, fully supports the findings. It is useless, therefore, to review more minutely the testimony, as we would not under this state of the evidence be justified in disturbing the findings of the court.

[2] It may be conceded, as contended by appellant, that in order to establish fraud and undue influence to defeat these conveyances of title the evidence must be clear and convincing. But that is a rule of evidence directed to the trial court, and it must be presumed that in reaching the conclusion set out in the findings the court was governed by these considerations in weighing the evidence. Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 53, 30 Pac. 1020, 31 Am. St. Rep. 175; Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 39 Pac. 797. Even in criminal actions, where the facts must be established beyond a reasonable doubt in order to justify a conviction, the appellate courts are not permitted to question the verdict if it is supported by any substantial showing. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 201, 48 Pac. 75; People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 359, 28 Pac. 261; People v. Ah Loy, 10 Cal. 301. Appellant cites Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 189, 58 Pac. 543, as holding that the sufficiency of the evidence in the light of this rule should be independently considered by the appellate court. It will be noticed in that case that the question was before the Supreme Court on undisputed evidence. Under such conditions the appellate tribunal may well go to greater lengths in estimating the conclusiveness of the evidence upon the point in issue; but, where the conclusion of the trial court is supported by testimony that is clear and convincing in itself, the fact that it is disputed by rebutting testimony does not entitle the appellate court to substitute its judgment for that of the trial court in determining the credibility of the conflicting witnesses. In fact, the Supreme Court, in Sheehan v. Sullivan, supra, says on this point:

"The question here is not really one of conflicting evidence; the evidence introduced by plaintiff, leaving out of view the fact that it was all contradicted, is not in itself sufficient to show the declaration and creation of the trust as averred in the complaint, or as found by the court."

In the matter before us, the testimony of the plaintiff supported to some extent by the undisputed circumstances surrounding the transaction, if accepted as true, is clear and conclusive as to the facts found.

[3] The only question, then, on the merits of this appeal is whether the findings support the judgment declaring a trust in this property against the defendant and in behalf of the plaintiff.

To restate briefly the issue presented: Is a trust estate created in behalf of a wife where she deeds an interest in her separate property to her husband and permits him to take in his name an interest in other property when it is purchased with her separate funds, and the transaction is had without consideration to the wife, at his solicitation, on his representation that he only desires to hold an interest of record for the sake of his business and social credit, and that he will reconvey to her at any time she desires; and where the consent of the wife was induced by these representations and she parted with her title in reliance upon them, and they were made to her in bad faith and with intent to withhold the property from her? Without reviewing and distinguishing the many authorities cited by appellant, we think that every point involved in this issue is determined against him in Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Id., 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186, supplemented by Dolliver v. Dolliver, 94 Cal. 642, 30 Pac. 4; Dimond v. Sanderson, 103 Cal. 97, 37 Pac. 189; Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 108 Pac. 506; Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 587, 74 Pac. 143; and Bradley v. Bradley, 165 Cal. 237, 131 Pac. 750.

[4, 5] This action was begun under an ordinary complaint to quiet title. Subsequently, and pending the trial, plaintiff, by leave of court, filed an amended complaint setting up the facts relied upon to defeat defendant's claim of title and establishing the trust in plaintiff's behalf, and praying that such trust be declared and a reconveyance of the premises to plaintiff decreed. Defendant moved to strike out the amended complaint, and contends that the court was in error in denying his motion and permitting the amended complaint, for the reason that it constitutes a new and distinct cause of action. Defendant's own citations of authority seem to be against him, where they refer at all to the question of amendment of the complaint. In Von Drachenfels v. Doolittle, 77 Cal. 295, 19 Pac. 518, no attempt was made to amend the complaint below, and the Supreme Court merely holds that under the complaint to quiet title the court cannot declare and enforce a trust, and that a new trial will not be granted to give appellant an opportunity to amend his complaint. In Bryan v. Tormey, 84 Cal. 126, 24 Pac. 319, holding that under a complaint to quiet title judgment enforcing a trust could not be upheld, the court says:

"If the complaint had been amended at the trial so as to conform to the proofs and to correspond with the findings, we should have found no difficulty in affirming the judgment. * * * The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the superior court to permit the parties to amend their pleadings."

So long as the action as set out in the amendment is not entirely foreign to the original form of the action, such amendment is within the discretion of the court. So long as the relief sought arises on the same general state of facts—as was obviously the condition here, although more fully stated in the amended complaint—such amendment is proper. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53; Walsh v. McKeen 75

Cal. 519, 17 Pac. 673; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Doolittle v. McConnell, 174 Pac. 305; Porter v. Fillebrown, 119 Cal. 235, 51 Pac. 322. In the case last cited the amendment changed the cause of action from an action at law to recover on a creditor's claim to an equitable action for an accounting of a trust.

We do not find prejudicial error in the numerous rulings of the court excepted to by appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

HORTON-HOWARD v. PAYTON et al.

(Civ. 3006.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 4, 1919.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜291(1)—DEMAND FOR POSSESSION CONDITION PRECEDENT TO FORFEITURE OF LEASE.

In lessor's unlawful detainer action upon ground that lessee had breached condition of lease requiring the planting of certain crops, and was committing waste under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subds. 3, 4, lessor's failure to give notice of demand for possession under section 1162 held a good defense, notwithstanding that it was unnecessary to give lessee notice to perform condition because of impossibility thereof; such demand being a condition precedent to forfeiture of leasehold interest.

2. CONTRACTS ⊜318—FORFEITURES NOT FAVORED.

Forfeitures are not favored by the courts; every intendment and presumption being against person seeking to enforce the forfeiture.

3. STATUTES ⊜241(1)—STRICT CONSTRUCTION OF FORFEITURE LAW.

Statutes creating forfeiture must be strictly construed.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜290(½)—REMEDY BY UNLAWFUL DETAINER STRICTLY LIMITED.

One who seeks the summary remedy of unlawful detainer allowed by the statute must bring himself clearly within its terms.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜291(1)—SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE TO QUIT.

Notice to quit or demand for possession need not be in any particular words or in any particular form, any written demand being sufficient if the person to whom it is given, as a person of common understanding, must understand from it that the landlord is absolutely and unconditionally demanding of him possession of the demised premises.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜291(1)—DEMAND FOR POSSESSION NOT SUFFICIENTLY DEFINITE.

Letter written to lessees by lessor's attorney complaining of breach of conditions of lease, stating that lessor "demands possession," that lessee had sold water with no right to so do without accounting to lessor, asking lessee to "remit" to lessor and to "let me hear from you at once," held not sufficiently definite and unequivocal to constitute a demand for possession, being calculated to lead lessees to think that they could retain possession by adjusting their differences with lessor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Minnie J. Horton-Howard against F. C. Payton and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dixon L. Phillips, of Oakland, and Victor Ford Collins, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. P. Adams, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action of unlawful detainer. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants. Defendants claim the right of possession under a written lease executed to them, as lessees, by plaintiff and one Helen A. Wright, as the lessors, whereby defendants leased from plaintiff and her colessor, for the term of five years, a 25-acre ranch near Norwalk, in Los Angeles county, agreeing to plant all the ranch to beets, farm it in a workmanlike manner, and, as rent, pay the lessors one-fourth of all the crops raised. Helen A. Wright, one of the colessors, has since conveyed all of her interest to plaintiff. Plaintiff alleges that defendants breacned their covenant to plant all the ranch to beets, in this, that in the year 1918 defendants planted a part of the land to corn; also that defendants committed waste in that they unlawfully diverted from the leased premises water developed thereon and used or sold it for use on other lands.

[1] At the outset we are met with respondents' objection that no demand for possession or notice to quit, as required by the statute, was ever served upon either of them. We think this objection is well taken, and that it is fatal to any recovery by appellant.

The only attempted demand for possession was that made by plaintiff's counsel in a letter written and mailed by him at Oakland, Cal., dated September 3, 1918, and addressed to defendants at Norwalk, in Los Angeles county. That letter was as follows:

"F. C. Payton and C. A. Payton, Norwalk, Los Angeles County, California—Gentlemen: Mrs. Minnie J. Horton, of 551 Crofton avenue, this city, has placed in my hands the 'lease' between you and her under date of the 10th day of August, 1916, to the land and premises known as the 'Helen Williams' ranch, in Los Angeles county, California, and which you are now in possession. She has also placed in my hands the correspondence relative to same. You have repeatedly violated the terms of this 'lease' and she demands possession. You have sold water, which you had no right to do, and have made no accounting for same. You will please now make a full statement giving details of water sold from the premises, and remit to her. Again, the ranch, you know very well, was to be all put into beets, which you have not done. Please let me hear from you at once. Yours very truly, Dixon L. Phillips, Attorney for Mrs. Minnie J. Horton." (The italics are ours.)

It was stipulated that the writer of this letter, Mr. Phillips, was acting as plaintiff's agent.

It may be assumed that the letter was delivered to one of the defendants, F. C. Payton, doubtless by the letter carrier; for, on September 9, 1918, F. C. Payton wrote a letter to Mr. Phillips acknowledging receipt of his letter of the 3d instant, denying that the terms of the lease had been violated, and stating that he expected to hold the ranch until the expiration of the term of the lease.

The action is brought under subdivisions 3 and 4 of section 1161 of the Civil Code of Procedure. By subdivision 3 it is provided that a tenant is guilty of unlawful detainer when he continues in possession after a neglect or failure to perform other conditions or covenants than the one for the payment of rent, and three days' notice in writing, requiring the performance of such conditions or covenants, or the possession of the property, shall have been served upon him; but "if the conditions and covenants of the lease violated by the lessee cannot afterward be performed, then no notice, as last prescribed herein, need be given to said lessee * * * demanding the performance of the violated conditions or covenants of the lease." Subdivision 4 provides that any tenant committing waste upon the demised premises, contrary to the conditions or covenants of his lease, thereby terminates the lease, and the landlord, "upon service of three days' notice to quit upon the person or persons in possession," shall be entitled to restitution of the premises.

The covenant to plant beets, the breach of which is here complained of, was one that, so far as the crop year 1918 was concerned, could not be performed after any demand for possession that plaintiff might make at the time when the letter from Mr. Phillips, addressed to defendants at Norwalk, was mailed. Therefore it was not necessary that any demand or notice that might be served upon defendants should require the performance of the covenant to plant the beets for that year. It was necessary, however, that a demand or notice requiring possession be given, and that it be served as required by section 1162. Where the violated condition or covenant is one that can be performed, the statute provides for a written notice in the alternative, namely, a notice "requiring the performance of such conditions or covenants or the possession of the property"; but, where the condition or covenant cannot afterwards be performed, the statute says that no notice "demanding the performance of the violated conditions or covenants of the lease" need be given (subdivision 3, § 1161); that is, the notice in such case need not be in the alternative, but it will be sufficient simply to give three days' notice demanding "the possession of the property." Such demand for possession is a statutory prerequisite to any forfeiture of the lease, even though notice of the alternative requirement—performance of the condition or covenant—need not be given. As said by the court in Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 662, 73 Pac. 451:

"Where, however, the covenants cannot be performed, the law recognizes that it would be an idle and useless ceremony to demand their performance, and so dispenses with the demand to do so. And this is all that it does dispense with. It does not dispense with the demand for the possession of the premises. It requires that in any event."

So, also, where, as here, the plaintiff complains of "waste," contrary to the conditions or covenants of the lease, as, for example, the unlawful diversion of water contrary to the terms of the lease, the statute requires, as a condition precedent to the maintenance of the action, a "three days' notice to quit." Subdivision 4, § 1161.

[2-4] The right to recover possession in an action such as this is based upon the idea that the tenant has forfeited his leasehold. The service upon defendants of such a demand for possession, or a notice to quit, as is contemplated by the statute, was a condition precedent to the forfeiture of defendants' leasehold interest. Forfeitures are not favored by the courts; every intendment and presumption is against the person seeking to enforce the forfeiture; statutes creating forfeitures must be strictly construed; and one who seeks the summary remedy of unlawful detainer allowed by the statute must bring himself clearly within its terms. Savings & L. Soc. v. McKoon, 120 Cal. 179, 52 Pac. 305; Opera House Ass'n v. Bert, 52 Cal. 471; Lacrabere v. West, 141 Cal. 554, 75 Pac. 185.

[5] What is a sufficient notice to quit or demand for possession is stated in the several text-books on the law of landlord and tenant, and the authors do not seem to differ materially as to what the notice should contain. No particular words are prescribed, and no special form is indispensable. Doubtless any written demand is sufficient if the person to whom it is given, as a person of common understanding, must understand from it that the landlord is absolutely and unconditionally demanding of him possession of the demised premises. It must, however, clearly, positively, and unequivocally disclose the intention of the landlord to repossess the premises. It must be positive, decisive, and without ambiguity. In brief, the language must be such as to convey to the tenant notice that it is the positive and unequivocal intention of the landlord that he shall quit and surrender possession, without any alternative choice whatever. The landlord must use language upon which the tenant can safely act. In the analogous case of notice from a tenant to his landlord of an intention to surrender the demised premises, Justice Bowen, in the English case of Gardner v. Ingram, 61 Law Times (N. S.) 729, holding the notice to be insufficient, discusses the essentials of a sufficient notice, saying:

"I think it is very necessary that in a notice to quit there should be plainness of speech; that is, it must be plain and unequivocal in its terms, leaving no doubt as to the intention of the party giving it. The effect of such a notice is to put an end to the relation of landlord and tenant. Therefore the landlord has a right to know whether the tenant is really going or not. If, instead of adopting that course, the tenant uses language which is ambiguous, makes use of expressions which leave matters at the conclusion of the term contingent on something to be done or some arrangement to be made, there is no sufficient notice to quit. We are asked to place a business construction upon this notice. In my opinion there was no business intended by it. The tenant used language on which the landlord could not safely act."

[6] Turning now to the letter addressed to defendants by plaintiff's attorney: Referring to the lease and to his client, the attorney says: "You have repeatedly violated the terms of this lease and she demands possession." He does not say that she "hereby" demands possession. Read in the light of what follows in the letter, its author leaves it in doubt whether his client, through him as her agent, is actually thereby unconditionally demanding possession, or whether he is simply, by way of recital, notifying defendants that his client desires possession, or, in lieu of that, satisfaction in some form for the alleged breaches of defendants' covenants. After telling defendants that they had wrongfully sold water and had made no accounting therefor, the attorney proceeds to say: "You will please now make a full statement, giving details of water sold from the premises, and remit to her." And he concludes his letter with the words: "Please let me hear from you at once." Obviously plaintiff was not entitled, because of the "waste" complained of, to have the lease declared forfeited, regain possession and treble damages for the unlawful detention arising out of such waste, and, in addition thereto, the sum which Mr. Phillips' letter in effect demands, namely, compensation for the water claimed to have been wasted. The acceptance of such compensation, had any been made, would have been a waiver of any right to demand and regain possession based upon the alleged waste of water contrary to the conditions and covenants in the lease. The demand that defendants "remit" to plaintiff, coupled with the statement at the end of the letter, "Please let me hear from you at once," was calculated to engender in defendants' minds the thought that, by his letter to them, the attorney was not thereby unequivocally demanding, for and on behalf of his client, the unconditional surrender of possession, but that he was suggesting some alternative arrangement and inviting defendants to express themselves with regard thereto. The language of the notice was not a direct, positive, decisive, and unambiguous demand for possession or notice to quit. The attorney did not use language on which the tenants could safely act.

Moreover, the letter was written by an attorney. It must be assumed, therefore, that he understood the character of the notice necessary to effect a forfeiture of the lease, as well as the import of the language which he used. If it was his purpose to give notice to quit or to make an unconditional demand for possession, he well knew that such a notice or demand must be clear, certain, and unequivocal as to such intention. He knew that nothing less would satisfy the terms of the statute. With this knowledge he wrote the letter. It is neither certain, definite, nor unequivocal as an intention on plaintiff's part to demand unconditional surrender of the premises. It cannot therefore be presumed that Mr. Phillips intended that the letter should be a notice to quit. On the contrary, it is rather to be assumed that he left that matter, with the question of compensation to his client for the wasted water, for future arrangement, and, with that idea in view, he was throwing out a suggestion for negotiations that possibly might lead to some mutually satisfactory adjustment of their differences. This conclusion is further strengthened by the fact that when the action was commenced plaintiff's attorneys apparently were of the opinion that, because the broken conditions and covenants were incapable of performance at any time after the date of Mr. Phillips' letter, no demand for possession or notice to quit was necessary. Entertaining such belief, the complaint, as originally filed, omitted all reference to any demand. It was not until the day of the trial that plaintiff, with leave of court, amended her complaint by adding an allegation to the effect that more than three days prior to the commencement of the action she had made a demand for possession.

We think the letter to defendants was not sufficient as a demand for possession or notice to quit to effect a forfeiture of defendants' lease.

Judgment affirmed.

(44 Cal. App. 239)

Ex parte DILLON et al. (Cr. 685.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 12, 1919.)

1. HEALTH ⊂=24—HABEAS CORPUS ⊂=13—PERSONS ARRESTED FOR VIOLATION OF ROOMING HOUSE ORDINANCE CANNOT BE HELD UNDER PRETENDED QUARANTINE.

Petitioners, arrested without warrant for violation of rooming house ordinance, could not be held by the chief of police without bail and under pretended quarantine, by reason of a general instruction given by the health department of the city, and without any knowledge being had on the part of the health department, or its inspectors, which would give rise to reasonable cause, or even suspicion, that petitioners were afflicted with contagious or infectious venereal disease.

2. ARREST ⊂=63(3) — WITHOUT WARRANT IN MISDEMEANOR CASES, NOT IN OFFICER'S PRESENCE, ILLEGAL.

Police officer had no authority to make arrest for violation of rooming house ordinance without a warrant, unless all of the acts essential to make out the crime were committed in his actual presence and view.

3. ARREST ⊂=63(4)—FALSE IMPRISONMENT ⊂=43—WITHOUT WARRANT FOR MISDEMEANOR, HIGH-GRADE MISDEMEANOR, OR FELONY.

The arrest of a person without warrant, upon suspicion or upon information of others that a misdemeanor has been committed, is wholly unauthorized, and makes the person who accomplishes the arrest guilty of false imprisonment, which is either a high-grade misdemeanor or a felony, depending upon the use or nonuse of violence in affecting the arrest. Pen. Code, §§ 236, 840.

4. HABEAS CORPUS ⊂=85(1) — PRESUMPTION THAT ARRESTING OFFICER DOES NOT VIOLATE LAW.

In habeas corpus the court may be justified in presuming that peace officers, in endeavoring to apprehend persons violating municipal regulations, will not commit a criminal offense of a more serious character than that which they accuse the persons arrested of having committed.

5. HABEAS CORPUS ⊂=85(1) — PRESUMPTION THAT PERSONS AFFLICTED WITH CONTAGIOUS OR INFECTIOUS DISEASES MAY BE QUARANTINED.

It may be assumed that under the laws relating to public health, inspection and quarantine may be made of persons upon reasonable ground that the persons so subjected to inspection or quarantine are afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases, such as are enumerated in Pol. Code, § 2979a.

6. HEALTH ⊂=24 — NO QUARANTINE UNLESS REASONABLY NECESSARY TO PROTECT HEALTH.

Where sufficient reasonable cause exists to believe that a person is afflicted with a quarantinable disease, the health authorities may examine into the case, and in a proper way determine the fact; but preliminary investigation must be made without delay, and, if quarantining is found justifiable, only such quarantine measures as are reasonably necessary to protect the public health may be resorted to.

Application by Frank Dillon and Ethel Adams for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the chief of police of the city of Los Angeles. Writ granted.

David D. Sallee and Gesner Williams, both of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Erwin W. Widney, City Prosecutor, and J. D. Taggart, Deputy City Prosecutor, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Habeas corpus. Petitioners herein prosecute this writ for the purpose of being relieved from imprisonment in the city jail of Los Angeles city, the petition setting forth that they were therein held without process or warrant of law. It was alleged in the petition that at 1 o'clock a. m. on a certain Sunday morning of August, petitioners were arrested by police officers in Los Angeles city, that such officers held no warrant of arrest against petitioners, and that upon being arrested petitioners were held in the city jail until the hour of 8 o'clock p. m. of the same day, without having been taken before a magistrate or being permitted to give bail. At the last-named hour a writ of habeas corpus was secured from a judge of the superior court, and hearing thereafter had thereon. It was alleged, further, that the arrest was made by the officers under the claim that petitioners were violating an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, commonly called the "Rooming House Ordinance"; that, in fact, petitioners had not violated the provisions of said ordinance. The return made by the chief of police admits that the arrest was made as charged, except that it is set forth that petitioners were at the time of the arrest violating the provisions of the ordinance mentioned, the main provisions of which ordinance, as set forth in the return, being as follows:

"Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person to resort to any rooming house, lodging house, hotel, or other place in the city of Los Angeles, for the purpose of having therein sexual intercourse with a person to whom he or she is not married."

A further statement in the return declares that for two years or more last past it has been the practice of the health department of the city to examine all persons brought to the city jail "charged with the violation of said Ordinance 25640, or charged with any other offense involving sexual immoralities or lewdness, to determine the freedom of such persons from contagious and infectious quarantinable venereal disease." The return further states that "about" 1,000 persons have been examined within the time mentioned, and "that it has been the experience of such examining and investigating officers of said health department that about 90 per cent. of the women so arrested and charged are found to be afflicted with contagious and infectious venereal disease in some form; that for the past two years or thereabouts a part of said city jail has been set aside for the detention and quarantine of women so arrested and charged, pending a positive determination by the officers of said health department of their freedom from such disease." It is then stated that the woman petitioner was, upon her being arrested, detained in quarantine pending investigation as to her condition, and that petitioner Dillon was likewise detained in another portion of the jail, pending like determination as to his condition. It is shown also by the return that up to the time that the superior court issued its writ of habeas corpus no examination had been made of the parties.

[1, 2] Digesting the admitted facts shown on the part of respondent, it appears that whenever persons arrested for violating said rooming house ordinance are brought to the city jail they are, by the chief of police, held without bail and under pretended quarantine by reason of a general instruction given by the health department of Los Angeles city, and without any knowledge being had on the part of the health department or its inspectors which would give rise to reasonable cause, or even suspicion, that the persons so detained are afflicted with contagious or infectious venereal disease. The ordinance in question is not an ordinance designed particularly to cover cases of prostitution; in fact, it would seem to exclude persons committing illicit sexual acts at their established place of abode, regardless of the character of such persons. The return, as already appears, shows that the practice of the health department is to cause persons to be examined who may be "charged" with the misdemeanor under the ordinance. As the facts show in this case, quarantine is pretended to be made in advance of the ascertainment, in a legal way, of the fact as to whether the ordinance has been violated by the persons charged. As to how long this preliminary quarantine continues, we can only conjecture that the time is regulated wholly by the will of the health department. Meanwhile, the persons subjected to this restraint, while they were arrested under the authority of the criminal law, must remain in custody without being allowed bail, and, we may assume from some quarantine rules set forth in the brief of respondent, without the privilege of conferring with any person, except such as the health department may permit to visit them. In the event that the individuals detained are not willing to submit their persons for examinations of a highly private nature, we can also conjecture that their detention may be prolonged until, by the force of that coercion and to escape confinement behind jail doors, they may submit to the demands of the health officers. The respondent chief of police seems to occupy two positions here; one as custodian of the criminally charged inmates of the city prison, and the other as quarantine keeper, using the same jail as a quarantine hospital. The right of the health authorities to subject the person of an individual afflicted with contagious disease to quarantine restraint is an extreme measure, recognized as being necessary in cases of epidemics and instances where such detention is necessary to properly protect the public health. Sick persons who are subjected to such quarantine are not deemed to be criminals, and are to be treated with every consideration and afforded conveniences reasonably procurable under the circumstances. In cases such as this persons are not arrested under any direction of the health department, but are arrested solely and only because it is claimed they have violated the provisions of an ordinance of the city. In the first place, the offense being a misdemeanor, no authority resides in a police officer to make the arrest without a warrant, unless all of the acts essential to make out the crime are committed in the actual presence and view of such officer.

[3] The arrest of a person upon suspicion, or upon information of others, that a misdemeanor has been committed is wholly unauthorized, and the arrest in such a case, being without process, makes the person who accomplishes the same guilty of false imprisonment, which is either a high-grade misdemeanor or a felony, depending upon the use or nonuse of violence in effecting the arrest. Section 236, Pen. Code. See, also, on the right to make arrests, section 840, Pen. Code et seq. We have referred to this question here because it appears from the petition that this arrest for misdemeanor was made late in the night (at 1 o'clock a. m.), and the verified petition declares that the petitioners had, at the time of their arrest, committed no offense against the law. The return of the chief of police does declare (necessarily, however, upon information and belief) that petitioners, at the time of their arrest, had committed a misdemeanor. No facts are set forth showing that the misdemeanor was committed in the presence of police officers, which condition must have existed to make the arrest lawful at all.

[4] However, we may be justified in presuming that peace officers, in endeavoring to apprehend persons violating the municipal regulation, would not commit a criminal offense of a much more serious character than that which they accuse the persons arrested of having committed. Hence, for the purposes of this case, we will assume that the arrest was legally made.

[5] It may be assumed, too, that under the laws relating to the public health, inspection and quarantine may be made of persons, animals, and property by the duly constituted health authorities, where it is known, or appears upon reasonable ground, that the person so subjected to inspection or quarantine is afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases, such as are enumerated in section 2979a, Political Code.

[6] The question that we finally reach here is as to whether the health department may reasonably assume, without any previous knowledge, information or report as to the individual concerned, that every person arrested by officers and booked at the city jail as having violated the "Rooming House Ordinance" is reasonably likely to be afflicted with a quarantinable venereal disease. If it could be assumed that every person who had sexual intercourse with another to whom he or she was not married, at a hotel or lodging house at which they might meet for the purpose, was a person given to promiscuous acts of sexual intercourse, then we might agree that, in part, the practice of the chief of police and health department in such cases as has been herein outlined finds some justification in the law. But we do not agree that any such general deduction should be made, in view of the great concern of the law as to the liberty of individuals. We think that, for such detention to be legally justified, the return of the officer should show some further reason why the persons so detained are suspected of being afflicted with disease. We have before noted that this ordinance appears not to be aimed at the common prostitute who may engage in illicit intercourse at a fixed place of abode. We have called attention, further, to that feature of the practice which denies to the person accused the right first of establishing his or her innocence in the court where the charge is triable. Virtually the health officers, through their orders to the chief of police, say to the individual:

"We don't know whether you are guilty of this offense or not; if you were guilty we think it would furnish reason to suspect that you are afflicted with a venereal disease; but, whether guilty or innocent, you have been arrested, and you must remain confined without bail and without being permitted communication with the outside world, except with our consent, until you have submitted to a private examination and convinced us that you are free from the taint of disease."

The bare statement of this proposition, considered in view of all the safeguards which have been thrown around the liberty of the individual, is shocking to our sense of justice. Where sufficient reasonable cause exists to believe that a person is afflicted with a quarantinable disease, there is no doubt of the right of the health authorities to examine into the case and, in a proper way, determine the fact. Such preliminary investigation must be made without delay, and, if quarantining is found to be justifiable, such quarantine measures may be resorted to only as are reasonably necessary to protect the public health, remembering that the persons so affected are to be treated as patients, and not as criminals.

Our conclusion is that the return in this case does not show that the health department of the city of Los Angeles had reasonable cause to believe that the petitioners were afflicted with a contagious or infectious disease which warranted their being placed in quarantine. What was said by this court in the case of the Application of Grace Johnston, 180 Pac. 644, was intended to be read only in view of the facts of that particular case. That was a case where it was shown that the petitioner was in fact afflicted with an infectious or contagious disease, and that she was then confined in a hospital especially designed for the care and treatment of such patients.

It is ordered that petitioners be discharged from the custody of the chief of police.
